Feodum laicum, a lay-fee.

Feodum militis, a knight's fee.

Feodum, or Feudum novum, a feud acquired by a vassal himself.

Feeffee, one enfeoffed or put in possession.

Feeffee to Uses, the person in whom, before the Statute of Uses, the legal seisin or feudal tenancy of the land was vested, the substantial and beneficial ownership or use being in the cestui qui use. The statute put an end to the estate of the feoffee to uses by transferring the possession from him to the cestui que use, who had now the legal estate, the use in his favour being executed by the statute. The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 207, 7th Sched., has repealed the Statute of Uses in regard to dealings taking effect after 1925 and vests the legal ownership in the grantee, the beneficial owner (if another) becoming a mere cestui que trust; see also L. P. Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Part II., par. 3, and L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, Sched. See USE.

Feoffment [fr. feoffare, to give a feud,] the transfer of freehold land, in ancient times, by word of mouth and livery of seisin, i.e., by the delivery to the transferee of corporal possession of the land or tenement; see 2 Bl. Com. 310. Writing and deed (theretofore having become gradually more usual) were successively required by the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 1), and the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 3; and by s. 2 of the latter Act, all real property, as regards conveyance of the immediate freehold thereof, is transferable as well by grant as by livery, so that a transfer by deed alone is all that is necessary, and transfer by livery, though not in terms abolished, became obsolete before the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 51, which declares that all lands and interests therein lie in grant and are incapable of being conveyed by livery or by livery and seisin, or by feoffment, and by s. 52 all conveyances of land or any interest therein are void in respect of the legal estate unless made by deed, except as set out in the section. See also REGISTRATION OF LAND.

A feoffment was a conveyance which might have had a tortious effect, and if a person attempted to convey by it a greater freehold than he had, he forfeited the estate of which he was seised; but it became a rightful (droiturel) or innocent conveyance, transferring only the estate which the feoffor could lawfully convey and so causing no forfeiture; see Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 4.

Feoffment to Uses. See FEOFFEE TO USES.

Feoffor, one who makes a feoffment.

Feoh, or Floh, cattle, money.

Feorme, a certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter.—Spelman on Feuds, c. 7.

Feræ Naturæ, Animals. Beasts and birds of a wild disposition, such as deer, hares, coney in a warren, pheasants, partridges, etc., as distinguished from those domitæ naturæ, or tame, such as horses, sheep, poultry, etc. They are not whilst living the subjects of absolute property, so that they cannot be the subject of larceny, nor are they liable to distress for rent. But a man may acquire a qualified property in them, either (1) Per industriam, by his reclaiming and making them tame by art and industry, or by so confining them that they cannot escape, e.g., deer in a park, hares or rabbits in an enclosed warren, etc. The property in them only continues so long as they remain in a man's actual possession, but ceases if they regain their liberty, unless they have animus revertendi, as in the case of pigeons, tame hawks, etc. (2) Ratione impotentie, on account of their inability, as when birds, coney, etc., make their nests or burrows on a man's land, then he has a qualified property in the young until they can fly or run away. (3) Propter privilegium, when a man has a privilege of hunting, taking, and killing certain wild animals, usually called game, in exclusion of other persons. He has a transient property in them so long as they continue within his liberty, and may prevent any stranger from taking them therein; but the instant they depart from his liberty his qualified property in them ceases.—2 Bl. Com. 391. See GAME.

Of animals feræ naturæ when dead, reclaimed, or confined, if they are fit for food, larceny may be committed at Common Law; at Common Law it is not larceny to steal animals which do not serve for food, such as dogs and ferrets, but, if their flesh is fit for human consumption and, being feræ naturæ, they are reclaimed or confined, they may be the subject of larceny. The Larceny Act, 1916, however, makes everything of value and the property of a person the subject of larceny (ss. 1 (3), (4)).

With regard to injuries inflicted by savage animals and the responsibility of their owner therefor, if a man be possessed of an animal absolutely feræ naturæ, as the tiger, he is an insurer, and responsible for any damage done by it; but if there be an animal of a kind generally amenable, but the individual beast be accustomed to do mischief, it must be proved that it was known to be so by its master (Filburn v. People's Palace and Aquarium Co., (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 258). By the Dogs Act, 1906, the owner of a dog is made liable for injuries to cattle, sheep, etc., even if unaware of the dog's tendency to do mischief.

For the protection of wild animals in captivity, see ANIMALS. See also Wild Birds Protection Acts, 1880 to 1908; and the Protection of Birds Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 52).

Ferdella terræ, a fardel-land; ten acres; or perhaps a yard-land.

Ferdingus, apparently a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the cotseti.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Ferdwit [fr. ferd, Sax., army, and wite, punishment], quit of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition.

Ferriæ, holidays; generally speaking, days or seasons during which free-born Romans suspended their political transactions and their law-suits, and during which slaves enjoyed a cessation from labour.—Cic. de Leg. ii. 8, 12.

Ferling, the fourth part of a penny; also the quarter of a ward in a borough.—Old Records.

Ferlingata, a fourth part of a yard-land.

Ferlingus, or Ferlingum, a furlong, which see.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Ferm, or Fearn, a house or land or both, let by lease.

Fermary, a hospital.—Jac. Law Dict.

Fermler, one who farms any public revenue in France.

Fermisozna, the winter season for killing deer.

Fern. Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to growing fern or a stack of fern is a felony. See Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), ss. 16, 17.

Fernigo, a piece of waste ground where fern grows.

Ferrets are not the subject of larceny at common law. See R. v. Searing, (1818) R. & R. 350. See FERÆ NATURÆ, ANIMALS.

Ferriage, the fare paid at a ferry.

Ferry, the right to carry persons and their goods in boats across a river, and to take toll for such carriage. It is a franchise, and can only be created by a grant from the Crown, prescription which presumes such a grant, or Act of Parliament; see Simpson v. Att.-Gen., 1904, A. C. p. 490. The owner if he lose his traffic by the competition of a railway bridge can get no compensation under the Lands Clauses Act (Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway Co., (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 224). See also Cowes Urban District Council v. Southampton, etc., Co., 1905, 2 K. B. 287;

Hammerton v. Dysart (Earl), 1916, A. C. 57; General Estates Co. v. Beaver, 1914, 3 K. B. 918. As to the duties of common ferrymen, see 1 Shower, 140. As to the acquisition of ferries by local authorities, see the Ferries (Acquisition by Local Authorities) Act, 1919.

Ferspeken, to speak suddenly.—Leg. H. 1, c. 61.

Fertilisers of the Soil. The purity of artificial manures under the statutory title (without a statutory definition) of 'fertilisers of the soil' is protected by the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 27), repealing and re-enacting an Act of 1893. The Act requires sellers to give invoices, enables purchasers to have the fertilisers analysed by official analysts, and penalizes sellers for giving no invoices or false invoices. The Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 45), now replaces the 1906 Act. See Needham v. Worcestershire County Council, (1909) 100 L. T. 901, and Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

Fesance, an act.

Festa in cappis, grand holidays, on which choirs wore caps.—Jac. Law Dict.

Festing-men. See FASTING-MEN.

Festing-penny [fr. festnian, Sax., to confirm], earnest given to servants when hired or retained in service.

Festnum remedium, a prompt redress.

Festum, a feast.

Festum stultorum, the feast of fools, anciently observed on New Year's Day.

Feu, or Few, a free and gratuitous right to lands, made to one for service to be performed by him, according to the proper nature thereof. Feu, in Scotland, means vassal tenure, in contradistinction to wardholding or military tenure, being that holding where the vassal, in place of military service, makes a return in money which is called the feu-duty or feu-annual. In Scotland it is believed that building land is generally granted on feu, not on lease, so that the landlord granting land for building has not, as in England, a reversion, but grants the land in perpetuity in consideration of a perpetual annual payment. As to the redemption and extinction of incidents to feus in Scotland, see the Feudal Casualties (Scotland) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 48).

Feudal System, the system of land tenure which William the Conqueror introduced into this country, thereby displacing the Saxon laws of property, and which was the chief civil institution of the Middle Ages. The system as introduced here, however, differed in some very important respects from that which prevailed abroad. See FEOD and TENURE, and Craig de Feudis, passim. The main incidents of the feudal system were not expressly abolished in England until 12 Car. 2, c. 24. See Hall, Mid. Ages.

Feud-bote, a recompense for engaging in a feud or quarrel.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Feudist, a writer on feuds, as Cujacius, Spelman, and others.

Feudum. Fideiis ero vere domino vero meo.—(A fee. I will be truly faithful to my true lord.)

Feuds, Book of, published during the reign of Henry III., about the year 1152. 'While most of the nations of Europe referred to the Book of Feuds as the grand code of law by which to correct and amend the imperfections in their own tenures, there is not in our law-books any allusion that intimates the existence of such a body of constitutions.'—2 Reeves, 55.

Flar, opposed to life-renter. The person in whom the property of an estate is vested, subject to the life-renter's estate.—Scots Law.

Flars Prices, the value of grain in the different counties of Scotland, fixed yearly by the respective sheriffs, in February, with the assistance of juries. These regulate the prices of grain stipulated to be sold at the flars prices, or when no price has been stipulated.—Erskine, l. 1, tit. 4, s. 6.

Flat (let it be done), a decree; a short order or warrant of some judge or public officer for making out and allowing certain processes. The fiat of the Attorney-General was required for a writ of error in any criminal case (see ERROR). The fiat of a law officer is also required by certain Acts before proceedings can be commenced: see Castro v. Murray, (1875) L. R. 10 Ex. 213. See PETITION OF RIGHT.

Flat in Bankruptcy, the authority of the Lord Chancellor to a commissioner of bankrupts, which authorized him to proceed in the bankruptcy of a trader, mentioned therein. It was abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), and a petition for adjudication substituted.

Flat justitia ruat cælum.—(Let justice be done though the heavens should fall.)

Flaunt [fr. fiat, Lat.], warrant.

Fiction. Fictions are 'those things that have no real essence in their own body but are so accepted in law for a special purpose.' 'Fictio' in old Roman law was properly a term of pleading, and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; e.g., an averment that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner, the object of these 'fictiones' being of course to give jurisdiction; see Maine's Anc. Law, ch. II.

The English law has always abounded in fictions, and there is a maxim that in fictione juris semper æquitas existit. See, e.g., ELECTMENT; FINE; FRACTION OF A DAY; LATITAT; QUOMINUS; TROVER.

Fictio legis inique operatur alicui damnum vel injuriam. 3 Rep. 36.—(A legal fiction does not properly work loss or injury to some one, i.e., In fictione juris semper æquitas existit.) See Broom's Max.

Fidei-jussor, a surety, or one that obliges himself in the same contract with a principal, for the greater security of the creditor or stipulator.—Civ. Law.

Fidei-commissum, a testamentary disposition, by which a person who gives a thing to another imposes on him the obligation of transferring it to a third person. The obligation was not created by words of legal binding force (civilia verba), but by words of request (precative), such as 'fidei committo,' 'peto,' 'volo dari,' and the like, which were the operative words (verba utilia). If the object of the fidei-commissum was the hæreditas, the whole or a part, it was called fidei-commisaria hæreditas, which is equivalent to a universal fidei-commissum; if it was a single thing, or a sum of money, it was called fidei-commissum singulæ rei. The obligation to transfer the former could only be imposed on the heirs; the obligation of transferring the latter might be imposed on a legatee. It appears that there were no legal means of enforcing the due discharge of the trust called fidei-commissum till the time of Augustus, who gave the consuls jurisdiction in the fidei-commissa. Fidei-commissa seem to have been introduced in order to evade the Civil Law, and to give the hæreditas, or a legacy, to a person who was either incapacitated from taking directly, or who could not take as much as the donor wished to give. Gaius, when observing that peregrini could take fidei-commissa, observes that 'this' (the object of evading the law) 'was probably the origin of fidei-commissa'; but by a senatus-consultum, made in the time of Hadrian, such fidei-commissa were claimed by the fiscus. Fidei-commissa were ultimately assimilated to legacies.—Gaius, ii. 247-289; Ulp. Frag. tit. 25; Sand. Just.

Fidem mentiri, when a tenant does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 53.

Fiducia. If a man transferred his property to another, on condition that it should be restored to him, this contract was called fiducia, and the person to whom the property was so transferred was said fiduciam accipere.—Cic. Top. 10. A man might transfer his property to another for greater security in time of danger, or for other sufficient reasons.—Gaius, ii. 60.

Fiduciary [fr. fiduciarius, Lat.], one who holds anything in trust. See TRUST.

Fief, a fee; a manor, a possession held by some tenant of a superior.

Fiefs were originally called terræ jure beneficii concessæ; and it was not till under Charles le Gros the term fief began to be in use.—Du Cange.

Fief d'haubert, the Norman phrase for knight-service.

Fierding Courts, inferior ancient Gothic courts, so called because four were established within every superior district or hundred.

Fieri facias, usually abbreviated fi. fa. (that you cause to be made), a judicial writ of execution, the most commonly used that lies for him who has recovered any debt or damages in the King's Courts. It is a command to the sheriff, that of the goods and chattels of the party he 'cause to be made' the sum recovered by the judgment, with interest at 4l. per cent. from the time of entered-up judgment, to be rendered to the party who sued it out. If the sheriff return nulla bona, an alias fi. fa. may issue; and upon that being returned, a pluries or testatum fi. fa. may be issued into another county. The 12th section of the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), authorizes the sheriff to seize money, bank notes, cheques, bills of exchange, etc., of the person against whose effects the writ is sued out; but he cannot seize money or bank notes after the death of the debtor (Johnson v. Pickering, 1908, 1 K. B. 1).

The sheriff cannot sell before actual seizure (Ex parte Hall, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 132).

The sheriff cannot break open the outer door of a dwelling-house to seize (Semayne's case, (1603) 5 Rep. 91; 1 Sm. L. C.); but he can break open that of a shop (Hodder v. Williams, 1895, 2 Q. B. 683).

The capital distinction between distress (see that title) and execution by fi. fa. is that on a distress for rent any person's goods, unless expressly exempted, which are on the tenant's premises, can be seized, whereas on execution only the debtor's goods may be seized, but they may be seized wherever they can be found. As to the protection of the sheriff selling goods under an execution, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 40 et seq., and as against the liquidator under a winding-up, see ss. 268 et seq., Companies Act, 1929.

The sheriff, however, must satisfy the landlord's claim for rent up to one year's arrears before removing the goods seized.—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1709 (8 Anne, c. 14 or 18), Chit. Stat., tit. 'Landlord and Tenant'; and compare s. 160 of the County Courts Act, 1888, now County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 13; R. S. C., Ord. LXIII., r. 1.

If the claim for rent has not been served on the sheriff before the commencement of the debtor's bankruptcy, the landlord's right is reduced to six months (s. 35 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914).

Fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis (that you cause to be made of the ecclesiastical goods). When a sheriff to a common fi. fa. returns nulla bona, and that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, not having any lay fee, a plaintiff may issue a fi. fa. de bonis ecclesiasticis, addressed to the bishop of the diocese, commanding him to make of the ecclesiastical goods and chattels belonging to the defendant within his diocese the sum therein mentioned.—R. S. C., Ord. XLIII., r. 5, and App. H., Form 5.

Fieri feci (I have caused to be made), a return made by the sheriff when he has executed a writ of execution.

Fifteenth, a tribute or imposition of money anciently laid generally upon cities, boroughs, etc., throughout the whole realm; it amounted to a fifteenth of that which each city or town was valued at, or of every man's personal estate.—Cam. Brit. 171.

Fight. See CHALLENGES TO FIGHT.

Fightwite, making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace.—Jac. Law Dict.

Figures, the numerical characters by which numbers are expressed or written, as the ten digits, which are usually called the Arabic or Indian figures from their supposed origin. 6 Geo. 2, c. 14, allowed expressing numbers by figures in all writs, etc., pleadings, rules, orders, indictments, etc., in courts of justice, as had been commonly used, notwithstanding 4 Geo. 2, c. 26. Under the present system of pleading dates, sums and numbers must be expressed in figures (R. S. C., Ord. XIX., r. 4). See DATES.

Filaer, Filazer, or Filizer [fr. filum, Lat.; file, filace, Fr., a thread], an officer of the Superior Courts of Westminster, who filed original writs, etc., and issued processes thereon.—See the repealed 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 4; 2 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 110, s. 2.

Fild-ale, or Filk-ale [fr. fillen, Sax., to fill, and ale], an ale-feast. A term applied to an extortionate practice of officers of the forest, and of bailiffs of hundreds, of compelling persons to contribute to the supplying them with drink, etc. Prohibited by the Carta de Foresta.—4 Inst. 307.

File, a thread, string, or wire, upon which writs and other exhibits in courts or offices are fastened or filed, for the more safe keeping of, and ready reference to, the same; also, to deposit at an office.

Filiation [fr. filius, Lat.], the relation of a son to his father; correlative to paternity. See AFFILIATION.

Filicetum [fr. filix, Lat., fern-brake], brackie land, land where ferns grow.—Co. Litt. 4.

Filloius, a little son; a godson.—Jac. Law Dict.

Filius mulieratus, the eldest legitimate son of a woman who was illicitly connected with his father before marriage.

Filius populi, a son of the people, a natural child. See Cowel, Law Dict., voce Mulier.

Filum aquæ, viæ, medium. See AD MEDIUM FILÆ (AQUÆ).

Final Decree or Judgment, a conclusive decision of the Court, as distinguished from interlocutory. An order upon an undertaking to lodge costs in Court is not a final order under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 1, 4; Re a Debtor, 1929, 2 Ch. 146. See INTERLOCUTORY.

Final Process, a writ of execution on a judgment or decree.

Finance Acts. In and after 1894 the Annual Taxing Acts, which had for a long time borne the short titles of 'Customs and Inland Revenue Acts,' have borne the short titles of 'Finance Acts.' The Finance Act incorporates the Budget which is the Chancellor of the Exchequer's annual statement or report of the financial results of the past year, estimated expenditure and income of the coming year and proposals in regard to taxation. These proposals are passed into law by the Finance Act but are enforced as soon as a resolution of the Committee of Ways and Means agrees to them in order to prevent forestalling and anticipation in commodities. See Halsb. L. E., title 'Parliament (Ways and Means).'

Financial Year. By s. 22 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63):—

In this Act and in every Act passed after the commencement of this Act [Jan. 1, 1890] the expression 'financial year' shall, unless the contrary intention appears, mean as respects any matters relating to the Consolidated Fund, or moneys provided by Parliament, or to the Exchequer, or to Imperial taxes or finance, the 12 months ending the 31st day of March.

Finder, a searcher employed to discover goods imported or exported without paying custom.—Jac. Law Dict.

Finder of Goods, in a public place or shop, acquires a special property in them, available against all the world, except the true owner, who may recover them at any time within six years; the finder is bound, however, before appropriating them to his own use, to take all the means in his power to discover the owner. If the property had not been designedly abandoned, and the finder knew who the owner was, or with due exertion could have discovered him, he is guilty of larceny if he keep and appropriate the articles to his own use; see R. v. Thurborn, (1849) 1 Den. C. C. 387; R. v. Ashwell, (1886) 16 Q. B. D. 215.

Goods found on private property belong to the owner of such property; see South Staffordshire Water Co. v. Sharman, 1896, 2 Q. B. 44, where two rings found in the mud of a pool by a workman employed amongst others to clean the pool out were recovered from the workman by the owners of the pool; and goods found buried in the earth belong to the Crown as against the finder, but not as against the true owner (see TREASURE TROVE); and goods found in a shop, though given up by the finder to the shopkeeper to advertise them, may be recovered from the shopkeeper by the finder; see Bridges v. Hawkesworth, (1851) 21 L. J. Q. B. 75, where a bundle of bank notes so found was recovered.

The buyer at an auction of a bureau with a secret drawer in it containing money is in law in the position of a finder (Merry v. Green, (1841) 7 M. & W. 623).

Fine, a sum of money or mulct imposed upon an offender, also called a ransom. See PENALTY.

A sum of money paid by a tenant at his entrance into his land; or for the renewal of a lease; and see FINES IN COPYHOLDS.

An assurance by matter of record, founded on a supposed previously existing right, abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74). In every fine, which was the compromise of a fictitious suit and resembled the transactio of the Romans, there was a suit supposed, in which the person who was to recover the thing was called the plaintiff, conusee, or recognisee, and the person who parted with the thing the deforçant, conusor, or recognisor. It was termed a fine for its worthiness, and the peace and quiet it brought with it—finis fructus exitus et effectus legis. There are five essential parts to the levying of a fine:—(1) The original writ of right, usually of covenant, issued out of the Common Pleas against the conusor; and the præcipe, which was a summary of the writ and upon which the fine was levied; (2) the royal license (licentia concordandi) for the levying of the fine, for which the Crown was paid a sum of money called King's silver, which was the post-fine, as distinguished from the præ-fine, which was due on the writ; (3) the conusance or concord itself, which was the agreement expressing the terms of the assurance, and was indeed the conveyance; (4) the note of the fine, which was an abstract of the original contract or concord; (5) the foot of the fine, or the last part of it, which contained all the matter, the day, year, and place, and before what justices it had been levied. A fine was said to be engrossed when the chirographer made the indentures of the fine and delivered them to the party to whom the conusance was made. The chirograph, or indentures, was evidence of the fine.

A fine without proclamation was a fine at the Common Law, and a fine with proclamations (which was to be proclaimed openly in the Common Pleas once a term for four terms next after its engrossment) was a fine according to the statute 4 Hen. 7, c. 24, and of this sort were most fines. A fine was single when an estate was granted to the consignee, and nothing rendered to the cognisor; or double, when there was a render back again either of the land itself or something out of it, for some new estate. See RECOVERY.

Fine Arts. As to copyright in works of art, see the Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46). 'Artistic work' is defined by the Act as including 'works of painting, drawing, sculpture and artistic craftsmanship, and architectural works of art and engravings and photographs (s. 35). 'Work of sculpture' includes casts and models (ib.). 'Architectural work of art' is defined by the Act as 'any building or structure having an artistic character or design in respect of such character or design, or any model for such building or structure, provided that the protection afforded by the Act shall be conned to the artistic character and design and shall not extend to processes or methods of construction'; 'engravings' include 'etchings, lithographs, wood-cuts, prints, and other similar works, not being photographs'; and 'photograph' includes photolithograph and any work produced by any process analogous to photography (ib.). As to what acts amount to an infringement of copyright, see s. 2 of the Act; and as to the ownership of the copyright in cases where the work has been executed to order, or the author was in the service of some other firm, see s. 5. As to cinematograph films, see Barstow v. Terry, 1924, 2 Ch. 316; Nordisk Films Co. v. Onda, 1922 (Macq., 'Copyright Cases', 1917-1923, p. 337). The Act of 1911 repeals twenty former statutes either wholly or partially, but sections 7 and 8 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), under which penalties are recoverable for infringements, are unrepealed.

Fine capiendo pro terris, etc., an obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by a jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his land and goods redelivered to him on obtaining favour of a sum of money, etc.—Reg. Brev. 142.

Fine Force, where a person is compelled to do that which he cannot help.—Old. N. B. 63.

Fine non capiendo pro pulchre placitando, an obsolete writ to inhibit officers of courts to take fines for fair pleading.

Fine pro redisseisina capiendo, an old writ that lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redisseisin, on payment of a reasonable fine.—Reg. Brev. 222.

Fines for Alienation, one of the oppressions of the feudal system, abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24. See Mertens v. Hill, 1901, 1 Ch. 842.

Fines for Endowment, anciently paid to the lord when a married woman was endowed; they were grounded on the feudal exactions.

Fines in Copyholds. A fine which is preserved by 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 6, is a sum of money payable by custom to the lord. There are three classes of fines:—(1) those due on the change of the lord; (2) those on the change of the tenant; and (3) those for a licence to the tenant to do certain acts.

When the fine is due on the change of the lord, such change must be by the act of God, and not in consequence of any act of the party. It can therefore be only claimed on the death of the lord.

When it is due on the change of the tenant, it matters not whether that change is effected by the act of God, or by the tenant's own act. Whenever the tenancy is changed, a fine is payable.

Those fines which are due on licenses by the lord, to empower the tenant to do certain acts, as to demise, etc., are rare. There must be a special custom to support such fine, for, by general custom, fines are due only on admissions.

The admission fine is prima facie uncertain and arbitrary, or rather arbitrable, unless a special custom fix it; it must, however, be reasonable, and not excessive, for excessus in re quilibet jure reprobatur communi, and two years' improved value of the land, deducting quit rents, but not land-tax, is now the full extent which the Courts will allow the lord to take in the exercise of this arbitrary power, except on voluntary grants, for then it is altogether in the lord's option.

If the fine be certain, the tenant should come prepared to pay it, but the lord cannot refuse admittance because the fine is not tendered to him. When the fine is uncertain, the practice is to fix a reasonable day and place of payment.

Upon payment of a fine, the steward delivers a copy of the court-roll, which is the tenant's muniment of his title.

After 1925, in consequence of the enfranchisement of copyholds by the L. P. Act, 1922, s. 128, fines were included among the manorial incidents to which the enfranchised land remains subject until the manorial incidents have been extinguished as provided by the Act, and by s. 130 (5) of that Act fines are recoverable as simple contract debts and not otherwise. Part II. of the 13th Sched. of that Act sets out the scale of compensation payable upon extinguishment. See Scriven or Elton on Copyholds, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Copyholds,' and COPYHOLD.

Finlre, to fine, or pay a fine upon composition and making satisfaction.—Old Records.

Finis unius diei est principium alterius. 2 Buls. 305.—(The end of one day is the beginning of another.) See FULL AGE.

Finittio, death.—Blount.

Firdfare, and Firdwite. See FERDWRIT.

Firdringa, a preparation to go into the army.—Leg. Hen. 1.

Fire. No action for damages lies against any person in whose house, etc., a fire shall accidentally begin: Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 78), s. 86, which section and s. 83 are the only unrepealed sections of the Act.

Fire Engines.—The maintenance of fire engines in urban sanitary districts is provided for by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 171, which incorporates ss. 30–33 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, in the Metropolitan by the Fire Brigade Act, 1865, and in parishes by the Parish Fire Engines Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 38), and the Acts therein recited.

By s. 90 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, local authorities can agree for the common use of fire engines and appliances; ss. 87–89 of the same Act give the police certain powers of breaking into premises and regulating traffic upon the outbreak of a fire, but the captain of the fire brigade is to have control of the operations.

As to the appointment of firemen in mines, see Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 14, 15.

False Alarm.—The False Alarms of Fire Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 28), enacts by s. 1 that :—

Any person knowingly giving or causing to be given a false alarm of fire to the fire brigade of any town or parish outside the metropolitan area [see as to London s. 16 of London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. cccxi.)], or to any officer thereof, whether by means of a street fire alarm, statement, message, or otherwise, shall be deemed to be guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction, and shall, on conviction for such offence by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding 20*l*.

If, after a contract for the sale or lease of a house, etc., the house, etc., be burnt down, the loss falls on the intending purchaser or tenant (Paine v. Meller, (1801) 6 Ves. 349; Counter v. Macpherson, (1845) 5 Moore, P. C. 83); and he cannot claim the benefit of any subsisting insurance that may have been effected by the vendor (Rayner v. Preston, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 1). See, now, however, s. 47 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which provides in such case that the insurance money shall on completion of the purchase be receivable by the purchaser subject to consent of the insurers, and to payment of the proportionate part of the premium by the purchaser. This condition may be excluded or modified by agreement. In a lease, both the covenant to pay rent and the covenant to repair must be complied with by the tenant notwithstanding the destruction of the demised premises by fire, for which reason it is common to insert in each of these covenants an appropriate saving or exception. See also INSURANCE.

As to fires caused by sparks, etc., from railway engines, see the Railway Fires Act, 1905, and the Railway Fires Act (1905) Amendment Act, 1923.

Firearms. This word comprises all sorts of guns, fowling-pieces, blunderbusses, pistols, etc. Their discharge in a street is penal.

For the purposes of the Fire Arms Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 43), 'firearm' means 'any lethal firearm or other weapon of any description from which any shot, bullet or other missile can be discharged, or any part thereof, and the expression "ammunition" means ammunition for any such firearms, and includes grenades, bombs, and other similar missiles, whether such missiles are capable of use with a firearm or not. The Firearms Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 16), amends the definition by including smooth-bore shot gun, air gun, or air rifle and ammunition, if deemed a lethal weapon. A person under seventeen shall not purchase or hire, nor shall anyone sell to such person, a firearm or ammunition. A person under fourteen shall not have in his possession, use or carry, nor shall anyone lend to such person, a firearm or ammunition.

The manufacture, sale, etc., of weapons discharging noxious fluids is prohibited save by authority of Admiralty, Army or Air Council; see s. 6 of the 1920 Act, which Act also makes many more prohibitions and restrictions.

The Firearms and Imitation Firearms (Criminal Uses) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 50), makes the use or attempted use of firearms or imitation firearms to avoid arrest punishable with a maximum of fourteen years penal servitude, and also for being in possession of such firearms or imitation firearms when arrested for committing certain offences (as set out in the schedule) is liable to a maximum penalty of seven years penal servitude. Both penalties are in addition to any penalty which may be imposed for the other Act for which the person was apprehended. A firearm or imitation firearm is also deemed an 'offensive weapon' for the purpose of the Larceny Act, 1916.

The Firearms (Amendment) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 39), defines firearm as any lethal barrelled weapon of any description from which any shot, bullet or other missile can be discharged, and shall include any prohibited weapon, whether it is such a lethal weapon as aforesaid or not, any component part of any such lethal or prohibited weapon and any accessory to any such weapon designed or attempted to diminish the noise or flash caused by firing the weapon. See addenda; GUN; and STREET OFFENCES.

Firebare, a beacon or high tower by the seaside, wherein are continual lights, either to direct sailors in the night, or to give warning of the approach of an enemy.

Firebote, fuel for necessary use, allowed to tenants out of the land granted to them.

Fire Brigade. The Metropolitan Fire Brigade Act, 1855 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 90), intrusts to the London County Council, which has superseded the Metropolitan Board of Works, the duty of extinguishing fires in the metropolis. On the occasion of a fire the chief officer of the fire brigade may take any measures that appear expedient for the protection of life and property by s. 12 of the Act; and in other districts by s. 89 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53). Motors used for fire-brigade purposes are exempt from the duty on licences for motor-cars.

Fire Insurance. See INSURANCE.

Fire-ordeal. See ORDEAL.

Fire-plugs. As to the duty of urban authorities to provide fire-plugs, see Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 66, and Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 124. As to the like duty of undertakers of waterworks, see Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 38-43. As to the metropolis, see 34 & 35 Vict. c. 113, s. 34.

Fire and Sword, Letters of, anciently issued from the Privy Council of Scotland, addressed to the sheriff of the county, authorizing him to call for the assistance of the county to dispossess a tenant unlawfully retaining possession.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Fire-resisting Materials are required by the London Building Acts; see a very full list of them in Sched. I. of the London Building Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), Chitty's Statutes. They include, for general purposes, 'brickwork constructed of good bricks well burnt,' etc., and 'solidly put together with good mortar,' etc., and for the special purposes of 'verandahs, balustrades outside landings, the treads, strings and risers of outside stairs, outside steps, porticos and porches, oak, teak, jarrah, karri or other hard timber not less than 1½ inches finished thickness.'

Fireworks. The making and selling of fireworks and squibs, or throwing them about in the street, was declared to be a common nuisance by the repealed 9 Wm. 3, c. 7. See also Metropolis Police Act (2 & 3 Vict.

c. 47), s. 54, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 139, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 130, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 98, provisions were made for regulating the manufacture, sale, and use of fireworks, but these have now been repealed, and the law relating to this subject amended by the Explosives Act, 1875 (amended by the Explosives Act, 1923). Any person throwing, casting, or firing any fireworks in or into any highway, street, or public place is liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* (s. 80 of the Act of 1875). And see SQUIBS.

Firkin, a measure containing nine gallons.

Firm, the name or style under which any business is established. 'Partners who have entered into partnership with one another are' for the purposes of the Partnership Act (see PARTNERSHIP) 'called collectively a firm, and the name under which their business is carried on is called the "firm-name"' (Partnership Act, 1890, s. 3). Partners may sue or be sued in the name of their firm, but if suing must disclose names on demand. See R. S. C., Order XLVIII*a*. But a partnership firm is not a person in law, see Re Smith, 1914, 1 Ch. p. 948, per Joyce, J., and the instances there given by the learned judge of the effect of a legacy or an assurance to a firm. See BUSINESS NAMES.

Firma, a tribute anciently paid towards the entertainment of the King of England for one night: also victuals or rent.

Firma Alba. See ALBA FIRMA.

Firmaratio, the right of a tenant to his lands and tenements.

Firmarius, a fructuary.—1 Reeves, 324.

Firmatio, the doe season. Also a supplying with food.—Leg. Inc., c. 34.

Firmaun, Firman or Phirmaund, an order, mandate, an imperial decree, royal grant, or charter.—Indian.

Firme, a farm.—Old Records.

Firmura, liberty to scour and repair a mill-dam, and carry away the soil, etc.

First Fruits, an incident to the old feudal tenures, being one year's profits of the land after the death of a tenant, which belonged to the king. Hence arose the claim of the head of the Church to the first year's profits of every clergyman's benefice; otherwise called annates or primitiæ, transferred from the Pope to the Crown by 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, and from the Crown to the Church for the augmentation of poor livings, by 2 & 3 Anne, c. 11. The holders of benefices of a value not exceeding 50*l.* a year were freed from first fruits and tenths by 6 Anne, c. 44, and 6 Anne, c. 54. First fruits were paid on their value as compounded for under 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, by the then holders of preferments. But both first fruits and tenths were abolished by the First Fruits and Tenths Measure, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, No. 5). See BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE AND TENTHS.

First Impression. See PRIMÆ IMPRESSIONIS.

First Offender. See PROBATION (3) AND PREVIOUS CONVICTION.

Fiscal, belonging to the revenue.

Fiscus, a wicker basket, or pannier, in which the Romans were accustomed to keep and carry about large sums of money (Cic. 1 Verr. c. viii.; Phædr. Fab. ii. 7), hence any treasure or money chest.

The importance of the imperial fiscus led to the appropriating the name to that property which the Cæsar claimed as Cæsar, and 'fiscus,' without any adjunct, was so used (Juv. Sat. iv. 54). Ultimately the word came to signify, generally, the property of the State, the Cæsar having concentrated in himself all the sovereign power; thus the word had finally the signification of ærarium in the Republican period. It does not appear at what time the ærarium was merged in the fiscus, though the distinction continued to the time of Hadrian. In the latter periods the words were used indiscriminately, to mean the imperial, which was the only public, chest.—Smith's Dict. Antiq.

Fishery, the right to take fish. Fisheries are either free, common, or several. A free fishery is the exclusive right of fishing in a public river, and is a royal franchise. Common of fishery, or common of piscary, is the right of fishing in another man's water. A several fishery is the exclusive right of fishing in another man's water, and he that has it, according to Blackstone, 'must also be the owner of the soil' (2 Bl. Com. 40). This position of Blackstone, however, has been questioned, and the distinction between the various kinds of fishery is not clear; see Harg. Co. Litt. 122 a, n. 7; Holford v. Bailey, (1846) 8 Q. B. 1000; 13 ib. 426; Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., (1863) 3 B. & S. 732; Chesterfield (Earl) v. Harris, 1908, 2 Ch. 397; 1911, A. C. 623; Coulson and Forbes on the Law of Waters; Leake on Uses and Profits of Land. No right can exist in the public to fish in an inland non-tidal lake (O'Neil v. Johnston, 1909, 1 Ir. R. 237).

The fishing rights of the lord of the manor in enfranchised copyholds are not affected by the Law of Property Act, 1922.

The term is also applied to fishing grounds, or parts of the sea where at certain seasons numbers of fish are taken. The right of frequenting these has frequently been the subject of dispute between nations, and sometimes of treaties. A number of Acts approving or enforcing International Conventions have been passed (1818), Newfoundland Fisheries, including France (1904); English Channel Fisheries (1826, 1839, 1867); North Sea Fisheries (1882); Seal Fisheries, see 57 & 58 Vict. c. 2, and succeeding Acts; Whaling, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 49). For collections of statutes relating to fisheries, see Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Fish' and 'Fish (Sea),' and Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, which consolidates and amends the enactments relating to Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries in England and Wales. The powers and duties under all these Acts are now vested in the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries by virtue of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 31). A close season for all freshwater fish is prescribed by Part III. of the Act of 1923. See Trout.

As to cutting through or destroying the dam, floodgate, or sluice of, or putting lime or noxious materials in, a fishpond or water which is private property, or in which there is a private right of fishery, with intent to take or destroy fish, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 32; and as to the taking or destroying of fish, see Larceny Act, 1861, ss. 24 and 25; Barnard v. Roberts, (1907) 96 L. T. 648. See AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES, MINISTRY OF.

Fishgarth, a dam or weir in a river for taking fish.

Fishing Boats.—See the special provisions as to fishing boats in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, Part IV.); Chit. Stat., tit. 'Shipping.' If profit-sharing, they may be excluded from the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925: see s. 35 (2).

Fish-royal, whale and sturgeon, the taking of which is the exclusive right of the sovereign.—2 Bl. Com. 403.

Fisk, the right of the Crown to the movable estate of a person pronounced rebel.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Fitz [Nor., fr. fil., Fr.], a son. It is used in law and genealogy; as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzjames, the son of James; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It was originally applied to illegitimate children.

Fitzherbert, the most distinguished writer upon law in the reign of Henry VIII. He was first a serjeant, and some years after a judge, of the Common Pleas. The first book published by this learned author was his Grand Abridgment, printed in 1514 by Richard Pynson, of which in 1516 a second edition was printed by Wynkyn de Worde. In 1534 he published his New Natura Brevium, which was reprinted in 1537. In 1541 we find The New Booke of Justyces of Peace made by Anthony Fitzherbert, Judge, lately translated out of Frenche into Englishe. Of these, the Natura Brevium (nature of writs), which is an improvement of a more ancient work of the same nature and title, is by far the best known and most often cited. It is remarkable that this treatise on the nature and effect of the principal writs in the Register was published at a time when those writs were, many of them, going into disuse, and soon afterwards became obsolete.

Five-mile Act, 35 Eliz. c. 2, whereby popish recusants, convicted for not going to church, were compelled to repair to their usual place of abode, and not to remove above five miles from thence, repealed (after long disuse) by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102. Also, 17 Car. 2, c. 2, whereby clergy who refused to take the oath of non-resistance imposed by the Act on all who had not subscribed the Act of Uniformity, were forbidden to come within five miles of a corporate town, and non-conformists were forbidden to teach in any school under heavy penalties; repealed by 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, s. 1.

Fixtures. Things of an accessory character which are not something which is part of the original structure (Boswell v. Crucible Steel Co., 1925, 1 K. B. 119), annexed to houses or lands, which become, immediately on annexation, part of the realty itself, i.e., governed by the same law which applies to the land, in conformity with the maxim quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. The application of this legal principle, however, is not uniform, as may be thus shown:

(1) Between landlord and tenant. If the chattels be not let into the soil, they are not fixtures at all, and may be removed at will, like any other species of personal property. When the chattel is connected with the freehold, by being let into the earth, or by being cemented or otherwise united to some erection attached to the ground, the question arises—when may the tenant remove such fixtures?

The general rule as to annexations made by a tenant during the continuance of his term is the following—Whenever he has affixed anything to the demised premises during the term he can never again sever it without his landlord's consent; the property, by being annexed to the land, immediately belongs to the freeholder, and a tenant, by making it a part of the freehold, is considered to have abandoned all future right to it, so that it would be waste in him to remove it afterwards; it therefore falls in with his term, and comes to the reversioner as part of the land. But a tenant may so construct the erections that they shall not be deemed fixtures; thus, even if he erect buildings—as barns, granaries, sheds, and mills upon blocks, rollers, pattens, pillars, or plates, resting on brickwork, they may be removed; for unless they be affixed to the freehold by being let into it, or are, by means of nails, mortar, or the like, united to it, they remain merely movable chattels.

The exceptions to the above rule are three:

(α) In favour of trade. A tenant may remove such things which he has fixed to the freehold for purposes of trade or manufacture, if the removal causes no material injury to the estate; furnaces, coppers, brewing vessels, fixed vats, salt pans, and the like; machinery in breweries, collieries, and mills, such as steam-engines, cider mills, etc.; buildings for trade, as a varnish-house, built on plates laid on brickwork, and a shed called a Dutch barn, formed of uprights rising from a foundation of brick. (β) For agricultural purposes. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, s. 22 (see that title), abrogating, as did the Acts of 1883 and 1908, the rule of Elwes v. Maw, (1802) 3 East, 38; 2 Sm. L. C., gives a tenant a property in any engine, machinery, fencing, or building for which he cannot get compensation, so that it is removable by a tenant before, or within a reasonable time after, the termination of the tenancy, subject, however, to the tenant paying any rent due, etc., avoiding or making good damage, giving the landlord notice before removal, and allowing the landlord an option of purchase. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, s. 53, and the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 25), s. 3, contained very similar enactments, but the Act of 1851 applied only where the fixtures were put up with the written consent of the landlord, and the Act of 1875 made express provision for its exclusion by landlords. (γ) For ornament and convenience. The following are removable: Hangings, tapestry, and pier-glasses, whether nailed to the walls on panels or put up in lieu of panels; marble or other ornamental chimney-pieces; marble slabs, window blinds; wainscots fixed to the wall by screws; grates, ranges, and stoves although fixed in brickwork; iron backs to chimneys; beds fastened to the walls or ceiling; fixed tables, furnaces and coppers, mash-tubs, and fixed water-tubs; coffee and malt-mills; cupboards fixed with hold-fasts; clock cases, iron ovens, and the like; provided the separation occasion but little or no damage. The fixtures must be moved before the tenant's term or interest expires, unless in the case of a strict tenancy at will, when the tenant may be allowed a reasonable time after his tenancy, if his interest were not terminated by his own act.—Woodfall, L. and T.

(2) Before 1926, between the heir and the personal representative of the terre-tenant. Though the fixtures will generally pass with the freehold to the heir, yet such of them as are put up for ornament, domestic use, or trade devolve to the personal representative, provided they can be easily removed and are not essential to the enjoyment of the inheritance. See Re Lord Chesterfield's Settled Estates, 1911, 1 Ch. 237.

(3) Between the tenant of a particular estate and the remainder-man or reversioner a similar rule applies as in the last case; see Leigh v. Taylor, 1902, A. C. 157; and see now as to heirlooms generally, Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 67, and also Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 130.

A mortgage of land, including fixtures, does not recognize a Bill of Sale under the Bills of Sales Acts, 1878 and 1882, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 88 (4).

The larceny of fixtures is punishable; see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 16.

Consult Amos and Ferard on Fixtures; Goodeve on the Law of Real Property.

Flaco, a place covered with standing water.

Flagrant Necessity, a case of urgency rendering lawful an otherwise illegal act, as an assault to remove a man from impending danger.

Flagrante delicto, in (in the very act of committing the crime).

Flat. A set of rooms on one floor of a house usually let unfurnished in many separate flats, which for all legal purposes are separate houses. For the purposes of the Housing Act, 1936, defined as a separate and self-contained set of premises constructed for use for the purposes of a dwelling and forming part of a building from some other part of which it is divided horizontally, and 'block of flats,' a building which contains two or more flats and consists of three or more storeys exclusive of any storey which is constructed for use for purposes other than those of a dwelling. See Blackwell on the Law of Residential Flats; Woodfall, L. and T., and Forms in Appendix B. of that work.

Flecta, a feathered or fleet arrow.

Fledwite, or Flightwite [fr. flyth, Sax., flight, and wite, punishment], a discharge from amerciaments, where a person having been a fugitive came to the peace of our lord the king, of his own accord, or with licence.

Fleet [fr. fleet, Sax., an estuary], a place where the tide flows, a creek, or inlet of water, hence Northfleet, Purfleet; also a company of ships or navy; also a prison in London (so called from a river or ditch formerly in its vicinity), now abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

Fleet-Books. These books contain the original entries of marriages solemnized in the Old Fleet Prison from 1686 to 1754, but are not, it is said, admissible in evidence to prove a marriage, for they were not made under public authority. But perhaps on a question of pedigree, they are evidence to show the name by which a woman passed when she was married there. The books are now deposited in the office of the Registrar-General, pursuant to the Non-Parochial Registers Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 92), ss. 6, 23.—Taylor on Evid., s. 1430; Hubback on Succession, p. 510.

Flem [fr. flean, Sax., to kill], an outlaw.

Flemene frit, Flemenes frinthe, Flymena frynthe, the reception or relief of a fugitive or outlaw.—Jac. Law Dict.

Flemeswite, the possession of the goods of fugitives.—Fleta, lib. 1, cxlvii.

Flet, house; home.—Cowel.

Fleta, seu Commentarius Juris Anglicani, a treatise upon the whole law, as it stood at the time this author wrote, which serves as an appendix, and often as a commentary, to Bracton. The author was wholly an imitator.

The book was written after the thirteenth year of Edward I., and not much later. The occasion of the title of it is given by the author himself, who says it was written during his confinement in the Fleet prison. From that circumstance it has been conjectured that he might be one of those lawyers who, for malpractice in their office as judges, were punished with imprisonment and pecuniary penalties.—2 Reeves, p. 279.

Fletwit, or Filtwit. See FLEDWITE.

Flechwite, a fine on account of brawls and quarrels.—Spelm.

Filt, treason.

Floating Capital. Capital available for the purpose of meeting current expenditure.

Floating Charge. This term is not a legal term, but it is well understood and is used in Acts of Parliament, e.g., the Finance Act, 1915, s. 27, and may be said to denote a security which is an equitable charge on the assets for the time being of a going concern. It allows of the business being carried on and the property comprised in it being dealt with in the ordinary course of business, until the undertaking charged ceases to be a going concern, or until the creditor in some way or other intervenes. See Government Stock, etc., Co. v. Manila Ry. Co., 1897, A. C. p. 86, per Lord Macnaghten.

The charge becomes fixed and enforceable by the chargees as soon as the company goes into liquidation, even for the purpose of reconstruction (Crompton & Co., 1914, 1 Ch. 954). Under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 88, all floating charges must be registered in the Register of Charges.

Floor of the Court. The part of the Court between the judges and the first row of counsel. Parties who appear in person stand there.

Florin, a coin of the value of two shillings.

Flotages, such things as by accident swim on the top of great rivers.

Flotsam, or Floatsam, goods floating upon the sea, which belong to the Crown unless claimed by the true owners thereof within a year and a day.—5 Rep. 106 b; Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 510. See JETSAM, also LIGAN.

Fly for it. On a criminal trial in former times it was usual after the verdict, even if not guilty, to inquire also: 'Did he fly for it?' Forfeiture of goods followed a conviction upon such inquiry. This practice, after having been long discontinued, was generally abolished by the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), s. 5. There is a saying, Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit (3 Inst. 14)—'He who flies from justice confesses his guilt.'

Flyma, a runaway; fugitive; one escaped from justice, or who has no 'hlaforð'.—Anc. Inst. Eng. See ABSCOND.

Flyman-frymth, the offence of harbouring a fugitive, the penalty attached to which was one of the rights of the Crown.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Focage, housebote, firebote.—Cowel.

Focale, firewood.—Cowel.

Fodder, (1) food for horses or cattle; (2) among the Feudists a prerogative of the prince to be provided with corn, etc., for his horses, by his subjects in his wars.

Fodertorium, provisions to be paid by custom to the royal purveyors.—Cowel.

Fœdus, a league or compact.

Fœmina viro co-operta (a married woman).

Fœminæ non sunt capaces de publicis officiis. Jenk. Cent. 237.—(Women are not admissible to public offices.) But see WOMAN.

Fœneration, the act of putting out money to usury.

Fœnus nauticum (nautical usury), a contract for the repayment of money borrowed, not on the ship and goods only, but on the mere hazard of the voyage itself, with a condition to be repaid with extraordinary interest.

Fœsa, grass; herbage.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 506.

Fœticide, criminal abortion. See ABORTION.

Fœtus, a babe in the womb.

Fogage, fog or rank after-grass, not eaten in summer.

Folterers, vagabonds.—Blount.

Fole-land, the land of the folk or people. It was the property of the community. It might be occupied in common or possessed in severalty: and in the latter case, it was probably parcelled out to individuals in the fole-gemot or court of the district: and the grant sanctioned by the freemen there present. But while it continued to be fole-land it could not be alienated in perpetuity; and therefore, on the expiration of the term for which it had been granted, it reverted to the community, and was again distributed by the same authority. Spelman describes fole-land as terra popularis quæ jure communi possidetur—sine scripto (Gloss. voce Folc-land). In another place he distinguishes it accurately from bocland: Prædia Saxones duplici titulo possidebant: vel scripti auctoritate, quod bocland vocabant, vel populi testimonio, quod folcland dicere (ibid., voce Bocland).

Fole-land was subject to many burthens and exactions from which bocland was exempt. The possessors of fole-land were bound to assist in the reparation of royal villis and other public works. They were liable to have travellers and others quartered on them. They were required to give hospitality to kings and great men in their progresses through the country, to furnish carriages and horses to them and to their messengers and servants, and those who had charge of their hawks, horses, and hounds.

From these burthens the lands were liberated when converted by charter into bocland. See Allen's Inquiry into the Rise and Progress of the Royal Prerogative in England, 143–149.

Fole-mote, or Folk-mote [fr. folk, Sax., people, and mote, meeting], a general assembly of the people to consider of an order matters concerning the commonwealth; also any kind of popular or public meeting.—Sommer; Spelm.; Brady's Glos. 48; Termes de la Ley.

Fole-right, or Folk-right, the jus commune, or Common Law, mentioned in the laws of King Edward the Elder, declaring the same equal right, law, or justice to be due to persons of all degrees.

Foldage, and Foldcourse. See FALDAGE.

Folgaril, menial servants, followers.—Bracton.

Folgere, a freeman who has no house or dwelling of his own, but is the follower or retainer of another (heorthfæst), for whom he performs certain predial services.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Folgoth, official dignity.

Folio (abbrev. fol.): (1) A certain number of words; in conveyances, etc., and proceedings in the High Court (see Ord. LXV., r. 27 (14)) amounting to seventy-two, and in parliamentary proceedings to ninety. (2) In printing, the figure at the top or bottom of the page. (3) The largest size of a book from 15 to 20 inches in height and 10 to 12½ inches in breadth.

Folkland. See FOLC-LAND.

Food. In the Sale of Food and Drugs Act (see ADULTERATION) the word includes 'every article used for food or drink by man, other than drugs or water and any article which ordinarily enters into or is used in the composition or preparation of human food,' and also 'flavouring matters and condiments.'—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 26; Public Health Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 71), s. 72; and Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), s. 34. For power to make regulations as to the importation of food, see AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE; AGRICULTURAL MARKETING; Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 32). See generally, ADULTERATION, also Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1927.

Food Inspectors. The Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), has provisions dealing with inspectors, who have powers of sampling food at the place of or in the course of delivery to a purchaser; such officers are called sampling officers (s. 16 of the Act).

For inspection of Bakehouses, Cookhouses, and Weights and Measures, see those titles.

Foot of a Fine, the conclusion of it, including the whole matter, and reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied.

Foot-geld, amercement for not expediting or cutting out the balls of dogs' feet in the forest.—Manw. p. 109 (4th ed.).

Footpath. See WAY.

Forage, hay and straw for horses, particularly in the army.

Foragium, straw when the corn is thrashed out.

Forbalka, a balk or ridge of land lying forwards or next to the highway.—Old Records.

Forbannitus, a pirate.—Leg. Ripuar.

Forbarre, to deprive one of a thing for ever.—Cowel.

Forbatudus, the aggressor slain in combat.—Jac. Law Dict.

Forbes Mackenzie Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 67), the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1853, now repealed, for the better regulation of public-houses in Scotland, of which the best known provision was that for entirely closing them on Sunday.

Force and Arms [vi et armis, Lat.], words usually inserted in an indictment, though not absolutely necessary.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 24. They were also formally inserted in every declaration for trespass, in order to give the Court of Common Pleas or Exchequer jurisdiction, but were rendered unnecessary by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 49.

Force Majeure, irresistible compulsion, coercion diplomatically recognized as irresistible.—Concise Oxford Dict. Compare ACT OF GOD; RESTRAINT OF PRINCES.

Forcible Detainer, refusing to restore another's goods, after sufficient amends tendered, the original taking having been lawful; for which injury the remedy usually resorted to was trover (q.v.). But if the original taking were unlawful it is a criminal offence against the public peace, and a misdemeanour, punishable by imprisonment and ransom at the pleasure of the Crown.—4 Bl. Com. 148.

Forcible Entry is the entering upon any land or tenement with a strong hand, or in a violent manner, in order to take possession. There may be a forcible entry although no actual force is used, as, for example, when threats are made or an unusual number of persons collected. Forcible entry was permissible at Common Law in certain cases, e.g., when the rightful owner had been wrongfully deprived of possession, but it was absolutely prohibited by the Statutes of Forcible Entry (5 Rich. 2, c. 7; 15 Rich. 2, c. 2; 8 Hen. 6, c. 9), which make forcible entries punishable with imprisonment. The first of these statutes provides that 'none shall make entry into any lands or tenements, but in case where entry is given by law, and in such case not with strong hand nor with multitude of people, but only in a peaceable and easy manner.' A forcible entry by a person entitled to possession, though indictable, does not give rise to civil responsibility in damages. See Hemmings v. Stoke Poges Golf Club, 1920, 1 K. B. 720; and Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 7th ed. pp. 328-331. See DISTRESS.

Forda, a ford or shallow in a river.

Fordol [fr. fore, Sax., before, and dæle, a portion], a butt or headland jutting out upon other land.

Forecheapum, præ-emption, forestalling the market.—Jac. Law Dict.

Foreclosure. A mortgagee, or any person claiming an interest in the mortgage under him, can compel the mortgagor, after breach of the condition, to elect either to redeem the pledge or that his equity of redemption be extinguished by an order of the Court. The foreclosure of mortgages is one of the matters assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (1)).

Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 91, replacing the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 25, replacing the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), s. 48, empowers either mortgagor or mortgagee to obtain an order for sale instead of redemption or foreclosure.

See ss. 88 and 89 of the L. P. Act, 1925, in regard to the estate acquired by the mortgagee after foreclosure.

Indulgence is sometimes extended to the mortgagor in enabling him to pay, so as to prevent an absolute foreclosure. Some ground must be assigned for enlarging the time, and it is done only on the terms of paying the interest and costs already certified. Even after an order of foreclosure absolute the foreclosure may in a proper case be opened and the mortgagor allowed to redeem (Campbell v. Holyland, (1877) 7 Ch. D. 166).

For jurisdiction of the county courts in actions (up to 500*l.*) for foreclosure, see County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 52.

Where the amount lent exceeds 500*l.*, to obtain a foreclosure an action must be brought in the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56). Consult Coote or Fisher on Mortgages.

Foregift, a premium for a lease, frequently forbidden to be taken for an ecclesiastical lease; see, e.g., the Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108), s. 30.

Foregoers, royal purveyors.—26 Edw. 3, c. 5.

Fore-hand Rent, rent payable in advance.

Foreign Attachment, a custom which prevails in the city of London, whereby a debt owing to a defendant, sued in the Court of the Mayor or Sheriff, may be attached in the hands of the debtor. The custom was certified by the Recorder of London, in the reign of Edward IV., to be, that if a plaintiff be affirmed in London before, etc., against any person, and it be returned nilil, if the plaintiff will surmise that another person within the city is a debtor to the defendant in any sum, he shall have garnishment against him to warn him to come in and answer whether he be indebted in the manner alleged; and if he comes and does not deny the debt, it shall be attached in his hands, and after four defaults, recorded on the part of the defendant, such person shall find new surety to the plaintiff for the said debt, and judgment shall be that the plaintiff shall have judgment against him, and that he shall be quit against the other after execution sued out by the plaintiff. Consult Brandon on Foreign Attachment, and see Cox v. Lord Mayor of London, (1867) L. R. 2 H. L. 239; Mayor of London v. London Joint Stock Bank, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 393, which exempts corporations from the process, and decides that fictitious summonses render it invalid. These decisions have had the effect of reducing foreign attachment to little more than a subject of historical interest.

Foreign Awards. The Arbitration (Foreign Awards) Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 15), provides for the enforcement of foreign arbitral awards subject to certain conditions.

Foreign Bill of Exchange, a bill which is not an inland bill. See INLAND BILL. Before 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, a bill drawn in one part of the United Kingdom, as England, on a person in another part, as Ireland or Scotland, was deemed a foreign bill; but this was altered by s. 7 of that Act, of which the effect is reproduced by s. 4 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. By the law of merchants, the holder of a foreign bill is obliged to protest it for non-payment, and also for non-acceptance, whenever notice of such non-acceptance is necessary. See Chitty, Byles, Bayley, or Chalmers, on Bills.

Foreign Bought and Sold. a custom in London which prevented merchants other than freemen of the City from dealing in cattle in Smithfield, was abolished in 1671.

Foreign Company. Every Company incorporated outside the United Kingdom, which has a place of business in the United Kingdom, has to comply with certain regulations laid down by Part XI., ss. 343-352 of the Companies Act, 1929. The regulations relate, inter alia, to the registration with the registrar of companies of a copy or translation of the instrument and regulations constituting the company, a list of directors with the statutory particulars and the names and addresses of one or more residents in Great Britain for service of notices and process on the company, and other important provisions. Companies incorporated in a British possession are empowered to hold land in the United Kingdom without prejudice to their powers by virtue of registration in Northern Ireland (s. 345). Special regulations are made for companies incorporated in the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man (s. 343).

The general provisions of the Companies Act, 1929, relating to charges on property in England and on property there acquired subject to charges, are made to apply to companies incorporated outside Great Britain and having an established place of business in England (s. 90).

As to certification of instruments constituting a foreign company or of a charge created under ss. 79 and 81, ibid., see the Companies (Forms) Order, 1929, S. R. & O. 1929, No. 823.

Foreign Courts. The proceedings of a foreign court are proved by copies under the seal of such court, proof being given that the seal affixed is the seal of such court. If a court have no seal, then proof by an exemplification under the hand of the chief judge of the court (his handwriting being proved) will be received. See Piggott on Foreign Judgments.

Foreign Documents. The admissibility in evidence in the United Kingdom of entries contained in public registers in other countries is governed by the Evidence (Foreign Dominions and Colonial Documents Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 4). Orders in Council may be made under s. 1 of the Act recognizing public registers in other countries (which expression includes any British Colony or Protectorate) if desirable in the interests of reciprocity.

Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. 3, c. 69 (as to which see Burton v. Pinkerton, (1867) L. R. 2 Ex. 340), repealed and replaced by the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), passed to 'regulate the conduct of her Majesty's subjects during the existence of hostilities between foreign states with which her Majesty is at peace.' By s. 4 of this Act, if any British subject accepts any engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign state at war with any foreign state at peace with the Crown, he is punishable by fine and imprisonment or either; and by s. 11, if any person within the British Dominions 'prepares or fits out any naval or military expedition to proceed against the dominions of any friendly state,' such person and any persons employed in any capacity in any such expedition are similarly punishable. In Reg. v. Jameson, 1896, 2 Q. B. 425, many persons were tried and convicted for an offence against s. 11 in making an armed incursion into the Transvaal in South Africa. See also Treaties of Washington Act, 1922, ss. 1-3, as to further restrictions respecting the building or equipment of ships of war.

Foreign-going Ship. See SHIP.

Foreign Judgments. A foreign judgment, i.e., a judgment of a foreign court, stands on a very different footing from a judgment of a court of this country. It cannot be enforced here by execution like an English judgment; it can only be enforced by bringing an action on it as if it were a contract, which of course it is not, though it is convenient to treat it as such. It is not strictly in this country res judicata, and therefore does not create an absolute estoppel. Nevertheless it is practically conclusive between the parties on the merits. Every presumption will be made in favour of a foreign judgment. It will be presumed that the court had jurisdiction, and it will be no defence to an action founded on it that the foreign court made a mistake either in its own law or ours. But it may be impeached if the foreign court acted perversely, or had no jurisdiction, or the judgment was obtained by fraud, or the defendant had no notice of the proceedings, or if the judgment was 'contrary to the first principles of reason and justice.'—Odgers on the Common Law, pp. 946 et seq.

The Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 13), provides for the enforcement of judgments given in foreign countries which accord reciprocal treatment to judgments given in this country. The countries and the courts in those countries to which the Act may apply are specified by Orders in Council, which may be extended to British Dominions, Protectorates and mandated territories. The Act (s. 7), provides that Part II. of the Administration of Justice Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 81), shall cease to have effect in relation to such Dominions except to such part of the said Dominions to which the Act of 1920 extends at the date of an Order under the Act of 1933, superseding an Order under Part II. of 1920. See also JUDGMENT EXTENSION ACTS. Consult Piggott on Foreign Judgments; Dicey's Conflict of Laws.

Foreign Jurisdiction Acts: 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 116; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 87; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 85; and 41 & 42 Vict. c. 67; consolidated by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 37) (extended by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 16)), which regulates the exercise by the Crown of the powers and jurisdiction acquired by it (whether by treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or otherwise) in countries out of the dominions of the British Crown.

A decree by a foreign court over a matter outside its jurisdiction has no effect (Lecouturier v. Rey, 1910, A. C. 262).

Foreign Law in the courts of this country is a question of fact, which is decided by the judge, not the jury (Administration of Justice Act, 1920, s. 15). See LAW, QUESTIONS OF, and SKILLED WITNESS. By the Foreign Law Ascertainment Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 11), the High Court of Justice may remit a case with queries to foreign courts of the countries with which a convention shall have been entered into for the purpose by the British Crown for ascertainment of the foreign law, and may apply the opinion obtained to the facts of the case. According to a note in the Annual Practice, 1936, p. 658, 'in the only case in which it is known to have been used, the report of the foreign authority was received through the diplomatic channel and was filed in the Central Office, in the same way as depositions are filed; an office copy being taken for use.'

Foreign Marriage Acts. See MARRIAGE (Foreign Marriage).

Foreign Plate. See PLATE.

Foreign Plea, a plea objecting to the jurisdiction of a judge, on the ground that he had not cognizance of the subject-matter of the suit.

Foreign Seamen. As to apprehension of, for desertion, see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 238, re-enacting the Foreign Deserters Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 26). See also the Deserters from Foreign Ships Order, 1934, No. 893.

Forejudge [fr. forisjudicatio, Lat.], a judgment whereby a person is deprived of the thing in question. To be forejudged by the Court is when an officer or attorney of any court is expelled the same for some offence, or for not appearing to an action.

Foreman, the presiding member of a jury.

Forensic, belonging to courts of justice.

Forensic Medicine, the science which applies the principles and practice of the different branches of medicine to the elucidation of doubtful questions in a court of justice. It comprehends, in a more extensive sense, medical police, or those medical precepts which may prove useful to the legislatures or the magistracy. This science is also termed medical jurisprudence, legal medicine, and state medicine. Consult the works of Taylor, Guy, Beck, or Tidy on the subject.

Foreschoke [derelictum, Lat.], forsaken; disavowed.—10 Edw. 2, c. 1.

Foreshore. 'The shore and bed of the sea and of every channel, creek, bay, estuary, and of every navigable river of the United Kingdom as far up the same as the tide flows to the line between the high water mark of ordinary tides and low water mark' belong to the Crown and its grantees, and the management is transferred from the Commissioners of Woods to the Board of Trade. See s. 7 of the Crown Lands Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 32), subject as in that Act mentioned; see also Ministry of Transport Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 50). And see BATHING (SEA). Consult Coulson and Forbes on the Law of Waters.

For the powers of local authorities to make bye-laws for public bathing, bathing huts and life-saving appliances, see Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 231-234.

There can be no custom giving a right of shooting wildfowl on the foreshore or bed of a tidal navigable river (Fitzhardinge (Lord) v. Purcell, 1908, 2 Ch. 139).

Forest [fr. foresta, Ital.], an incorporeal hereditament, being the right or franchise of keeping, for the purpose of venery and hunting, the wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, park, and warren (which means all animals pursued in field sports), in a certain territory or precinct of woody ground and pasture set apart for the purpose, with laws and officers of its own, established for protection of the game.—Manw. For. Laws.

The Charta de Foresta, confirmed in parliament, 9 Hen. 3, disafforested many forests unlawfully made. Some of the royal forests still exist, as the New Forest in Hampshire, and Windsor; they are now administered by the Commissioners of Crown Lands and Forestry Commission; see FORESTRY ACTS. A forest is, in general, a royal possession, though it is capable of being vested in a subject. A forest is a right which the owner thereof (whether sovereign or subject) may have either in his own lands or the lands of another, differing from other incorporeal hereditaments, which are rights exercised over another's lands. The owner of a forest is also considered (notwithstanding the general rule that title cannot be made to things feræ naturæ) as having a qualified property in the wild animals of chase and venery there found, as long as they continue therein.—1 Steph. Com.; but the owner of the land could deal with it, provided that they respected forest rights; see Blanchard v. Cawthorne, (1833) 6 Sim. 155; and VERT.

Forest Courts, fallen into absolute disuse. They were instituted for the government of the royal forests in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which such deer were lodged. They consisted of the Courts of attachments, regard, sweinmote, and justice-seat. The Court of attachments, woodmote, or forty days' Court, was held before the verderers of the forest once in every forty days, to inquire into all offences against vert and venison. The Court of regard, or survey of dogs, held every third year, for the expedition of mastiffs. The Court of sweinmote, held before the verderers thrice in every year, the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. It inquired into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest, and tied presentments certified from the Court of attachments against offences in vert and venison. The Court of justice-seat, held before the chief itinerant judge, or his deputy, to hear and determine all trespasses within the forest, and claims of franchise, etc., therein arising. This was a Court of Record: but since the Revolution, in 1688, the forest laws have fallen into total disuse.—3 Steph. Com.

Forestalling the Market, buying up merchandise on its way to market, or dissuading persons to bring their goods there, or persuading them to enhance the price when there. It was deemed an offence against public trade, but the statutes prohibiting it were repealed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24.

Forestry Acts, 1919, 1923 and 1927, The. The Act of 1919 provided for the establishment of a Forestry Commission for the United Kingdom and for the promotion of afforestation and the production and supply of timber. The Forestry (Transfer of Woods) Act, 1923, provided for the transfer of certain properties to the Forestry Commissioners and amended the former Act. The 1927 Act increased the number of Forestry Commissioners, and gave them the power to make bye-laws in certain cases. Reference should be made to the Acts themselves.

Forethought Felony. See MURDER.

Forfang, or Forfeng [fr. fore, Sax., before, and fangen, to take], the taking of provisions from any person in fairs or markets before the royal purveyors were served with necessities for the sovereign.—Cowel. Also the seizing and rescuing of stolen or strayed cattle from the hands of a thief, or of those having illegal possession of them; also the reward fixed for such rescue.

Forfeiture, a penalty for an offence or unlawful act, or for some wilful omission of a tenant of property whereby he loses it, together with his title, which devolves upon others.

Forfeiture resulted from the following circumstances:—(1) Treason, misprision of treason, felony, murder, self-murder, præmunire, and striking or threatening a judge. But the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), enacted that no conviction, etc., for treason or felony, or felo de se, shall cause any forfeiture except as consequent on outlawry. The Act also makes provision for the appointment by the Crown of administrators of the property of convicts.

(2) Conveyance contrary to law, as transferring a freehold to an alien, who formerly could take lands but could not hold them; wherefore upon office found the Crown was entitled to the land. But the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914 (substituted for the Naturalization Act, 1870), subject to certain provisos, enables aliens to hold real and personal property. See ALIEN.

(3) Alienation in mortmain, or to any kind of corporation (which was supposed to hold property in a dead hand locked up from all change or transfer), was prohibited under pain of forfeiture to the lord. The Crown may, however (see MORTMAIN), grant a licence which will avoid this forfeiture. By the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), s. 1, land assured to or acquired by or on behalf of any corporation in mortmain otherwise than under a licence under the Crown or of a Statute shall be forfeited to the Crown or the mesne lord. Apparently, the L. P. Act, 1922, abolishing copyholds, may not have affected the claim to forfeiture by mesne lords under this head.—Halsbury, L.E., 2nd ed., vol. 8, p. 83, n.

(4) Disclaimer, which is a tenant's denial of his landlord's title, by setting up a title either in himself or any other person. This operates as a forfeiture of all interest in such tenant.

(5) Alienation without licence of copyhold land for more than a year was usually a cause of forfeiture before the Law of Property Act, 1922, which enfranchised copyhold and customary lands (s. 128), but forfeiture incurred for reasons other than alienation in fee and alienation without licence was included among the manorial incidents which were saved by the Act until extinguished as provided by the Act. Relief against forfeiture included in the last-mentioned incidents is provided for under s. 132 of the L. P. Act, 1922, and s. 146 of the L. P. Act, 1925, and the compensation payable upon any kind of forfeiture or copyhold or customary land is set out in L. P. Act, 1922, 13th Sched., Part. II.

(6) Breaches of covenants or conditions contained in a lease or other instrument, when it is stipulated that they shall occasion forfeiture; a forfeiture under these circumstances may be waived by the person entitled to take advantage of it, by express declaration, or by any act inconsistent with it, or admitting a continuing tenancy, as by receiving rent accrued due since the breach, or distraining for the same, or by subsequently encouraging the tenant to make subsequent improvements; but he must have fully known of the act of forfeiture at the time of waiver, otherwise it will be no waiver.

Relief against forfeiture of the lease, where the breach was by non-payment of rent, was granted by courts of equity from very early times. Relief may be granted under the Judic. Act, 1925, s. 46, replacing Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 1. This relief is obtainable at any time within six months after execution (C. L. P. Act, 1852, ss. 211, 212.) See Barratt v. Richardson, 1930, 1 K. B. 686. Where the breach was by not insuring, relief was granted under repealed parts of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), and of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, but only on the conditions that no loss had happened, that an insurance was on foot at the time of the application for the relief, and that the relief should not be granted again. Except as above, and except in rare cases of accident or surprise, no relief was grantable, however trivial the breach might have been, and however great might be the improved value of the demised premises, until the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41) (which repealed the prior enactments as to relief against forfeiture for non-insurance, but left standing those as to forfeiture for non-payment of rent), by s. 14, conferred on the High Court a general power to relieve against forfeiture. Sect. 14 was replaced and extended by s. 146 of the L. P. Act, 1925. By this section, before proceeding to enforce a forfeiture, the lessor must serve on the lessee a notice requiring the lessee to pay compensation for the breach, and also remedy it if it be capable of remedy. If the parties fail to come to terms, and the lessor seek to enforce the forfeiture, the lessee may apply to the Court, which may grant or refuse relief as it thinks fit. The section does not apply to a breach of covenant against assigning when the breach occurred before 1925, and see also Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19 (7), or to a condition for forfeiture upon bankruptcy, or in the case of a mining lease, to a covenant to allow the lessor to inspect books. The benefit of the Act was extended to under-lessees by the Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), now replaced by the L. P. (Amend.) Act, 1929. See also County Courts Act, 1934, s. 180.

It is very material to observe that the section is (1) except in regard to assignments in breach of covenant before 1926, retrospective, so as to apply to leases made before its passing, and (2) incapable of being nullified by any stipulation of the parties.

(7) Waste. The Statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. 1, c. 5), seems to have this operation; but the better opinion is that the forfeiture was abolished along with the writ of waste by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36, and at all events is it never insisted on.

Besides the grounds of forfeiture mentioned above, there are two which obtain in reference to ecclesiastical property, viz., (1) lapse; and (2) simony.

Forfeiture of Marriage, an ancient writ which lay against him who, holding by knight's service and being under age and unmarried, refused to marry the woman whom the lord offered him without disparagement, and married another.—Fitz. N. B. 141; Reg. Brev. 163.

Forfeiture of Shares. The number of shares forfeited by a limited company must be stated in the Annual Return (Companies Act, 1929, ss. 106, 110), and see Articles 23 to 29 of Table A., which enable directors to forfeit shares of a member failing to pay calls or instalments or any other sum payable in respect of a share: see Hopkinson v. Mortimer, Harley & Co., 1917, 1 Ch. 646.

Forgery [fr. forger, Fr.; or finjo, Lat.], the crimen falsi, or the false making or alteration of an instrument, which purports on the face of it to be good and valid for the purposes for which it was created, with a design to defraud. The forged instrument must be false in itself. The mere subscribing a note, given as the party's own, by a fictitious name, was held not to be forgery (Reg. v. Martin, (1879) 5 Q. B. D. 34).

Forgery at Common Law was a misdemeanour but most forgeries have been made felony by statute. Many of these statutes were consolidated by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 66, repealed and replaced by the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), but the law now principally depends on the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27, 'an Act to consolidate, simplify and amend the law relating to forgery and kindred offences.' It repeals such portions of sixty-seven previous Acts as relate to forgery and like offences and presents the law in a clear and concise form. For the purposes of the Act forgery is defined as 'the making of a false document in order that it may be used as genuine,' and in the case of the seals and dies mentioned in the Act, 'the counterfeiting of a seal or die,' and forgery 'with intent to defraud or deceive' is made punishable as therein provided. A document is 'false' if 'the whole or any material part thereof purports to be made by or on behalf or on account of a person who did not make it nor authorize its making'; or if, although so made, 'the time or place of making, where either is material, or, in the case of a document identified by number or mark, the number or any distinguishing mark identifying the document, is falsely stated therein' (s. 1). It is immaterial in what language the document is expressed or in what place it is expressed to take effect, or that the document when forged is incomplete, or does not purport to be such a document as would be binding or sufficient in law (ib.). Forgery of (inter alia) any will, deed or bank-note is punishable with penal servitude for life, and forgery of any security, document of title, policy, charterparty, etc., with penal servitude for not more than fourteen years (s. 2). Forgery of certain official and other documents is dealt with by s. 3, the offence being made a felony and punishable with penal servitude in some cases for life and in others for any term not exceeding seven years. Where the forgery is not a statutable felony it is declared a misdemeanour (s. 4). Section 5 deals with forgery of seals and dies, s. 6 with the offence of uttering forged documents, and s. 7 with demanding property on forged documents. The possession of forged documents, seals and dies is dealt with by s. 8, and the making or being in possession of paper or implements for the forgery of banknotes, Treasury Bills, Revenue paper, etc., by s. 9, the provisions in both these cases being most stringent; and see s. 15 as to possession. Accessories and abettors are made liable as principals (s. 11), and there is a special provision for the issue of search warrants (s. 16).

It is not necessary to set forth a copy or a fac simile of the forged document, seal or die in the indictment, a description of it being sufficient; nor to allege or prove an intent to defraud a particular person (s. 17).

Forgery was a capital felony until 1832, and in the three years before 1829, when the last execution took place, fifteen persons were hanged for it.

No title to be registered can be acquired by a forged transfer of shares, but the Forged Transfers Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 43), which was suggested by Barton v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 77, and is made retrospective by the Forged Transfers Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 36), enables, but does not oblige, companies and local authorities to make compensation, 'by a cash payment out of their funds, for any loss arising from a transfer "of their shares, stock, or securities," in pursuance of a forged transfer, or of a transfer under a forged power of attorney.' As to who bears the loss occasioned by a forged transfer, see Bank of England v. Culler, 1907, 1 K. B. 889; 1908, 2 K. B. 208. See also FALSE TRADE DESCRIPTION.

Forinsecum manerium, that part of a manor which lies without the town, and is not included within the liberties of it.—Paroch. Antiq. 351.

Forinsecum servitium, the payment of extraordinary aid.—Ken. Glos.

Forinsecus, outlawed, or on the outside.

Forisbanitus, banished.—Mat. Par. 1245.

Forisfacere, i.e., extra legem seu consuetudinem facere—to do something beyond law or custom.—Co. Litt. 59.

Forisfactura, forfeit.

Forisfamiliation. 'A son was said to be forisfamiliated' (says Reeves, i. 110), 'if his father assigned him part of his land and gave him seisin thereof . . . and the son expressed himself satisfied with such portion.'

Forler-land, land in the diocese of Hereford, which had a peculiar custom attached to it, but which has been long since disused, although the name is retained.—Butterfield's Surv. 56.

Form. The structure of a document or its contents apart from the substance. See Conveyancing Forms and Precedents; Chitty's Forms; Bullen and Leake's Prec. of Pleading.

Statutory Forms (see, e.g., the forms of mortgage in the Third Schedule to the Law of Property Act, 1925), are usually permissive, but a bill of sale (see that title) is void unless made 'in accordance with' the form in the schedule to the Bills of Sale Act, 1882; see Thomas v. Kelly, (1888) 13 App. Cas. 506.

Formā pauperis, suing in. See IN FORMā PAUPERIS.

Formalities, robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions.

Formedon, a writ in the nature of a writ of right, which was the remedy for a tenant-in-tail on a discontinuance. It was of three kinds: (1) in descender; (2) in remainder; (3) in reverter.—3 Reeves, 4. Abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 36.

Formella, a certain weight of above 70 lb., mentioned in 51 Hen. 3.—Cowel.

Formulary, a form, a precedent.

Fornagium [fr. fournage, Fr.], the fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord's common oven

(in furno domini), or for a permission to use his own.—Plac. Parl. 18 Edw. 1.

Fornication [fr. fornix, a brothel, Lat.], the intercourse of a man with a prostitute; the act of incontinency in single persons; if either party be married, it is adultery. During the Commonwealth, a second offence was made felony without benefit of clergy.—Scobel, 121. After the Restoration the offence was left to be dealt with by the spiritual Court according to the rules of the canon law. Proceedings under the canon law for incontinency have fallen into desuetude.—4 Steph. Com. See PROSTITUTE.

Forprise, an exception or reservation; also an exaction; or taking beforehand.—Cowel.

Forschel, a strip of land lying next to the highway.

Forschoke, forsaken. See FORESCHOKE.

Forses (catatudæ, Lat.), waterfalls.—Cam. Brit.

Forspeaker, an attorney or advocate in a cause.—Blount.

For-speca, For-spreca, prolocutor, paronymphus.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Fortalice, a fortress or place of strength, which anciently did not pass without a special grant.—11 Hen. 7, c. 18.

Forthcoming, Action of, a process for effectuating the arrestment (attachment) of debts due to one's debtor.—Scots Law; see 39 & 40 Vict. c. 70, s. 47.

Forthwith. When a defendant is ordered to plead forthwith, he must plead within twenty-four hours. When a statute or rule of Court requires an act to be done 'forthwith,' it means that the act is to be done within a reasonable time having regard to the object of the provision and the circumstances of the case (Ex parte Lamb, (1881) 19 Ch. D. 169; 2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 14th ed., 1435).

Fortia, power, dominion, or jurisdiction.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 29.

Fortifications. See DEFENCE ACTS.

Fortilify, a fortified place; a castle; a bulwark.—11 Hen. 7, c. 18.

Fortlett, a place or fort of some strength; a little fort.—Old N. B. 45.

Fortuna, treasure-trove.—Jac. Law Dict.

Fortune-tellers, persons pretending or professing to tell fortunes are punishable as rogues and vagabonds under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 4. See, further, GYPSIES; PALMISTRY; and VAGRANT.

Fortunium, a tournament or fighting with spears; and an appeal to fortune therein.—Mat. Par. 1241.

Forty-days' Court, the Court of attachment in forests, or wood-mote Court. See FOREST.

Forum, a court; the court to the jurisdiction of which a party is liable. Forum competens, a court having jurisdiction over the suit; forum incompetens, a court not having such jurisdiction.

Forum originis [Lat.], the court of the country of a man's domicile by birth.

Forwarding Merchant, one who receives and forwards goods, taking upon himself the expenses of transportation, for which he receives a compensation from the owners, having no concern in the vessels or waggons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight, and not being deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman and agent.—Story on Bailments, 509.

Fossa, a ditch full of water wherein women committing felony were drowned; also a grave. See FURCA.

Fossagium, the duty levied on the inhabitants for repairing the moat or ditch round a fortified town.

Fossway [fr. fossus, Lat., digged], one of the four ancient Roman ways through England. Trevisa describes it thus: 'The first and gretest of the foure weyes is called fosse, and stretches oute of the southe into the north, and begynneth from the corner of Cornwaille, and passeth forth by Devenshyre, by Somersete, and forth besides Tetbury, upon Cotteswold, besides Coventre, unto Leycester, and so forth by wyld pleynes towards Newerke, and endeth at Lincoln.'—Polychron. l. 1, c. xiv.

Fosterland, lands allotted for the maintenance of a person.

Fosterlean, the remuneration fixed for the rearing of a foster-child; also the jointure of a wife.—Jac. Law Dict.

Foujdar, Fojedar, Phousdar, Fogedar, under the Mogul Government a magistrate of the police over a large district, who took cognizance of all criminal matters within his jurisdiction, and sometimes was employed as receiver-general of the revenues.—Indian.

Foujdarry Court, a tribunal for administering criminal law.—Indian.

Foul Shop, in the language of trade unionism, means a shop in which non-unionists are employed; see Rigby v. Connol, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 482.

Foundation, the founding or building of a college or hospital. The word is taken in two different senses, 'fundatio incipiens' and 'fundatio perficiens'; as to the politic capacity, the act of incorporation is metaphorically called the foundation, but as to the dotation, the first gift of the revenues is called the foundation, and he who gives it is the founder in law (Sutton's Hospital case, (1613) 10 Rep. 1; 1 Bl. Com. 468).

Foundling-hospitals, charitable institutions which exist in most countries for taking care of infants forsaken by their parents, such being generally the offspring of illegal connections. The Foundling Hospital Act is the 13 Geo. 2, c. 29, and other personal Acts.

Foundries. Places in which the process of founding or casting metal is carried on, 'except any premises in which such process is carried on by not more than five persons and as subsidiary to the repair or completion of some other work,' are regulated as 'non-textile factories' by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. See FACTORY.

Fourcher, to put off, or delay an action.—Termes de la Ley.

Fourching, the act of delaying legal proceedings.—Termes de la Ley.

Four-corners of an instrument; that which is contained on the face of a deed, without any aid from knowledge of the circumstances under which it is made, is said to be 'within its four corners,' because every deed is still supposed to be written on one entire skin, and so to have but four corners.

Fourierism, an elaborate form of non-communitistic Socialism. See Mill's Pol. Econ., Bk. II. c. 1.

Four Seas. These are (1) The Atlantic, which comprises the Irish Sea and St. George's Channel; (2) The North Sea; (3) The German Ocean; and (4) the English Channel. See Woolrych on Waters. Before the reign of James the First, the four seas were understood with more restriction, the Scotch seas being excluded. The expression 'within the four seas,' 'intra quatuor maria,' means 'within the kingdom of England, and the dominions of the same kingdom.'—Co. Litt. 107 a.

Fowls, Domestic. These can be the subject of larceny. If they stray on to the land of others they can be distrained damage feasant, but not killed. If they stray on to a highway and cause injury to a cyclist, their owner is not responsible in damages (Hadwell v. Righton, 1907, 2 K. B. 345). As to the prevention of cruelty to fowls, see the Poultry Act, 1911, and the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, and Diseases of Animals Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 31), and see ANIMALS.

Fowls of Warren. According to Coke they are the partridge, quail, rail, pheasant, woodcock, mallard, heron, etc. According to Manwood, they are the pheasant and partridge only.—Co. Litt. 233 a; Manw. (3rd ed.) 95.

Foxhunting upon the land of another without leave is a trespass (Paul v. Summerhayes, (1878) 4 Q. B. D. 9).

Fox's Act, 32 Geo. 3, c. 60 (the Libel Act, 1792), which secured to juries, upon indictments for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and no longer bound them to find a verdict of guilty on proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the indictment. See LIBEL. Consult Odgers on Libel.

Foy [fr. foi, Fr.], faith; allegiance.

Fractionem diel non recipit lex. Lofft, 572.—The law does not take notice of a fraction of a day. See next title.

Fraction of a Day, the law does not recognize, except in cases of necessity and for the purposes of justice: see Clarke v. Bradlaugh, (1881) 8 Q. B. D. 63; when, therefore, a thing is to be done upon a certain day, all that day is allowed to do it in (Gelmini v. Moriggia, 1913, 2 K. B. p. 552). An Act of Parliament becomes law as soon as the day on which it is passed commences (Tomlinson v. Bullock, (1879) 4 Q. B. D. 230), unless the commencement be expressly postponed; and every minor comes of age on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday, and may act as of full age the first moment of that day.

Fractitium, arable land.

Fractura navium, wreck of shipping at sea.

Franchilanus, a freeman.—Chart. Hen. 4.

Franchise, an incorporeal hereditament synonymous with liberty. A royal privilege or branch of the Crown's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject. It arises either from royal grant, or from prescription, which pre-supposes a grant. The kinds are almost infinite, but the principal are: bodies corporate, the right to hold Courts-leet, fairs, markets, ferries, forests, chases, parks, warrens, fisheries. The remedy for disturbance is an action. See COPYHOLDS.—1 Steph. Com.

Franchise Prisons, abolished by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 22.

Frangens, a name anciently applied to foreigners generally.—Jac. Law Dict. See FRENCHMAN.

Frank. Members of parliament, peers, etc., formerly had the privilege of franking their letters by autograph. It was abolished upon the introduction of the penny postage by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96.

Frank-almogne, free alms. A spiritual tenure whereby religious corporations, aggregate or sole, held lands of the donor to them and their successors for ever. They were discharged of all other except religious services, and the trinoda necessitas. It differs from tenure by divine service, in that the latter required the performance of certain divine services, whereas the former, as its name imports, is free. This tenure was expressly excepted in the 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 7, and therefore still subsisted in some few instances until 1926, when by repeal of the exception in 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 7, under the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, 2nd Sched., the tenure became converted into free and common socage.

Frank-bank. See FREE-BENCH.

Frank-chase, a liberty of free chase.

Frank-fee, freehold lands exempted from all services, but not from homage.

Frank-ferm, lands or tenements changed in the nature of the fee by feoffment, etc., out of knight service, for certain yearly acknowledgments.—Britton, c. lxiv.

Frankfold. See FOLDAGE.

Frank-law, the benefit of the free and Common Law of the land.—Crompton Juris. 156.

Franklin, a steward; a bailiff of land.

Frank-marriage [in libero maritagio, Lat.], a species of entailed estates, now grown out of use, but still capable of subsisting. When tenements are given by one to another, together with a wife, who is a daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frank-marriage, the donees shall have the tenements to them and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, i.e., in special tail, without the words of limitation such as 'heirs of his body.' The legal estate in estates tail has been abolished by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1, and see s. 130, ibid. for the words of limitation necessary to create an equitable interest in tail. For the word frank-marriage, ex vi terminis, both creates and limits an inheritance, not only supplying words of descent, but also terms of procreation. The donees are liable to no service except fealty, and a reserved rent would be void until the fourth degree of consanguinity be past between the issues of the donor and donee, when they were capable by the law of the church of intermarrying.—Litt. s. 19; and see Challis on Real Property.

Frank-pledge, a surety to the sovereign for the good behaviour of freemen. Living under frank-pledge has been termed living under law.—Fleta, i. 47. See COURT-LEET.

Frank-tenement [liberum tenementum, Lat.], a freehold estate.

Frassetum, a wood or wood-ground where ash-trees grow.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Frater consanguineus, a brother by the father's side, opposed to frater uterinus, a brother by the mother's side.

Frater fratris uterino non succedet in hæreditate paternâ.—(A brother shall not succeed a uterine brother in the paternal inheritance.)

The maxim is now superseded; for by the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106), s. 9, the half-blood inherit next after any relation in the same degree of the whole blood and his issue where the common ancestor is a male, and next after the common ancestor where a female, so that the brothers of the half-blood, on the part of the father, inherit next after the sisters of the whole blood on the part of the father and their issue, and the brothers of the half-blood on the part of the mother inherit next after the mother.

This rule still applies in regard to (a) the devolution of entailed interests in real or personal property (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 130 (4), and L. P. (Amend.) Act, 1924, 9th Sched.), (b) the ascertainment of heirs as purchasers under limitations by deed or will coming into operation after 1925 under s. 132, ibid., and (c) the rights of lunatics or defectives living and of full age on 1st January, 1926, as provided by Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 51 (2). In other respects the rule has been altered by the assimilation of intestate succession to real and personal estates of persons dying after 1925. See HALF-BLOOD.

Frater nutricius, a bastard brother.

Frater uterinus, a brother by the mother's side, opposed to frater consanguineus.

Fraternalia, a fraternity or brotherhood.

Fraternities, bodies corporate.

Fratres conjurati, sworn brothers, or companions for the defence of their sovereign, or for other purposes.—Hoved. 445.

Fratres pyes, certain friars who wore white and black garments.—Walsingham, 124.

Fratrilage, a younger brother's inheritance.

Fratricide, the killing of a brother or sister.

Fraud. A term used in a variety of meanings. At Common Law, fraud is actionable under the heading of deceit (q.v.).

In equity and upon the equitable principles which are now applicable in any court of law, fraud may be described as an infraction of the rules of fair dealing. For the action at law intention and representation (q.v.) are material. In equity an act or its consequences to the person aggrieved may be of greater importance than the intention of the defendant or any representation made to the plaintiff, and the same may be said of acts which have been stigmatized as fraudulent by statute. In Patrick v. Lyon, 1933, Ch. 786, it was held that an offence under s. 275 of the Companies Act, 1929, required a proof of fraud while a contravention of the law under s. 265 did not necessarily imply moral blame.

It is impossible to lay down a definition completely comprehending fraud, and no rule can, from the very nature of the subject, be invariable. Fraud is infinite: 'Crescit in orbe dolus'; and were the Courts to prescribe the limits of their equitable relief against fraud, or to define the species of evidence receivable in support of it, their decrees would be continually eluded: to afford complete protection new principles must be created to meet new species of fraud.

Concealed fraud. In the case of a designed fraud, whereby any person is, by concealment of material facts, prevented from asserting his title to land or rent, the limitation of time (12 years) within which he may sue in equity for the land or rent runs from the time at which such fraud was or might with reasonable diligence have been first known or discovered; see Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 26; Vane v. Vane, (1873) L. R. 8 Ch. 383; Laurance v. Lord Norreys, (1890) 15 App. Cas. 210; see also LACHES.

Constructive fraud. Such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate fraud or injury upon others, yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead, or to violate public or private confidence, or to injure the public interests, are equally reprehensible with positive fraud, and therefore equally prohibited.

Thus, to prevent injustice and shut out inducement to wrong, certain transactions are held to be fraudulent, as contrary to general policy, or to fixed legal principles; as marriage-brokerage bonds, and contracts in restraint of trade. Other transactions again, growing out of a special confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties, are watched with special jealousy, because they afford the means of taking advantage of or exercising undue influence over others ; such are transactions between parent and child, attorney and client, principal and agent, guardian and ward, trustee and cestui que trust, partners, etc. Others are of a mixed character, combining the ingredients of the preceding with others of a peculiar nature ; but they are chiefly prohibited because they operate as a fraud upon the private rights, interests, duties, or intentions of third parties ; or compromise the private interests, rights, or duties of the parties themselves, such as secret composition deeds, voluntary conveyances, etc.—1 St. Eq. Jur. 213. For instances of acts which have been declared to be or treated as fraudulent by statute, see MISFEASANCE ; PROSPECTUS ; WINDING-UP ; FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE ; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ; PASSING OFF.

Fraud on a Power. The name given to the execution of a limited power for a purpose outside its limits, either at the expense of the intended object or to obtain a benefit to the donee of the power or to extend or restrict the appointment beyond the intention ; proof of moral turpitude is not necessary.

Frauds, Statute of, 29 Car. 2, c. 3 (A.D. 1676). This famous statute is said to have been framed by Sir Matthew Hale, Lord-Keeper Guilford, and Sir Leoline Jenkins, an eminent civilian. Lord Nottingham used to say of it, that 'every line was worth a subsidy,' and it has been said that at all events the explanation of every line has cost a subsidy, no statute having been the subject of so much litigation. The statute, though it does not apply or have any Act corresponding to it in Scotland, was practically copied by the Irish Parliament in 7 Wm. 3, c. 12, applies generally to the British colonies, and, remarks Mr. Chancellor Kent (2 Com. 494, n. (d)), 'carries its influence through the whole body of American jurisprudence, and is in many respects the most comprehensive, salutary, and important legislative regulation on record affecting the security of private rights.'

The main object of the statute was to take away the facilities for fraud and the temptation to perjury which arose in verbal obligations, the proof of which depended upon unwritten evidence.

The greater part of the Statute of Frauds has been repealed by the following statutes : Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26) ; Civil Procedure Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59) ; Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 59) ;

Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71) ; Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 20) ; Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 23) ; and Judicature Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 162. There now remain in force s. 4 (amended), ss. 10, 11 and 23 and 24 (though repealed as to deaths occurring after 1925), and s. 22.

By sects. 1 and 2 (as replaced by Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 54), all interests in land created by parol and not put in writing and signed by the parties making the same, or their agents lawfully authorized by writing, have the effect of leases at will only, except in the case of a lease taking effect in possession for not more than three years, at the best rent which can be reasonably obtained without taking a fine ; and by sect. 3 grants and surrenders were required to be by deed or writing signed by the party granting or surrendering, or his agent authorized by writing. Sect. 4 now reads :

no action shall be brought whereby to charge an executor or administrator upon any special promise, to answer damages out of his own estate ; or whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriages of another person, or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage [an expression held not to apply to the agreement to marry (Cork v. Baker, 1 Str. 33)] ; or (as replaced by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40, in regard to land) upon any contract for the sale or other disposition of land or any interest in land, or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person therunto by him lawfully authorized.

The first three sections (materially affected by the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), reproduced and amended by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 52, which (subject to exceptions), requires a deed instead of a writing) and the 4th are of the greatest practical importance, and have been the subject of very numerous legal decisions.

The equitable doctrine of part performance which enables proof of a contract to be given notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds has been saved by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40 (2). The doctrine is applied principally to contracts for the sale or purchase of land, but it also applies to other cases in which specific performance would be granted by a Court of Equity. It applies wherever the defendant has obtained some substantial advantage under a parol agreement which, if in writing, would be such as the Court would direct to be specifically performed (see McManus v. Cooke, (1887) 35 C. D. p. 681).

The 17th, or, as numbered in the Revised Statutes, the 16th, section provided that no contract for the sale of goods for 10*l.* or more should be good, except the buyer should accept part, or give something in earnest to bind bargain or in part payment, or some memorandum in writing of the bargain should be made and signed by the parties to be charged or their agents; but this section has been repealed by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (see that title), and, as amended, is now represented by s. 4 of that Act.

The statute also contained important provisions as to the making, revocation, etc., of wills devising land, and as to nuncupative wills, etc., which have been repealed by the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), but s. 22, relating to the wills of soldiers and sailors, is still in force.

As to what constitutes an agreement not to be performed within a year, see Reeve v. Jennings, 1910, 2 K. B. 522; as to a promise to answer for the debt, etc., of another person, see Guild v. Conrad, 1894, 2 Q. B. 884.

See Addison, Leake, or Pollock on Contracts; Chalmers' Sale of Goods; Agnew on the Statute of Frauds; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Frauds.'

Fraudulent Conveyances, Statutes against, sect. 172 of the L. P. Act, 1925, now provides that every conveyance of property made either or before 1925 with intent to defraud creditors shall be voidable at the instance of any person thereby prejudiced, but the section does not affect disentailing assurances or the law of bankruptcy, nor does it extend to conveyances in good faith either for valuable or for good consideration to any person without notice of fraudulent intent. This enactment replaces 13 Eliz. c. 5 (A.D. 1570), made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 5. See Twyne's case, (1602) 3 Rep. 80; 1 Smith's L. C. 1; Halifax Bank v. Gledhill, 1891, 1 Ch. 31.

The 27 Eliz. c. 4, s. 2, made perpetual by 39 Eliz. c. 18, enacts that every conveyance of lands, made with the intent to defraud and deceive any person, bodies politic or corporate, who shall purchase the same, shall be deemed (as against that person, etc.) to be utterly void. But the Act shall not be construed to defeat or make void any conveyance, etc., for good consideration and bona fide. The Act was held to extend to mere voluntary assurances, and accordingly any voluntary conveyance of land was held to be void against a subsequent purchaser for value, even with notice of the voluntary conveyance, but this rule has been abrogated by the Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 21), now replaced by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 173. A debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if he makes a fraudulent conveyance of his property, i.e., a conveyance which tends to delay or defeat creditors. See Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 42; and FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES; VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES.

Fraudulent Debtors. Punishable by the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, Pt. VII., ss. 154 et seq., and in Ireland by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 57.

Fraudulent Preferences. Every conveyance or transfer of property or charge thereon made, every payment made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any person unable to pay his debts as they became due from his own moneys, in favour of any creditor, with a view of giving such creditor a preference over other creditors, is fraudulent and void as against the trustee in bankruptcy if the debtor becomes bankrupt within three months.—Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 44; and see Companies Act, 1925, s. 265, in regard to winding-up of companies.

Fraudulent Settlement. If a marriage settlement comprise property without which the settlor cannot pay his debts, or contain a covenant for the future settlement of property in which the settlor has no present interest, then, if the settlor become bankrupt, and the settlement appears to have been made to defeat creditors, or was unjustifiable having regard to the state of the settlor's affairs, the Bankruptcy Court may refuse an order of discharge, as if he had been guilty of fraud: Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 27.

Fraunc, or Fraunke Ferme. See FRANK-FERM.

Fraus est celare fraudem. It is fraud to conceal fraud.

Fraus est odiosa et non præsumentenda. Cro. Car. 550.—(Fraud is odious and not to be presumed.)

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent. 3 Co. 78.—(Fraud and deceit ought not to benefit any person.)

Fraus legis (fraud of law), using legal proceedings with a felonious purpose.

Fraxinetum, a wood of ash trees.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Fray. See AFFRAY.

Fred, peace.

Fredstole, or Fridstol, sanctuaries, seats of peace.—Gibson's Camden.

Fredwit, a liberty to hold courts and make amerciaments.

Free-bench [sedes libera, Lat.], a widow's dower out of copyholds to which she was entitled by the custom of some manors. It is regarded as an excrescence growing out of the husband's interest, and is indeed a continuance of his estate.

The term free-bench is equally applicable to the estate which, by the custom of some manors, a husband takes in his wife's copyhold lands after her death, and anciently it was indiscriminately applied to that and to the widow's dower, but now the estate of the husband is called his curtesy, while the term free-bench is confined to the widow.

Since free-bench is only claimable by special custom, the estate which a widow is to take, both as to its quantity, quality, and duration, must be such as the custom prescribes. It is generally a third for her life, as at Common Law, but it is sometimes a fourth part only, and sometimes but a portion of the rent. In many manors the wife takes the whole for her life, in others she takes the inheritance.

Frequently the customary right is durante viduitate, and in some cases it is confined to her chaste widowhood. See COPYHOLD.

As the right of the wife to free-bench does not, like that to dower at Common Law, attach till the husband's death, any alienation by him alone, to take effect in his lifetime, though without the concurrence of the wife, whether by surrender in court, or by forfeiture, bars the claim of the widow.

Free-bench was abolished in connection with enfranchised land by the Law of Property Act, 1922, 12th Sched., but it survives if the husband died before 1926; in regard to lands enfranchised under the Copyhold Act, 1894, or the L. P. Act, 1922, or if he dies after 1925, but was on the 1st January, 1926, of full age and of unsound mind, and died intestate and without having recovered.

Free-board, or Freebord. The precise nature of free-board is not very clear, but it may be described as denoting certain rights enjoyed by the owner of an ancient park over a strip of ground, varying in width in different cases, running along the outside of the boundary fence. The right seems to be of the nature of a negative easement, its essence apparently consisting in the right of the owner of the park to have the strip kept free, open and unbuilt upon.

Cowel (Law Dict.) has the following: 'Freebord, Franchbordus, in some places they claim as a Free-bord, more or less ground beyond or without the fence. In Mon. Angl. 2 par. fol. 241, it is said to contain two foot and a half.' He then quotes the passage from Dugdale, but inaccurately, the correct reading being as follows: Et totum boscum quod vocatur Brendewode, cum frankbordo duorum pedum et dimidium, per circuitum illius bosci, etc.; see Dugd. Mon., ed. Caley Ellis & Bandinel, vol. vi. p. 375. Du Cange simply says, 'Franchbordus Anglis freebord, and cites the same passage from the Monasticon.

In an article in the Sol. Journ., vol. xli., p. 118, free-board is defined as 'a certain limited quantity of land, of a width determined by local custom, varying in different places, lying outside the fence of a manor, park, forest, or other estate, or sometimes, but less accurately, as the mere right of claiming the use of such a width of land.' The better opinion, however, would seem to be that free-board is not ownership of the soil but an easement over adjoining soil of another, jus in alieno solo.

Free-board is most commonly found in Leicestershire and the Midland counties, and is mentioned in local Inclosure Acts, e.g., in the Oadby Inclosure Act (32 Geo. 2, c. 51); but it also occurs elsewhere: thus there is said to be a free-board of sixteen feet and a half round Richmond Park in Surrey. In 'Shakespeare, His Family and Friends,' p. 141, Mr. Elton, Q.C., says: 'At Stratford there was another kind of boundary called "free-boards," as mentioned in the Stratford Inclosure Act, 1774. The "free-board" is more usually found as the ancient boundary of a forest. "Frith" meant a tract of common, and the "free-board" was a band of grass-land marking its extent.' For further references to the subject, see Notes and Queries, First Series, vol. v., pp. 440, 548, 595, 620. See DEERLEAP.

Freeborough-men, such great men as did not engage like the frank-pledge men for their decennier.—Jac. Law Dict.

Free-chapel, a place of worship, so called because not liable to the visitation of the ordinary. It is always of royal foundation, or founded at least by private persons to whom the Crown has granted the privilege.—1 Burn's Ec. Law, 298.

Free-course, having the wind from a favourable quarter.—Merc. Law.

Freedom of a Borough, the right to enjoy the privileges of a freeman. Before the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, these privileges, in many cases valuable either from conferring, especially before the Reform Act, 1832, a limited parliamentary franchise or from other causes, could be sold or given away; but the Act of 1835, s. 3, enacted that no person should be admitted a freeman by gift or purchase, and s. 202 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, repeats this enactment, which is, however, qualified by the Honorary Freedom of Boroughs Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 29), in favour of the admission to be honorary freemen of persons of distinction and persons who have rendered eminent services to the borough (see now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 259–265, which reproduces the provisions of the former Acts). The right of a freeman, as such, to a vote at parliamentary elections was abolished by the Representation of the People Act, 1918, which repealed ss. 32 and 56 of R. P. Acts, 1832 and 1867, which had preserved this privilege.

Free Fishery, a royal franchise; being the exclusive right of fishing in a public river. Grants of this description cannot now be made, the Great Charter and its confirmations prohibiting it.

Freehold, one of the two chief tenures known in ancient times by the phrase 'tenure in free socage,' and the only free lay-mode of holding property. It is derived from the feudal system, but the services connected with it were honourable and mild. The annihilation of the feudal severities has left this tenure unshackled, and by far the greater part of the real property in this country is freehold.

Such an interest in lands of frank tenement as may endure not only during the owner's life, but which is cast after his death upon the persons who successively represent him. Such persons were called heirs, and he whom they thus represented, the ancestor. When the interest extended beyond the ancestor's life, it was called a freehold of inheritance, and when it only endured for the ancestor's life, it was a freehold not of inheritance.

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualities: (1) immobility, that is, the property must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed to land; and (2) indeterminate duration; for if the utmost period of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold.

Now by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1, the only estates in land which are capable of subsisting or of being conveyed or created at law are an estate in fee simple absolute in possession, and a term of years absolute. All other estates are equitable interests under that Act; descent of legal estates to heirs of persons dying after 1925 has been abolished: A. E. Act, 1925, s. 45. See HEIRS.

Free-holder, he who possesses a freehold estate.

Freehold Land Societies, associations designed for the purpose of enabling the members to purchase, by means of their subscriptions, a piece of land of a sufficient value which is then divided amongst them in certain agreed shares, according to the rules of the Society. As to the mode of winding-up such a society, see Re Osmondthorpe, etc., Society, 1913, W. N. 243.

Freeman [liber homo, Lat.], an allodial proprietor; one born or made free to enjoy certain municipal immunities and privileges; the privileges of freemen were preserved by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, and continued by Part X. of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50). See now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 259–265. See FREEDOM OF BOROUGH.

Freemasons, members of the body of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England—the oldest and most famous of all secret societies. Its objects, of course, are unknown except to the members, but are believed to be of a charitable nature. Lodges of Freemasons are excepted from the operation of the Unlawful Societies Act, 1799, and the Seditious Meetings Act, 1817, if registered annually: see ss. 5–7 of the Act of 1799 and s. 26 of the Act, 1817.

Freemen's Roll, a list of all persons admitted burgesses or freemen in respect of those rights which were reserved by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), as distinguished from the burgesses newly created by the Act, and entitled to the rights which it confers, who are entered on the burgess-roll. See now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 259–265.

Free Services, such as were not unbecoming the character of a soldier or a freeman to perform, as to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, or the like.

Free Ships, neutral ships.

Free-warren, a royal franchise, granted by the Crown to a subject for the preservation or custody of beasts and fowls of warren.

Freight, the sum paid by a merchant or other person chartering a ship or part of a ship, or sending goods in a general ship, for the use of such ship or part, or the conveyance of such goods during a specified voyage or for a specified time. The freight is most commonly fixed by the charter-party, or bill of lading, but in the absence of any formal stipulation on the subject it would be due according to the custom or usage of trade. In the absence of an express contract to the contrary, the entire freight is not earned until the whole cargo be ready for delivery, or has been delivered to the consignee, according to the contract for its conveyance.

Dead freight is the freight agreed to be paid in respect of any part of the cargo which was contracted to be carried and through any fault of the consignor has not been carried.

As to the shipowners' lien for freight, see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 494, 495 (repeating ss. 68–70 of the repealed Merchant Shipping Act, 1862). See also Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924. Consult MacLachlan or Temperley on Merchant Shipping; Abbott on Merchant Ships.

Frenchman. In early times this term was applied to every stranger or outlandish man.—Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 15. See FRANCIGENE.

Friend-wite [fr. freond, Sax., friend, and wite, mulct], a fine exacted of him who harboured an outlawed friend.—Blount.

Frenum, a composition anciently paid by a criminal to be freed from prosecution, of which the third part was lodged in the Exchequer. See Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws, l. 30, c. 20.

Fresh Disseisin, that disseisin which a person might formerly seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without resorting to the law; as where it was not above fifteen days old, or of some other short continuance.—Britt, c. v.

Fresh Fine, a fine levied within a year past. Mentioned in 13 Edw. 1, st. 2, c. 45.

Fresh Force, an act of violence (force) newly done in any city, borough, etc.—Fitz. N. B. 7; Old Nat. B. 4.

Fresh Suit, or Pursuit, such a present and earnest following a robber as never ceases from the time of the robbery until apprehension. The party thus pursuing had his goods restored to him, which otherwise were forfeited to the Crown.—Staudf. Pl. Cor., lib. 3, cc. 10, 12.

Fretum, Frestum, the freight of a ship; freight-money.—Cowel.

Fretum Britannicum, the straits between Dover and Calais.

Friar [fr. frère, Fr.; frater, Lat., brother], an order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches, viz.: (1) Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans; (2) Augustines; (3) Dominicans, or Black Friars; (4) White Friars, or Carmelites, from whom the rest descend. See 4 Hen. 7, c. 17; Lyndewood de Relig. Domibus, c. 1.

Friborough, or Frithburgh, the Norman term for frank-pledge.

Fribusculum, a temporary separation between husband and wife.—Civil Law.

Friendless Man, an outlaw, because he was denied all help of friends.—Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 12.

Friendly Societies, associations supported by subscription for the relief and maintenance of the members or their wives, children, relations, and nominees, in sickness, infancy, advanced age, widowhood, etc. By the Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), various prior statutes regulating these societies were in whole or in part repealed, and the law consolidated and amended. Such societies may be formed for providing payments on birth of a member's child, or on death of a member, or for relief and maintenance of members and their husbands, wives, children, etc., in old age or sickness, the endowment of members at any age, the insurance of tools against fire, or of cattle, for working men's clubs, or for any other purpose authorized by the Treasury. Before any such society can be properly established, its rules must have been transmitted to and approved of by the central office for the registration of Friendly Societies. The Act was amended in 1876 by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 32 as to conversion of Friendly Societies into branches, and other matters; in 1879 by 42 Vict. c. 9 as to the receipt of contributions at a greater distance than ten miles from the registered office; and in 1887 by 50 & 51 Vict. c. 56 as to various small details, s. 18 of that Act empowering the Queen's Printers to print the Act of 1875 'with the additions, omissions, and substitutions required' by that Act. There was again a consolidation in 1896 by the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, and the Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 1896, but without any amendment of the previous law, and the Act of 1896 was amended by the Friendly Societies Act, 1908, and reprinted as so amended. Sections 1, 62, and 65 of the Act of 1896 were amended by the Friendly Societies Act, 1924. See also Industrial Assurance Act, 1923, which gives further protection to the poorer classes of assured persons. As to the exercise of the domestic jurisdiction by s. 68 for the settlement of disputes, see Andrews v. Mitchell, 1905, A. C. 78. The Industrial Assurance and Friendly Societies Act, 1929, made it possible to issue policies on the duration of certain lives for a specified period, and to validate certain endowment policies. As to the conversion of a Friendly Society into a limited company, see Re Blackburn, etc., Society, 1914, 2 Ch. 430; Companies (Converted Societies) Act, 1910, which was passed, it is conceived, owing to certain obiter dicta in McGlade v. Royal London Mutual Insurance Society, 1910, 2 Ch. 169. As to winding up, see also Companies Act, 1929, Part X. Consult Brabrook, or Pratt, or Fuller on Friendly Societies.

Friendly Suit, any suit instituted by agreement between the parties to obtain the opinion of the Court upon some doubtful question in which they are interested.

Friends, Society of. See QUAKER.

Friling, or Freeling [fr. freoh, Sax., free, and ling, progeny], a freeman born.

Friscus, fresh, uncultivated ground.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 56.

Frith. A tract of common land (ante FREEBOARD).

Frith-borg, frank-pledge.—Cowel.

Frithbreach, the breaking of the peace.

Frithgar, the year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendship.—Jac. Law Dict.

Frithgilda, guildhall; a company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security; also a fine for breach of the peace.—Ibid.

Frithman, a member of a company or fraternity.—Blount.

Frith-soen, or Frithstol, an asylum; sanctuary.

Frithsoke, Frithsoken, the right of liberty of frank-pledge.—Fleta.

Frithsplot, or Frith-geard, a spot or plot of land, encircling some stone, tree, or well, considered sacred, and therefore affording sanctuary to criminals.

Frodmortel, or Freomortel, an immunity for committing manslaughter.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 1, p. 173.

From ordinarily excludes the day from which the time is to be reckoned, but is construed inclusively of that day if the context requires it. See South Staffordshire, etc., Co. v. Sickness, etc., Association, 1891, 1 Q. B. 402, in which an assurance for twelve months from Nov. 24, 1887, was held to exclude Nov. 24, 1887, and to include Nov. 24, 1888. See English v. Cliff, 1914, 2 Ch. 376, and the cases there referred to.

Fruetus. See INCOME; PROFITS.

Fruetus augent hereditatem. D. A. 3, 20, 31.—(The yearly increase enhances an inheritance.)

Fruetus industriales (emblemata).

Fruit, as to larceny of and damage to, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 8 (3), and Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 23, 24; as to compensation to market garden tenant for fruit trees and fruit bushes, see ss. 48 and 49 and Sched. III. of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, which repealed and replaced the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, which itself had replaced the Market Gardeners Compensation Act, 1895. See Saunders-Jacob v. Yates, 1933, 2 K. B. 240 (market garden includes part of private premises so treated). As to importation and marking of foreign fruit, see AGRICULTURAL ACTS (marketing—produce—returns).

Fruit Fallen, the produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus, a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the advowson.

Frumgylt, the first payment made to the kindred of a person slain, the recompense for his murder.—Leg. Edm.

Frumstol, original or paternal dwelling.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Frusca terræ, waste and desert lands.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 327.

Frustrura, a breaking; ploughing.—Cowel.

Frustration. The unforeseen determination or prevention of a contract by reason of the destruction of the subject-matter or other common ground forming the basis of the agreement. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

Frustrum terræ, a piece or parcel of land.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Frutectum, Frutetum, Fruticetum, a place where shrubs or herbs grow.—Jac. Law Dict.

Frymth, Fynmth, the affording harbour and entertainment to any one.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Frythe, a plain between woods.—Co. Litt. 5 b. See FRITH.

Fuage. See FUMAGE.

Fuer, flight. It is of two kinds: (1) fuer in fait or in facto, where a person does apparently and corporally flee; (2) fuer in ley, or in lege, when being called into the county court he does not appear, which legal interpretation makes flight.—Staund. Pl. Cor. lib. 3, c. 22.

Fuero jurgo, a code of Spanish law, said to be the most ancient in Europe.

Fuga catallorum, a drove of cattle.—Fleta.

Fugacla, a chase.—Blount.

Fugam fecit (he has made flight), said of a person who is found by inquisition to have fled for felony, etc., upon which forfeiture of goods took place. Obsolete.—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 5; and see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.

Fugatio, a privilege to hunt.—Blount.

Fugatores carrucarum, waggoners who drive oxen without beating or goading.—Fleta, l. 2, c. lxxviii.

Fugitation. In Scotland, when a criminal does not obey the citation to answer, the Court pronounces sentence of fugitation against him, which induces a forfeiture of goods and chattels to the Crown.

Fugitive Offenders. Where a person accused of any offence punishable by imprisonment with hard labour for twelve months or more, has left that part of his Majesty's dominions where the offence is alleged to have been committed, he is liable, if found in any other part of his Majesty's dominions, to be apprehended and returned in manner provided by the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, to the part from which he is a fugitive; the Act has been amended by the Fugitive Offenders (Protected States) Act, 1915. See R. v. Brixton Prison (Governor), 1907, 1 K. B. 696; and see EXTRADITION.

Full Age, twenty-one years. A man is competent in law to do anything as a person of full age on the day preceding his 21st birthday, because the completion of the 21st year is supposed to belong as much to the day before as to the day after the imaginary interval at which it takes place.—Hals. L. E., tit. 'Age.'

Full Compensation. See s. 16 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Railways,' and s. 17 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 56), ibid., tit. 'Electric Lighting,' by which 'full compensation' is granted for damage by exercise of the powers under the Acts. See COMPENSATION.

Full Court. The Judge Ordinary, with two other members of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, constituted the Court of Appeal, and in some instances the Court of original jurisdiction, under the name of the Full Court of Divorce, the jurisdiction of which was transferred to the Court of Appeal by the Jud. Act, 1881.

Fullum aquæ, a flem or stream of water.

Fumage, Fuage, or Fouage (vulgarly called smoke-farthings), a tax paid to the sovereign for every house that had a chimney. It is probable that the hearth-money, imposed by 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 10, took its origin hence.

This hearth-money was declared a great oppression, and abolished by 1 W. & M., st. 1, c. 10; but a tax was afterwards laid upon all houses, except cottages, and upon all windows, by 7 Wm. 3, c. 18. The window duty was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36.

Function [fr. fungor, Lat., to perform], employment; discharge of office.

Functus Officio, a person who has discharged his duty, or whose office or authority is at an end.

Fundi patrimoniales (lands of inheritance).

Funditores, pioneers.—Jac. Law Dict.

Funds, public, the name given to the public funded debt due by Government. The practice of borrowing money to defray a part of the war expenditure began, with us, in the reign of William III. In the infancy of the practice it was customary to borrow upon the security of some tax, or portion of a tax, set apart as a fund for discharging the principal and interest of the sum borrowed. This discharge was rarely effected. The public exigencies still continuing, the loans were continued, or the taxes again mortgaged for fresh ones. At length the practice of borrowing for a fixed period, or, as it is called, upon terminable annuities, was abandoned, and loans made upon interminable annuities, or until it might be convenient for the Government to pay off the principal. Such loans are called Funded Debt, or 'The Funds'; loans for a fixed period are said to be 'Unfunded.'

In the beginning of the funding system the term 'fund' meant the taxes or funds appropriated to the discharge of the principal and interest of loans. Those who held Government securities and sold them to others, selling, of course, a corresponding claim upon such fund. But after the debt began to grow large, and the practice of borrowing upon interminable annuities had been introduced, the meaning of 'fund' was changed, and instead of signifying the security upon which loans were advanced, it has, for a long time, signified the principal of the loans themselves.

The National Debt is secured upon all the 'funds' or taxes of Great Britain. A certain part of this debt is of a purely temporary and short term character; such debts are generally in the form of Exchequer Bonds or Treasury Bills (see these titles). Prior to the War of 1914–18 the National Debt consisted almost entirely of funded loans which gave the holders annuities, i.e., a fixed sum per cent. per annum, without any rights as to redemption except those provided from time to time by the Government in Acts dealing with the National Debt. See the National Debt Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71), which consolidated the law as to the denomination of stock, payment of dividends, etc., as well as fixing the terms and dates of redemption.

Since August, 1914, the National Debt has increased enormously.

On 31st March, 1936, the National Debt was:— Funded . . .	£3,366,474,816

Terminable Annuities . . .	12,108,986
Unfunded . . .	4,537,828,660
	£7,916,412,462

Fundus, the bottom or foundation of a thing; from fud, βυθ-ός, πύθην, the n in fundus being used to strengthen the syllable. Fundus is often used as applied to land, the solid substratum of all man's labour.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Appellatione fundi omne ædificium et omnis ager continetur (under the word fundus every building and every field is comprehended).—4 Rep. 87.

Funeral Expenses. An executor or administrator should bury the deceased testator or intestate suitably to the estate left, and the expense of the burial will be allowed before all other debts and charges; but if the personal representative be extravagant, he commits a devastavit, for which he will be answerable to the creditors or legatees.

Fungibles, movable goods, which may be estimated by weight, number, or measure, such as corn, wine, or money.

Fungibles res, a term applied in the Civil Law to things of such a nature as that they could be replaced by equal quantities and qualities, because mutuà vice funguntur, they replace and represent each other; thus, a bushel of wheat. A particular horse would not be fungibilis res.—Sand. Just., 7th ed. 328.

Furandi animus (an intention of stealing).

Furea [fr. farkah, Heb., to divide], the gallows.

Fuream et Flagellum (the gallows and whip), the meanest of all servile tenures, when the bondman was at his lord's disposal, both life and limb.

Furigeldum, a mulct paid for theft.

Furiosis nulla voluntas est. D. 50, 17, 5; D. 1, 18, 13, s. 1.—(Madmen have no free will.) Furiosus stipulare non potest nec aliquid negotium agere, qui non intelligit quid agit. 4 Co. 126.—(A madman who knows not what he does cannot make a bargain, nor transact any business.) See UNSOUND MIND.

Furlous Driving. See DRIVERS.

Furlong [fr. furlang, A.-S.; furlongus, ferlingus, ferlingum, Low Lat.], quasi 'a furrow long,' that is, bounded or terminated by the length of a furrow, i.e., quod uno progressu aratrum describit antequam regreditur; Spelman Gloss. Also the eighth part of an acre; Minsheu. Stadium and quarentena terræ are sometimes used for a furlong.—Co. Litt. 5 b. By the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 11, a furlong contains 220 imperial standard yards.

Furnagium. See FORNAGIUM.

Furnival's Inn, formerly an Inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Furst and Fondung, time to advise or take counsel.—Jac. Law Dict.

Further Advance, or Charge, a second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgagee security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance.

Although the tacking of a third or subsequent mortgage has been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 94, that section has expressly preserved the right to tack a further advance by a prior mortgage so that the advance may rank in priority to subsequent mortgages, even if the further advance was made with notice of a subsequent mortgage or charge in cases where the mortgage imposes an obligation to make further advances. Where the mortgage is to secure a current account or any other further advances, notice of an intervening charge will postpone the further advance to that charge but (by way of exception) in this case notice will not be imputed to the mortgagee by the registration of the subsequent charge as a land charge or in a local deeds registry if it was not so registered at the date of the first advance or when the mortgage last made a search, whichever last happened. A further advance may be tacked to the original security if the advance has been made without notice by registration or otherwise of an intervening mortgage, whether or not the original mortgage was expressed to secure further advances, and in any case tacking will be allowed if the subsequent mortgagees agree to it. See also EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

Section 94 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, does not apply to charges registered under the Land Registration Act, 1925. Tacking is not allowed under any circumstances in the case of registered land (see s. 30, L. R. Act, 1930), except that where the proprietor of a registered charge is under obligation noted on the Register to make a further advance, a subsequent registered charge shall take effect subject to any further advance made pursuant to the obligation (s. 5, L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926). See ss. 30, 34 and 106, L. R. Act, 1925.

Further Assurance, Covenant for, one of the usual covenants entered into by a vendor for the protection of the vendee's interest in the subject of purchase, to the effect that the vendor will, at the request and cost of the vendee, execute further conveyances, etc., for more perfectly assuring the subject-matter of the conveyance; implied in conveyances made on or after Jan. 1st, 1882, expressed to be made by a 'beneficial owner,' or if other terms of art are employed, according to the case by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 76, and the Second Schedule re-enacting and extending s. 7 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Further Consideration, the postponed consideration by a judge of a cause or of some question in it. In the Chancery Division in actions for administration, partition, and the like, it is usual at the first hearing merely to direct accounts and inquiries and to adjourn the further consideration of the cause. When the Master has made his certificate as to the result of the accounts and inquiries the action comes on for hearing on further consideration, when any outstanding questions of law are determined by the Court and the action is finally disposed of; though in some rare cases a second or even a third further consideration may be necessary. See R. S. C., Ord. XXXVI., r. 21; Dan. Ch. Pr. In the King's Bench Division, if there are important legal questions raised, the judge sometimes does not give judgment at once, but reserves the matter for further consideration.

Further Maintenance of the Action, plea to the. See PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE.

Furtum [fr. φῶρ, a thief, fr. φέρειν, to carry away], theft; robbery. It is manifestum et nec manifestum.—Sand. Just., 7th ed. 369, 400, where other kinds are enumerated; and see LARCENY; ROBBERY.

Furtum est contrectatio rei aliena fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerat. 3 Inst. 107.—(Theft is the fraudulent handling of another's property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor whose property it was.)

Furtum non est ubi initium habet detentionis per dominium rei. 3 Inst. 107.—(There is no theft where the foundation of the detention is based upon ownership of the thing.)

Furze, Growing, setting fire to: see Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 17.

Future Estates, expectancies, which are, at Common Law, of two kinds: reversions and remainders. If in land, these are now referred to as equitable interests by the L. P. Act, 1925, and are no longer capable of subsisting, being conveyed or created at law (ibid., s. 1), but the interests may be disposed of (s. 4). See SETTLEMENT; LEASE.

Future Uses. See CONTINGENT USES.

Fuz, or Fust [Celt.], a wood or forest.

Fyht-wite, one of the fines incurred for homicide.

Fyrd, Fyrdung, the military array or land force of the whole country. Contribution to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas.

Fyrd-wite, the fine incurred by neglecting to join the fyrd; one of the rights of the Crown.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

G.

Gabel [fr. gabelle, Fr.; gabella, Ital.; gafel, Sax.], an excise, a tax on movables; a rent, custom, or service.—Co. Litt. 213.

Gabulus denariorum, rent paid in money.—Seld. Tit. 321.

Gafoeldgild, the payment of tribute or custom.—Jac. Law Dict.

Gafoeldland, liable to taxes, and rented or let for rent.—Ibid.

Gafold, rent, tribute, or tax.

Gage [fr. gage, Fr.], a pledge, pawn, or caution; anything given in security.

Gage, Estates in, those held in vadio or pledge. They are of two kinds: (1) vivum vadium, or living pledge, or vifgage; (2) mortuum vadium, or dead pledge, better known as mortgage.

Gager de deliverance, when he who has distrained, being sued, has not delivered the cattle distrained; then he shall not only avow the distress, but gager deliverance, i.e., put in surety or pledge that he will deliver them.—Fitz. N. B. 67.

Gager del ley (wager of law).

Gain, to make profitable. See Statute of the Exchequer or 61 Hen. 3, c. 4, by which no man 'shall be distrained by his beasts that gain his land,' nor by his sheep, so long as other distress can be found.

Gainage [fr. gainagium, Lat.], the gain or profit of tilled or planted land, raised by cultivating it; and the draught, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage by the baser kind of sokemen or villains.—Bract. l. i. c. ix.

Gale [fr. gavel, Sax., a rent or duty], a periodical payment of rent.—Spelm. Gloss. voce 'gabellum.' The term is also used as meaning the right granted by the Crown to mine or to quarry in parts of the Forest of Dean. See the Forest of Dean (Mines) Act, 1838.

Gall-halfpence, a kind of coin which, with suskins and doitkins, was forbidden by 3 Hen. 5, c. 1. See Stow's Survey, 137.

Gallivolatium [fr. gallus, Lat., cock], a cock-shoot, or cock-glade.

Gallon, a liquid measure, containing 231 cubic inches, or 4 quarts; see Weights and Measures Act, 1878, s. 15. A gallon equals 4·54596 litres.

Gallows [it is used by some in the singular, but more generally in the plural], a beam laid over either one or two posts, from which malefactors are hanged. See EXECUTION OF CRIMINALS.

Game [fr. gaman, Sax.], all sorts of birds and beasts that are objects of the chase. The term is defined by the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32), as including for the purposes of that Act 'hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath or moor-game, black game, and bustards'; but some of its provisions are directed to trespass in pursuit of woodcocks, snipes, quails, land rails, and coney.

At Common Law game belongs to a tenant and not to a landlord, but leases frequently contain a reservation of the game to the landlord, and before the Game Act, 1831, the right to kill game was restricted to freeholders having 100l. a year freehold, or leaseholders having a 99 years' leasehold of 150l. a year, etc. This Act repeals the Qualification Act of 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 25, and (after giving the game to landlords in the case of leases made before the Act for less than 21 years—a provision now expired) protects reservations of game by penal provisions. The Act also requires all persons killing or taking game to take out a yearly certificate (for exceptions, see Ground Game Act, 1880; and see GAME LICENCE), and all uncertificated persons selling it a yearly licence, and makes it unlawful to kill game on a Sunday or Christmas-day, or between the days and seasons when game may be killed. The prohibited period is, for partridges, between 1st February and 1st September; for pheasants, between 1st February and 1st October; for black game (except in the county of Somerset or Devon, or in the New Forest in the county of Southampton), between 10th December and 20th August; or in the county of Somerset or Devon, or in the New Forest, between 10th December and 1st September; for grouse, commonly called red game, between 10th December and 12th August; for bustard, between 1st March and 1st September. As to buying, selling or being in possession of game during the prohibited periods, see Revenue Act, 1911, s. 10. As to Licensing Dealers in Game, see Game Act, 1831; Game Licences Act, 1860, s. 14, as amended by Revenue (No. 2) Act, 1161, s. 17; Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1893, s. 2; Hares Preservation Act, 1892, s. 2.

Compensation for Damage by.—By the Common Law, the moment a man brings game on to land to an unreasonable amount, or causes it to increase to an unreasonable extent, he is doing that which is unlawful, and an action may be maintained for the damage sustained (Farrer v. Nelson, (1885) 15 Q. B. D. 258).

Section 11 (5) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, gives the following definition:—

For the purposes of this section the expression 'game' means deer, pheasants, partridges, grouse, and black game; and, subject to certain restrictions and conditions, gives compensation for damage caused by such 'game,' if it exceeds in amount the sum of one shilling per acre of the area over which the damage extends. Consult Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

As to right of occupier to kill hares and rabbits under Ground Game Acts, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), and 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 21), see HARE. See also GAME LICENCE; POACHING; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Game.'

Game Certificate, the expression used to designate a game licence (q.v.) in Acts prior to the Game Licences Act, 1860.

Gamekeepers. As to their appointment and authority, see the Game Act, 1831

(1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32), s. 13. The expression is also commonly used with reference to servants employed to look after game who have not been appointed in accordance with this Act; those appointed under the Act have powers of arrest, while others have not.

Game Licence. A licence issued under the Game Licence Act, 1860 (as amended by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1883, ss. 4—6), which authorizes the holder to kill game, woodcock, snipe, quail or landrail, rabbits or deer, during open seasons. Failure to comply with this provision makes the offender liable to a penalty of 20*l*. See FIRE ARMS.

Games. For validity of custom for parishioners to play on private property, see MAYPOLE.

Gaming or Gambling, the playing any game of chance, as cards, dice, etc., for money, or money's worth.

The still unrepealed 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, prohibits the keeping of any common house for dice, cards, or any unlawful games, under penalties of 40*s*. for every day of so keeping the house, and 6*s*. 8*d*. for every time of playing therein; and the Gaming Act, 1738 (12 Geo. 2, c. 28) (applied by the Gaming Act, 1739 (13 Geo. 2, c. 19), to all games with dice, except backgammon, and by the Gaming Act, 1744 (18 Geo. 2, c. 34), to 'roulet, otherwise roly-poly'), declares hazard and other games to be lotteries, so that the keepers of tables for them are liable to penalties under the Lotteries Act, 1721 (8 Geo. 1, c. 2), the Lotteries Act, 1710 (9 Anne, c. 6), and the Lotteries Act, 1698 (10 & 11 Wm. 3, c. 17); the system of incorporation of previous statutes by reference being carried very far in gaming legislation.

Gaming in Public-houses, etc.—Sect. 79 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (replacing s. 17 of the Licensing Act of 1872), penalizes up to 10*l*. for a first offence and up to 20*l*. for a subsequent one any licensed person who suffers gaming or any unlawful game on his premises or suffers them to be used for betting; but to play whist for prizes not contributed to by the players is not within this enactment, because for gaming there must be a chance of the players losing as well as of winning (Lockwood v. Cooper, 1903, 2 K. B. 418).

Gaming-houses.—The Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), repeals so much of 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, as prohibits bowling, tennis, and other games of mere skill. It also provides that the owner or keeper of any common gaming-house, and every person having the care or management thereof, and also every banker, croupier, and other person in any manner conducting the business of any common gaming-house, shall, on conviction, be liable, in addition to the penalties of the Act of Hen. 8, to pay such penalty (not more than 100*l*.) as shall be adjudged by the justices, or may be imprisoned with or without hard labour for not more than six calendar months; but adds that nothing shall prevent any proceeding by indictment. See Daniels v. Pinks, 1931, 1 K. B. 374, following Jenks v. Turpin, (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 505.

Justices of the peace, at the general annual licensing meeting, may grant annual billiard licences to such persons as they deem fit to keep billiard tables and bagatelle boards, or the like. Penalties are imposed for keeping such tables without a licence, or allowing play between one and eight o'clock a.m., or on Sunday, Christmas-day, or Good Friday, or on any day of public fast or thanksgiving.

Winning money by 'ill practice' in play is made punishable in the same way as obtaining money under false pretences; and by sect. 18 wagers are declared to be irrecoverable at law, and wagering contracts void. As to the liability of a bankrupt for gambling or rash and hazardous speculation, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 157. And as to gambling on loss by maritime perils, see Marine Insurance (Gambling Policies) Act, 1909. See the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), and see Elderton v. United Kingdom Totalisator Co., 1935, 1 Ch. 373 (as to advertisement of football pool on credit); WAGER; BETTING; and LOTTERY; and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Game and Gaming.' Consult Coldridge and Hawksford, Law of Gambling.

Gananciai [Sp.], a species of community in property enjoyed by husband and wife, the property being divisible between them equally on a dissolution of the marriage.—1 Burge, Conf. Laws, 418.

Gangiatori, officers in ancient times whose business it was to examine weights and measures.—Skene.

Gangmaster. See AGRICULTURAL GANGS ACT, 1867.

Gang-week [fr. gangan, Sax., to go], the time when the bounds of the parish are lustrated or gone over by the parish officers—rogation week.

Gantelope (pronounced gauntlet) [fr. gant, Dut., all; and loopen, to run], a military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives the lash from each man. This was called 'running the gauntlet.'

Gaol [fr. gaola, Lat.; geole, Fr., a cage for birds], a prison; a strong place for the confinement of offenders against the law. See PRISONS.

Gaol Delivery, a commission to the judges, etc., to try and deliver every prisoner in gaol when they arrive at the assize town. See ASSIZE.

Gaoler, the master or keeper of a prison; one who has the custody of a place where prisoners are confined. See Prison Rules, 1899, Chit. Stat., tit. 'Prisons.'

Gaol Sessions, a special sessions of county justices of the peace, constituted under 5 Geo. 4, c. 12, for regulating matters connected with county gaols. See PRISONS.

Garb [fr. gerbe], a bundle or sheaf of corn; a handful.—Fleta, l. 2, c. xii.

Garbales decimæ, tithes of corn.

Garbler of Spices, an ancient officer in the city of London, who might enter into any shop, warehouse, etc., to view and search drugs and spices, and garble and make clean the same; or see that it be done.—6 Anne, c. 16.

Garelo [fr. garçon, Fr.] stolæ (groom of the stole).—Pl. Cor. 21 Edw. 1.

Garelones, servants who follow a camp.—Wals. 242.

Gard [fr. garde, Fr.], wardship, care, custody.

Gardens. The Town Gardens Protection Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 13), provides for the protection of gardens and ornamental grounds vested in trustees, in squares and other public places, by transfer of such gardens and grounds from the trustees to local authorities or committees of the inhabitants. See also the London Squares Preservation Act, 1931 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. xciii.) and Housing Act, 1936.

As to stealing or destroying any fruit or vegetable production in gardens, etc., see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 36, 37; and Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), ss. 23, 24; Allotments Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 51). See also OPEN SPACES; PARK; PLEASURE GROUNDS; RECREATION GROUNDS; and as to compensation, on quitting, to tenants of market gardens, see MARKET GARDENS.

Garlanda, a chaplet, coronet, or garland.

Garnestura, victuals, arms, and other implements of war, necessary for the defence of a town or castle.—Mat. Par. 1250.

Garnish, to warn; see 27 Eliz. c. 3. Also money paid (illegally) by a prisoner on his going to prison. Also to attach a debt. See next title.

Garnishee, a debtor who has been warned to pay his debt not to his own creditor but to some third party who has obtained a final judgment against the creditor. The order thus arresting the debt in the hands of the debtor is called a 'garnishee order.' See R. S. C., Ord. XLV. See ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS; FOREIGN ATTACHMENT.

Garnishment, warning or notice, as not to pay money, etc. See previous title.

Garnisture, a furnishing or providing.

Garranty. See GUARANTY.

Garrotting, the criminal choking of a person. By the Garrotters Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 44), the crimes of robbery with violence, which is punishable by penal servitude under s. 23 of the Larceny Act, 1916, and choking, etc., with intent to commit any indictable offence, which is similarly punishable under s. 21 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, are each of them punishable also by whipping, if the offender be a male.

Garson, a menial servant.—Toland.

Garsummune, a fine or amercement.—Spelm. Gloss.

Garter. The Order of the Garter, constituted by King Edward III. about 1348, has since June 28, 1831, consisted of the Sovereign and twenty-five Knight Companions, such lineal descendants of King George I. as may have been elected, and of Sovereigns and extra Knights who have been admitted by special statutes. The Prince of Wales is a constituent part of the original institution, The Habit and Ensigns of the Order comprise (inter alia) (1) a garter of dark blue velvet edged with gold bearing the motto Honi soit qui mal y pense, in gold letters with buckle and pendant of gold richly chased. It is worn on the left leg, below the knee; (2) a collar of gold; (3) the Lesser George or Badge; and (4) a Star of eight points of silver. At death the Badge and Star are delivered up to His Majesty by the knight's nearest male relative, the Collar and Garter being returned to the Central Chancery. The Chapel of St. George, Windsor Castle, is the Chapel of the Order.—Debrett's Peerage.

Garth [same as girth, fr. gyrdan, A.-S., to surround, to enclose], an enclosure about a house, church, etc.; a close; a dam or wear; a place formed at the side of a river that the fish might be more easily taken.

Gas. See the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, and other Acts set out in Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Gas.'

By s. 161 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (see also Road Traffic Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 23), any urban authority may contract with any person for the supply of gas or other means of lighting their district, and provide lamps and other materials for such lighting; or where there is not any company or person authorized by parliament to supply gas, may themselves undertake to supply gas to their district or such part of it as is not within the limits of supply of any such company or person. By s. 162, an urban authority for the purpose of supplying gas to their district may (with the sanction of the Board of Trade) buy, and the directors of any gas company (duly authorized as required by the Act) may sell and transfer their undertaking to such authority, on agreed terms.

Originally gas was supplied to a prescribed illuminating standard. Later, when the incandescent mantle came into use and also the use of gas for cooking and heating increased, a prescribed calorific standard superseded the illuminating standard, as the latter had become of subsidiary importance. See Gas (Standard of Calorific Power) Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 25). Finally, the thermal system of charge was adopted, see Gas Regulation Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 28). The heat unit of charge is the therm, which is 100,000 British thermal units; a British thermal unit represents the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of 1 lb. of water through 1° F.; calorific value of gas is defined as the number of British thermal units (gross) produced by the combustion of 1 cubic foot of gas under appropriate conditions; see also Gas Undertakings Acts, 1929, 1932, 1934. Consult Michael and Will on Gas and Water.

Gastaldus, a temporary governor of the country.—Blount.

Gaudies, double commons.—University term.

Gaudy [fr. gaudium, Lat.], a feast, a festival, a day of plenty.—Ibid.

Gauge of Railways, their measure or width; fixed, with some exceptions, at 4 feet 8½ inches in Great Britain, and 5 feet 3 inches in Ireland, by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 57.

Gauger, an officer who ascertains the quantity of wines or spirits for revenue purposes.

Gaugetum, a gauge or gauging; a measure of the contents of any vessel.

Gavel. See GABEL.

Gavelcester (sextarius vectigalis, Lat.), a certain measure of rent-ale.—Jac. Law Dict.

Gavelet [fr. gaveletum, Lat.], an ancient and special kind of cessavit used in Kent and London for the recovery of rent. Obsolete. The statute of Gavelet is 10 Edw. 2.—2 Reeves, c. xii. p. 298.

Gavelgeld, payment of tribute or toll.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 3, p. 155.

Gavelkind. A mode or rule of descent by custom abolished by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 45 (1) (a), in the case of all deaths after 1925, except in regard to entailed estates, and descent from a person of unsound mind, as provided by s. 51 (ibid.), and see L. P. Act, 1922, 12th Sched. (1) (d), and Re Price, 1923, Ch. 579. The word is derived from the Saxon word 'gafol,' or, as it is otherwise written, 'gavel,' which signifies 'rent' or a 'customary performance of husbandry works'; accordingly the land which yielded this kind of service, in contradistinction to knight-service land, was called 'GAVELKIND' that is 'land of the kind that yields rent.' Lambarde (Perambulations of Kent, ed. 1656, p. 585) first advanced and promulgated this supposition, which does not seem to be sufficiently comprehensive since 'gavelkind' does not necessarily denote land subject to rent, in opposition to the opinion of Lord Coke, who traced the word to 'gave all kinde' 'for the custom giveth to all sonnes alike,' which, until then, was generally received.—Co. Litt., 140 a.

Gavelkind land descended in the right line to all the sons equally, being an exception to the law of primogeniture. In default of sons, it descended to the daughters in the ordinary manner.

It is to be remarked that though females, claiming in their own right, were postponed to males, yet they might inherit together with males by representation. 'If a man have three sons and purchase lands held in gavelkind, and one of the sons dies in the lifetime of his father, leaving a daughter, she will inherit the share of her father; yet she is not within the words of the custom, inter heredes masculos partibilis; for she is no male, but the daughter of a male coming in his stead jure representationis.'

This custom extended also to the collateral line, for it has been resolved that where one brother dies without issue, all the other brothers shall inherit from him; and in default of brothers their respective issue shall take jure representationis. But where the nephews succeeded with an uncle, the descent was per stirpes and not per capita; and so from the nature of the thing it must be where the sons of several brothers succeeded, no uncle surviving, for though in equal degree, they stood in the place of their respective fathers.

The partible quality of gavelkind extends also to estates-tail, for if a person die seised in tail of lands held in gavelkind, all his sons shall inherit together as heirs of his body.

Since the 1st January, 1834, the half-blood inherit, for the Inheritance Act, 1833 (s. 9), applied to land of every tenure (s. 1).

This Act and the L. P. Amendment Act, 1859, s. 19, still govern the descent to the heirs in entail. As to the question who are the heirs in tail in gavelkind, see Law of Property Act, 1932; Re Price, 1928, Ch. 579; 1929, 2 Ch. 400.

The other special customs of this tenure were: (1) a wife was dowable of one-half, instead of one-third of the land; (2) a husband would be tenant by the courtesy, whether there be issue born or not, but only of one-half so long as he remains unmarried; (3) gavelkind lands were not liable to escheat for felony, the maxim being, 'The father to the bough, the son to the plough,' although they were for treason or want of heirs (see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, abolishing escheat or forfeiture for treason and felony); and (4) an heir in gavelkind at fifteen years could make a contract and sell his estate for money; but the livery upon the feoffment (the only assurance which could be adopted) had to be made by the heir in person; for, being under age, he could not, by the Common Law, appoint an attorney.

Conveyance of the legal estate by feoffment is now abolished (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 51). An infant cannot hold a legal estate (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (6)). If an infant's estate is in possession in fee simple or for a term of years absolute, the estate becomes settled; see S. L. Act, 1925, s. 1, and INFANT.

Gavelkind, before A.D. 1066, was the general custom of the realm; the feudal law of primogeniture superseded it. It was retained in Kent, because, according to the historical legend, the Kentish men surrounded William I. with a moving wood of boughs, just after the slaughter of Hastings, and for that service obtained a confirmation of their ancient rights.

By 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 26, all gavelkind lands in Wales were made descendible to the heir according to the Common Law. This could only be effected by Act of Parliament.

Gavelkind was met with occasionally, in a modified form, in copyholds.

Primâ facie all land in Kent was gavelkind, except such as is disgavelled by particular statutes (which should always be noticed in transactions relating to Kentish property); and as to such land the custom is never pleaded, but is presumed, and the Courts take judicial notice of it.—1 Mod. 98. Consult Robinson on Gavelkind.

Gavelman, a tenant liable to tribute.

Gavelmed, the duty or work of mowing grass or cutting meadow land, required by the lord from his customary tenants.

Gavelwerk, the personal labour of customary tenants.

Gazette [fr. gaza, treasure; or gazetta, the name of a coin, about a farthing], the official newspaper of the Government, said to have been first published at Oxford in 1665; on the removal of the Court to London, the title was changed to the London Gazette. It is published on Tuesdays and Fridays, and contains all the acts of state, proclamations, and appointments to offices under the Crown; also all Orders in Council, and such other Orders, Rules, and Regulations as are directed by Act of Parliament to be published therein; also dissolutions of partnership, and notices of proceedings in bankruptcy. There is also an Edinburgh Gazette. It is presumed that another Gazette will be issued for N. Ireland, which will be of the same effect as the Dublin Gazette; with regard to S. Ireland it does not seem certain what steps will be taken in this direction. By various Acts (especially the Documentary Evidence Acts, 1868, 1882, and 1895) publication in the Gazette is made evidence of the matter so published.

Gebocced [A.-S.], conveyed.

Geburscript, neighbourhood or adjoining district.

Geburus [fr. gebure, Sax., a farmer], an inhabitant of the same geburship or village.

Geld, a mulct, compensation, value, price. Angeld is the single value of a thing; twigeld, double value, etc.

Geldable, taxable.—Cowel.

Gemot, a mote or moote, meeting, public assembly. The various kinds were—(1) The folo-gemot, or general assembly of the people, whether it was held in a city or town, or consisted of the whole shire. It was sometimes summoned by the ringing of the moot-bell. Its regular meetings were annual. (2) The shire-gemot, or county court, which met twice during the year. (3) The burg-gemot, which met thrice in the year. (4) The hundred-gemot, or hundred court, which met twelve times a year in the Saxon ages; but afterwards a full, perhaps an extraordinary, meeting of every hundred was ordered to be held twice a year. This was the sheriff's tourn or view of franc-pledge. (5) The halle-gemot, or the court-baron. (6) The wardemotus.—Ano. Inst. Eng.

Genealogy [fr. γενεά, Gk., and λόγος], the history of the succession of families; enumeration of descent in order of succession; pedigree.

Genearch [fr. γενεά, Gk., and ἀρχός, the head of a family.

Geneath, a hind or farmer.

Gener [Lat.], a son-in-law.

General Agent, a person who has general authority in regard to a particular object or thing. See Story on Agency, s. 17–19.

General Average. See AVERAGE.

General Council. 'The General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom' (Medical Act, 1858). The Medical Council, as it is commonly called, has power to settle the qualifications of medical practitioners and to strike off the register any of them convicted of felony or misdemeanour or judged guilty by the Council of 'infamous conduct in any professional respect' (s. 29); see R. v. General Medical Council, Ex parte Kynaston, 1930, 1 K. B. 562. The High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the Council's bonâ fide decision (Albutt v. Medical Council, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 400). The Council consists of five Crown nominees, twenty-two persons chosen by the same number of universities and colleges, and five persons elected by the registered medical practitioners of the United Kingdom (Medical Act, 1886, s. 7). See S. R. & O., 1931, No. 719, as to the election of an additional member.

General Council (of the Bar), the full title of the Bar Council. See BAR COUNCIL.

General Council (of the Catholic Church), a council consisting of members of the Church from most parts of the world, but not from every part, as an Œcumenical Council.

Generale, the usual commons in a religious house, distinguished from pictantie, which on extraordinary occasions were allowed beyond the commons.—Cowel.

General Issue, a plea simply traversing modo et formâ the allegations in the declaration, as the plea of 'not guilty' in torts: 'never indebted' to money counts, or 'nunquam assumpsit' to actions on simple contract (C. L. P. Act, 1852, Sched. B, 37). Pleading the general issue was abolished by the Judicature Acts, R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 4, providing that every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a summary form of the facts on which the party pleading relies; and the particular form of pleading the general issue by pleading 'not guilty by statute' (see that title) is abolished by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, as regards any proceeding to which that Act applies.

In criminal proceedings the general issue is 'not guilty,' which is pleaded vivâ voce by the prisoner at the bar.

General Nursing Council for England and Wales (see the Nurses Registration Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 94)), regulates the registration of nurses. The Council is appointed by the Privy Council, Board of Education, and Minister of Health. The rules are subject to the approval of the Minister of Health.

General Lighthouse Fund. See MERCANTILE MARINE FUND.

General Ship, a ship employed by the owners on a particular voyage in the conveyance of the goods of a number of persons unconnected with each other.

General Tail, an estate-tail where one parent only is specified whence the issue must be derived, as to A. and the heirs of his body. See TAIL.

General Verdict, the decision of the jury, either for the plaintiff or defendant generally. See VERDICT.

General Warrant, a process from the Secretary of State, to arrest (without naming any person) the author, printer, and publisher of such libels as were specified in it. It was declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the House of Commons.—Com. Jour., 1766, April 22 and 25. And see Entick v. Carrington, (1765) 19 St. Tr. 1030; also Wilkes v. Wood, 19 St. Tr. 1153; Leach v. Money, 19 St. Tr. 1001; Broom's Const. Law.

General Words, the clause immediately following the parcels in a conveyance and commencing 'together with all buildings fixtures fences commons ways,' etc. These general words as particularized in s. 62 of Law of Property Act, 1925, replacing s. 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, are impliedly contained in a conveyance of land by virtue of that enactment, before the passing of which it was necessary to particularize them in the conveyance itself.

Generalia specialibus non derogant. (General words do not derogate from special) Jenk. Cent. 123, cited in Earl of Derby v.

Generalibus specialia derogant. Lofft, 351; Halkerston, 51.—(Special things derogate from general.)

Generals of Orders, chiefs of orders of monks, friars, and other religious societies.

Generosus [Lat.], a gentleman.

Geneva Arbitration, an arbitration held at Geneva to determine the extent of the liability of the British Government for having allowed the Alabama, a man-of-war built in the Mersey for the Confederate States, to put to sea, where she preyed on the commerce of the United States. The British Government admitted liability, and the only question was as to the amount of the damages which were ultimately fixed by the arbitrators at 3,229,166*l*. The five arbitrators were nominated by Great Britain, the United States, Italy, Switzerland, and Brazil. The British arbitrator was Sir Alexander Cockburn, L.C.J., and the counsel who appeared for the British Government were Sir Roundell Palmer and Mr. Arthur Cohen. The arbitrators met on 17th December, 1871, and made their award on 15th September, 1872. See Memorials of the Earl of Selborne, vol. ii. ch. 55.

Geneva Convention, an international agreement concluded 22nd August, 1864, at Geneva, for the purpose of improving the condition of wounded soldiers of armies in the field. Consult Encyc. of Eng. Law; Higgins's Hague Peace Conferences.

Geneva Convention Act, 1911. This was an Act passed to carry into effect the provisions of the Second Geneva Convention, 1906. It prohibits the use of a red cross on a white ground ('Red Cross') or of the words 'Red Cross' or 'Geneva Cross' without leave of the Army Council.

Gen. fil. (generosi filius), the son of a gentleman.

Gens, race, nation, great family.

Gentleman [fr. gentilhomme, Fr.; gentiluomo, Ital., i.e., homo gentilis, Lat., a man of ancestry, however high his rank]. All persons above yeomen; whereby noblemen are truly called gentlemen.—Smith de Rep. Ang., l. 1, cc. xx., xxi.

The word was not employed as a legal addition until about the time of Henry V. It has no precise legal meaning, but is used to designate a man of independent means and no occupation who is not entitled to 'esquire.'

To describe the giver (a clerk in the Audit Office) of a bill of sale (see that title) as a gentleman was held an insufficient description in Allen v. Thompson, (1856) 1 H. & N. 15; and so of a deponent to the fitness of a proposed new trustee in Re Orde, (1883) 24 Ch. D. 271.

Gentlewoman, a woman of birth above the common; an addition of a woman's state or degree. The word has no precise meaning in law.

Genus, in logic, connotes an idea or quality which is universal or common to a whole class, all the members of which are differentiated by that quality or idea from any other class: e.g., incorporeal hereditament is genus with respect to a rent, which is species.—Woolley's Introd. to Logic, 45; Mill's Log., Bk. I. c. 7. See ETJSDM GENERIS.

George Noble, a gold coin, current at 6*s.* 8*d.* in the reign of Henry VII.—Lowndes's Essay on Coins, p. 41.

German [fr. germain, Fr.; germanus, Lat.], brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: thus the children of brothers and sisters are called cousins-german.

Gerontocomium [fr. γερων, Gk., an old man, and κομῆν, to take care of], an almshouse for old people. Their managers are called gerontocomi.

Gersumarius, fineable; liable to be amerced at the discretion of the lord of the manor.—Cowel.

Gestation. There is no extreme period of gestation by English law. In Bosville v. Attorney-General, (1887) 12 P. D. at p. 178, medical witnesses put the normal time at from 270 to 275 days, adding that a longer period, though not unknown or even uncommon, is exceptional. See also Gaskill v. Gaskill, 1921, P. 425, where it was held that in the present state of medical knowledge 331 days was not an impossible period of gestation.

Gestio pro hærede (behaviour as heir), conduct by which the heir renders himself liable for his ancestor's debts, as by taking possession of title-deeds, receiving rents, etc.

Gestu et fama, an obsolete writ, resorted to when a person's good behaviour was impeached.—Lamb. Eiren., l. 4, c. 14.

Gewineda, the ancient convention of the people to decide a cause.—Leg. Ethel., c. 1.

Gewitnassa, the giving of evidence in our ancient British law.—Ibid., c. 1.

Gewrite, writings, deeds, or charters.

Ghirdwar, Girdwar, an overseer of police, under whom the goyendas or informers act.—Indian.

Gibbet [fr. gibet, Fr.], a gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their bodies are exposed after death—a practice abolished in England by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36.

Gift. The old text-writers made a gift (donatio) a distinct species of deed, and describe it as a conveyance applicable to the creation of an estate-tail; while a feoffment they strictly confine to the creation of a fee simple estate. The operative verb was 'give,' which no longer implies any covenant in law (Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 4), replaced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 59 (2), and the deed required livery of seisin. It is obsolete. See Jac. Law Dict.

A gift is now understood to mean a mere voluntary assurance or transfer of property without any consideration being given for it. Such a transaction is apt to be very jealously scrutinized in a Court of Equity, and will be set aside on proof of undue influence (see that title), or of a fiduciary relationship of the donee to the donor: see Huguenin v. Baseley, (1806-8) 14 Ves. 273; W. & T. L. C.; Morley v. Loughman, 1893, 1 Ch. 736, 757; Lyon v. Home, (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. 655. In the absence of any such objection, however, a gift if completed is good both at law and in equity, but the Court will do nothing to perfect the gift if the donor has left it incomplete: see Ellison v. Ellison, (1802) 6 Ves. 656; 1 W. & T. L. C.

A gift of chattels without delivery is ineffectual to pass any property unless the gift be by deed: see Irons v. Smallpiece, (1819) 2 B. & Ald. 551, approved by the Court of Appeal in Cochrane v. Moore, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 57.

Also the name given to the right of presentation to a church living which is said to be 'in the gift' of the person enjoying the right.

A gift within three years of the death of the donor is subject to estate duty on his death. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES AND VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES; ESTATE DUTY.

By L. P. Act, 1925, s. 175, specific gifts, whether contingent or future, by will coming into operation after 1925, carry the intermediate income; see also Trustee Act, 1925, s. 3; and A. E. Act, 1925, ss. 41 and 42.

Gifta aqua, the stream of water to a mill.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 3.

Giftoman [Swed.], the right to dispose of a woman in marriage.

Gilbert Acts, the Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), introduced into Parliament by Mr. Davies Gilbert, providing for the building and repairing of parsonages, with the amending Acts 21 Geo. 3, c. 66, 7 Geo. 4, c. 66, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 23, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 69, described as the Gilbert Acts in the marginal note of s. 64 of the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871. Mr. Gilbert also introduced 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, first establishing unions of parishes with guardians of the poor, superseded by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, and repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1871.

Gild, or Guild [fr. Ang.-Sax. gildan, to pay], a tax, tribute, or contribution; a society or fraternity constituted for mutual protection and benefit, generally in trade, so called because each member paid his share to the general expenses. See Steph. Com.

Gildable, liable to pay gild.—Cowel.

Gilda mercatoria, a mercantile meeting or assembly. If the Crown grants to a set of men the privilege to have gildam mercatoriam, this is sufficient to incorporate them.—10 Rep. 30. A guild merchant was an incorporated society of the merchants of a town or city having exclusive rights of trading within the town. In many English towns and in the royal burghs of Scotland the merchant guild became the governing body of the town.—Oxf. Dict.

Gild-rent, certain payments to the Crown from any gild or fraternity.

Gill, one-fourth of a pint measure.

Gln Act, 9 Geo. 2, c. 23, by which the retailer of spirits in less quantity than 2 gallons had to pay a licence duty of 50*l.* a year, and a further duty of 20*s.* for every gallon sold. Repealed by Statute Law Revision Act, 1867, as having been already impliedly repealed.

Girantem, an Italian word which signifies the drawer. Derived from girare, to draw.—Bouvier's Law Dict.; Emerigon on Maritime Loans, ed. J. E. Hall.—Merc. Law.

Gisement, cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle. See AGISTMENT.

Gisetaker, a person who takes cattle to graze.

Gisle, a pledge. Fredgisle, a pledge of peace. Gislebert, an illustrious pledge.—Gibs. Camden.

Gist of Action [fr. giste, Fr. gesir, to lie; jaceo, Lat.], the cause for which an action lies; the ground and foundation of a suit, without which it is not maintainable.

Glandered Horses. By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 70, ss. 57 and 60, penalties were imposed on persons bringing glandered horses, etc., into markets, etc., and provision is made for their seizure, slaughter, and burial; but the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 74), which repeals and replaces that Act, contains no such express provision, although by s. 32, sub-s. xxxii., it gave the Privy Council power to apply its provisions to horses and glanders and farcy; and the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 22, sub-ss. xxxv. and xxxvi., appears to give a similar power to the Ministry of Agriculture by general words. See CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS).

Glanville, the author, about 1181, of a book entitled Tractatus de Legibus et Consuetudinibus Regni Angliæ, which is supposed to have been the first undertaking of the kind in any country of Europe. It is little more than a sketch, as far as the plan of it goes, and is confined to proceedings in the King's Court. A translation, with notes, was published in 1812 by Mr. Beames.

Glass. By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 81 (1), every person who steals or with intent to steal breaks any glass belonging to any building, shall be guilty of a felony punishable as in the case of simple larceny.

By Carriers Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 68), s. 1, a carrier is not liable for loss or damage above 10*l.* unless such glass has been declared and an increased charge accepted.

As to deposit in streets and the power of making byelaws to prevent such a nuisance, see Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 72; Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 16; Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 171; Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), s. 28.

Under Factories and Workshops Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), 'Glass works' is a non-textile factory; see ss. 40, 78, regarding meals and meal-times in such works; as to night employment of persons of fourteen and upwards, see s. 55; see the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 65), Sched. I, Part I, Article 2; and Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 29 (4).

Glass-men, wandering rogues or vagrants. —1 Jac. 1, c. 7, rep. by 13 Anne, c. 28.

Gleaning, Leasing, or Lesing. No right exists at Common Law for the poor to enter on a person's land and glean after harvest (Steel v. Houghton, (1788) 1 H. Bl. 51).

Glebe ascriptitii, villein-socmen, who could not be removed from the land while they did the service due.—Bract. c. 7.

Glebaria, turfs dug out of the ground.

Glebe, the land possessed as part of the property of an ecclesiastical benefice.

As to sale of glebe, and offer thereof for the purpose of allotments, see the Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), and the Glebe Land Sale Rules made by the Land Commissioners (now the Ministry of Agriculture) thereunder; and as to letting glebe on lease up to 14 years with consent of patron and bishop, see Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 27); and as to the hiring of glebe land for small holdings and allotments, see the Small Holdings and Allotments Acts, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 36); 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 52); and see Housing Act, 1936. Consult Key and Elphinstone's Prec.

Gllscywa, a fraternity.—Leg. Ethel., c. 12.

Glomerells, commissioners appointed to determine differences between scholars in a school or university and the townsmen of the place.—Jac. Law Dict.

Gloucester, Statute of (6 Edw. 1, c. 1), A.D. 1278, by which (among other things) a plaintiff recovering damages was first given a right to costs. Impliedly superseded by R. S. C., Ord. LXV., and expressly repealed by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 79), as to costs in the Supreme Court. See Garnett v. Bradley, (1878) 3 App. Cas. 944.

Glove Silver, extraordinary rewards formerly given to officers of courts, etc.; money formerly given by the sheriff of a county in which no offenders are left for execution to the clerk of assize and judge's officers.

Gloves. It is an ancient custom on a maiden assize, when there is no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. It is an immemorial custom to remove the glove from the right hand on taking oath.

Glycerine, Nitro. See EXPLOSIVES, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 17, and 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 17.

Glyn, or Glen [fr. glyn, Eree], a hollow between two mountains; a valley.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

God-hote, an ecclesiastical or church fine paid for crimes and offences committed against God.

God-gild, that which is offered to God or His service.

Godpenny, earnest money given to a servant when hired.

God's Acre, a churchyard.

Going through the Bar. The chief of a Common Law Court demanding of every member of the Bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move; done at the sitting of the Court each day except Special Paper days, and other days on which motions are not taken. See also LAST DAY OF TERM.

Going to the Country. When a party, under the system of pleading before the Common Law Procedure Act, finished his pleading by the words, 'and of this he puts himself upon his country,' meaning that he intended to take the verdict of a jury upon the issue of fact; this was called 'going to the country.' It was the essential termination to a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading. See VERIFICATION.

Gold. As to the duty of the Bank of England under the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), s. 8, to coin gold bullion for any person bringing the same for that purpose, which was suspended by the Gold Standard Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 29); and the Bank's duty during the period of suspense, to sell gold bullion in bars containing approximately 400 ounces troy of fine gold to any purchaser paying £3 17s. 10½d. per ounce troy of fine gold, see those Acts, and CURRENCY ACT. The right to purchase gold provided by the Act of 1925 was suspended by the Gold Standard (Amendment) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 46) (see BULLION). As to standards and marking of gold plate and gold ware, see Safford, 'Law of Merchandise Acts.'

A promise to repay a loan or other obligation in terms of 'gold' depends for its performance on the law of the country governing the performance at the time of performance, see Feist v. Société Intercommunale Belge d'Electricité, 1934, A. C. 161.

Golda, a mine.—Blount.

Gold-mines, a branch of the ordinary revenue of the kingdom. By 1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 30, and 5 W. & M. c. 6, amended by 55 Geo. 3, c. 134, it is enacted that no mines of copper, tin, iron, or lead shall be looked upon as royal mines, notwithstanding gold or silver may be extracted from them in any quantities; but that the sovereign, or persons claiming under his authority, may have the ore (other than the tin ore in Devon and Cornwall) at a price stated in the Act.

As to the transfer of gold and silver mines in the County Palatine of Durham to the Crown, see 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 19 and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45.

Goldsmiths' Notes. Bankers' cash notes (i.e., promissory notes given by a banker to his customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money) were originally called in London goldsmiths' notes, from the circumstance that all the banking business in England was originally transacted by goldsmiths.

Goldwit, or Goldwich, a golden mulct.

Gollardus, a jester or buffoon.

Gomashtah, an agent, a steward, a confidential factor, a representative.—Indian.

Good, the technical term applied to pleading to express soundness or validity.

Good Abearing. See ABEARANCE.

Good Behaviour, Security for. The exercise of preventive justice, which consists in being bound with one or more sureties in a recognizance or obligation to the Crown, and taken in some court, by some judicial officer; whereby the parties acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the Crown in the sum required, with the condition to be void if the party shall be of good behaviour, either generally or especially for the time therein limited. See Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 25; see, further, Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 17); Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), ss. 26 (2), 39 (3); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices.'

Security for Convicted Drunkard.—The Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 28), enables a court on conviction of a person for drunkenness in a public place, etc., to order him to enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour.

Good Consideration, e.g. natural love and affection: distinguish from valuable consideration. See Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 172; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; and CONSIDERATION.

Good Friday. The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 92, consolidating 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 42, passed for the better observance of Good Friday, and 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 15, provides that Good Friday and Christmas Day are to be excluded as 'non-business days' in cases where the time limited by that Act for doing any act or thing is less than three days; and also, by s. 14, that where the last of the three 'days of grace' (see GRACE, DAY OR) falls on Good Friday, a bill of exchange shall be payable on the preceding business day. Good Friday is a holiday in the Courts and offices of the Supreme Court (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII., r. 4), and is not reckoned in the computation of limited time (less than six days) for the purposes of the Rules (ibid., Ord. LXIV., r. 2), or of limited time, not exceeding seven days, for the purposes of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, by s. 230 of that Act, which also allows acts to be done on the day after Good Friday instead of on Good Friday. Houses where intoxicating liquor is sold are closed as on Sunday (Licensing Act, 1874, s. 3). See, further, HOLIDAY.

Good Jury. A jury of which the members are selected from the list of special jurors. See Vickery v. L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., (1870) L. R. 5 C. P. 165, sanctioning a fee of a guinea each for their payment. See SPECIAL JURY.

Good Law. This expression is sometimes used of propositions of law which could not be successfully questioned in a court, although they be either irreconcilable with justice, or may have been judicially disapproved of. Cf. 'Good sense or good law.'

Goods and Chattels, the general denomination of things personal, as distinguished from things real, or lands, tenements, and hereditaments. See CHATTELS.

Goods, Sale of. See SALE OF GOODS ACT.

Goodwill, the advantage or benefit which is acquired by a business, beyond the mere value of the capital, stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers; see Trego v. Hunt, 1896, A. C. 7. It is considered a subject of sale and part of and incident to any business which is sold as a business or 'stock in trade and premises.' It cannot be sold apart from the business (Smale v. Graves, (1850) 3 De G. & Sm. 706); it may be local, or attached to premises, or personal such as the practice of a dentist or doctor (other than a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians). But premises may be retained to the business and goodwill sold separately (Morris v. Moss, (1855) L. J. Ch. 194). Goodwill cannot be divided so that part follows a special trademark; see Re Dobie & Son, Ltd., 52 R. P. C. 333. Compensation for goodwill on quitting a tenancy is provided for subject to the statutory conditions by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 4; see Whitley v. Stumbles, 1930, A. C. 540; LANDLORD AND TENANT. The purchase of a goodwill is of little or no value as a rule unless the sale is accompanied by the vendor's covenant in restraint of his competition or trade. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE AND TRADEMARK. Consult Lindley on Partnership; Encyclopædia of the Laws of England; Halsbury's Laws of England.

Goole, a breach in a sea wall or bank; a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the sea.—16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 11.

Gooroo, Guru, a spiritual teacher or guide.—Indian.

Goree, or Gors, a weir, pool, or pit of water.—Termes de la Ley.

Gordon Riots, a series of violent 'No Popery' disturbances which occurred in London in June, 1780, so called after Lord George Gordon, the President of the 'Protestant Association.' The authorities behaved with the utmost imbecility and for four or five nights abandoned the town to the fury of the mob, who amongst other outrages sacked and burned Lord Mansfield's house in Bloomsbury Square and destroyed his library and a priceless collection of manuscripts, many from the pen of Mansfield himself. At length the military were called in and the riots suppressed, but not until an immense amount of damage had been done. Lord George Gordon was indicted for high treason on the charge of levying war against the King. He was defended by Erskine and acquitted for want of evidence; see 21 St. Tr. 485; Lecky's Hist. of England in the Eighteenth Century, ch. xii. For an account of the riots, see Dickens's Barnaby Rudge; and Memoirs of Sir Samuel Romilly.

Gore, a narrow slip of land.

Gossipred, compaternity, spiritual affinity.—Canon Law.

Gote, a ditch, sluice, or gutter.—23 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Government, that form of fundamental rules and principles by which a nation or state is governed; the state itself.

Government Annuities. By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 43, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 51, the Government Annuities Acts, 1864 and 1882, and other 'Government Annuities Acts,' facilities are afforded for the purchase of such annuities, and for assuring payments of money on death, the latter Act allowing the purchase of an annuity of any amount not exceeding 100*l.* a year, the limit under the Act of 1864 having been 50*l.* a year. At the present time life annuities are granted from the National Debt offices without any limit on the amount, or through the Post Office or trustee savings banks up to 330*l.* a year.

The Government Annuities Act, 1929 (c. 29), consolidates with amendments the former Acts. See ANNUITIES.

Governor. In Dominions and Colonies usually the name of the representative of the King and the head of the local executive with powers limited by his commission (Cameron v. Kyte, (1835) 3 Knapp 332). In the Dominions of Canada, the Irish Free State and Union of South Africa, called the 'Governor-General'; in New Zealand and Newfoundland, the 'Governor.' In India the head of the Executive of the Indian Federation, who may also be His Majesty's representative (Government of India Act, 1936 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 42)). In Northern Ireland, the 'Governor.' Interpretation Act, 1889, ss. 18 and 42, provides that in all Acts passed after that year the word 'Governor' when used with reference to Canada shall mean the Governor-General or the person having his powers for the time being, and with reference to any other British possession shall include the officer for the time being administering the government thereof.

Goyend, land immediately next to a village.—Indian.

Grace, a faculty, licence, or dispensation; also general and free pardon by Act of Parliament.

Grace, Pilgrimage of, an insurrection which broke out in the northern counties in the reign of Henry VIII. after the suppression of the lesser monasteries, the principal object being the restoration of the Church.

Gradient, moving by steps; the deviation of a road or railway from a level surface upon an inclined plane.

Graduates, scholars who have taken a degree in a university. See UNIVERSITY.

Gradus [Lat.], a step or degree.

Gradus parentelæ, a pedigree; a table of relationship.

Graffer, a notary, or scrivener.—5 Hen. 8. c. 1.

Graffio, Gravio, a landgrave or earl.

Graftum, a writing-book, register, or cartulary of deeds and evidences.

Grail, a gradual or book containing some of the offices of the Roman Church. The holy grail was the vessel out of which our Lord was believed to have eaten at the Last Supper.

Grain, the twenty-fourth part of a penny-weight according to Troy weight.

A grain is  $\frac{1}{70000}$ th of the weight of a cubic inch of distilled water at a temperature of 62° F. A grain is  $\frac{1}{7000}$ th of the pound Troy and  $\frac{1}{70000}$ th of the pound avoirdupois. A metric gram equals 15.432356 grains. A milligram is .015 grains. A carat is 200 milligrams or 3 grains. (B.T. Standard.)

Grain, Loading of. As to the regulations with regard to this, see s. 452 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), and s. 11 of the amending Act of 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48). Grain for the purpose of these Acts means any corn, rice, paddy, pulse, seeds, nuts, or nut kernels.

Grain, Poisoned, Act prohibiting the use of (26 & 27 Vict. c. 113). See Poison.

Grainage, an ancient duty in London, under which the twentieth part of salt imported by aliens was taken.

Grammar Schools, endowed schools founded (many of them by King Edward the Sixth) for the purpose of teaching Latin and Greek, or either of them, and in which, except under the orders of a Court of Equity, under the Grammar Schools Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 77), the teaching of one or both of these languages, in accordance with the terms of the foundation, cannot be dispensed with. Grammar Schools are now usually governed by schemes under the Endowed Schools Acts, and in such cases visitatorial power is exercised by the Board of Education.—Tudor's Char. Trusts, 4th ed. p. 78, note (d). See ENDOWED SCHOOLS.

Grammatica falsa non vitiat chartam. 9 Rep. 48.—(False grammar does not vitiate a deed.) See CLERICAL ERROR.

Granatarius, an officer who kept the corn-chamber in a religious house.

Grand Assize, a peculiar species of trial by jury, introduced in the time of Henry II., giving the tenant or defendant in a writ of right the alternative of a trial by battle, or by his peers. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 13.

Grand Cape. See CAPE.

Grand Costumier of Normandy, an ancient book, of great authority, containing the ducal customs of Normandy, probably compiled since the time of Richard I.—Hale's Hist. Com. Law, c. vi.

Grand Distress, Writ of, formerly issued in the real action of quare impedit, when no appearance had been entered after the attachment; it commanded the sheriff to distrain the defendant's lands and chattels in order to compel appearance. It is no longer used, the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), by s. 26, having abolished the action of quare impedit, and substituted for it the procedure in an ordinary action.

Grand Jury was abolished with some exceptions by the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36). The bill of indictment is now preferred by any person before a court in which a person charged may lawfully be indicted, and the proper officer of the court shall, if the requirements have been complied with, sign the bill and it shall thereupon become an indictment. But bills of indictment may be preferred before Grand Juries of the counties of London and Middlesex by virtue of certain enactments extant, in the 1st Schedule (High Treason), and certain other offences triable in the King's Bench Division.

Formerly it was an inquisition composed of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three good and lawful men of a county, returned by the sheriff to every session of the peace, and every commission of oyer and terminer, and of general gaol delivery, who inquire, present, do and execute all those things which, on the part of the king, shall then and there be commanded them. Grand jurymen at the Assize Courts ought to be freeholders, but to what amount is uncertain.—2 Hale, P. C. 154.

The grand jury was previously instructed in the articles of their inquiry by a charge from the judge. They then withdrew to sit, and receive indictments, which were preferred in the name of the king, but at the suit of any private prosecutor, and they were only to hear evidence on the part of the prosecution: for the finding of an indictment was only in the nature of an inquiry or accusation, afterwards to be tried; and the grand jury only inquired upon their oaths whether there be sufficient cause to call upon the party accused to answer it.

When the grand jury had heard the evidence, if they thought it a groundless accusation, they indorsed upon the bill of indictment 'not a true bill,' or 'not found'; the bill was then thrown out, and the party accused discharged. But a fresh bill might afterwards be preferred to a subsequent grand jury. If they were satisfied of the truth of the accusation, they indorsed a 'true bill'; the indictment was then found, and the party stood indicted. A majority of the grand jury must have agreed, i.e., not less than twelve.—4 Steph. Com.

Grand Larceny, stealing to above the value of twelve pence. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 2.

Grand Serjeanty, an ancient holding by military service. See TENURE.

Grange, a farm furnished with barns, granaries, stables, and all conveniences for husbandry.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Grangearius, a keeper of a grange or farm.

Grangia [Low Lat.], a grange.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Grant [fr. garantir, Fr., Junius and Skinner; but Minshew thinks gratuito, or perhaps gratia, gratificor, Lat.], a Common Law conveyance.

This deed was originally confined to the transfer of incorporeal hereditaments and expectant estates, of which livery of seisin could not be given. But the distinction between property lying in livery and in grant, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold, was abolished by the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 2, which provided that all corporeal hereditaments should, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold thereof, be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery. The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 51, replacing s. 6 of the R. P. Act, 1845, enacts that all lands and interests therein shall lie in grant and not in livery and seisin. The operative verb was 'grant,' which, by s. 4 of the same statute, replaced by Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 59, is not to imply any covenant in law in respect of any hereditaments except by force of any Act of Parliament, and by Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 49 (see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 51), the use of the word 'grant' is not necessary to convey land or any interest in land.

Before 1926 conveyance by grant had become the usual mode of transferring realty. A corporation can convey by grant.

A grant of personality is frequently termed an assignment or a bill of sale.

The king's grants are matters of record, and are either letters-patent or writs close.

Grant to Uses. This was the common grant with uses superadded. The legal estate was conveyed by the words of grant, and on the seisin thus vested in the grantee uses could be declared which the Statute of Uses at once converted into legal estates. The L. P. Act, 1925, 7th Sched., has repealed the Statute of Uses.

Grantee, he to whom any grant is made.

Grantor, he by whom a grant is made.

Grantz, grantees.—Jac. Law Dict.

Grass-hearth, the feudal service of turning up the earth with a plough.—Paroch. Antiq. 496.

Grassum, in Scots law, a fine paid in consideration of a right which is to endure for a term of years, e.g., a contract of lease or of ground-annual.—Green's Encyc. of Scots

Law; and see Case of the Queensberry Leases, (1819) 1 Bligh, 339.

Grass-week, Rogation week, so called anciently in the Inns of Court and Chancery.

Gratis, without reward.

Gratis dictum, a voluntary statement.

Gratuitous Bailment. See BAILMENT.

Gratuitous Deeds, instruments made without valuable consideration.

Gratuitous Trustees, Act to amend the law in Scotland relative to the resignation, powers, and liabilities of, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 84.

Grava, a little wood or grove.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Gravamen, the substantial grievance or complaint.

Gravare et Gravatio, an accusation or impeachment.—Leg. Ethel. c. xix.

Gray's Inn. See INNS OF COURT.

Grazing. The right of grazing on the sides of the highway belongs to the adjoining owners usque ad medium filum viæ. See also AGISTMENT. As to power to attach grazing rights to small holdings and allotments, see s. 42 of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 36), as amended by 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 59.

Great Cattle, all manner of beasts except sheep and yearlings.

Great Charter, Magna Charta, which see.

Great Seal [clavis regni, Lat.], the emblem of sovereignty, introduced by Edward the Confessor. It is held by the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper for the time being and may not be taken out of the country. By Art. 24 of the Union between England and Scotland (5 Anne, c. 8) it was provided that there should be one Great Seal for the United Kingdom, to be used for sealing writs to summon the parliament, and for sealing treaties with foreign states and all public acts of state which concern the United Kingdom, and in all other matters relating to England, as the Great Seal of England was then used; and that a seal in Scotland should be kept and made use of in all things relating to private rights or grants, which had usually passed the Great Seal of Scotland, and which only concern offices, grants, commissions, and private right within Scotland. On the Union between Great Britain and Ireland no express provision was made by any of the Articles of the Union as to the establishing one Great Seal for the United Kingdom; but various acts as to the summoning of parliament, etc., were required to be done under the Great Seal of Ireland; and by s. 3 of the Acts of Union, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67 (British), and 40 Geo. 3, c. 38 (Irish), it was enacted that the Great Seal of Ireland may, if his Majesty shall so think fit, after the Union, be used in like manner as before the Union (except where it is otherwise provided by the Articles of Union), within that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland. See Great Seal Acts, 1880 and 1884. See now IRELAND and statutes there cited. As to forging these seals, see Forgery Act, 1913, s. 5. Consult Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, Intro.: Wyon's Great Seals of England.

His Majesty's Seal for Scotland is in the custody of a principal Secretary of State, lately the Secretary for Scotland, by Secretaries of State Act, 1925 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 18).

Great Seal (Offices) Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 81). This Act makes provision for the abolition of various offices connected with the Great Seal; such as those of the Messenger of the Great Seal, Clerk of the Petty Bag, Clerk of the Patents, and Purse-bearer to the Lord Chancellor.

Gree, satisfaction for an offence committed or injury done.—Cowel.

Greek Kalends, an expression to signify a date that will never arrive, there being no such division of time known to the Greeks.

Green Cloth. The counting-house of the king's household was commonly called the Green Cloth in respect of the green cloth upon the table whereat the lord steward, the treasurer of the king's house, and other inferior officers sat:—(1) For daily taking the accounts for all expenses of the household. (2) For making provisions for the household, according to the laws and statutes of the realm. (3) For making of payments for the same. (4) For the good government of the king's servants. (5) For payment of the wages of the king's servants. The officers of the counting-house never held plea of anything.—4 Inst. 131.

Greenhew or Greenhus, vert in forests, etc.—Manw. c. vi., n. 5 (3rd ed.).

Greenland Fisheries. See SEAL FISHERY ACT, 1875.

Green Silver, a feudal custom in the manor of Wittell, in Essex, where every tenant whose front door opens to Greenbury shall pay a halfpenny yearly to the lord, by the name of 'green silver.'—Jac. Law. Dict.

Greenwax, estreats delivered to a sheriff out of the Exchequer, under the seal of the Court, which was impressed upon green wax, to be levied.—7 Hen. 4, c. 3.

Greenwich Hospital. An institution for the relief of seamen, now vested in the Admiralty. See 1 Jac. 2, c. 18, rep. 6 Geo. 4, c. 105; 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 21, rep. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 34; 10 Geo. 4, c. 26, and the many Acts which have subsequently been passed dealing with the Hospital. The principal Act now in force is the Greenwich Hospital Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 44), and, as to the application of the revenues of the Hospital, the Act of 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 67), and subsequent Acts. See Chron. Table and Index of Stats., tit. 'Greenwich Hospital.'

Greenwich Time. 'Time' in an Act of Parliament, deed or legal instrument means in Great Britain Greenwich mean time; see Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 9). For the effect of Summer Time, see 12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 22, and 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 64.

Gregorian Epoch, the time from which the Gregorian calendar or computation dates, i.e., from the year 1582. See CALENDAR.

Grenville Act (10 Geo. 3, c. 16), by which the jurisdiction over parliamentary election petitions was first transferred from the whole House of Commons to select committees; repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 22, s. 1. See ELECTION PETITIONS.

Gretna Green Marriage, a marriage celebrated at Gretna, in Dumfries (bordering on the county of Cumberland), in Scotland. By the law of Scotland a valid marriage may be contracted by consent alone before witnesses without any other formality. See PER VERBA DE PRÆSENTI.

When Lord Hardwicke's repealed Marriage Act of 1753 (26 Geo. 2, c. 33), rendered the publication of banns (or a licence) necessary in England, it became usual for persons who wished to marry clandestinely to go to Gretna Green, the nearest part of Scotland, and marry according to the Scotch law; so a sort of chapel was built at Gretna Green, in which the English marriage service was performed by the village blacksmith; as to the validity of such marriages, see Hubback on Succession. But by the Marriage (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 96), s. 1, after 31st December, 1856, no marriage contracted in Scotland by declaration, acknowledgment, or ceremony is valid, unless one of the parties had, at the date thereof, his or her usual place of residence there, or had lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding such marriage, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

Greve [fr. gerefa, or rather, rete, Sax.], a word of power or authority.

Grievous Bodily Harm. See ACTUAL BODILY HARM.

Grimgribber [fr. grimoire, Fr., a conjuring book in the old French romances, or perhaps the art of necromancy itself], the jargon used as a cover for legal sophistry.—Div. of Purl, 36, and notes.

Grith, peace, protection.—Termes de la Ley.

Grithbreech, breach of the peace.—Cowel.

Grithstole, a place of sanctuary.—Cowel.

Grogging. The subjecting a cask to any process for abstracting any spirits absorbed in the wood thereof, punishable by a fine of 50*l.*, as a revenue offence, by s. 4 of the Finance Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 10).

Gronna, a deep pit or place where turfs are dug to burn.—Hoved, 438.

Groom Porter, formerly an officer belonging to the royal household.—Jac. Law Dict.

Groom of the Stole [fr. στολή, Gk., a robe], an officer of the royal household, who has charge of the king's wardrobe.

Gross, absolute, entire. A thing in gross exists in its own right, and not as an appendage to another thing.

Gross Weight, the whole weight of goods and merchandise, including the dust and dross, and also the chest or bag, etc., upon which tare and tret are allowed.

Grosse bois, timber.—Cowel.

Grossment encelnte, pregnancy in its later stages.

Grotius. A renowned European writer on International Law. He was born at Delft, in Holland, in 1585. His greatest work is De Jure Pacis et Belli.

Groundage, a custom or tribute paid for the standing of shipping in port.—Jac. Law Dict.

Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41), and Ground Game (Amendment) Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 21), giving to occupiers concurrent rights with owners to kill hares and rabbits. See HARES.

Ground-rent. Rent reserved on a lease by a lessor, usually for a long term of years to a lessee who may use or dispose of the land by sale or lease at its value during the term subject to the ground rent; it generally takes the form of rent payable for land let on a building lease on which the lessee erects buildings, which at the termination of the lease become, together with the land, the property of the lessor (Bartlett v. Salmon, 6 De G. M. & G. p. 33).

(q.v.) or fi. fa. (fieri facias, q.v.) could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a writ called a ground-writ into the latter county, and then another writ, which was called a testatum writ, into the former. The 121st section of that Act abolished this useless process. See EXECUTION.

Grouse. The close time is between 10th December and 12th August. See GAME.

Growth Halfpenny, a rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle.—Clayton's Rep. p. 92.

Gruaril, the principal officers of a forest.

Guarantee, he to whom a guaranty is made; also, and more commonly, the guaranty itself. See GUARANTY.

Guarantee. Company limited by. See COMPANIES.

Guarantee by Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 108), repealed, and new provisions substituted, by the Government Officers Security Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 64).

Guarantor, he who makes a guaranty.

Guaranty, or Guarantee, a promise to a person to be answerable for the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty by another, in case he should fail to perform his engagement. An offer to guarantee until it be accepted is not binding. At Common Law a guarantee need not have been in writing, but the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, enacts that 'No action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriages of another person, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized.' In case of guarantees, great inconvenience had resulted from the construction put upon the above section, viz., that the consideration for the promise of the guarantor must appear upon the written instrument. To remedy this, the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), provides that no promise to answer for the debt, etc., of another is to be deemed invalid to support an action, by reason that the consideration does not appear in writing (s. 3). By s. 18 of the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), which takes the place of s. 4 of the same Act, 'a continuing guaranty given either to a firm or to a third person in respect of the transactions of a firm is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, revoked as to future transactions by any change in the constitution of the firm to which or of the firms in respect of the transactions of which, the guaranty was given.' See McCall v. Hargreaves, 1932, 2 K. B. 423.

For the Statute of Frauds to apply, the party whose debt is guaranteed must himself remain liable (Birkmyr v. Darnell, (1705) Salk. 27; 1 Sm. L. C.). The contract of a del credere agent is not within the statute; see Harburg Indiarubber Co. v. Martin, 1902, 1 K. B. 778. A contract of guarantee is one of considerable nicety, and a surety will not be held bound beyond the strict terms of his undertaking; an apparently small variation will often release him, e.g., he will be discharged if his rights against the debtor are affected, disturbed or destroyed by any agreement between the creditor and debtor without his privity, such as if time is given by the creditor to the principal debtor (Bolton v. Buckenham, 1891, 1 Q. B. 278). For forfeiture of shares by a debtor whose payments have been guaranteed by a surety (Re Darwen and Pearce, 1927, 1 Ch. 176), and for circumstances in which the guarantor for a lessor, contemplating assignment, was not discharged by assignment (see Johnson Bros. (Dyers), Ltd. v. Davison, 79 Sol. Jo. 306). The guarantor, as a rule, has the right of subrogation or to step into the shoes of the creditor to the extent of the discharge of the debt or part of it by the guarantor. See INDEMNITY. Consult De Colyar on Guarantees; Leake or Chitty on Contracts.

Guardage, state of wardship.

Guardian. A guardian is one appointed by the wisdom and policy of the law to take care of a person and his affairs, who by reason of his imbecility and want of understanding is incapable of acting for his own interest (2 Bacon's Abridgment, 672). See GUARDIANSHIP.

Guardian, or Warden, of the Cinque Ports, a magistrate who has the jurisdiction of the ports or havens which are called the Cinque Ports. This office was first created amongst us, in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, etc.—Camd. Brit. 238. See CINQUE PORTS.

Guardian de l'Eglise, a churchwarden.

Guardian (Gardain) de Lestelerny, the warden of the stannaries or mines in Cornwall and Devon. See 16 Car. 1, c. 15.

Guardian of the Peace, a warden or conservator of the peace.

Guardian of the Spiritualities, the person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.

Guardian of the Temporalities, the person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the Crown.

Guardians of the Poor. Their powers have been transferred to the councils of the counties and county boroughs, who are now the poor law authorities; see the Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17), s. 1, and Poor Law Act, 1930 (c. 17), s. 2 (see POOR LAW AUTHORITIES). Previously, they were the persons administering, under the control of the Ministry of Health, the funds raised by poor rates under the Poor Relief Act, 1601, and other Acts for the relief of the poor. They were elected by ballot by parochial electors, each giving one vote and no more for each of any number of persons not exceeding the number to be elected in 'unions,' or parishes, as the case may be, within 40 days after the 25th March in every year, to serve for three years, one-third of their number going out of office every year under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76), ss. 38 et seq., as amended materially by the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 20).

Guardianship. The care of and responsibility for a person of non-age or infancy in regard to its person or property, or both. At Common Law, the father is the guardian by nature and nurture but the rights and duties relating to that office have been modified in favour of the mother by the Custody of Infants Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 12), Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), and 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 45), and the Custody of Children Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 3). The main consideration is the welfare of the child.

In modern times, guardians may be said to be of six kinds:—

(1) Testamentary.—By 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8, the father, and by s. 5 of the Act of 1925, both father and mother have an equal right to appoint a guardian by deed or will to act after death respectively either jointly with the survivor or otherwise, as the Court may direct.

(2) Maternal.—Under the Acts of 1886 and 1925, s. 4, on the death of the father, the mother, if surviving, becomes guardian, either alone when no guardian is appointed by the father, or jointly with any guardian appointed by the father, or by the High or County Court if it shall think fit. A corresponding right is given to the father.

(3) Customary.—This guardianship, which was entirely local, and depended upon the law of the particular place where it existed, was found in the case of copyholds, ancient corporations, and gavelkind lands. Guardians of this kind have ceased to exist in respect of deaths after 1925; see Law of Property Act, 1922 and Administration of Estates Act, 1925. The father's authority of appointing a guardian under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, did not extend to copyhold property.

(4) Ad litem.—A guardian ad litem is a person who agrees or is appointed to appear and act for an infant, or a person of unsound mind not so found, who is made defendant to proceedings in Court. As to the appointment of married women as guardians ad litem, which is not favoured in, nor the practice of the Court of Chancery, see notes A. P. 1937 to R. S. C. Ord. XVI., r. 16.

(5) By appointment of Chancery.—This Court had power to appoint a guardian to protect the interests of an infant ward, where there was no guardian already. The guardian was usually of the same religion as the infant's parents, and must be solvent, of a moral, capable, and humane character, and resident in England. The wardship of infants and the care of infants' estates is continued to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice by the Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 44 and 56.

(6) Guardian in Tort, or by Intrusion (Tutor Alienus).—This is an indirect guardianship, arising from a person intruding into an infant's property; if he receive the profits belonging to the infant he must account for them in Chancery, being regarded as the infant's trustee. See Wall v. Stanwick, (1887) 34 Ch. D. 763.

Guastead, one who had the custody of the royal mansions.

Gubernator [Lat.], a pilot or steersman.

Guest. One who chooses to become a guest cannot complain of the accommodation afforded him by his host, so long as there is nothing in the nature of a trap or concealed danger; see Corby v. Hill, (1858) 4 C. B. N. S. p. 565, explaining Souhcoote v. Stanley, (1856) 1 H. & N. 247. See also CAVEAT VIATOR; INNKEEPER.

Guest-taker, an agister; one who took cattle in to feed in the royal forests.

Guldage, a reward for safe conduct through a strange land or unknown country.

Guldon de la Mer, a treatise on maritime law, being a collection of existing usages and customs. It was probably written and issued for the first time towards the end of the sixteenth century, though the exact date is doubtful and the name of the compiler unknown. See Pardessus, vol. ii.

Guild [fr. gildan, Sax., to pay or contribute], a company, fraternity, or corporation, associated for some commercial purpose.

Guildhall, the chief hall of a city or borough-town, for holding courts, and for the meeting of the corporation in order to make laws for the regulation of the city or town, and to administer summary justice. See TOWN HALL.

Guildhall Sittings. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the City of London for City of London causes. See ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.

Guildrents. See GILD-RENT; GULTWIT.

GUILTY. Having committed a crime or tort; the word used by a prisoner in pleading to an indictment when he confesses the crime of which he is charged, and by the jury in convicting.

Guinea, a coin formerly issued by the Mint. These coins were called in temp. Wm. IV., and the word now means only the sum of 1*l.* 1*s.*, in which denomination the fees of counsel and physicians are always given.

Gule of August, the first day of that month.—Fitz. N. B. 62; Plow. 316.

Gules, the heraldic names of the colour usually called red. The word is derived from the Arabic word gule, a rose, and was probably introduced by the Crusaders. Gules is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines. Heralds who blazoned by planets and jewels called it Mars and ruby.

Gultwit, or Gulltwit, amends for a trespass.

Gun-cotton. As to the making, sale, etc., of gun-cotton, see the Explosives Act, 1875 and tit. EXPLOSIVES.

Gun. The Gun Licence Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 57), in which 'gun' 'includes a fire-arm of any description and an air-gun or any other kind of gun from which any shot, bullet or other missile can be discharged,' grants to the Crown 'for every licence to be taken out yearly by every person who shall use or carry a gun in the United Kingdom the sum of 10*s.*' By s. 6 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1883, licences expire on July 31st after date. Licences are registered by the inland revenue officers who grant them, and must be produced to such officers on demand. For using a gun without licence except in a dwelling-house, the fine is 10*l.*, but there are six exemptions, being of (1) persons in the naval, military, or volunteer service in discharge of their duty; (2) licensees to kill game; (3) persons carrying such licensee's gun, by his order and for his use, and giving his name and address as well as his own on request of inland revenue officer or constable, or owner or occupier of land on which the gun is used; (4) occupier of land for scaring birds or killing vermin, or persons using gun by order of an occupier who has a game licence; (5) gunsmiths or their servants in the course of trade or testing, and (6) common carriers carrying guns as such. See FIREARMS; STREET OFFENCES.

Gunge, a granary, a dépôt, chiefly of grain for sale. Wholesale markets held on particular days. Commercial dépôts.—Indian.

Gunpowder. As to the making, keeping, sale, and carriage of gunpowder, see the Explosives Act, 1875, as amended by the Act of 1923. See EXPLOSIVES. As to the exportation of gunpowder, see also Customs Consolidation Act, 1876.

Gurgites [Lat.], weirs.—Jac. Law Dict.

Gutl and Gottl, Goths, Jutæ or Getæ, who are said to have come to this island by way of Germany, see Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

Gwabr merched, a payment or fine made to the lords of some manors upon their tenants' daughters marrying or committing incontinency.—Jac. Law Dict.

Gwalstow, a place of execution.—Ibid.

Gwayf, that which has been stolen and afterwards dropped in the highway for fear of a discovery.—Cowel.

Gylput, the name of a court which was held every three weeks in the liberty or hundred of Pathbew, in Warwick.—Jac. Law Dict.

Gynarey, or Gynæocracy, government by a woman; a state in which women are legally capable of supreme authority, e.g., in Great Britain and Spain.

Gypsies. The first of the laws against gypsies, 22 Hen. 8, c. 10, describes this people, who were then new-comers in this country, as 'outlandish persons calling themselves Egyptians, using no craft or feat of merchandise, who have come into this realm and go from shire to shire and place to place in great company, and use great, subtle, and crafty means to deceive the people, bearing them in hand, that they by palmistry could tell men's and women's fortunes; and so many times by craft and subtilty have deceived the people of their money, and also have committed many heinous felonies and robberies.' It was enacted that if any such persons came within the realm, they should forfeit all their goods and chattels, and should leave the kingdom within fifteen days after command so to do, upon pain of imprisonment.—4 Reeves, c. xxx., 420.

Both this Act, and the still more severe 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4, have been repealed, as Acts not in use, by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64. Fortune-tellers are, however, punishable under the Witchcraft Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 5), but more commonly are prosecuted under the Vagrant Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), and eo nomine, any gypsy encamping on a highway by the Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), s. 72). See TENTS, VANS AND CAMPING SITES; and Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 268 and 269; also EDUCATION.

Gyves [fr. gevyu, Wel.], fetters or shackles for the legs.

H.

Habeas corpora juratorum (that you have the bodies of the jurors), a process which issued out of the Court of Common Pleas, commanding the sheriff to summon a jury. The practice was similar to the distingas from the King's Bench and Exchequer for the same purpose. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 104.

Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2, c. 2), providing remedy for violation of personal liberty by the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, which see below.

Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum (that you have the body to answer). This, the most celebrated prerogative writ in the English law, is a remedy for a person deprived of his liberty. It is addressed to him who detains another in custody, and commands him to produce the body, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, and to do, submit to, and receive whatever the judge or Court shall consider in that behalf. The writ is applied for either by motion to a court or application to a judge, supported by an affidavit of the facts. (See Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 216-230.) If a probable ground be shown that the party is imprisoned without a cause and has a right to be delivered, this writ ought of right to be granted to every man committed or detained in prison or otherwise restrained, though by command of the sovereign, the Privy Council, or any other power. Therefore there is an absolute necessity of expressing upon every commitment the reason for which it is made, that a Court upon a habeas corpus may examine, and, according to the circumstances of the case, may discharge, admit to bail, or remand the prisoner.

The great Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2), did not newly establish the remedy for unjust imprisonment by writ of habeas corpus, but, reciting the shifts of gaolers and others to avoid their yielding obedience to such writ 'contrary to their duty and the known laws of the land' (as laid down in Magna Charta and other statutes), made the writ more actively remedial by imposing penalties for disobedience to the writ, and otherwise.

This statute extends only to the case of commitments for criminal charges, all other cases of unjust imprisonment being left to the habeas corpus at Common Law, now regulated by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 30), under which, where any person is restrained of his liberty (otherwise than for some criminal or supposed criminal matter, or for debt, or by process in any civil suit), any judge of the King's Bench Division of the High Court 'shall, upon probable and reasonable ground for such complaint, award in vacation a writ of habeas corpus,' directed to the person in whose custody the party is, returnable immediately.

Besides the efficacy of the writ of habeas corpus in liberating the subject from illegal confinement in a public prison, it also extends its influence to remove every unlawful restraint of personal freedom in private life, availing, for instance, to restore children to the lawful custody of their father, unless he is leading a vicious life (see Re Goldsworthy, (1875) 2 Q. B. D. 75); and see Mew's Digest, vol. v., tit. 'Crown Office (Habeas Corpus).'

By the Habeas Corpus Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 20), no writ of habeas corpus shall issue out of any of the courts in England into any colony or foreign dominion of the Crown where his Majesty has a lawfully established court of justice, having authority to grant and issue the said writ, and to ensure the due execution thereof throughout such colony or dominion. See R. v. Crewe (Earl), 1910, 2 K. B. 576. See the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, s. 10, as to bringing up persons indicted, and who are in gaol for some other offence.

The Habeas Corpus Act has been occasionally suspended in times of great public danger for a limited time, so as to allow the government to arrest persons on mere suspicion and to detain them without trial.

See, e.g., 57 Geo. 3, cc. 3 and 55, and as to Ireland, 29 Vict. c. 1, and 44 Vict. c. 4.

As to whom the writ should be directed, see R. v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Ex parte O'Brien, 1923, 2 K. B. 361, and 1923, A. C. 603. The House of Lords held, in this case, that no appeal lies from an order of a competent court for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus where the court determines the illegality of the applicant's detention and his right to liberty, although the order does not direct his discharge.

Habeas corpus testificandum (that you have the body to testify), a writ to bring a witness into court, when he is in custody at the time of a trial. A Secretary of State or a judge of the High Court or of a county court has power, on a proper application being made to him, to issue a warrant or order to bring up as a witness in any civil or criminal proceeding any prisoner in custody on a criminal charge; see Criminal Procedure Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 30), s. 9; County Courts Act, 1888, s. 112 (see, now, 1934 Act, s. 83); Graham v. Glover, (1855) 5 E. & B. 591; Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 228-230; Prisons Act, 1898, s. 11.

Habemus confitentem reum. (We have an accused person who confesses the whole charge.)

Habendum of a Deed, that part of a conveyance, etc., which determines the quantity of interest conveyed; but should the quantity be expressed in the premises, then the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not contradict, or be repugnant to the estate granted in the premises. See DEED.

Habentia, riches.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 1, p. 100.

Habere facias possessionem (that you cause to have possession), a writ that issues for a successful plaintiff in ejectment, to put him in possession of the premises recovered. If the first writ be not executed, an alias, etc., may be sued out. The officer, if necessary, may break open outer doors, in order to give possession, or he may take the posse comitatus with him if he fear violence.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLVII., a judgment that a party recover possession of land may be enforced by writ of possession, and where by any judgment any person therein named is directed to deliver up possession of any lands to some other person, the person prosecuting such judgment shall be entitled to sue out the writ on filing an affidavit showing service of the judgment and disobedience thereto. An unsuccessful defendant can be ordered to pay to the plaintiff his costs of obtaining this writ (Dartford Brewery Co. v. Moseley, 1906, 1 K. B. 462).

Habere facias seisinam (that you cause to have possession), a writ addressed to the sheriff to give seisin of a freehold estate recovered by ejectione firmæ or other action.—Old N. B. 154.

Habere facias visum (that you cause to have view), a writ that lay in divers cases in real actions, as in formedon, etc., where a view was required to be taken of the lands in controversy. See FORMEDON.

Habergeon, a diminutive of hauberk, a short coat of mail without sleeves.—Blount.

Haberjeets, a cloth of a mixed colour.—Magna Charta, c. 26.

Habit and Repute. By the law of Scotland marriage may be established by habit and repute where the parties cohabit and are at the same time held and reputed as man and wife.—Bell's Law Dict.; see Dysart Peerage Case, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 489.

Habitatio. The nature of this personal servitude is not obvious. Some jurists found it with the right to use a house; but Justinian declares it to be quite distinct both from the jus utendi and the jus fruendi. For whilst the jus utendi is one and entire, the habitatio is a series of rights arising from day to day, so that in bequeathing it you make a separate bequest, in fact, for each day; hence, also, it was not extinguished by non-user. Justinian added the further distinction, that it might be let.—Cum. C. L. 95, and Sand Just.

Habitual Criminals Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 99. By this Act power was given to apprehend on suspicion convicted persons holding licence under the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853, 1857, and 1864. The Act was repealed and replaced by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871. See that title.

Habitual Criminal. See PREVENTIVE DETENTION.

Habitual Drunkard. Defined by the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 19) (made perpetual by the Inebriates Act, 1888, and amended by the Inebriates Acts, 1898 and 1899), which authorizes confinement in a retreat, upon the party's own application, as :— a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lunacy, is notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at times dangerous to himself or herself or to others, or incapable of managing himself or herself, and his or her affairs.

See also Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5 (extended to drug addicts by 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 51, s. 3); Eaton v. Best, 1909, 1 K. B. 632; R. v. Briggs, ibid. 381; and DRUNKENNESS.

Hable, seaport town.—27 Hen. 6, c. 3.

Hackney Carriages. The provisions relating to these vehicles in large towns are contained in the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 37 et seq., incorporated by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 171, and in London in the London Hackney Carriages Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 22), which has been amended by many subsequent Acts, of which 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, and 16 & 17 Vict. cc. 33, 127, and the London Cab and Stage Carriage Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 55), are the most important. In the last-mentioned Act provision for taximeter cabs is made. The conveyance of infected persons in public vehicles is prohibited by ss. 159 and 160 of the Public Health Act, 1936. For orders fixing fares and making other regulations for London cabs, see also the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43); and London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 14); Road Traffic Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50), and the various statutory rules and orders, and generally, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Hackney and Stage Carriages,' and Bonner and Farrant's Law of Motor Cars.

Hadbote, a recompense for an affront offered to a priest.—Cowel.

Haderunga [fr. had, Sax., person, and arung, honoured], respect of persons; partiality.—Ibid.

Hadgonel, a tax or mulct.—Jac. Law Dict.

Hæreda [Goth.], court-leet.

Hærede abducto, an ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person.—Old N. B. 93.

Hærede deliberando alteri habet custodiam terræ, an ancient writ, directed to the sheriff to require one that had the body of an heir being in ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land.—Reg. Brev. 161.

Hærede raptō, a writ for the ravishment of the lord's ward.—Reg. Brev. 163.

Hæredes proximi, heirs begotten; children.

Hæredes remotiores, heirs not begotten, as grandchildren, great grandchildren, etc., descending in a direct line in infinitum.

Hæredipeta, the next heir to lands.

Hæreditas jacens. An estate in Scotland is in hæreditate jacente when, after the ancestor's death, no title to it has been made up in the person of his heir.—Bell's Dict.

Hæres factus, an heir appointed; a devisee.

Hæres natus, an heir so born.

Hæretico comburendo, De, an ancient common law writ against a heretic, who having been convicted of heresy by the bishop, abjured it, and afterwards fell into the same again, or some other, and was thereupon delivered over to the secular power in order that he might be burnt to death.—See Fitz. N. B. 269; Lely's Church of England Position, 179; 2 Hen. 4, c. 15; 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 6; 31 Hen. 8, c. 14. By 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 6, all statutes relating to heresy were repealed, though somehow two men were burnt in her reign and two under James I. By 29 Car. 2, c. 9, s. 1, the writ de hæretico comburendo was abolished, but with a saving for the jurisdiction of Protestant archbishops or bishops or any other judges of any ecclesiastical courts to punish, according to his Majesty's ecclesiastical laws, 'atheism, blasphemy, heresy, or schism and other damnable doctrines and opinions by excommunication, deprivation, degradation, and other ecclesiastical censures not extending to death' in such sort and no other as they might have done before the Act; see 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 3. Consult Odgers on Libel.

Hafne, a haven or port.—Cowel.

Haga, a house in a city or borough.

Hagla, a hedge.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 273.

Hagne, a little hand-gun.—33 Hen. 8, c. 6.

Hagnebut, a hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne.—2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

Hague Conference. A conference of representatives of different States to consider the question of international peace and kindred subjects. So called because the place of meeting has been The Hague in South Holland (Netherlands). The first Hague Conference was the outcome of a circular letter of the Czar of Russia handed to all the foreign representatives accredited to the Court of St. Petersburg on the 24th August, 1898, and as a result the first Peace Conference met on 18th May, 1899. This Conference brought about the creation of a Permanent Court of Arbitration, and each of the Powers signing the Hague Arbitration Convention could appoint four persons, who constituted a panel or general list of arbitrators from which as occasion arises selection can be made. The Hague Arbitration Court has dealt with complicated international disputes. A second Peace Conference met at the Hague on 18th June, 1907. Consult Higgins, Hague Conference.

Hala, a park enclosed.—Cowel. Cf. Fr. 'Haie,' and 'haha,' a walled trench or embrasure.

Hallworkfolk (i.e., holywork folk), those who formerly held lands by the service of defending or repairing a church or monument.—Bailey.

Halnault, Forest of. As to its disafforestation, see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 43; and as to the allotment of commons, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 37.

Haketon, a military coat of defence.

Hale, Sir M., author of a work on the Pleas of the Crown. See PLEAS OF THE CROWN.

Half-blood, relationship through one only and not through both of the parents or other ancestors. By the old law a relative of the half-blood could not inherit real estate, but this was altered by the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106). In the succession to personal estate there was no distinction between the whole and the half-blood until 1926, when the Admin. of Estates Act, 1925, ss. 46 and 47, enacted that the half-blood are only entitled to the distribution of an intestate estate on the total absence of the whole blood in equal degree; see FRATER FRATRI, etc.

Half-brother, Half-sister, a brother or sister by the father's or mother's side only. Marriage with a half-sister of a deceased wife or half-brother of a deceased husband has been legalized; see Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Acts, 1907–1931.

Half-endeal, a moiety, or half a thing.

Half-mark, a noble, or 6s. 8d. in money.

Half-notes. Sending the halves of bank notes is no payment, and the property in the meantime remains in the sender: Smith v. Mundy, (1860) 3 Ell. & Ell. 22. But see Redmayne v. Burton Lloyd & Co., (1860) 2 L. T. 324. (Issuing bankers bound to pay half-notes upon indemnity.)

Half-seal, that which was used in the Chancery for sealing of commissions of delegates, upon any appeal to the Court of Delegates either in ecclesiastical or maritime causes. Abolished.

Half-timer. A child who, by the operation of the Factory and Education Acts, was employed for less than the full time in a factory or workshop, in order that he might attend some 'recognized efficient school.' It is now illegal to employ a child in a factory under the age up to which his parents are obliged to cause him to receive education (Education Act, 1918, s. 14; Education Act, 1921, ss. 170 (13), 42, 46; Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 46.

Half-tongue, a jury de medietate lingue, formerly empanelled to try foreigners. An alien is now triable in the same manner as if he were a natural-born British subject; see British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, s. 18.

Half a Year, 182 days, and not six lunar months.—Cro. Jac. 166. Also two quarters of the year.

Hallmass, or Hallamass, the feast of all Saints, on the 1st of November; one of the cross quarters of the year was computed from Hallmass to Candlemas.—Cowel.

Halke, a hole.—Jac. Law Dict.

Hallage, tolls paid for goods or merchandise vended in a hall.—6 Rep. 62.

Hallamshire, a part of the county of York, anciently so called, in which the town of Sheffield stands. See Whalley's Hist. of Hallamshire; Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 63.

Half-marking of Foreign Plate Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 6). See PLATE, and Chitty's Statutes.

Hallmote, or Hallimote, a court among the Saxons answering to our court-baron; also the court held by each of the city companies in London.

Haly mote, a holy or ecclesiastical court.

Halywerfolk. See HALLWORKFOLK.

Ham, a place of dwelling; a home close; a little narrow meadow.—Blount.

Hambling, or Hammelling, of Dogs, expedition.—Manwood.

Hamesoken, the offence of violently invading a man's house.

Hamfare, breach of the peace in a house.

Hamlet, Hemel, Hampsel, a vill or little village.

Hamma, a close joining to a house; acroft; a little meadow.

Hamsoca, or Hamsoken. See HAMESOKEN.

Hanaper [fr. hanaperium, Low Lat., a hamper], a treasury, answering to our modern term exchequer.

Hanaper-office, an office belonging to the Common Law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, so called because all writs relating to the business of a subject, and their returns, were formerly kept in a hamper, in hanaperio.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. See now CENTRAL OFFICE.

Hand-borrow, a surety ; a manual pledge.

Hand-fasting, betrothment.

Hand-grith, peace or protection given by the king with his own hand.

Hand-habend, a thief caught in the very act, having the thing stolen in his hand.

Hand-sale, a custom among the northern nations of shaking hands to bind a bargain or contract.

Handsel, earnest-money.

Handwriting, Comparison of, allowed by s. 8 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), which applies to all Courts of Judicature, as well criminal as others, and to all persons having by law or consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, and enacts that :—

Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses ; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute.

'Hanged, drawn and quartered.' See TREASON.

Hanging. See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Hanging in Chains. In atrocious cases it was at one time usual for the Court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed, a practice abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 26.

Hangwite, or Hangwit, a liberty to be quit of a felon or thief hanged without judgment, or escaped out of custody.—Rastal.

Hanlg, customary labour.

Hansgrave, the chief of a company ; the head man of a corporation.

Hantelode, an arrest.—Jac. Law Dict.

Hap, to catch.

Harbinger, an officer of the royal household.

Harbours. See PORT. As to the improvement and management of harbours, docks, and piers, see the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27), and other Acts. As to the constitution of Port Health Authorities, see Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 2-10. By 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 2, the powers of the Board of Trade over harbours, docks and piers were transferred to the Ministry of Transport. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Harbours.'

Harbouring. This constitutes an offence in the case of (1) constables on duty (see, however, Sherras v. de Rutzen, 1895, 1 Q. B. 918, and Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 78) ;

(2) deserters from merchant ships (see s. 236 (British ship) and s. 238 (foreign ship) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894) ; (3) felons with a view to their concealment from justice ; and (4) thieves or reputed thieves under ss. 10 and 11 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871. See ESCAPE.

Hard Labour, a punishment said to have been introduced by 5 Anne, c. 6. By the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 16 (1), 'where a person convicted by or before any court of an offence is sentenced to imprisonment without the option of a fine, the imprisonment may, in the discretion of the court, be either with or without hard labour, notwithstanding that the offence is an offence at common law, or that the statute under which the sentence is passed does not authorize the imposition of hard labour or requires the imposition of hard labour.' Imprisonment for default in payment of a fine is always without hard labour.

Hare, a beast of warren. A hare is 'game' within the Game Acts and Game Certificate Acts (see GAME) ; but by the Hares Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 29), both occupier and owner may kill hares without a certificate, and by the Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), amended as to moorlands by the Ground Game (Amendment) Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 21), the occupier has, 'incident to and inseparable from his occupation,' a concurrent right with any other person to kill hares and rabbits on the land occupied. Any agreement purporting to divest an occupier of this right is by s. 3 void. As to such agreements, see Stanton v. Brown, 1901, 1 K. B. 671 ; Sherrard v. Gascoigne, 1900, 2 Q. B. 279. See Waters v. Phillips, 1910, 2 K. B. 465, and Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

The Hares Preservation (Ireland) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 23), following 27 Geo. 3, c. 35, an Act of the Irish Parliament repealed in the same year, made the period between 20th of April and 12th of August a close time for hares in Ireland, by making it penal either to kill or possess killed any hare or leveret during that period ; but there was no close time for hares in England until 1892, when the Hares Preservation Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 8), prohibited the sale of any hare or leveret in any part of Great Britain in March, April, May, or June—with a saving, however, for foreign imported hares. Killing of hares is forbidden on Sundays and Christmas Day (Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), s. 3 ; and on moorlands and unenclosed lands between April 1st and August 31st by Ground Game (Amendment) Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 21), s. 2. As regards coursing, see Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 1 (3).

Harness, all warlike instruments; also the tackle or furniture of a ship.—Jac. Law Dict.

Haro, Harron, an outcry after felons and malefactors.—Ibid.

Hasp and Staple, the old form of the entry of an heir into premises held by burgage tenure in Scotland.—Bell's Dict.

Hat-money, a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship, called primage. In the Guidon de la Mer (see that title) it is described as 'la contribution des chausses ou pot de vin du maitre.' See PRIMAGE.

Haugh, or Howgh, a green plot in a valley.

Haur, hatred.—Leg. W. 1, c. 16.

Hauthoner, a man armed with a coat of mail.—Jac. Law Dict.

Haven, that which holds or contains ships; a port or harbour. See HARBOURS.

Haw, a small parcel of land so called in Kent; a house.—Co. Litt. 5.

Haward. See HAYWARD.

Hawberk, or Hawbert, one who held land in France by finding a coat or shirt of mail, with which he was to be ready when called upon. See 13 Edw. 1, c. 6; FIEF D'HAUBERT.

Hawgh, a valley.—Co. Litt. 5b.

Hawkers and Pedlars, persons who carry their goods from place to place for sale. In 1810 (50 Geo. 3, c. 41), imposed a licence duty on them, and made various provisions in regard to their trade. After many amending Acts (see, e.g., 52 Geo. 3, c. 108, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 18, Sched. B, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 36) the Hawkers Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 33), has regulated the business of hawkers, defining, for the purposes of the Act, a hawker as a person who travels about selling or exposing samples with a horse or other beast bearing or drawing burden, the Pedlars Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 96), for regulating the business of pedlars, having already defined a pedlar for the purposes of that Act as a person travelling about selling or procuring orders for goods or selling his skill in handicraft, without a horse, etc. See Woolwich Local Board v. Gardiner, 1895, 2 Q. B. 497.

A hawker's licence costs 2l. a year, and except by way of renewal of a licence for the year immediately preceding, is grantable by the Inland Revenue on the production of a certificate of good character from a clergyman and two householders of the parish of residence, or a justice of the peace or a district superintendent or inspector of police. There are exemptions for the sale of fish, fruit, victuals, or coal, and for sales at markets or fairs.

A pedlar's certificate costs 5s. a year, and is grantable by the chief officer of police of the district in which the applicant has resided for a month before the application on being satisfied that the applicant is above seventeen, is of good character, and in good faith intends to carry on the business of a pedlar. There are exemptions for commercial travellers, for the sale of fish, fruit, or victuals, and for sales at markets or fairs.

Hay, a hedge or enclosure; a net to take game.—Jac. Law Dict.

Hay-bote, a liberty to take thorns and other wood to make and repair hedges, gates, fences, etc., either by tenant for life or years; also wood for making of rakes and forks. See BOTE.

Hayward, one who keeps a common herd, of cattle of a town, and the reason of his being so called may be, because one part of his office is to see that they neither break nor cross the hedges of enclosed lands; or because he keeps the grass from hurt or destruction. He is an officer appointed in the lord's court, to look to the fields and impound cattle trespassing thereon; to see that no pound breaches be made, and if any be, to present them to the leet, etc.—Kitch. 46; Scriven on Copyholds.

Hazard, an unlawful game by 18 Geo. 2, c. 34.

'He' in Acts includes 'she,' unless the contrary intention appears, in all Acts passed after 1850, and in criminal statutes. See Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 1.

Headborough, the head of a borough; a constable. See CONSTABLE.

Head-courts, certain tribunals in Scotland, abolished by 20 Geo. 2, c. 50.—Ersk. i. 4, 5.

Head-land, the upper part of land left for the turning of the plough, whence the head-way.—Paroch. Antiq. 587.

Head-pence, an exaction of a certain sum collected by the Sheriff of Northumberland from the inhabitants of that county, without any account thereof to be made to the Crown. Abolished by 23 Hen. 6, c. 7.

Head-silver, dues paid to lords of leets; also a fine of 40l. which the Sheriff of Northumberland exacted of the inhabitants twice in seven years.

Heafodward, one of the services to be rendered by a thane, but in what it consisted seems uncertain.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Healfang, or Halsfang [fr. hals, Sax., neck, and fang, to seize], the pillory; also a pecuniary mulct, to commute for standing in the pillory.

Healigemote, a court-baron; an ecclesiastical court.

Health. See QUARANTINE; ADULTERATION; VACCINATION; and PUBLIC HEALTH.

Health, Minister of. The Ministry of Health Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 21), provided for the appointment of a Minister of Health, to whom it transferred (s. 3) all the powers and duties of the Local Government Board, Insurance Commissioners and Welsh Insurance Commissioners, and of the Board of Education respecting the medical inspection and treatment of young persons and children, nursing and expectant mothers, and, generally, all the powers of various departments, boards, etc., respecting the preservation of health. Included in these functions is the administration of the Public Health Acts and Housing Acts. The Minister sits in the House of Commons and is a member of the Cabinet.

Hearing, an investigation of a controversy. See TRIAL.

Hearsay Evidence. It is a general principle in the law of evidence that if any fact is to be proved against anyone, it ought to be proved in his presence by the testimony of a witness sworn to speak the truth; and the reason of the rule is, that the person who is to be affected by the evidence ought to have an opportunity of interrogating the witness as to his means of knowledge, and concerning all the particulars of his statement. Hearsay evidence (whether spoken or written) of a fact, therefore, is not admissible. And this rule is extended to affidavits, which, except on interlocutory motions, when statements as to belief with the grounds thereof are admissible, must be confined to facts which the deponent can prove of his own knowledge (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVIII., r. 3).

Among the exceptions to the general rule as to the inadmissibility of hearsay evidence are the following: (1) dying declarations; (2) hearsay in questions of pedigree; (3) hearsay on questions of public right, customs, boundaries, etc.; (4) admissibility of old leases, rent-rolls, surveys, etc.; (5) admissibility of declarations against interest; (6) admissibility of incumbents' books; (7) res gestæ (q.v.)—see EVIDENCE. Consult Best, Powell, Roscoe, or Taylor on Evid.

Hearth-money, a tax levied by 14 Car. 2, c. 10. It was productive of great discontent, and was abolished by 1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 10.

Hebbermen were fishermen or poachers below London Bridge, who fished for whittings, flounders, smelts, etc., commonly at ebbing water. Punishable by 4 Hen. 7, c. 15.

Hebberthef, the privilege of claiming the goods and trial of a thief within a certain liberty.

Hebbing-wears, a device for catching fish in ebbing waters.—23 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Hebdomad, a week; a space of seven days.

Hebdomadlus, a week's man, canon, or prebendary in a cathedral church, who has the care of the choir and the officers belonging to it, for his own week.—Reg. Episc. Hereford MSS.

Heccagium, rent paid to a lord of the fee for a liberty to use the engines called hecks.

Heck, an engine to take fish in the river Ouse.—23 Hen. 8, c. 18, repealed by Salmon Fishery Act, 1861.

Heda, a small haven, wharf, or landing-place.—Old Records.

Hedagium, toll or customary dues at the hithe or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which exemption was granted by the Crown to some particular persons and societies.

Hedge-bote, materials to make hedges, which a lessee for years, etc., may of common right take from the land leased.—See BOTE.

Hedge-priest, a vagabond priest in olden time.

Heir [fr. heire, Old Fr.; hæres, Lat.], a person who succeeds by descent to an estate of inheritance. It is nomen collectivum, and extends to all heirs; and under heirs, the heirs of heirs are comprehended in infinitum.

The Admin. of Estates Act, 1925, s. 45, having abolished all modes of descent of real property obtaining before 1st January, 1926, in regard to deaths taking place after 1925, except in a few cases (see DESCENT and DEVOLUTION), the importance of the 'heir' has diminished but the following note has been retained since the word 'heir' will be construed according to its meaning under the general law in force before 1926, in deeds and wills executed after 1925, under which the 'heir' may become entitled to an equitable interest in personality and realty corresponding to a real estate by purchase under the old law; see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 132. Sect. 131 of the same Act abolishes the rule in Shelley's Case, and provides that a limitation to the heir of a particular person is to be construed in equity as a word of purchase to the 'heir,' and not of limitation as it was under the general law in force before 1st January, 1926.

The different kinds of heirs were classed and defined :—

(α) Heir apparent. He whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor : as the eldest son, who must by the course of the Common Law be heir to his father on his death.—3 Prest. Abst. 5. Especially the eldest son of the Sovereign as heir to the Crown ; or the eldest son of an eldest son who has died during the Sovereign's life.

(β) Heir by custom. He who is heir by a particular and local custom, as in borough-English lands, the youngest son succeeds his father, while in gavelkind lands, all the sons inherit as parceners, and make but one heir.—Co. Litt. 140.

(γ) Heir by devise or hæres factus. He who is made, by will, the testator's heir or devisee, and has no other right or interest than the will gives him.

(δ) Heir general, or heir at law. He who, after his father or ancestor's death, has a right to inherit all his lands, tenements and hereditaments.

(ε) Heir presumptive. He who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born ; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child ; or a daughter, whose present hopes may be hereafter cut off by the birth of a son.

(ζ) Hæres sanguinis et hereditatis. (Heir of the blood and inheritance.) A son who may be defeated of his inheritance by his father's displeasure.

(η) Heir special. The issue in tail claiming per formam doni.

(θ) Ultimus hæres. He to whom lands come by escheat for want of proper heirs. He was either the lord of the manor or the Crown. See ESCHEAT.

In Scots law 'heir' has a more extended significance, comprehending not only those who succeed to lands, but successors to personal property also. See Erskine's Institutes, b. 3, tit. 8, ss. 47 et seq.

Heirdom, succession by inheritance.

Heiress, a female heir. Where there are several they are called co-heiresses.

Heirloom [fr. hæres, Lat., heir, and geloma, Sax., goods], personal chattels, such as charters, deeds, and evidences of title, coat armour set up in a church, or a tombstone erected there, which go to the heir, together with the inheritance. The ancient jewels of the Crown are heirlooms. Heirlooms strictly so called are now rarely met with. See Williams on Personal Property ; Co. Litt. 18 b, 185 b ; 2 Bl. Com. 428.

The term 'heirlooms' is often applied in practice to the case where certain chattels—for example, pictures, plate, or furniture—are directed by will or settlement to follow the limitations thereby made of some family mansion or estate. But the word is not then employed in its strict and proper sense, nor is the disposition itself beyond a certain point effectual ; for the articles will, in such case, belong absolutely to the first person who, under the limitations of the settlement, becomes entitled to the real estate for a vested estate of inheritance ; see Portman v. Viscount Portman, 1922, A. C. 473, and cases there referred to.

The 37th section of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), provided that 'where personal chattels are settled on trust so as to devolve with land until a tenant in tail by purchase is born or attains the age of 21 years, or so as otherwise to vest in some person becoming entitled to an estate of freehold inheritance in the land,' a tenant for life could, by order of the Chancery Division of the High Court, sell the chattels or any of them, the proceeds of the sale to be dealt with as 'capital money' under the Act. This section has been replaced by s. 67 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, with amendments in keeping with s. 130, Law of Property Act, 1925, which enables an entailed interest to be created in personal as well as real estate (see TAIL). Under these Acts the word 'heirloom' apparently means a chattel intended to devolve with land. By s. 130 (1), L. P. Act, 1925, entailed chattels which are heirlooms are not subject to the general powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1925, except by an order of the Court under s. 67 of the S. L. Act, 1925. By s. 130 (3), L. P. Act, heirlooms inter alia may be entailed by reference to corresponding settlements of land whenever created. Personal chattels settled upon entail without reference to land may be sold with the consent of the usufructuary for the time being if of full age (ibid., sub-s.-5).

Heirship Movables, those things which the law withholds from the executors and next of kin, and gives to the heir, that he may not succeed to a house and lands completely dismantled. They consist of the best of everything—furniture, horses, cows, oxen, farming utensils, etc.—but do not include fungibles.—Scots Law.

Hell, a place under the Exchequer Chamber, where the king's debtors were confined.—Richard. Dict.

Helm, thatch or straw; a covering for the head in war; a coat of arms bearing a crest; the tiller or handle of the rudder of a ship.

Helowe-wall [fr. hælan, Sax., to cover], the end-wall covering and defending the rest of the building.—Paroch. Antiq. 573.

Heising, a Saxon brass coin of the value of a halfpenny.

Henchman, a page; an attendant; a herald.

Henedpenny, a customary payment of money instead of hens at Christmas; a composition for eggs.

Henfare, a fine for flight on account of murder.—Domesday Book.

Hengen, a position for persons condemned to hard labour.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Hengham, de, Radulph, author of a law treatise composed in the reign of Edward I. It consists of two parts: one called Summa Magna, and the other Summa Parva. It seems to be a collection of notes relating to proceedings in actions.

Henghen, a prison; a house of correction.

Hengwite. See HANGWIT.

Heordfæte, or Hudelfæst, a master of a family, keeping house, distinguished from a lower class of freemen, viz., folgeras (folgarii), who had no habitations of their own, but were house-retainers of their lords.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Heordpenny, Peter-pence.

Heordwerch, the service of herdsmen, done at the will of their lord.

Heptarchy [fr. επτὰ, Gk., and ἀρχή], a government exercised by seven persons, or a nation divided into seven governments. In the year 560, seven different monarchies had been formed in England by tribes who had crossed over the North Sea from the mainland, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes; those of Sussex, Wessex, and Essex by the Saxons; and those of East Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the Angles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the kingdom of Mercia, also founded by the Angles, and comprehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the Anglo-Saxon Octarchy, or more commonly, though not so correctly, the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy, from the custom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the kingdom of Northumberland.

Herald [fr. here, Sax., an army, and heald, a champion; herault, heraut, Fr.; herald, Ger.; araldo, Ital.; because it was part of his office to charge or challenge unto battle or combat], an officer who registers genealogies, adjusts ensigns armorial, regulates funerals, and carries messages between princes, and proclaims war and peace. Heralds were anciently called Dukes at Arms, probably from the Latin ducere ad arma; because the conducting of affairs concerning peace and war devolved upon them, their office being to carry messages to the enemy, and to proclaim war and peace. Hence the persons of heralds were deemed sacred by the law of nations, and were received and protected by belligerent powers, as flags of truce are in the present day. The three chief heralds are called Kings of Arms; of whom (1) *Gar*ter is the principal, instituted by Henry V. His office is to attend the Knights of the Garter at their solemnities, and to marshal the funerals of the nobility. (2) Clarenceux King of Arms, ordained by Edward IV., so called from the Duke of Clarence. He is to marshal and dispose of the funerals of the inferior nobility on the south side of the Trent. (3) Norroy (North Roy) King of Arms holds a similar department on the north side of the river Trent. These two last are denominated provincial heralds, because they divide the kingdom between them into provinces. Besides the Kings of Arms, there are six subordinate heralds, according to their origin, as they were created to attend dukes and great lords in martial expeditions, i.e., York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, and Somerset; the four former were instituted by Edward III., and the two latter by Edward IV. and Henry VIII. To these upon the accession of George I. to the crown, on account of his Hanoverian dominions, a new herald was added, called Hanover herald, and another styled Gloucester King of Arms.

To the superior and inferior heralds are added four others, called Marshals or Pursuivants of Arms, who commonly succeed in the places of such heralds as die or are promoted; they are denominated Blue-mantle, Rouge-croiz, Rouge-dragon, and Portcullis. See POURSUIVANT and HERALDS' COLLEGE.

Lord Lyon's Office in Scotland and Ulster King of Arms in Ireland are distinct and independent. As to Scotland, see Stevenson's Heraldry in Scotland.

Heraldry: (1) The science of heralds; see last title. (2) An old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing.—See North's Life of Lord-Keeper Guilford, 204.

Heralds' College, or 'College of Arms,' an ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard III., in 1483, situated on St. Bennet's Hill, near St. Paul's, in the city of London. The above-named heralds, together with the earl marshal and a secretary, are the members of this corporation; in all, thirteen persons. The heralds' books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees.—3 Stark. Evid. 843; Hubback on Succession, pp. 538 et seq. See HERALD.

The Heralds' office is still empowered to make grants of arms and to permit change of names. See SURNAME.

Herbagium anterius, the first crop of grass or hay, in opposition to aftermath and second cutting.—Paroch. Antiq. 459.

Harbenger, or Harbinger, an officer in the royal house, who goes before and allots the noblemen and those of the household their lodgings; also, an innkeeper.

Herbergagium, lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality.

Herbergare, or Herbigare, to harbour; to entertain.

Herbergatus, spent in an inn.

Herbery, or Herbury, an inn.

Herce, Hercla, a harrow.—Fleta, l. 2, c. lxxvii.

Herclare, to harrow.—4 Inst. 270.

Herdewich, or Herdewic, a grange or place for cattle or husbandry.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 3.

Herdwerch, Heordwerch, herdsman's work, or customary labour, done by shepherds and inferior tenants, at the will of the lord.

Herbannum, a mulct for not going armed into the field when summoned.—Spelm.

Herbote, the royal edict, summoning the people into the field.

Hereditaments, every kind of property that can be inherited; i.e., not only property which a person has by descent from his ancestors, but also that which he has by purchase, because his heir can inherit it from him. The two kinds of hereditaments are corporeal, which are tangible (in fact, they mean the same thing as land), and incorporeal, which are not tangible, and are the rights and profits annexed to, or issuing out of, land. It includes money held in trust to be laid out in land (Re Gosselin, 1906, 1 Ch. 120).

The enumeration of incorporeal hereditaments in Hale's Analysis (p. 48) is the following:—Rents, services, tithes, commons, and other profits in alieno solo, pensions, offices, franchises, liberties, villeins, dignities. But Blackstone enumerates ten principal kinds:—Advowsons, tithes, commons, ways, offices, dignities, franchises, corodies or pensions, annuities, and rents.—1 Bl. Com. 21.

Although the word 'hereditament' applies both to realty and personality, yet it is in a different mode of relation. When applied to realty it generally denotes the subject of property, apart from its nature and extent; but when applied to personalty, it does not then denote the subject, but signifies some inheritable right of which the subject is susceptible.

There is a third application of this word—it is used to denote inheritable rights relating to land, or something issuing therefrom or exercisable therein, or having some local connection or relation distinct from the enjoyment of the land itself. In this view of the description hereditaments divide themselves into real, personal, and mixed, and therefore, as was said before, they are applicable to all the kinds of property—Fearne's Reading on the Stat. of Inrolments.

The L. P. Act, 1925, s. 205 (ix.), defines 'hereditaments' as real property which, on an intestacy, might, before the 1st January, 1926, have devolved on the heir—descent to the heir having been abolished, save in some cases (see HEIR). The word may become obsolete in conveyancing practice, but its former legal meaning and associations are so intimately connected with the subjects which it covers that it still serves to differentiate compendiously and usefully the same class of property; cf. Form No. 5, 5th Sched., L. P. Act, 1925; and L. P. Act, 1925, s. 201 (1); and Rating and Valuation Acts, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90); and 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 8), etc.

Hereditary Duties of 1s. 3d. per barrel of beer or ale above 6s. a barrel, 4d. per barrel under 6s., and 15d. for every hogshead of cider (sic) and perry, directed in 1660 by 12 Car. 2, c. 24, to be paid to the king, his heirs and successors for ever, in recompense for the profits of the Court of Wards and other royal privileges abolished by that Act. Surrendered for their lifetimes by succeeding sovereigns (25 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 15). See CIVIL LIST.

Hereditary Revenues. Crown Lands, escheats (see that title), and certain small branches, such as Post Office profits, enumerated in 1 Anne, c. 1. The Civil List Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5), in substitution for the Civil List Act, 1901, directed (in effect) that the hereditary revenues which were directed by s. 2 of the Civil List Act, 1837, to be made part of the Consolidated Fund, with the addition of the Osborne Estate under the Osborne Estate Act, 1902, were during that reign and for six months afterwards to be 'paid into the Exchequer, and made part of the Consolidated Fund.'

Sect. 2 of the Act of 1837 directed the produce of all the hereditary rates, duties, payments, and revenues in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively, and also the small branches of the hereditary revenues and the produce of the hereditary casual revenues arising from any droits of Admiralty or droits of the Crown, and from the surplus revenues of Gibraltar, or any other possession of her Majesty Queen Victoria out of the United Kingdom, and from all other casual revenues arising either in the foreign possessions of her Majesty or in the United Kingdom (except the hereditary duties on beer, etc.—see last title), to be paid into the Consolidated Fund.

Herefare, a military expedition; a going to war.

Heregeld, a tribute or tax levied for the maintenance of an army.

Heremitorium, a place of retirement for hermits.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 3, p. 18.

Heremones, or Hereteams, followers of an army.—Lamb. Leges Inae, cap. 5.

Herenach, an archdeacon.

Hereslita, Heressa, Heressiz, a hired soldier who departs without licence.—4 Inst. 128.

Heresy [fr. αἵρεσις, Gk.], according to Blackstone, consists not in a total denial of Christianity, but in a public and obstinate denial of any of its principal doctrines publicly and obstinately avowed. The 1 Eliz. c. 1 repealed all former statutes relating to heresy, leaving the jurisdiction in cases of heresy as it stood at Common Law; that is, it left the simple offence to be visited by spiritual punishment in the Ecclesiastical Courts, which courts have long since ceased to exercise jurisdiction over laymen. Heresy in the clergy is punishable under the Church Discipline Act as an offence against the laws ecclesiastical: see Noble v. Voysey, (1871) L. R. 3 P. C. 357, in which the Rev. Charles Voysey was deprived of his benefice for contradicting many doctrines set forth in the Thirty-nine Articles (see that title). See also APOSTASY; HÆRETICO COMBURENDO, DE. Consult Odgers on Libel, 5th ed. p. 486.

Heretoch [fr. here, an army, and teohan, to draw or lead], a general, leader, or commander; also a baron of the realm.—Du Fresne.

Heretum, a court or yard.—Jac. Law Dict.

Herge, offenders who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit depredations.—Ang.-Sax.

Herigalds, a sort of garment.—Cowel.

Heriot [supposed by some to be derived fr. here, Sax., an army, and geat, provision.—Willis, 194. Coke derives it fr. here, lord, and geat, beste, i.e., the lord's beste.—Co. Litt. 185 b], the right of the lord of a manor to the best beast of the deceased tenant of a manor, which beast may be seized by the lord, although it has never been within the manor (Western v. Bailey, 1897, 1 Q. B. 86); but if a customary freehold tenement is mortgaged, and the mortgagor being in possession dies, the heriot is not due because he had no legal seisin at the time of his death (Copestake v. Hoper, 1908, 2 Ch. 10). Originally a tribute to the lord of the manor of the horse or habiliments of the deceased tenant, in order that the militis apparatus might continue to be used for national defence by each succeeding tenant.

The extinction of heriots was first attempted by the Copyhold Act, 1841, s. 13. By the Copyhold Act, 1852, s. 16, and the Copyhold Act, 1858; ss. 7 and 8, more effectual provisions were made for this purpose; and s. 6 of the Copyhold Act, 1894, enacts that valuers on a compulsory enfranchisement shall make allowance for heriots amongst other things; while s. 2 of the same Act, re-enacting s. 7 of the Copyhold Act, 1887, enacts that a lord or tenant of any land liable to any heriot may require and compel the extinguishment of the right to it. Heriots were included among the manorial incidents which were saved by the L. P. Act, 1922, s. 128 (2), notwithstanding the enfranchisement of copyholds by that Act, until they are extinguished either by compensation or lapse of time (see s. 136, ibid.), but after 1925 (L. P. Act (Postponement Act), 1924 (c. 4)) a sum of money is to be paid equal to the value instead of any chattel liable to seizure, and a heriot became recoverable only as a civil debt, and therefore would be barred by lapse of time (L. P. Act, 1922, s. 130 (5)). See COPYHOLD. Consult Ellon or Scriven on Copyholds.

Herischild, military service or knight's fee.

Heriscindium, a division of household goods.—Blount.

Herislit, laying down of arms.—Blount.

Heristall, a castle.—Spelm.

Heritable Bond, a bond for money, joined with a conveyance of land or heritage, to be held by a creditor as security for his debt.—Scots term.

Heritable Jurisdiction, grants of criminal jurisdiction, anciently bestowed on great families in Scotland, with a view to the more easy administration of justice. Abolished by 20 Geo. 2, c. 43.

Heritable Rights, all rights to land, or whatever is connected with land, as mills, fishing, tithes, etc.—Scots term.

Heritable Securities in Scotland. See 23 & 24 Vict. cc. 15, 80.

Heritor, a landholder in a parish.—Scots term.

Hermeneutics, the art of interpretation and construction.

Hermer, a great lord.—Jac. Law Dict.

Hermitorium, the chapel or place of prayer belonging to a hermitage.

Hermogenian Code. See CODEX JUSTINIANEUS.

Hernesceus, a heron.

Herneslum, or Hernasium, household goods; implements of trade or husbandry.

Heroudes, heralds.—Du Cange.

Herrings. See SEA FISHERIES ACTS.

Herring Silver was a composition in money for the custom of supplying herrings for the provision of a religious house.

Hesla, an easement.—Du Cange.

Hesta, Hestha, a little load of bread.

Hestcorn, vowed or devoted corn.

Hetaerarcha, [fr. ἑταῖρος, Gk., friend, and ἀρχή, government], the head of a religious house; the head of a college; the warden of a corporation.

Heurematic Law [fr. εὐρηματικός, Gk.]. The art or science of so interpreting rules of law as to accord with justice. See Law Times Newspaper, 2nd April, 1910, p. 487.

Heuvelborgh, a surety for debt.

Hey. See HAY.

Heybote. See HAYBOTE.

Heyloed, a customary burden laid upon inferior tenants for mending or repairing the heys or hedges.

Heymectus, a hay-net; a net for catching conies.

Hilbernagium, season for sowing winter corn.

Hidage, an extraordinary tax, formerly payable to the Crown for every hide of land. This taxation was levied, not in money, but provision of armour, etc.

Hide and Gain, arable land.—Co. Litt. 85 b.

Hide of Land, such a space as might be ploughed with one plough, or as much as would maintain a family or mansion-house. According to some it was sixty acres; others make it eighty; and others, again, a hundred. The quantity, probably, was always determined by local usage. See Co. Litt. 69 a.

Hidel, a place of protection or sanctuary.

Hidgild, or Hidegild [fr. hide, A.-S., skin, and gild, A.-S., a contribution], a sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from whipping.—Fleta, l. 1, c. 47, s. 20.

Hierarchy [fr. ἱερός, Gk., sacred, and ἀρχή, government], the body or persons who have the direction in religious concerns and things sacred.

Of whatever denominations may be the persons who take the lead in conducting religious rites, whether they be styled presbyters, elders, ministers, priests, or bishops, they virtually, and according to the true and real meaning of the term, constitute a hierarchy. Hierarchy subsists as much among the chief ministers of the Church of Geneva or of Scotland as in the Church of Rome or of England.

Hierloom. See HEIRLOOM.

High Bailiffs, officers appointed under s. 33 of the County Courts Act, 1888, by the judge of each county court, to attend every sitting of the court, and by themselves, or the bailiffs appointed to assist them, to serve all summonses and orders, and execute all warrants, precepts, and writs of the court except as in the Act provided. By the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 189, references to high bailiff are to be construed as references to the registrar where the office of high bailiff has been vacated.

High Commission Court, established by 1 Eliz. c. 1. It was instituted to vindicate the dignity and peace of the Church by reforming and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempt, and enormities. The powers of this tribunal were directed to tyrannical and unconstitutional purposes; it was therefore abolished by 16 Car. 1, c. 11.—5 Reeves, 215.

High Constable, abolished by the High Constables Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 47). See CONSTABLE.

High Constable of England, Lord. His office has been disused (except only upon great and solemn occasions, as the coronation, or the like) since the attainder of Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of Henry VII. See CHIVALRY, COURT OF.

High Court of Chancery. See CHANCERY.

High Court of Justice. The Judicature Act, 1925, has replaced with amendments the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66). The earlier Act abolished the former Superior Courts of Law and Equity, and in their place established a Supreme Court of Judicature (see that title), consisting of the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal. The High Court is now a Superior Court of Record, and has vested in it, by s. 16 of the Act of 1873, amended by ss. 9 and 33 of the Judicature Act, 1875, the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the following Courts, viz.: (1) The High Court of Chancery; (2) The Court of King's Bench; (3) The Court of Common Pleas at Westminster; (4) The Court of Exchequer; (5) The Court of Admiralty; (6) The Court of Probate; (7) The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes; (8) The Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster; (9) The Court of Pleas at Durham; (10) The Courts created by Commissions of Assize, of Oyer and Terminer, and of Gaol Delivery, or any such Commissions. The London Court of Bankruptcy, which was first included in and then excluded from the High Court, is now united and consolidated with the Supreme Court and its jurisdiction transferred to the High Court, King's Bench Division, and the County Courts.

With regard to the procedure of the High Court of Justice, see the various titles relating thereto, e.g., EXECUTION; JUDGMENT; PLEADING; TRIAL. See also DIVISIONS OF THE HIGH COURT.

'The High Court of Justice' was also the style assumed by the revolutionary tribunal which sent Charles I. to the scaffold; see Clarendon's Hist., vol. iii. p. 244.

High Court of Parliament. See PARLIAMENT.

High Misdemeanours. See MISPRISON.

High Seas, all the seas which are more than three miles distant from the coast of any country. The territorial jurisdiction of a country does not extend beyond this limit. See R. v. Keyn, (1876) 2 Ex. D. 63.

High Steward, Court of the Lord, a tribunal instituted for the trial of peers or peeresses indicted for treason or felony, or for misprison of either, but not for any other offence. The office of Lord High Steward is very ancient, and was formerly hereditary, or held for life, or dum bene se gesserit; but it has been for many centuries granted pro hac vice only, and always to a lord of parliament. When, therefore, such an indictment is found by a grand jury of freeholders in the King's Bench, or at the assizes before a judge of oyer and terminer, it is removed by a writ of certiorari into the Court of the Lord High Steward, which alone has power to determine it.

The sovereign, in case a peer be indicted for treason, felony, or misprison, appoints a Lord High Steward pro hac vice, by commission under the Great Seal, which, reciting the indictment so found, gives him power to receive and try it secundum legem et consuetudinem Angliæ. When the indictment is regularly removed by certiorari, the Lord High Steward addresses a precept to a serjeant-at-arms, to summon the lords to attend and try the indicted peer. All the peers who have a right to sit and vote are summoned 21 days before such trial, and every lord appearing and taking the oaths may vote upon the trial. The decision is by the majority, but a majority cannot convict, unless it consist of twelve or more.

During a session of parliament, the trial is not properly in the Court of the Lord High Steward, but before the High Court of Parliament. A Lord High Steward is, however, always appointed to regulate the proceedings; but he is rather in the nature of a speaker or chairman than a judge, for the collective body of the peers are the judges, both of law and fact, and the High Steward has a vote with the rest, in right of his peerage. But in the Court of the Lord High Steward, which is held in the recess of parliament, he is the sole judge of matters of law, as the lords triers are in matters of fact, and he may vote upon the trial and regulate all the proceedings.

The method and regulation of proceeding differs little from trial by jury, except that no special verdict can be given, because the judges are sufficiently competent to deal with the law.

Recent trials before this Court have been that of the Duchess of Kingston, who was convicted of bigamy in 1776; that of the Earl of Cardigan, who was acquitted of murder (in a duel) in 1841; and that of Earl Russell, who was convicted of bigamy on 18th July, 1901, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. See The Trial of Earl Russell, 1901, A. C. 446; and the trial of Lord de Clifford, 1936, W. N. 4. A barristler who is also a peer may not appear as counsel to argue before the House of Lords when sitting under the presidency of the Lord High Steward on a criminal case. See also PEER; FELONY.

High Steward of the Royal Household, Lord, Court of, a tribunal long since fallen into disuse.—9 Geo. 4, c. 31; 4 Inst. 133. See LORD STEWARD.

High Steward of the Universities, Court of the Lord. By the charter of 7th June, 2 Hen. 4, confirmed by 13 Eliz. c. 29, consuance was granted to the University of Oxford of all indictments of treasons, insurrections, felonies, and mayhem, which should be found in any of the king's courts against a scholar or privileged person; they were to be tried before the Lord High Steward or his deputy, who is nominated by the Chancellor of the University, and approved of by the Lord High Chancellor of England. See CHANCELLORS OF THE UNIVERSITIES.

High Treason. Since petit treason was abolished by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2, the correlative term high is not now usually retained when speaking of this highest civil crime. It is merely denominated treason. See TREASON.

Highness, a title of honour given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I., were not usually saluted with the title of Majesty, but with that of Highness. By Letters Patent of 11th December, 1917, it was provided that the children of a sovereign, and the children of the sons of a sovereign, and the eldest son of the eldest son of the Prince of Wales shall bear the title of Royal Highness and of Prince or Princess. The children of crowned heads generally receive the style of Highness; as also certain rulers of Indian independent states.

High-water Mark, that part of the seashore to which the waters ordinarily reach when the tide is highest.

Highway Rate, a tax for the maintenance and repair of highways, now forming part of the general rate; see the Rating and Valuation Acts, 1925–1932.

Highway Robbery. See ROBBERY, and Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 40–43, in which, however, no distinction is drawn between highway and any other robbery.

Highways, all portions of land, any passage which every subject of the kingdom has a right to use. See Pratt on Highways; also defined by the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 5, 'All roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriageways, cartways, horseways, bridleways, footways, causeways, churchways and pavements.' They exist either by prescription, by authority of Acts of Parliament, or by dedication to the use of the public; and see the Rights of Way Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 45). The right of the public, when once acquired, is permanent and inalienable except by the authority of Parliament—'once a highway, always a highway.' It cannot be lost by abandonment or non-user, and the public retain the right, though they may never have occasion to use it. But the right is only a right of passing and repassing, pausing only for such time as is reasonable and usual when persons are using a highway as such. A man has no right to stand on the highway in order to shoot pheasants flying across it (R. v. Pratt, (1855) 4 E. & B. 860; and see Fitzhardinge v. Purcell, 1908, 2 Ch. p. 168), or maliciously to interfere with the rights of others (Harrison v. Duke of Rutland, 1893, 1 Q. B. 142). Where cattle or horses do damage to property adjoining a highway on which they are being lawfully driven, the owner of such cattle and horses is liable only on proof of negligence, and not merely on proof of trespass: see Gayler and Pope v. Davies, (1924) 40 T. L. R. 591. As to cattle straying on highways, see the Highways Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 101), s. 25.

The liability to keep highways in repair (in whatever manner they may happen to have first originated) is of common right incumbent generally upon the parishes in which they respectively lie; but in some cases it attaches (by prescription) to particular townships, or other divisions of parishes, and occasionally to private persons bound ratione tenuræ, or in right of their estates, to repair some particular highway.

Highways in general are regulated by the Highway Acts, 1835 to 1885; the Local Government Acts, 1929 and 1933; Road Traffic Acts, 1930–1934; and Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933; and other Acts set out in Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Highways'; and the 11th section of the Local Government Act, 1888, threw the entire maintenance of 'main roads' upon the County Councils. As to improvements and developments, see Development and Road Improvement Fund Act, 1909, and Roads Act, 1920, and the Roads Improvement Act, 1925; and TRUNK ROADS.

The 72nd section of the Highway Act,

1835, penalizes up to 40s. any person wilfully riding on a footpath or playing at football or any other game on any part of a highway to the annoyance of any passenger, or wantonly firing off any gun or pistol or letting off any firework within 50 feet, or in any way wilfully obstructing the free passage of a highway, or committing any of the various other offences therein mentioned; and the 78th section of the same Act penalizes up to 5l. (or if owner 10l.) any driver not keeping his carriage or horse 'on the left or near side of the road,' or riding or driving furiously so as to endanger the life or limb of any passenger, or committing any of the other various offences therein mentioned; and see DRIVER.

The general plan of the Act of 1835 was to place highways under the care of surveyors, to be appointed for the respective parishes, subject to a superintending power to be exercised by the justices of the peace, at special sessions to be held for the highways. By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 144 (coming in place of previous enactments to the like effect), the powers and duties of surveyors of highways and vestries under the Act are vested in urban authorities.

The Minister of Transport, under Roads Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 72), has transferred to him powers of the Road Board, and can make advances out of the Road Fund to any highway authority concerning the construction, maintenance or improvement of roads. To assist him there is the Transport Advisory Council (Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 46), and concerning the London Traffic Area there is the London and Home Counties Traffic Advisory Committee (London Traffic Act, 1924 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 34), s. 1 (1); London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 14), ss. 57-60). See ROAD BOARD; TRANSPORT, MINISTER OF. Consult Glen or Pratt and Mackenzie on Highways, and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Highways.' As to the use of locomotives on highways, see LOCOMOTIVES.

High-wood, timber.

Higler, a person who carries from door to door and sells, by retail, provisions, etc.

Hikenilde, Iekneal or Ikenild Street, one of the four Roman roads of Britain, leading from St. David's to Tynemouth, thus described by Trevisa:—'The fourthe is called Heykenyldestrete, and stretcheth forth by Worcestre, by Wycombe, by Byrmyngem, by Lichefeld, by Derby, by Chestre-feld, by Yorke, and fourth unto Tynmouthe.' Polychron., l. 1, c. xlv.

Hilary Sittings. These take the place, since the Judicature Act, of Hilary Term, beginning on the 11th of January, and terminating on the Wednesday before Easter; see R. S. C. Ord. LXIII., r. 1. It was so called from Hilary, Bishop of Poitiers, in France, a great champion of the Catholic faith against the Arians in the fourth century (see Gibbon, Dec. and Fall, c. xxi.). By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 26 (now obsolete), 'the division of the legal year into terms was abolished, so far as relates to the administration of justice.' See SITTINGS; TERMS.

Hindeni Homines, a society of men. The Saxons ranked men into three classes, and valued them, as to satisfaction for injuries, etc., according to their class. The highest class was valued at 1200s., and was called twelfhindmen; the middle class at 600s., called sezhindmen; the lowest at 200s., called twihindmen. Their wives were termed hindas.—Brompt. Leg. Alfred, c. xii.

Hinde Palmer's Act. The Administration of Estates Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46), which abolished the priority of specialty (see SPECIALTY) over simple contract debts in the administration of the estates of persons dying after 1st January, 1870. The Act has been replaced and reproduced by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 32.

Hine, or Hind, a husbandry servant.

Hine Fare, the loss or departure of a servant from his master.—Domesday.

Hinegeld. See HINGILD.

Hirelseunda, the division of an inheritance among heirs.

Hire [locatio, conductio, Lat.], a bailment for a reward or compensation. It is divisible into four sorts:—(1) The hiring of a thing for use (locatio rei). (2) The hiring of work and labour (locatio operis faciendi). (3) The hiring of care and services to be performed or bestowed on the thing delivered (locatio custodiæ). (4) The hiring of the carriage of goods (locatio operis mercium vehendarum) from one place to another. The three last are but subdivisions of the general head of hire of labour and services.

The rights, duties, and obligations of the parties resulting from the contract of bailment for hire may be thus stated:—

(1.) Hire of things. The letting to hire implies an obligation to deliver the thing to the hirer; to refrain from every obstruction to the use of it by the hirer during the period of the bailment; to do no act that shall deprive the hirer of the thing; to warrant the title and right of possession to the hirer, in order to enable him to use the thing, or to perform the service; to keep the thing in suitable order and repair for the purposes of the bailment; and, finally, to warrant the thing free from any fault inconsistent with the proper use or enjoyment of it. It is the duty of the person letting to hire, according to the Roman Law, to disclose the faults of the thing hired, and practise no artful concealment, to charge only a reasonable price therefor, and to indemnify the hirer for all expenses which are properly payable by the person letting. The rights of the hirer are that he acquires that right of possession only of the thing for the particular period or purpose stipulated (but he acquires no property in it); and that he also acquires the exclusive right to the use of the thing during the time of the bailment. His duties are to put the thing to no other use than that for which it is hired; to use it well; to take care of it; to restore it at the time appointed; to pay the price or hire; and, in general, to observe whatever is prescribed by contract, or by law, or by custom. The contract may be dissolved or extinguished in respect to future liabilities in various ways: (1) by the mere efflux of time or the accomplishment of the object for which the thing is hired; (2) by the loss or destruction of the thing by any inevitable casualty; (3) by a voluntary dissolution of the contract by the parties; and (4) by operation of law, as where the hirer becomes proprietor by purchase or otherwise of the thing hired. How far those principles which are derived altogether from the Roman and foreign laws are to be deemed satisfactorily established in our jurisprudence is a matter for consideration, since the Common Law does not furnish any direct recognition of them. But it may be safely affirmed that they are so consonant with general justice, and with the nature of the contract, that, in the absence of any controlling authority, they may be used as fit guides to assist our general reasoning.

(II.) Hire of labour and services, divisible into two branches: (a) Locatio operis faciendi, and (b) locatio operis mercium vehendarum, mentioned as the 2nd and 4th divisions of the four sorts of hiring above set forth.

(a) The locatio operis faciendi may be subdivided into two kinds: (a) The hire of labour and services, or locatio operis faciendi, strictly so called: such are the hire of tailors to make clothes, of jewellers to set gems, and of watchmakers to repair watches; (b) locatio custodiæ (the third division first above mentioned), or the receiving of goods on deposit for a reward for the custody thereof, which is properly the hire of care and attention about the goods, as by warehousemen, wharfingers, etc.

(a) In contracts for work it is of the essence of the contract: (1) That there should be work to be done; (2) that it should be done for a price, or reward; (3) that there should be a lawful contract between parties capable and intending to contract. The obligations and duties on the part of the employer, as deduced in the foreign law, are principally these: (1) To pay the price or compensation; (2) to pay for all proper new and accessorial materials; (3) to do everything on his part to enable the workman to execute his engagement; (4) to accept the thing when it is finished. If, before the work is finished, the thing perishes by internal defect, by inevitable accident, or by irresistible force, without any default of the workman, then (1) if the work is independent of any materials or property of the employer, the manufacturer has the risk, and the unfinished work is lost to him; (2) if he is employed in working up the material, or adding his labour to the property of the employer, the risk is with the owner of the thing with which the labour is incorporated; (3) if the work has been performed in such a way as to afford a defence to the employer against a demand for the price, if the accident had not happened (as if it were defectively or improperly done), the same defence will be equally available to him after the loss. The obligations or duties on the part of the workman or undertaker are thus summed up in the foreign law: To do the work; to do it at the time agreed on; to do it well; to employ the materials furnished by the employer in a proper manner; and, lastly, to exercise a proper degree of care and diligence about the work.

(b) The hiring of care and attention. To this class belong agisters of cattle, warehousemen, forwarding merchants, and wharfingers. They are bound to use ordinary diligence, and of course are responsible for losses by ordinary negligence.

(B) The locatio operis mercium vehendarum, or the carriage of goods for hire. In respect to contracts of this sort entered into by private persons, who do not exercise the business of common carriers, there does not seem to be any material distinction varying the rights, obligations, and duties of the parties from those of other bailees for hire. Every such private person is bound to ordinary diligence, and to a reasonable exercise of skill; and of course he is not responsible for any losses not occasioned by the ordinary negligence of himself or of his servants. The exceptions to this general rule are postmasters, innkeepers, and common carriers, who are under peculiar regulations consonant with public policy; see those titles respectively.—Story on Bailments, c. vi. Consult Smith's Leading Cases, sub tit. Coggs v. Bernard; Wyatt Paine on Bailments; Addison on Chitty on Contracts.

Hireman. A subject.—Du Cange.

Hire-Purchase System. A system whereby the owner of goods lets them on hire for periodic payments by the hirer upon an agreement that when a certain number of payments have been completed, the absolute property in the goods will pass to the hirer, but so that the hirer may return the goods at any time without any obligation to pay any balance of rent accruing after return, until the conditions have been fulfilled, the property remains in the owner. The instrument by which the hire-purchase is effected does not ordinarily require registration under the Bills of Sale Acts (Ex parte Crawcour, (1878) 9 Ch. D. 419); and the hirer is 'reputed owner' within the Bankruptcy Act (Ex parte Brooks, (1883) 23 Ch. D. 261); but the hirer does not 'agree to buy' within the Factors Act or Sale of Goods Act so as to be able to sell or pledge the goods as if he were a 'mercantile agent' (Helby v. Matthews, 1895, A. C. 471; Brooks v. Biernstein, 1909, 1 K. B. 98). Distinguish from agreements such as in Lee v. Butler, 1893, 2 Q. B. 318, 'which are in fact a sale, the price being paid in instalments with the condition that the property passes when all the instalments have been paid; here there is a binding agreement for the party to purchase, whereas in Helby v. Matthews Agreements' there is not; this is the real test of a hire-purchase agreement. As to the stamping of a hire-purchase agreement, see s. 7 of the Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 13). As to a hire-purchase agreement being a mere cloak for a bill of sale transaction, see Maas v. Pepper, 1905, A. C. 102.

Goods comprised in a hire-purchase agreement with a tenant do not appear to be protected from distress under the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908 (see Smart Bros. v. Holt, 1929, 2 K. B. 303). A very usual form of evasion of a landlord's right is to make the hirer that one of husband and wife, in whose name the premises have not been taken. To avoid this, landlords should let the premises jointly—or prove that they were in the order and disposition (see that title) of the hirer with the consent of the true owner.

Hirst, or Hurst, a wood.—Domesday; Co. Litt. 4 b.

His testibus (these being witnesses), a phrase anciently added in deeds, after in cuius rei testimonium. The deed was read in the presence of witnesses, and their names were then written down. The phrase is not now inserted.

Hilwisc, a hide of land.

Hlaf seta, a servant fed at his master's cost.

Hlaforð, a lord.—Ang.-Sax.

Hlaforðsœna, a lord's protection.—Du Cange.

Hlasœna, the benefit of the law.—Ibid.

Hlothbote, a mulct set on him who commits homicide in a riot or hlothe.

Hlothe [turma, Lat.], an unlawful company, from eight to thirty-five inclusive.

Hlytas [fr. sortes, Lat.], lots.

Hoastmen, an ancient guild or fraternity in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, engaged in selling or shipping coal.—21 Jac. 1, c. 3, s. 12.

Hobblers, or Hobblers, light horsemen or bowmen; also certain tenants, bound by their tenure to maintain a little light horse for giving notice of any invasion, or suchlike peril, towards the seaside.—Camd. Brit.

Hobhouse's Act, the Vestries Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 60), an adoptive Act for the better regulation of parish vestries.—Repealed, except as 39, s. to parish meetings in rural parishes under the Local Government Act, 1894, by s. 89 and Sched. II. of that Act.

Hoccus Saltis, a hoke, hole, or lesser pit of salt.

Hockettor, or Hocqueteur, a knight of the post; a decayed man; a basket carrier.—Cowel.

Hock-Tuesday Money was a duty given to the landlord, that his tenants and bondmen might solemnize the day on which the English conquered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter-week.—Ibid.

Hoga, Hoglum, Hoch, a mountain or hill.—Du Cange.

Hogaster, a little hog; a young sheep.

Hogenhine, 'rectius Agenhine.' See AGENHINE and THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE.

Hoggacius, Hoggaster, a sheep of the second year.

Hoggus, or Hogietus, a hog, or swine.

Hogshead, a measure containing half a pipe, a fourth part of a tun, or sixty-three gallons.

Hokeday. See HOCK-TUESDAY MONEY.

Hold, to have as tenant.

Of a court or judge, to enounce a legal opinion. In strictness, a court 'holds,' and a single judge 'rules.'

Hold, or Wold, a governor or chief officer.

—Gibs. Camd.

Holder, a payee or indorsee in possession of a bill of exchange or a promissory note.

Holder in due Course is 'a holder who has taken a bill of exchange [cheque or note], complete and regular on the face of it,' under the following conditions, namely :—

(a) That he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonoured, if such was the fact.

(b) That he took the bill [cheque or note] in good faith and for value, and that at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any defect in the title of the person who negotiated it.—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 29.

In R. E. Jones Ltd. v. Waring and Gillow Ltd., 1926, A. C. 670, it was held that the original payee of a cheque is not a holder in due course within the meaning of the Bill of Exchange Act, 1882.

Holding. For the purposes of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 9), holding is defined (s. 57 (1) ) as follows : 'Holding' does not include an allotment garden or include any land cultivated as a garden unless it is cultivated wholly or mainly for the purpose of the trade or business of market gardening but, except as aforesaid, means 'any parcel of land held by a tenant which is either wholly agricultural or wholly pastoral, or in part agricultural and as to the residue pastoral, or in whole or in part cultivated as a market garden, and which is not let to the tenant during his continuance in any office, appointment or employment held under the landlord.' The Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 10), contains a similar definition in s. 49; also in Scots law to signify the tenure or nature of the right given by the superior to the vassal.

Holding Out. On the principle of estoppel any representation by words or conduct or knowingly suffered to be made by others that a person is a partner in a firm on the faith of which representation credit has been given to the firm, makes the person so representing himself liable as a partner to that creditor, to the extent of the loss which the creditor has thereby suffered (see Christopher, Ex parte Harris, (1816) 1 Madd. 583). See Partnership Act, 1890, s. 3, and PARTNERSHIP.

Holding Over, keeping possession of land by a lessee after the expiration of his term, whereby if the possession is against the will of the landlord, he becomes a trespasser, but if he remains with the consent of the landlord, he becomes a tenant at will or he may simply remain on sufferance; if subsequent rent is accepted by his landlord he usually becomes tenant from year to year on the terms of the expired lease (Hyatt v. Griffiths, (1851) 17 Q. B. 505).

A tenant wrongfully holding over premises of which the value does not exceed 100l. a year may be ejected by proceedings in the county court, under the County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), or if the term do not exceed seven years, or the rent 20l. a year, by proceedings before justices of the peace under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 74). See also DOUBLE RENT; DOUBLE VALUE.

Holiday, or Holyday, a feast day with cessation from labour, as by 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 3, all Sundays in the year and also Christmas-day and other days by that Act commanded 'to be kepte holie dayes and none other.'

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII., r. 6, it is provided that the several offices of the Supreme Court shall be open on every day of the year except Sundays, Good Friday, Monday and Tuesday in Easter-week, Whit Monday, the first Monday in August, Christmas-day, and the next following working day, and all days appointed by proclamation to be observed as days of general fast, humiliation, or thanksgiving; and the day appointed to be kept as the King's birthday. See also VACATION.

The Bank Holidays Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 17), provides that Easter Monday, the Monday in Whitsun-week, the first Monday in August, and the 26th day of December, if a week day, shall be kept as bank holidays in England and Ireland, and New Year's-day, Christmas-day (or, if either be a Sunday, the following day), Good Friday, the first Monday of May, and the first Monday of August in Scotland; and also that bills of exchange and promissory notes due on bank holidays shall be payable on the following day. And this is further extended to docks, custom houses, Inland Revenue offices, and bonding warehouses, in England and Ireland, by the Holidays Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 13); which Act also, when the 26th of December is a Sunday, makes the 27th a holiday.

Holm [fr. hulmus, Sax.; insula amnica, Lat.], an isle, or fenny ground; a river island; also a hill or cliff.—Co. Litt. 5a.

Holograph [fr. ἰδωσ, Gk., all, and γραφω, to write], a deed or writing, written entirely by the grantor himself. In Scotland such a deed is held probative without witnesses, and a holograph will is good, but it must appear in gremio to be holograph or must be proved before heritage can be carried by its terms.

Holt, a wood.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Holy Orders. These are, in the English Church, the orders of bishops (including archbishops), priests, and deacons. See CLERGY; DEACON; PRIEST.

Homage [fr. homo, Lat., a man], the most honourable service and most humble service of reverence that a free tenant might do to his lord. When a tenant performed it, he was ungirt, and his head uncovered, the lord sitting; the tenant then knelt before him on both his knees, and held his hands extended and joined between the hands of his lord, and said thus:—'I become your man from this day forward, of life and limb, and of earthly worship, and unto you shall be true and faithful, and bear to you faith for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the King.' The lord then kissed him. Homage could only be done to the lord himself, but fealty might to his steward or bailiff.—Co. Litt. 64 a, 68 a. The general name of manorial tenants that do homage. See HOMAGE; JURY.

Homage Auncstral, where a tenant holds lands of his lord by homage; and the same tenant and his ancestors have holden the same land of the same lord, and of his ancestors, immemorially, and have done to them homage.—Co. Litt. 100 b.

Homage Jury, a court in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage, who are to inquire and make presentments of the death of tenants, surrenders, admittances, and the like.

Homager, one who does or is bound to do homage.

Homagio respectuando (respecting of homage), a writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king's tenants, notwithstanding his homage not done.—Fitz. N. B. 269.

Homagium reddere (to renounce homage), when a vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning his lord; for which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws.—Bract. l. 2, c. xxxv., s. 35.

Homagium non per procuratores nec per litteras fieri potuit, sed in propria personā tam domini quam tenentis capi debet et fieri. Co. Litt. 68 a.—(Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person as well of lord as of the tenant.)

Home Office, the department of state (in Whitehall) through which the sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police and communications with the judicial functionaries, and under the general administration of a Secretary of State called the Home Secretary.

Homesoken, Homsoken. See HAMESOKEN.

Homestall, a mansion-house.

Home-trade ship. See SHIP.

Homicide, destroying the life of a human being. In its several stages of guilt, arising from the particular circumstances of mitigation or aggravation which attends it, it is either justifiable, excusable, or felonious.

I. Justifiable, of three kinds:—

(α) Where the proper officer executes a criminal in strict conformity with his sentence.

(β) Where an officer of justice, or other person acting in his aid, in the legal exercise of a particular duty, kills a person who resists or prevents him from executing it.

(γ) Where it is committed in prevention of a forcible and atrocious crime.—1 Hale, 488.

II. Excusable, of two kinds:—

(α) Per infortunium, or by misadventure, as where a man doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, by accident kills another; but if death ensue from any unlawful act, the offence is manslaughter, and not misadventure.

(β) Se defendendo, as where a man kills another upon a sudden encounter in his own defence, or in the defence of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling.

III. Felonious, of two kinds:—

(α) Killing oneself. See SUICIDE.

(β) Killing another, which is either—

(1) Murder (see that title); or

(2) Manslaughter (see that title); and this is either—

(α) Voluntary, where a man doing an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, by accident kills another; or

(β) Involuntary, where, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other; or where a man greatly provokes another by some personal violence, etc., and the other immediately kills him. Consult Russell on Crimes.

Hominiatio, the mustering of men; the doing of homage.

Homine capto in withernamium, a writ to take him that had taken any bondman or woman, and led him or her out of the country, so that he or she could not be replevied according to law.—Reg. Brev. 79.

Homine eligendo ad custodiendam pacem sigilli pro mercatoribus editi, a writ directed to a corporation for the choice of a man to keep one part of the seal appointed for statutes-merchant, when a former is dead, according to the Statute of Acton Burnell.—Reg. Brev. 178.

Homine replegando, a writ to bail a man out of prison.—Reg. Brev. 77. All these writs are totally disused.

Homines, feudatory tenants who claimed a privilege of having their causes, etc., tried only in their lord's Court.—Paroch. Antiq. 15.

Homiplagium, the maiming of a man.

Homologation, the express or implied ratification of a deed or contract that is defective or voidable.—Bell's Law Dict.; Green's Encyc. of Scots Law.

Homo trium litterarum (a man of three letters, sc., f, u, r), employed in comedy by Plautus to denote the Latin word fur, a thief.

Homstale, a mansion-house.

Hond-habend. See HAND-HABEND.

Honorarium, a recompense for service rendered; a voluntary fee to one exercising a liberal profession—e.g., a barrister's fee. See PHYSICIAN.

Honorarium jus, the law of the prætors and the edicts of the ædiles.—Civ. Law.

Honorary Canons, those without emolument.—3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 23. See CANONS.

Honorary Feuds, titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest.

Honorary Freemen. See Honorary Freedom of Boroughs Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 29), by which the council of any municipal borough may admit to be honorary freemen of the borough persons of distinction, and any persons who have rendered eminent services to the borough. The Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), repealed the above Act except as to London, but reproduces the former provisions with amendments in ss. 259–264.

Honorary Services, those incident to grand-serjeanty, and commonly annexed to some honour; services without emolument.

Honorary Trustees, trustees to preserve contingent remainders, so called because they were bound, in honour only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course.—Levin on Trusts.

Honoris respectum, challenge propter. See CHALLENGE.

Honour, to honour a bill of exchange or cheque (of the drawee, etc.); to pay.

Honour, a seignior of several manors held under one baron or lord paramount; also those dignities or privileges, degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles which flow from the Crown, the fountain of honour, and see the Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 72).

Honour, Judge, His, is the official designation of a county court judge.

Honour, Court of, a branch of the Court of Chivalry. See CHIVALRY, COURT OF.

Honour Courts, tribunals held within honours or seigniories.

Honourable, a title of courtesy given to the children of earls (except the eldest son in cases where the father has a second title), viscounts and barons; Maids of Honour to the Queen; Justices of the High Court; Lords of Session, Scotland; members of certain colonial Governments. In the case of the son of a peer to whom this title is applied, his wife or widow is also entitled to use it. As to Right Honourable, see PRIVY COUNCIL.

Hontfongenethes, or Honfongenethes, a thief taken with hond-habend—i.e., having the thing stolen in his hand.—Cowel. See BACKBERINDE.

Hoo, a hill.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Hooland, land ploughed and sown every year.—Scots term.

Hopeon, a valley.

Hope, a valley.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Hoppo, a collector; an overseer of commerce.—Chinese.

Hops. As to the marking and branding of hops, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Hop Trade.'

Hora Auroræ, the morning bell; Coverfeu was the evening bell.

Horda, a cow in calf.—Old Records.

Horders, a treasurer.—Du Cange.

Orderlum, a hoard, treasury, or repository.

Hordeum palmale, beer barley.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Horestl, the people of Angus-upon-the Tay, or Highlanders.—Tomlin's Law Dict.

Horn. Blowing a horn in London streets is an offence against the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 54 (14), and this provision has been strengthened by an Act of 1864. See MUSICIAN, LONDON.

Hornaglum. See HORNGELD.

Horngeld, or Hornegeld, a forest-tax paid for horned beasts.

Horn with Horn, or Horn under Horn, the promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or all horned beasts that are allowed to run together, upon the same common.—Spelm.

Horning, Letters of, warrant for charging persons in Scotland to pay or perform certain debts and duties; so called because they were originally proclaimed by horn or trumpet.—Bell's Law Dict.

Hors de son fee (out of his fee), where land is without the compass of a person's fee.—9 Rep. 30; 2 Mod. 104.

Horseflesh. The sale of horseflesh for human food is regulated by the Sale of Horseflesh, etc., Regulation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 11), by which no person may sell horseflesh for human food elsewhere than in a shop, on which shall be painted words indicating that horseflesh is sold there.

Horse Power. A unit representing the power required to lift 33,000 lbs. vertically 1 foot per minute or, by electrical measurement, 746 watts, or  $\frac{1}{1000}$  of a Board of Trade unit of electricity. As to vehicles driven by mechanical power, see Regulations of the Ministry of Transport.

Horse-racing, a lawful pastime. By 13 Geo. 2, c. 19, no plates or matches at horse-races under 50*l.* value could be run, under penalty of 200*l.* to be paid by the owner of the horse or horses, and 100*l.* by the advertiser of the plate. This was repealed by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 5. Formerly wagers of not more than 10*l.* on a legal horse-race could be recovered by action, but now all wagers are void by the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), and 'no better illustration can be given of a wagering contract than a bet on a horse-race' (Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., 1892, 2 Q. B. 490, per Hawkins, J.). See also RACE COURSE and GAMING.

Horses. The buying of stolen horses is attempted to be checked by 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7 and 31 Eliz. c. 12, which require a record of sales at markets; see, as to these Acts, Moran v. Pitt, (1873) 42 L. J. Q. B. 47. As to the limitation of the liability of railway and canal companies for the carriage of horses, see s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31). As to larceny of horses, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 3.

Cruelty to horses is punishable on summary conviction by fine or imprisonment, under the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, s. 1, as amended by the Protection of Animals, etc., Act, 1912, and 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 54, requiring the use of anæsthetics in certain cases.

The slaughter of injured horses by, or by order of, the police is authorized by the same Act, s. 11; while the business of a 'knacker,' defined as a person whose trade it is to kill horses, is strictly regulated by ss. 5 and 6 of the Act and the regulations in the First Schedule thereto. As to Scotland, see Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 14). The Diseases of Animals Act, 1910, provides for the examination of horses before they are exported, and for the slaughter of such as it is cruel to keep alive. The master of a vessel is empowered to kill any horse that is seriously injured during the voyage; and see Exportation of Horses Acts, 1914 and 1937. See ANIMALS. The Horse Breeding Act, 1918, provides for the licensing of stallions by the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, and makes it an offence for any person being the owner of a stallion to travel it for service or to exhibit it on any premises not in his occupation with a view to its use for service unless the stallion is licensed. Consult, generally, Oliphant on Horses.

Horstillers, innkeepers.

Hors-wealth, the wealth, or Briton who had the care of the king's horses.

Hors-weard, a service or corvée, consisting in watching the horses of the lord.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Hosiery Manufacture. The Hosiery Manufacture (Wages) Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 48), provides for the payment of wages without certain stoppages theretofore customary.

Hospes generalis, a great chamberlain.

Hospitallers, the knights of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, so called because they built a hospital at Jerusalem wherein pilgrims were received. On the suppression of the Templars the Pope transferred their property to the Hospitallers, who were in their turn suppressed, and all their lands and goods in England given to the sovereign by 32 Hen. 8, c. 24.

Hospitals, eleemosynary corporations. They are either aggregate, in which the master or warden and his brethren have the estate of inheritance; or sole, in which the master, etc., only has the estate in him, and the brethren or sisters, having college and common seal in them, must consent, or the master alone has the estate, not having college or common seal. So hospitals are eligible, donative, or presentative.—Jac. Law Dict.

By 39 Eliz. c. 5, made perpetual by 21 Jac. 1, c. 1, any person seised of an estate in fee-simple may, by deed enrolled in Chancery, erect and found a hospital for the sustenance and relief of 'the maimed, poor, needy, or impotent people'; but no such hospital may be erected unless endowed with lands or hereditaments of the yearly value of 20*l.*

For power of local authorities to provide hospitals for their districts, see Public Health Act, 1875, s. 131; Isolation Hospitals Acts, 1893, 1901 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 68; 1 Edw. 7, c. 8), all repealed from Oct. 1937 and replaced by Part VI. of the Public Health Act, 1936; see ss. 181–186.

In general the governors of a hospital will not be liable for negligent medical treatment by the staff employed (Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, 1909, 2 K. B. 820; Evans v. Liverpool Corporation, 1906, 1 K. B. 160). As to exemption from land tax, see s. 25 of the Land Tax Act, 1797 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5), and St. Thomas', etc., Hospitals v. Huddell, 1901, 1 K. B. 364; and from property tax, see Income Tax Act, 1918, and Finance Acts (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 14), s. 21; (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 19, and (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 22), s. 28.—Royal Antideluvian Society of Buffaloes v. Owens, 1928, 1 K. B. 446.

Hospitium, procuration or visitation-money.

Hospodar, a Turkish governor in Moldavia or Wallachia.

Hostage, a person given up to an enemy as a security for the performance of the articles of a treaty, etc.

Hostalagium, a right to have lodging and entertainment, reserved by lords in their tenants' houses.—Old Records.

Hosteler, or Hostler, an innkeeper.

Hotels, the Inns of Court. See that title.

Hostiæ [fr. hostia, Lat., a victim], host-bread, or consecrated wafers in the Holy Eucharist.

Hostharia, Hospitalaria, a place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

Hostliarius, the officer who had the care of an hostilaria; an hospitaller.

Hostile Witness, a witness who so conducts himself under examination-in-chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him by the [Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), which applies to civil actions as well as to criminal trials.

Hostrieus, a goshawk.—Paroch. Antiq. 569.

Hotchpot [fr. haché en poche, Fr., a confused mingling of divers things], a blending or mixing of lands and chattels, answering in some respects to the collatio bonorum of the Civil Law. 'And it seemeth that this word [hotchpot] is in English a pudding'; see Co. Litt. 177 a.

As to lands, it only applied to such as were given in frank-marriage, thus: if one daughter have an estate given with her in frank-marriage by her ancestor, then, if lands descend from the same ancestor to her and her sister in fee-simple (not in fee-tail), she or her heirs shall have no share in them unless they will agree to divide the lands so given in frank-marriage, in equal proportions with the rest of the lands descending—i.e., bringing her lands so given into hotchpot.

As to personalty. The State of Distributions (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10), intended children to take equal shares of the goods and chattels of their intestate ancestor, and it considered that there might be some of the children who had previously received a portion or advancement, but not so much as to make up their full share; in that case such child, so advanced but in part, was allowed so much more out of the intestate's personal estate as would suffice to make his share equal to that of the other children. The Act took nothing away that had been given to any of the children, however unequal that may have been. How much soever that might have exceeded the remainder of the personal estate left by the intestate at his death, the child might, if he pleased, keep it all; if he was not content, but would have more, then he must bring into hotchpot what he had before received. This principle is based upon the equitable doctrine of equality, being perfectly coincident with that conduct that a just parent would pursue towards all his children.

The Statute of Distributions has been repealed by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, and replaced by ss. 46–47 of this Act; s. 47, assimilating descent and succession to real and personal estate, has given effect to the principle in the distribution of intestate estates.

A settlement of personal estate in favour of children in such shares as the parents may appoint, and in default of any appointment among the children equally, almost invariably contains what is called a 'hotchpot clause,' i.e., a direction that no child who has received any share under an exercise of the power shall share in the unappointed part of the fund without bringing his appointed share into hotchpot. As to the construction of such a clause where several funds are settled, see Re Fraser, 1913, 2 Ch. 224, and cases there cited, and Trustee Act, 1925, s. 31 (2).

Hotel-keeper. See INNKEEPER.

House. As to what will pass under a grant of a 'house,' see St. Thomas's Hospital v. Charing Cross Ry. Co., (1861) 1 J. & H. at p. 404, per Wood, V.-C.; Co. Litt. 5 b. As to a devise of a 'house,' see Theobald on Wills; Jarman on Wills.

Malicious injuries to houses by tenants, or by means of explosive substances, are punishable by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), ss. 9 and 13.

'House' under the Public Health 1936 Act, s. 43, means a dwelling-house, whether private or not; under the Housing Act, 1936, s. 187, includes any yard, garden, outhouses and appurtenances; under the Rent Restriction Acts, 1920-1935, a dwelling-house means a house let as a separate dwelling or a part of a house being a part so let (1933, s. 16); for other definitions, see respective statutes.

Houseage, a fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf, etc.

Housebote, estovers, or an allowance of necessary timber out of the lord's wood for the repairing or support of a house.

House-breaking. See BREAKING-IN; and as to breaking in at night, see BURGLARY.

House-burning. See ARSON.

House duty, a tax on inhabited houses imposed by the House Tax Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36), in lieu of window duty. The tax varied in amount, according to the annual value of the premises and the purpose for which they were used. Inhabited house duty was abolished by the Finance Act, 1924, s. 20. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'House Tax.'

House of Commons, one of the constituent parts of Parliament, being the assembly of knights of shires, or the representatives of counties; citizens, or the representatives of cities; and burgesses, or the representatives of boroughs.

Property Qualification.—The property qualification of members, which was by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 48, amending 9 Anne, c. 5, by allowing personal property to count, fixed at 600*l.* a year for a county, and 300*l.* a year for a borough member, was abolished in 1858 by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 26.

Payment of Members.—Members were from very early times entitled to payment at the rate of 4*s.* a day for county, and 2*s.* a day for borough members, payable by their constituents. This has never been abolished, and is recognized by the unrepealed 6 Hen. 8, c. 16, by which members may not depart from Parliament without licence from the Speaker on pain of losing their 'wages,' though 35 Hen. 8, c. 11, which gave wages to Welsh members as in England, was repealed in 1856 by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64. The common law right to 'wages,' which Coke says had existed 'time out of mind,' was enforceable by writs to sheriffs, but has not been enforced since about 1860. Lord Campbell, at p. 220, vol. iv. of the 4th ed. (1857) of the Lives of the Lord Chancellors (but not in previous editions), wrote that he knew no reason in point of law why any member might not still insist on payment of wages; and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Parliament,' vol. ix. 246; Solicitors' Journal for February 25th, 1905; Law Times for November 11th, 1905.

As the law stands at present, members who are not in receipt of salaries as ministers of the Crown, as officers of the House itself, or as officers of His Majesty's Household, are paid a salary of 600*l.* a year; in addition, members have a right of free railway travel to and from their constituencies.

Election of Members.—During the last hundred years the House has been reformed on several occasions. In 1832, when Old Sarum and fifty-five other inconsiderable places were deprived of the right of returning members, thirty boroughs were cut down from double to single representation, and Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, and eighteen other boroughs first obtained representation—having two members each given them, the rights of voting being also very largely extended; in 1867, when a similar but less extensive rearrangement of seats took place, and household and lodger franchise was established in boroughs; and in 1884, when household and lodger franchise was established in counties, and a rearrangement of seats in proportion to population more extensive than that of 1867, but less so than that of 1832, took place.

Under the Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885, the House consisted of 670 members. By the Representation of the People Acts, 1918 to 1926, the number of members was increased to 707, 492 of whom representing England, 36 Wales, 74 Scotland, 105 Ireland. The House is now reduced to 615 members through the decrease of Irish representation from 105 members to 13, who sit for Northern Ireland. As to the redistribution of seats, see 1918 Act, s. 37 and Sched. IX. By 18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 25, Reading University was added to the combination of Universities referred to in the 9th Sched. of the Act of 1918. As to electors, see ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Secret voting at elections was first introduced by the Ballot Act, 1872, which was a temporary Act, continued annually by an Expiring Laws Continuance Act, until made permanent by s. 35 of the Act of 1918.

By the Parliament (Qualification of (Women) Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 47), women became qualified to be members of the House of Commons, and sex disqualifications for office were removed by the Sex Disqualifications (Removal) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 71); see also the Representation of the People (Equal Franchise) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 12).

Aliens are not eligible as members, neither are minors, lunatics, English or Scotch peers; but Irish peers, unless representative, may sit for any place in Great Britain. The English, Scotch, and Irish judges are disqualified, also the holders of various offices particularized by statute, government contractors, clergymen, and bankrupts. See House of Commons Disqualification (Declaration of Law) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 13); and 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 38); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Parliament,' and especially Representation of the People Act, 1918.

'The Six Points of the Charter.'—The six points of the 'People Charter' demanded by the 'Chartists' at Birmingham in 1838 were:—(1) Universal Suffrage; (2) Vote by Ballot (granted in 1872); (3) Paid Representatives (granted in 1911); (4) Equal Electoral Districts; (5) Abolition of the Property Qualification for M.P.'s (granted in 1858); and (6) Annual Parliaments.

Bowles's Act.—By the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 3), statutory effect is given for a limited period to resolutions passed by the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Commons (so long as it is a Committee of the whole House) varying or renewing taxation. The Act also makes provision with respect to payments and deductions made on account of any temporary tax between the dates of the expiration and renewal of the tax; it applies only to duties of customs and excise and to income tax. The Act was passed in consequence of the decision in Bowles v. Bank of England, 1913, 1 Ch. 57.

The House of Commons acting collectively in a matter falling within the ambit of its domestic affairs is privileged (R. v. Graham Campbell, Ex p. Herbert, 1935, 1 K. B. 594).

House of Correction, a species of gaol which does not fall under the sheriff's charge, but is governed by a keeper wholly independent of that offence.

Houses of Correction, first established in the reign of Elizabeth, were originally designed for the penal confinement (after conviction) of paupers and vagrants refusing to work; but by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 38, ss. 3, 4, reciting that great inconvenience and expense had been found to result from the practice of committing to the common gaol where it happens to be remote from the place of trial, it is enacted that a justice of the peace, or coroner, may commit for safe custody to any house of correction situate near the place where the assizes or sessions are to be held; and that offenders sentenced in those courts may be committed, in execution of such sentence, to any house of correction for the county; and see the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 55), ss. 20, 21, for power of justices to declare when houses of correction are fit prisons to commit to.

House of Lords, a constituent part of Parliament, being composed of the lords spiritual and temporal.

The lords temporal are dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons. The number of British peerages of different ranks has been greatly augmented from time to time, and there is no limitation to the power of the Crown to add to it by fresh creation.

The lords temporal consist of: (1) peers of the United Kingdom, of Great Britain, and of England; (2) the representative peers of Scotland and Ireland; (3) life peers, i.e., Lords of Appeal in Ordinary. The Lord High Chancellor presides.

Bankrupts are disqualified from sitting or voting by s. 32 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

The assent of the House of Lords was formerly essential to the passing of any Act of Parliament, but its powers in this respect had been seriously curtailed by the Parliament Act, 1911. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

The House of Lords has been for a considerable time—at least since the time of Henry the Fourth—the court of final appeal, having no original jurisdiction over causes, but only upon appeals and proceedings in error to rectify any injustice or mistake of the law committed by the courts below.—3 Hallam's Const. Hist.; consult Macqueen's Practice of the House of Lords; Sugden's Law of Property, Introd. Chap.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 20, the jurisdiction of the House of Lords as the final Court of Appeal was taken away; but the operation of this section was suspended by the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 2, until the 1st November, 1876, and by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, the appellate jurisdiction was restored.

In difficult cases the House of Lords may obtain the opinions of the judges; for a recent instance of this, see Allen v. Flood, 1898, A. C. 1.

As to the trial of peers indicted for treason or felony by the House of Lords, see HIGH STEWARD, COURT OF THE LORD.

Householder [paterfamilias, Lat.], an occupier of a house; a master of a family.

House-tax. See HOUSE DUTY.

Housing of the Working Classes. The Housing Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 51), replaces with amendments the Housing Acts, 1925, 1930 and 1935, and consolidates the general law on the subject with some exceptions, chiefly relating to agricultural populations and needs, which are also provided for in unrepealed portions of the Acts of 1930 and 1935. Very wide powers are conferred on local authorities over the ownership of land and housing properties, and populations within their districts, enabling those authorities to make bye-laws for houses occupied or adaptable for the working classes; to effect the clearance, demolition, rebuilding, redevelopment or improvement of houses either singly or in whole areas and otherwise regulating sites or houses; to prevent over-crowding, and generally making it incumbent on these authorities to review and provide for the housing conditions of the working classes, and in addition giving powers of compulsory expropriation of private owners from any land subject only to the compensation available under Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, and as diminished by the 4th Sched. to the Act of 1936 or otherwise as provided by the Act. At the same time the powers of expropriation of any land which is not comprised in clearance, redevelopment or improvement areas, etc., do not extend over the property of a local authority, or land required for the purposes of a statutory undertaking or being part of any park, garden or pleasure ground or otherwise required for the amenity or convenience of a house (s. 75), and see ss. 142–144 as to other restrictions upon acquisition of land. The Act of 1936 has mitigated some of the hardships to meritorious owners which arose out of the earlier legislation chiefly in regard to the retention of their property if reconditioned or redeveloped according to the requirements of local authorities (ss. 50 and 51). Under ss. 90–92, assistance may be given by local authorities or the Public Works Loan Commissioners to private owners and others desiring to erect or improve houses for the working classes, and s. 123 enables the Public Works Loan Commissioners to lend to local authorities any money which those authorities have power to borrow for those purposes, and the financial provisions (Part VI.) relate to Government contributions, contributions out of rates, borrowing monies, etc. The High Court, the Chancery Courts of Lancaster and Durham, and county courts are provided with powers and jurisdictions ancillary to the purposes of the Act (ss. 160–163). In regard to small houses, not necessarily working-class houses, the Act of 1936, s. 2, replacing preceding enactments, provides an exception to the rule that there is no implied condition of fitness in the letting an unfurnished house. In a contract for letting of a small house or part of a house for habitation a condition is implied that at the commencement of the holding the house (or part) is in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation. As to the liability of the landlord where the tenant undertakes the repairs (fair wear and tear excepted), see Jones v. Geen, 1925, 1 K. B. 119. As to the necessity for notice, see Morgan v. Liverpool Corporation, 1927, 2 K. B. 131. The condition is implied only where the rent does not exceed, in London, 40*l.*, or 26*l.* elsewhere in England and Wales. These provisions do not apply to a contract made before 31st July, 1923, in the case of houses let at more than 16*l.* per annum and situate out of the administrative County of London or a borough or district with a population of more than 50,000, or to leases for not less than three years where the lessee is under obligation to put in repair.

By s. 4, in the case of any house which is occupied or is of a type suitable for occupation by persons of the working classes, the name and address of the medical officer of health for the district and of the landlord or responsible person must be entered in the rent-book under penalty of a fine not exceeding forty shillings.

It may also be pointed out that for the special purposes of ss. 38 and 137 of the Act of 1936, the 11th Schedule defines a working man's dwelling as wholly or partly occupied by a person belonging to the working classes, and 'working class' includes mechanics, artisans, labourers and others working for wages, hawkers, costermongers and persons not working for wages, but working at some trade or handicraft without employing others except members of their own family, and persons other than domestic servants, whose income in any case does not exceed an average of 3*l.* per week, and the families of any such persons who may be residing with them. The Act does not give any other or general definition of the working classes and working-class houses or dwellings. The Act of 1936 does not extend to Scotland or Northern Ireland. See, further, CLEARANCE AREA; IMPROVEMENT AREA; REDEVELOPMENT AREA; OVERCROWDING; LANDLORD AND TENANT; and INCREASE OF RENT.

Hredige, readily, quickly.—Leg. Athelstan. c. 16.

Hudegeld. See HIDGELD.

Hue and Cry [fr. huer, Fr., to shout; crier, to cry aloud; hutesium et clamor, Lat.], the old common law process of pursuing with horn and voice felons and such as have dangerously wounded another. It may be raised by constables, or private persons, or both. If the constable or peace officer concur in the pursuit, he has the same powers, etc., as if acting under a magistrate's warrant. All who join in a hue and cry, whether a constable be present or not, are justified in the apprehension of the person pursued, though it turn out that he is innocent; and where he takes refuge in a house, may break open the door, if admittance be refused; and by the Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), re-enacting 3 Edw. 1, c. 9, 'Every person in a county must be ready and apparelled at the command of the sheriff, and at the cry of the country to arrest a felon,' and in default 'shall on conviction be liable to a fine.' But if a man wantonly or maliciously raise a hue and cry, he is liable to fine and imprisonment, and to an action at the suit of the party injured. The Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 28, provides for compensation to persons who have been active in the apprehension of any person charged with murder, or other offences specified in that section, in order to encourage the apprehension of felons. As to the mode of raising the hue and cry, see Hawk. l. 2, c. xii., s. 6. The term is also applied to a paper circulated by order of the Secretary of State for the Home Department announcing the perpetration of offences.

Hulsserium, a ship used to transport horses. Also termed uffer.

Hulssier, an usher of a court.

Hulka, a hulk or small vessel.

Hullus, a hill.

Humagium, a moist place.—Dugd. Mon.

Hundred, a subdivision of the county, the nature of which is not known with certainty. In the Dialogus de Scaccario, it is said that a hundred 'ex hydarum aliquot centenariis, sed non determinatis constat; quidam enim ex pluribus, quidam ex paucioribus constat.' Some accounts make it consist of precisely a hundred hides; others, of a hundred tithings, or of a hundred free families. Certain it is that whatever may have been its original organization, the hundred, at the period when it became known to us, differed greatly as to the extent in the several parts of England. This division is ascribed to King Alfred, and he may possibly have introduced it into England, though it was established among the Franks in the sixth century. In the capitularies of Charlemagne we meet with it in the form known among us.—Capit. l. 3, c. x. See HUNDREDOES.

Hundred Court, a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred instead of a manor. The free suitors were here also the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It was not a court of record; it resembled a court-baron in all points except that in point of territory it was of a greater jurisdiction. It was denominated hæreda in the Gothic constitution. Causes were removed by the same writ as from a court-baron, and its proceedings might be reviewed by writ of false judgment. The court is become obsolete, but the County Courts Act, 1888, s. 6, re-enacting s. 14 of the County Courts Act, 1846, still treated it as existing, by providing for the surrender of the right to hold it. The Salford Hundred Court of Record still exists under special statutory provision. See COUNTY COURTS.

(Amendment) Act, 1934 (24 & 35 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 34, which repealed s. 6 as obsolete.

Hundred-fecta, the performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundred-lagh or Hundred-law, a hundred court.

Hundred-penny, the hundredfeh, or tax collected by the sheriff or lord of a hundred.

Hundred-setena, dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred.—Char. Edg. Regis Mon. Glaston. An. 12 Reg.; Dugd. Mon., tom. i. p. 27, ed. 1817.

Hundredes earldor, Hundredes man [alder mannus hundredi], the presiding officer in the hundred court.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Hundredors, men of a hundred.

Until 1886 hundredors were liable for damage done by rioters, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, which superseded all the prior statutes (repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27) relative to such liability. But the Riot Damages Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 38), has transferred the liability to 'police districts.' See RIOT DAMAGES.

Hurdereferst, a domestic; one of a family.

Hurdle, a sledge used to draw traitors to execution, disused by operation of the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), s. 31.

Hurst, Hyrst, Herst, Hirst, a wood or grove of trees.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Hurtardus, Hurtus, a ram, or wether.

Husband of a Ship. See SHIP'S HUSBAND.

Husband and Wife. The Common Law treated them, for most purposes, as one person, giving, with exceptions comparatively unimportant, the whole of a woman's property to her husband for his absolute use, and a husband could not make a grant to his wife at the Common Law, though he might do so: (1) under the Statute of Uses, by granting an estate to another person for her use; (2) by creating a trust in her favour; (3) by the custom of particular places; (4) by surrendering copyholds to her use; and (5) by will.

Equity, however, from very early times, by the doctrines of 'separate use,' 'trusts,' and 'equity to a settlement,' very largely modified the Common Law in favour of the wife; and the statute law has, by s. 1 of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors Act), 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 30), almost completely abolished the property distinction between an unmarried and a married woman. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY.

At Common Law, a gift of either realty or personalty to a husband and his wife and a third person was construed as a gift to the husband and wife of half and the other half to the other person, see Re Jeffery, 1914, 1 Ch. 375, and cases there referred to. It is now provided that the husband and wife shall for all purposes of acquisition be treated as two persons under any disposition coming into operation after 1925 (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 37); and the A. E. Act, 1925, which has substantially altered the rights of husband or wife surviving the other upon intestate succession (see s. 467), provides that a husband and wife shall, for all purposes of distribution and division in an intestacy under that section, be treated as two persons. Under s. 39, ibid., and the 6th Sched. to that Act, Part VI., tenancies by entireties were converted to joint tenancies upon trust for sale, and by s. 184, ibid., in cases where the survival of either husband or wife after the death of the other is uncertain, the younger shall be deemed to have survived the elder.

The general rule is that a husband is not bound by his wife's contracts, unless made by his authority, express or implied. If any articles are supplied to the wife which are not necessities, the legal presumption is that the husband did not assent to his wife's contract. In the case of necessities, where husband and wife are living together, the presumption is that the wife has the husband's authority to pledge his credit for necessities suitable in quality and quantity to their then style of living and belonging to a department of the household customarily managed by a wife: this presumption arises from cohabitation (see Jolly v. Rees, (1864) 15 C. B. (N. S.) 628). This presumption may be rebutted by proof that the husband prohibited the wife from pledging his credit, or revoked her authority, unless his conduct has been such as to raise an estoppel between himself and the other contracting party. A notice of such a prohibition given to a plaintiff will preclude him from relying on this presumption (see also Callot v. Nash, 39 T. L. R. 292). Where husband and wife are living apart owing to the former's desertion, or by consent, and the husband fails to maintain her, she has an irrevocable authority, as an agent of necessity, to pledge his credit for necessities suitable to her position in life.

A policy of insurance taken out by a husband in his wife's name under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is the property of his wife and is part of her estate if she predeceases him (Cousins v. Sun Life Assurance Socy., 1933, Ch. 126). See INSURANCE.

Sect. 3 of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, has abolished the husband's liability for his wife's torts and ante-nuptial contracts, debts and obligations.

Previously to this enactment, by the Common Law, in an action in respect of a tort committed by a wife the husband had to be joined as a party, and though by s. 1 (2) of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the husband need not be joined, yet he usually was still joined as he was liable in respect of his wife's torts committed during coverture, and the aggrieved party was not limited in his remedy to the wife's separate estate (Earle v. Kingscote, 1900, 1 Ch. 203), but the husband's liability ceased if, while the action was pending and before judgment, an order for judicial separation was obtained (Cuenod v. Leslie, 1909, 1 K. B. 880). As to torts in respect of which the husband was not liable, see Edwards v. Porter, 1923, 2 K. B. 538. As to form of judgment obtained against a married woman, see Scott v. Morley, (1888) 20 Q. B. D. 120.

Ante-nuptial debts were provided for by ss. 13-15 (now repealed) of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which enacted that a wife was to continue liable for such debts to the extent of her separate property, but that a husband was liable for them to the extent of property acquired by him from his wife, and that the husband and wife might be jointly sued in respect of any such debts.

Proceedings in connection with the rights of marriage are regulated by the Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1925 and 1937, and the Judicature Act, 1925. See DIVORCE and MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. Proceedings of husband and wife against each other in respect of property are regulated by the 12th, 16th, and 17th sections of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. The 12th section, as amended, enacts that 'every married woman shall have against all persons, including her husband, the same civil and (unless they be living together or the act complained of took place when they were living together) criminal remedies for the protection of her property, as if she were unmarried,' but that, 'except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort'; the 16th section, that 'a wife doing any act with respect to the property of her husband, which, if done by the husband with respect to the property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife, shall in like manner be liable to criminal proceedings by her husband' (see also Larceny Act, 1916, s. 36); and the 17th section, that questions arising between husband and wife as to property may be decided in a summary way (privately, if either party so require) by a judge of the High Court, or (at the option of the applicant irrespectively of the amount in dispute) by the judge of the county court of the district in which either party resides.

As to criminal law, if a wife commit a felony, except treason, or murder, or manslaughter, in her husband's presence, the law presumed that she acted under his coercion and excused her, which presumption of coercion was abolished by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5. c. 80), s. 47, but it is still a good defence to prove (except in treason or murder) that the offence was committed in the presence of, and under the coercion of, the husband; while if in the absence of her husband she commit the felony—even by his order—her coverture is no excuse.

As to maintenance of the wife by the husband under the Poor Law, by 5 Geo. 1, c. 8, a husband running away and leaving wife or children chargeable to a parish is liable to have his goods seized and sold to pay for their maintenance; and by the Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 19, when a married woman requires relief from the poor rates without her husband, an order may be made upon the husband by justices in petty sessions to maintain his wife by paying towards the cost of her relief such sum, weekly or otherwise, in such manner and to such persons as shall appear to the justices to be proper. Payments under this Act, however, can only be made to the wife as a pauper; and a more liberal scale, which may rise as high as 2l. per week, may be given by justices to a deserted or ill-treated wife under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), extended by 25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 46, s. 9; the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 63); and the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 51). The maintenance of the husband by the wife out of her separate property is provided for by s. 14 of the Poor Law Act, 1930.

At Common Law the husband was (as laid down by Coleridge, J., in Ex parte Cochrane, (1840) 8 Dowl. 630) considered to have a right to the personal custody of his wife; but in 1891 the Court of Appeal (Lords Halsbury and Baser and Sir Edward Fry) disregarded this and all similar authorities and dicta, and held on a return to a habeas corpus that where a wife refused to live with her husband he was not entitled to keep her in confinement in order to enforce restitution of conjugal rights (The Queen v. Jackson, 1891, 1 Q. B. 671).

Hutlan, taxes.—Dugd. Mon., tom. i. 586.

Hwata Hwatung, augury, divination.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Hybernaglum, the season for sowing winter corn, between Michaelmas and Christmas. See IBERNAGIUM.

Hyd, hide, skin. See HIDE-GILD.

Hyd, a measure of land, containing, according to some, a hundred acres, which quantity is also assigned to it in the Dialogus de Scaccario. It seems, however, that the hide varied in different parts of the kingdom. See HIDE OF LAND; HIDAGE.

Hynden, an association of ten men, first mentioned in In. 54, where it signifies the person from among whom the consecramentals were to be chosen in the case of deadly feud. From Ath. V. iii. it appears that the members of the 'first-guilds' (congildones) were formed into associations of ten, the enactment running thus: 'That we count ten men together, and let the senior direct the nine in all these things that are to be done; and then let them count their hyndens together, with one hyndenman, who shall admonish the ten (i.e., the ten hyndens) for our common benefit.' Hence it would seem that the eleven who are to hold the money consisted of the senior of each hynden, together with the hyndenman who presided over the hynden of the hyndens, i.e., ten hyndens. The number XII. mentioned in Ath. V. viii. 1 is apparently an error for XI.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Hypobolium, a legacy to a wife above her dower.—Civ. Law.

Hypothec, in the law of Scotland, is a security without possession established by law in certain cases in favour of a creditor over the property of his debtor. In the case of a landlord to whom rent is owing it is restricted, as to the right to agricultural produce, by the Hypothec Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 42), and abolished by the Hypothec Abolition (Scotland) Act, 1880 (42 Vict. c. 12), as to the rent of land, exceeding two acres in extent, let for agriculture or pasture. It is restricted in certain cases by the House-letting and Rating Act, 1911.

Hypothecation [fr. hypotheca, Civ. Law, a pledge in which the pledger retained possession of the thing pledged, as distinguished from pignus, where the possession was transferred to the pledgee. See Sand. Just; Smith's Dict. of Antiq., tit. 'Pignus'], the act of pledging a thing as security for a debt or demand without parting with the possession. There are few cases, if any, in our law where an hypothecation in the strict sense of the Roman Law exists. The nearest approaches, perhaps, are the cases of holders of bottomry bonds, and of seamen to whom wages are due in the merchant service, who have a claim against the ship in rem. But these are rather cases of liens or privileges than strict hypothecations. There are also cases where mortgages of chattels are held valid, without any actual possession by the mortgagee, but they stand upon very peculiar grounds, and may be deemed exceptions to the general rule.

Hypothetical Case. It is not the function of a court of law to advise parties what their rights would be under an hypothetical state of facts (Glasgow Navigation Co. v. Iron Ore Co., 1910, A. C. 293).

Hypothetical Tenant, a term used in valuations for rating denoting the ideal or imaginary person who would take premises at an average of the rents likely to be paid by all persons who could be regarded as possible tenants, including the owner. 'In my opinion, the rent that the (hypothetical) tenant might reasonably be expected to pay is the rent which, apart from all conditions affecting or limiting its receipt in the hands of the landlord, would be regarded as a reasonable rent for the tenant who occupied under the conditions which the statute . . . imposes,' per Lord Buckmaster (Poplar Union Assessment Committee v. Roberts, 1922, A. C. 93).

Hypothèque, the right acquired by the creditor over the immovable property which has been assigned to him by his debtor as security for his debt, although he be not placed in possession of it.—Fr. Law.

Hyrnes [parochia, Lat.], parish.

Hythe, a port or little haven at which to lade or unlade wares.—Jac. Law. Dict.

I.

Ibernagium [fr. hibernagium, Lat.], the season for sowing winter corn.—Cart. Antiq. MSS.

Ibidem, Ibid., ib., id. [Lat.] (in the same place or case).

Ice. As to the duty of the master of a British ship in relation to dangerous ice, see Merchant Shipping (Safety and Local Law Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 9), ss. 30, 32; and the Ice Patrol, see Schedule I., Articles 36, 37.

Iceul, the ancient name for the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Huntingdonshire.

Icona, a figure or representation of a thing.—Du Cange.

Ictus, an abbreviation of jurisconsultus, a lawyer.

Ictus orbis, a maim, bruise, or swelling; a hurt without cutting the skin.—Cowell's Law Dict.

Id certum est quod certum redit potest, that which can be reduced to a certainty is a certainty already.

Idem est non esse et non apparere. Jenk. Cent. 207.—(Not to be and not to appear are the same.) See Hale, de Jure Maris, pt. I, c. 4, p. 14; R. v. Lord Yarborough, (1824) 3 B. & C. 96.

Idem per idem, an illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.

Idem sonans (sounding alike). The courts will not set aside proceedings on account of the mispronunciation or mistake of names sounding alike, unless substantial injustice has been done. See Reg. v. Mellor, (1858) 27 L. J. Q. B. 121, where on a trial for murder it was discovered after conviction that Joseph Henry Thorne and William Thorniley, having both been on the panel, William Thorniley had by mistake answered to the name of Joseph Henry Thorne, and been sworn. Seven judges to six held that the conviction ought not to be set aside, two of them only on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the Court for Crown Cases Reserved (see CROWN CASES RESERVED); and see also Wells v. Cooper, (1874) 30 L. T. 721, where in an action of trespass Thomas Cox, a special juror, served by mistake for Thomas Fox on a common jury. And see MISNOMER.

Identitate, or Idemtitate nominis, an ancient and obsolete writ that lay for one taken and arrested in any personal action and committed to prison for another man of the same name.—Fitz. N. B. 267.

Identity. The being the same person or thing as represented or believed to be.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum. Bacon.—(True identity is collected from a multitude of signs.)

See Hubback on Succession, pp. 438 et seq.; Best on Evidence, 10th ed., s. 517, as to identification generally, and ss. 517 A. B. C. for curious cases of mistaken identity—such as the Tichborne Case in 1867–1872, and the Beck Case in 1896 and 1904. For forms of evidence and affidavits of identity, see Dan. Ch. Pr.

Ides [fr. idurare, obs. Lat., to divide], a division of time among the Romans. In March, May, July, and October the Ides were on the 15th of the month, in the remaining months on the 13th.—Smt. Clas. Antig. This method of reckoning is still retained in the Chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the Breviary. See NONES.

Idiot. An idiot is a person born without a mind. For Coke's classification of persons of unsound mind, see Co. Litt. 247 a.

Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, and moral defectives constitute the four kinds of persons defined as 'mentally defective' by the Mental Deficiency Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 33), s. 1, idiots being defined (s. 1 (a)) as 'persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness of such a degree that they are unable to guard themselves against common physical dangers.' The M. D. Act, 1913, as amended by the Act of 1927, provides (s. 2) for defectives being dealt with either by being sent to an institution or placed under guardianship. The general superintendence of matters relating to their supervision, training or occupation, protection, and control is vested in a central body styled 'the Board of Control' (ss. 21 et seq.), and County Councils and Borough Councils are constituted committees for the purposes of the Act (ss. 27 et seq.). The Idiots Act, 1886, is repealed (s. 67), and full provision is made for the care and protection in every way of the persons to whom the Act applies and for the management and administration of their property. The Act does not extend to Scotland or Ireland (s. 72), but provision is made for the former by the Mental Deficiency and Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 38). Consult Archbold's Lunacy and Mental Deficiency; Mills and Poyser's Lunacy Practice.

Idle and Disorderly Person. See VAGRANT.

Idoneum se facere; idoneare se, to purge oneself by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

Idoneus homo (a proper man). He is legally said to be idoneus homo who has honesty, knowledge, and ability.

Ignis judicium, the old judicial trial by fire.—Blount.

Ignitegium [fr. ignis, Lat., fire, and tego, to cover], the curfew.

Ignoramus (we are ignorant). The word formerly written on a bill of indictment by a grand jury when they rejected it: the phrase now used is: 'not a true bill,' or 'not found'; or the jury are said to 'ignore' the bill.

Ignorantia facti excusat, ignorantia juris non excusat. (Ignorance of the fact excuses; ignorance of the law excuses not.) The maxim is often cited simply as Ignorantia legis [or juris] neminem excusat. Therefore, first, money paid with full knowledge of the facts, but through ignorance of the law, is not recoverable if there be nothing against conscience in retaining it; and, secondly, money paid in ignorance of the facts is recoverable, provided there have been no laches in the party paying it. See MISTAKE. In criminal cases this maxim applies, as if a man should think he has a right to kill a person excommunicated or outlawed wherever he meets him and does so, this is murder. But a mistake of fact is an excuse, as where a man, intending to kill a thief or house-breaker in his own house, by mistake kills one of his own family, this is no criminal action; see 4 Bl. Com. 27. Consult Broom's Leg. Max.

Ignoratio elenchii, an overlooking of the adversary's counterposition in an argument.

Ignore, to throw out a bill of indictment.

Ikenild Street. See HIKENILDE STREET.

Illegal Contract, an agreement to do any act forbidden either (1) by the Common Law, such as agreements to commit a crime or tort, or as for rent of lodgings let for prostitution (Jennings v. Brown, (1842) 9 M. & W. 496); or for price of indecent picture (Fores v. Johnes, (1802) 4 Esp. 97); or in prejudice to the administration of justice (Windhill Local Board v. Vint, (1890) 45 Ch. D. 351); or (2) by statute, as by hire of a room for a lecture in contravention of the Blasphemy Act (Cowan v. Milbourn, (1867) L. R. 2 Ex. 230; but see Re Bowman, 1915, 2 Ch. 447), or a contract by a servant of a local authority with such authority, in contravention of s. 193 of the Public Health Act, 1875; also contracts in unreasonable restraint of trade; general restraint of marriage; trading with the enemy; compounding felonies; maintenance or champerty, etc. A breach of promise of marriage by a married man pending divorce after decree nisi may be actionable (Fender v. Midmay, (1937) 53 T. L. R. 885). Illegality supervening by act or change in the law terminates the contract. See Leake or Chitty on Contracts; Ogden on the Common Law. An illegal contract cannot be sued on. See maxim: IN PARI DELICTO MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS; and CONTRACT; IMPOSSIBILITY.

Illegal Practices. See CORRUPT PRACTICES; CORRUPTION.

Illegitimacy. See BASTARD.

Illeivable, a debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied.

Illicit, unlawful, as an illicit sale of intoxicating liquor by retail—e.g., without licence, in contravention of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910.

Illicite, unlawfully.

Illicitum collegium (an illegal corporation).

Illocable, incapable of being placed out or hired.—Bailey.

Illusory Appointments Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 46). This statute enacted that no appointment made after July 16th, 1830, in exercise of a power to appoint property, real or personal, among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in equity, on the ground that an unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in equity as at law. See also the Powers of Appointment Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 37) ('Lord Selborne's Act'), by which appointments were validated, although one or more of the objects may have been excluded. These two Acts were repealed and reproduced by s. 158 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which extends the rule to appointments whenever made. For the old law, consult Farwell on Powers, 8th ed., 938.

Illustrious, the prefix to the title of a prince of the blood.

Images. See ORNAMENTS RUBRIC.

Iman, Imam, or Imaum, a Mohammedan prince, having supreme spiritual as well as temporal power; a regular priest of the mosque.

Imbargo. See EMBARGO.

Imbasing of Money, mixing specie with an alloy below the standard of sterling.—1 Hale's P. C. 102.

Imbeciles, 'persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness not amounting to idiocy, yet so pronounced that they are incapable of managing themselves or their affairs, or, in the case of children, of being taught to do so' (Mental Deficiency Act, 1927, s. 1 (1) (b)). See IDIOT.

Imbecillity. Weakness of tenure, e.g., leasehold contrasted with freehold (Brediman's Case, 6 Rep. 56 b).

Imbezzle. See EMBEZZLE.

Imbracery. See EMBRACERY.

Imbrocus, a brook, gutter, or water-passage.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Immaterial Averment, an unnecessary statement. See IMPERTINENCE.

Immaterial Issue, an issue upon a point or ground which will not decide the action. See ISSUE.

Immediately, in a statute, means within a reasonable time. See Maxwell on Statutes, 2nd ed. 423.

Immemorial Usage, a practice which has existed time out of mind; custom; prescription.—See MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL.

Immoral Contracts, contracts founded upon considerations contra bonos mores, are void. Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. But where a contract founded upon an immoral consideration has been executed, neither law nor equity will interfere to set it aside if both parties have been equally in fault, for in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis.

Yet a contract under seal, made in consideration of past seduction or cohabitation, can be enforced; not because it is binding in honour and conscience, for such a reason is not sufficient, but because it is a specialty (see CONTRACT), and has not been made for an executory consideration of an illegal nature. A covenant to pay money in consideration of future cohabitation is void, though under seal (Ayerst v. Jenkins, (1873) L. R. 16 Eq. 275). See ILLEGAL CONTRACT.

Immovable, not to be forced from its place, the characteristic of things real, or land. The courts of one country in general have no jurisdiction over immovables situate out of that country (see British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Mozambique, 1893, A. C. 602). Also in foreign systems of law a term of the capital division of things into movable and immovable instead of real and personal.

Immunity, exemption.

Impalare, to put in a pound.—Du Cange.

Impanel, or Impannel, the writing and entering of the names of a jury in a parchment schedule by the sheriff.

Impargamentum, the right of impounding cattle.

Imparl, to have licence to settle a litigation amicably, to obtain delay for adjustment.

Imparlance [fr. licentia loquendi, Lat.], time to plead; also when a court gives a party leave to answer or plead at another time, without the assent of the other party. Abolished by r. 31, T. T. 1853.

Imparsonee, a clergyman inducted into a benefice. See INDUCTION.

Impatronization, the act of putting into full possession of a benefice.

Impeachment, a prosecution by the House of Commons before the House of Lords of any person, either peer or commoner, for treason, or other high crimes and misdemeanours, or of a peer for any crime; in modern times rarely been resorted to, though in former periods of our history of frequent occurrence. The last memorable cases are those of Warren Hastings, in 1788, and Lord Melville, in 1805.

As to the procedure, see May's Parliamentary Practice.

Impeachment of Waste. See ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI; WASTE AND SETTLED LAND.

Impechiare, to impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

Impediatus. See EXPEDITATE.

Impediens, a defendant or deforciant.

Impedimentum dirimens, 'cause or impediment' to marriage which is not removed by the actual solemnization of the rite, but continues in force and makes the marriage null and void (opposed to impedimentum impediens). See Sanchez de Matrimonio, lib. 7, disputatio 6.

Imperfect obligations, moral duties, such as charity, gratitude, etc., which cannot be enforced by law. For an instance of payment of a debt of honour out of a lunatic's estate under very special circumstances, see Re Whitaker, (1889) 42 Ch. D. 119.

Imperfect Trust, an executory trust, which has not been sufficiently declared or constituted, something remaining to be done to perfect it, will not be enforced in equity if it is purely voluntary; see CONSIDERATION and Re Pryce, Neville v. Pryce, (1916) 86 L. J. Ch. 383; and see EXECUTED TRUST.

Imperial. Pertaining to the whole Empire as distinguished from the United Kingdom only (see the Imperial Defence Act, 1888), or to the United Kingdom as distinguished from parts of that kingdom, as where it is said that local government may weaken Imperial control.

Imperial Preference. Preferential customs, rates and other trade advantages agreed to be conceded by the British Government of the United Kingdom on goods consigned from and grown, produced or manufactured in the British Empire, i.e. (for this purpose), the Dominions including India, territories under protection and mandated territories, by Order in Council. See Finance Act, 1919, s. 8, as amended by the Import Duties Act, 1932, s. 21; and see the Ottawa Agreements Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32), giving effect to the Ottawa Conference by modification of customs duties and providing further for Imperial preference; see also Isle of Man Customs Acts, 1933 and 1934.

Imperial Service Order, The. An order founded in 1902 as a reward to civil servants for long and good service.

Imperitia culpæ annumeratur. Jur. Civ.—(Want of skill is reckoned as a fault.)

Imperium, right to command, an attribute of executive power.

Impertinence. Not pertinent to the cause of action or to the issues raised in an action. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 27, any unnecessary pleading may be struck out by order of the court or a judge: see Millington v. Loring, (1880) 6 Q. B. D. 190; Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 1894, A. C. at p. 495.

Imprecatus, impeached or accused.—Jac. Law Dict.

Impetito. See IMPEACHMENT.

Impetration, acquiring anything by request and prayer.—See 38 Edw. 3, st. 2.

Impier, umpire, which see.

Impierment, impairing or prejudicing.—See 23 Hen. 8, c. 9.

Impignoration, the act of pawning or putting to pledge.

Implead, to sue or prosecute.

Implicata [Ital.]. In order to avoid the risk of making fruitless voyages, merchants have been in the habit of receiving small adventures on freight at so much per cent., to which they are entitled at all events, even if the adventure be lost.—Merc. Law.

Implication, a necessary or presumable inference, not directly declared, arising out of acts or words in evidence (see Jarman or Theobald on Wills). Many implications are statutory. See, e.g., Sale of Goods Act, 1893, the terms implied in a contract for work and labour, and materials supplied are the same as upon a sale of goods under s. 14 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (Myers & Co. v. Brent Cross Service Co., 1934, 1 K. B. 46); Law of Property Act, 1925 (implied covenants). An implication may be removed by express words supplying the agreed meaning which would otherwise have been left to inference. See the maxim: EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS.

Implied Condition. See CONDITION.

Implied Contract. A contract which the law infers, from acts, circumstances, or relationships, as that an employer will pay the person employed what his labour was worth; or, as in Francis v. Cockrell, (1870) L. R. 5 Q. B. 501, that a public platform provided for payment may be used with safety; or that a mesne landlord whose ground-rent has been paid by a sub-tenant to avoid distress will reimburse the sub-tenant. The implied contracts which the law infers are very numerous. See Chitty, Addison, or Leake on Contracts; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Implied Covenants. See DEMISE; FURTHER ASSURANCE; QUIET ENJOYMENT; and ss. 76 and 77 and 2nd Sched. Law of Property Act, 1925, in regard to assurances as 'beneficial owner.' Formerly, the words 'give' or 'grant' implied covenants for title, see COVENANT; 'demise' in a lease still implies a covenant for title and for quiet enjoyment, but may be modified or excluded by an express covenant.

Implied Grant or Estate. See WILD'S CASE; TAIL; SHELLEY'S CASE; also GENERAL WORDS.

Implied Trusts. An implied trust is one which arises from an equitable construction put upon the facts, conduct, or situation of parties.

Implied trusts have been distributed into two classes: (1) those depending upon the presumed intent of the parties, as where property is delivered by one to another to be handed over to a third person, the receiver holds it upon an implied trust in favour of such third person; (2) those not depending upon such intention, but arising by operation of law, in cases of fraud, or notice of an adverse equity.

A trust of this kind arises wherever the estate is converted by the trustee from one species of property into another; for if the property, in its original form, were invested with a trust, the cestui que trust's interests cannot be affected by any change of that form; and whether the conversion be in pursuance or in breach of the trustee's duty is immaterial; for an abuse of trust cannot confer any right on the party abusing it, or on those who claim in privity with him. See CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST. Consult Lewin or Godefroi on Trusts.

Importation, the bringing goods and merchandise into this country from abroad.

Imports, goods or produce brought into a country from abroad. See Import Duties Act, 1932.

Imposition, tax, contribution.

Impossibility. If a man contract to do a thing which is absolutely impossible by its nature, such contract will not bind him—lex non cogit ad impossibilia, e.g., where the subject-matter has perished before date of contract, or never existed (see Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 6; and Conturrier v. Hastie, (1852) 8 Ex. 43 & H. L. C. 673); but where the contract operating as a transfer of real property, e.g., as a demise, is to do a thing which is possible in itself, but which becomes impossible, he will be liable for the breach; thus, where a lessee covenants to repair and to leave in repair the demised premises he is not discharged from his liability because they happen to be destroyed (see Bullock v. Dommitt, (1796) 6 T. R. 650); or requisitioned by the military (Whitehall Court Ltd. v. Etlinger, 1920, 1 K. B. 680).

The non-performance of a contract which arises from an act of the law having rendered performance impossible is excused: see Baily v. De Crespigny, (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. 180; Re Shipton, 1915, 3 K. B. 676.

The perishing of the subject-matter of a contract in cases where it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of its continued existence is also an excuse for non-performance; if the event has not been foreseen or expressly provided for in the contract, the event is now called 'frustration' of the contract or adventure: see Taylor v. Caldwell, (1863) 3 B. & S. 326, where the defendant was held excused from payment of damages for non-performance of an agreement to let a music-hall to the plaintiff for entertainments for four non-consecutive days, by reason of the hall having been burnt down before the first of the days arrived; and the principle of this case was applied in Krell v. Henry, 1903, 2 K. B. 740, where the contract was to pay for a flat from which to view the Coronation procession on two fixed days. See also Elliott v. Crutchley, 1906, A. C. 7. In Minnevrith v. Café de Paris (Londres), 52 T. L. R. 413, it was held that the closing of a café during a period of public mourning did not render a contract for band performances there reasonably impossible. As to the effect of a declaration of war upon a contract of agency in an alien territory, see Jebara v. Ottoman Bank, 1927, 2 K. B. 254; 1928, A. C. 269. A feature of a contract which has been terminated in this way is that money paid or the price of services rendered before the termination cannot be recovered (see Blakely v. Muller, 1903, 2 K. B. 760, in notis, and Cantiere di San Rocco v. Clyde Shipbuilding Co., 1924, A. C. 226), unless (presumably), the whole of the contract has been performed on the one side and nothing in consideration thereof has been done by the other. Frustration of a contract by act of the party relying upon it will prevent him from taking any advantage of the circumstance (Maritime National Fish Co. v. Ocean Trawlers Ltd., 1935, A. C. 524).

Impossibility owing to illness terminates a contract for personal services. The outbreak of war may terminate an executory contract, but only suspends the remedies if it has been executed.—Halsb. L. E.; Hailsham, edn., tit. 'Contracts', p. 261, and see generally (ibid.), pp. 213, etc. See Addison, Chitty, or Leake on Contracts.

Impost [fr. impôt, Fr.; impositum, Lat.], any tax or tribute imposed by authority; particularly a tax or duty laid by government on goods imported.

Impotence, physical inability of a man or woman to perform the act of sexual intercourse. A marriage is void if, at the time of the celebration, either of the parties to it is incurably impotent, and may be declared void by a decree in a suit of nullity of marriage. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE. As to 'Oath of Calumny' (q.v.) in Scottish actions of divorce and nullity, see Court of Session Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 69), s. 36.

Impotentia excusat legem. For an instance of the application of this maxim, see Eager v. Furnivall, (1881) 17 Ch. D. p. 121.

Impotentiam, propter, Property, a qualified property, which may subsist in animals feræ naturæ, on account of their inability when they are young: the landowner has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires.—2 Steph. Com., bk. ii., ch. i.

Impound, to place a suspected document in the custody of the law, when it is produced at a trial. As to custody of documents impounded by the Court, see R. S. C. Ord. XLII., r. 334.

Impounding Distress. Placing cattle, etc., after they have been distressed, in a pound (see that title) or other safe place for custody, which safe place may, by virtue of the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 10, in the case of distress upon a tenant for rent, be on the demised premises themselves. The Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27), obliges the person impounding any animal to provide it with sufficient and wholesome food and water.

Imprescriptible Rights, such as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

Impressing Men, compelling persons to serve in the Navy. This practice is allowed at Common Law (see Ex parte Fox, (1793) 5 T. R. 277), and was extensively followed until 1815, when it began to be gradually abandoned for the recruiting by voluntary enlistment, which has now entirely displaced it. The practice is still clearly legal, and is recognized impliedly by the Naval Enlistment Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 24), which, however, provides that no person shall be detained in the Royal Navy, against his consent, for a longer period than five years except in case of emergency. See also the Naval Enlistment Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 69), which, perhaps, has the effect of limiting the liability to serve to seafaring men. Under the Army Act (s. 112) and Air Force Act the Crown has power to impress carriages, animals, drivers and aircraft for moving baggage and stores, etc. Compensation is payable, see Army Act, s. 113, and Sched.

Impression. See PRIMÆ IMPRESSIONIS.

Imprest Money, money paid on enlisting soldiers or sailors.

Impretiabilis, invaluable.—Mat. Paris.

Imprimatur, a licence to print or publish.

Imprimery, a print or impression.—Jac. Law Dict.

Imprimis (in the first place).

Imprisil, adherents or accomplices.—Mat. Paris, 127.

Imprisonment, the restraint of a person's liberty under the custody of another. It extends in law to confinement not only in a gaol, but in a house, or stocks, or to holding a man in the street, etc.; for in all these cases the person so restrained is said to be a prisoner, so long as he has not his liberty freely to go about his business as at other times.—Co. Litt. 253. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Imprisonment for Crime.—Any common law misdemeanour is punishable after conviction on indictment by fine or imprisonment or both, at the discretion of the Court. Imprisonment for not more than two years is very frequently authorized, as an alternative to penal servitude, by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, and other Acts set out in Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law.' As to the right of any person convicted by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction to appeal, provided that he did not plead guilty or admit the truth of the information, see ss. 19 and 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, as amended by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 38); this Act now regulates the procedure on appeal to Quarter Sessions; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices.' Important alterations in the law relating to imprisonment have been introduced by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914; see especially s. 3 and ss. 16-18; and see the Money Payments (Justices Procedure) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 46), as to imprisonment, detention in a police court, or supervision in case where money is adjudged to be paid by a Court of summary jurisdiction by a conviction.

Imprisonment of Children.—By the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 22), s. 52, replacing with amendments s. 102 of the Children Act, 1908, a child under 14 cannot be sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude for any offence, or committed to prison in default of payment of a fine, damages, or costs, and a young person (i.e., one who is 14 but under 17) cannot be sentenced to penal servitude for any offence, and cannot be imprisoned unless the Court certifies that the young person is of so unruly a character that he cannot be detained in a place of detention provided by the Act or that he is of so depraved a character that he is not a fit person to be so detained. The Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, s. 1, also provides for a person, who is not less than 16 nor more than 21, being sent to a Borstal Institution.

By the Money Payments (Justices Procedure) Act, 1935, a person under 21 is not to be imprisoned for non-payment of a sum payable upon conviction for which he has been allowed time unless he has been placed under supervision (s. 6).

Imprisonment for Debt.—As to this, before 1870, see MESNE PROCESS. The Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Debt'), by s. 4, abolished imprisonment for debt with six exceptions; but, subject to Rules of Court, by s. 5, allows commitment to prison of a judgment debtor for not more than six weeks; this jurisdiction is now exercised only by the Bankruptcy Court and the County Courts (see County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 96, 143 (5)). Section 4 of the Debtors Act, 1869, enacts that:—

With the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, no person shall, after the commencement of this Act, be arrested or imprisoned for making default in payment of a sum of money.

There shall be excepted from the operation of the above enactment:

(1) Default in payment of a penalty, or sum in the nature of a penalty, other than a penalty in respect of any contract:

(2) Default in payment of any sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace; (see R. v. Pratt, (1870) L. R. 5 Q. B. 176).

(3) Default by a trustee or person acting in a fiduciary capacity and ordered to pay by a Court of Equity any sum in his possession or under his control; (see Morris v. Ingram, (1879) 13 Ch. D. 338; Re Smith, 1893, 2 Ch. 1).

(4) Default by an attorney or solicitor in payment of costs when ordered to pay costs for misconduct as such, or in payment of a sum of money when ordered to pay the same in his character of an officer of the court making the order; (see Re Strong, (1886) 32 Ch. D. 342).

(5) Default in payment for the benefit of creditors of any portion of a salary or other income in respect of the payment of which any Court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy is authorized to make an order:

(6) Default in payment of sums in respect of the payment of which orders are in this Act authorized to be made.

As to imprisonment for non-payment of payments in bastardy or under affiliation orders, or of rates under the Bastardy Laws (Amendment) Act, 1872, or the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, respectively, the Money

Payments (Justices Procedure) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 46), provides that the warrant of commitment is not to issue if the justices are of opinion that failure to pay was not due to wilful refusal or culpable neglect with power to remit all or any of the debt under consideration.

Impristl, those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defence or otherwise.

Improbation, the disproving or setting aside of deeds and writings ex facie probative on the ground of falsehood or forgery. Bell's Dict.

Improper Feuds, derivative feuds; as, for instance, those that were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honourable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service, or were themselves alienable, without mutual licence, or descended indifferently to males or females.

Impropriation, the act of employing the revenues of a church living to a layman's use. See APPROPRIATION and LAY IMPROPRIATOR.

Improvement Act District. Defined by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4, as 'any area subject to the jurisdiction of any commissioners, trustees, or other persons invested by any local Act with powers of town government and rating.'

Improvement. As to construction of covenant to communicate and give benefit of 'improvements,' see Hopkins v. Linotype Co. (1910) 101 L. T. 898.

Improvement, Agricultural. See AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT.

Improvement Area. Local authorities who have passed a resolution under the provisions of the Housing Act, 1930, s. 7, declaring an area (under conditions similar to those indicated in regard to clearance areas) to be an improvement area, may call upon owners to demolish houses which are unfit for habitation or else to execute all necessary works by notice under ss. 9 (1) and 19 of the Housing Act, 1936, and may also purchase land for opening out the area by agreement or compulsorily; see ss. 38 and 39 of the 1936 Act.

Before taking action under the resolution the local authority must give an undertaking to find suitable accommodation for persons who may be displaced from working-class houses. Compensation to owners upon expropriation is provided for by ss. 40 and 42 and the 4th Schedule. Owners may appeal to the county court against demolition orders under s. 15. The general procedure is regulated by s. 38 and the 1st Sched. See Housing Act, 1936; IMPROVEMENT OF TOWNS.

Improvement of Land. The improvement of Land Acts, 1864 and 1899 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114, and 62 & 63 Vict. c. 46), enumerate a number of 'improvements' such as the following: (1) Drainage; (2) Irrigation and Warping; (3) Embanking from the sea, etc.; (4) Inclosing, and redivision of fields; (5) Reclamation; (6) Making roads, tramways, railways, and canals; (7) Clearing; (8) Erection and improvement of cottages and farm buildings; (9) Planting for shelter; (10) Construction of mills, etc.; (11) Construction of landing-places; and allowed tenants for life to charge the cost of such improvements upon the fee of a settled estate with the sanction of the Inclosure Commissioners, after notice to persons in remainder, and certain specifications and surveys;—the sanction of the Commissioners to be given 'if they found (s. 25) that the improvements would effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the lands proposed to be improved.' The Acts have been amended by the Agricultural Credits Act, 1923: see s. 3. The Settled Land Act, 1925, extends the powers of a tenant for life to apply capital money to effect improvements for the benefit of settled land which were conferred by the Settled Land Acts, 1882-1890 without any scheme required by the earlier Acts for approval by the Court or trustees. For the list, see 3rd Sched (ibid.), Part I. (cost not replaceable by instalments extending over 25 years or less), Part II. (replaceable by instalments if the Court or trustees so determine), Part III. (replaceable by instalments in any case), and see also Agricultural Holdings Act, 1st Sched., Parts I. and II. See also Universities and College Estates Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 24). The improvements authorized being those mentioned in the Improvement of Land Act, with many additions.

Mansion-houses, by the Limited Owners Residences Acts, 1870 and 1871 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 56, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 84); works for supply of sewage for agricultural purposes, by Public Health Act, 1875, s. 31; and reservoirs, by the Limited Owners Reservoirs and Water-Supply Further Facilities Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 31), s. 5, are also 'improvements' within the Improvement of Land Act, 1864. See also Housing Act, 1936, and DRAINAGE.

Improvement of Towns. The Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict.

c. 34), 'comprises in one Act sundry provisions usually contained in 'special Acts of Parliament theretofore passed 'for paving, draining, cleansing, lighting, and improving towns and populous districts,' to avoid the necessity for repeating such provisions in each special Act, and to ensure greater uniformity in the provisions themselves.

Of this Act, ss. 64-83, which relate to the naming of streets and numbering of houses, to the improving the line of streets and removal of obstructions, to the securing or demolition of ruinous buildings, and to the taking precaution during the erection of works, and ss. 125-131, which relate to slaughter-houses, are incorporated with the Public Health Act, 1875, by ss. 160, 169, of that Act.

The Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 48), a codifying Act, repealing the Town and Country Planning Act, 1925, authorizes local authorities (defined by s. 2) to make schemes for the development and planning of land, whether urban or rural, whether or not there are buildings thereon in order to control its development, protect existing rural and urban amenities and preserve buildings and other objects of interest and beauty, and for garden cities. Schemes must be approved by the Minister of Health with or without modifications (ss. 6 and 8). By s. 12 schemes may provide for prescribing the space about buildings or limiting their number, regulating their size, height, design and external appearance, user, or prohibiting or regulating building operations with powers of demolition or otherwise effecting the scheme. And the Minister may make orders for the interim development of land (s. 10). Buildings of special interest, and by s. 46, trees or woodlands may be preserved; land required for the purposes of the scheme or for open spaces and playing fields may be acquired, and s. 47 gives powers to control advertisements affecting the amenities of land specified in a scheme. The provisions relating to compensation are elaborate and detailed, and generally require expert assistance in each particular case (ss. 18 et seq.). Where, however, land is increased in value under the heading of betterment (see R. v. Webster, ex p. Young, 152 L. T. 535), by the operation of the scheme or works provided for, up to 75 per cent. of the amount of the increase may be recovered from owners (s. 21); see BETTERMENT.

As to reasonableness of byelaws for preserving the amenities of the countryside, see

Baird v. Glasgow Corporation (H. L. Scot.), 1936, A. C. 32.

Impruare, to improve land.

Imputatio [Lat.], legal liability.—Civ. Law.

In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis. Plow. 296.—(When the rights are equal the condition of the possessor is the better.)

Inalienable, not transferable.

In alio loco [Lat.] (in another place).

In Angliā non est interregnum. Jenk. Cent. 205.—(In England there is no interregnum.)

In articulo mortis [Lat.] (at the point of death).

Inauguration, the act of inducting into office with solemnity, as the coronation of the sovereign, or the consecration of a prelate.

In auter, or autre, droit (in another's right).

In banco, or banc, Sittings. See BANC.

Inbound Common, an unenclosed common, marked out, however, by boundaries.

In camerā. See CAMERA.

Incastellare, to make a building serve as a castle.—Jac. Law Dict.

In casu extremæ necessitatis omnia sunt communia. Hale, P. C. 54.—(In a case of extreme necessity everything is in common.)

Incaustum, or Encaustum, ink.—Fleta, 1, 2, c. xxvii., p. 5.

Incendiary. See ARSON.

Incense. The ceremonial use of incense immediately before the celebration of the Holy Communion, so as to be preparatory or subsidiary to the celebration of the Holy Communion is unlawful (Sumner v. Wix, (1870) L. R. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 58).

Incerta pro nullis habentur. Dav. 33.—(Things uncertain are reckoned as nothing.)

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. 1 Roll. Rep. 465.—(An uncertain quantity vitiates the deed.) But see CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDDI POTEST.

Incest, carnal knowledge of persons within the Levitical degrees of kindred, at one time a capital offence (4 Bl. Com. 65); but subsequently left to the action of the spiritual courts.—4 Steph. Com. It is now within certain relationships, whether legitimate or illegitimate, including a half-brother and half-sister, a misdemeanour, punishable by seven years' penal servitude by virtue of the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 45). See R. v. Ball, 1911, A. C. 47. Sect. 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922, repeals the provision in the Act of 1908 which necessitated the trial of all proceedings under that Act being held in camerā (q.v.).

Inchartare, to give or grant, and assure anything by a written instrument.—Mat. Par.

Inch of Candle, a mode of sale at one time in use among merchants; the goods to be sold were divided into lots, and at the sale a small piece of candle, about an inch long, was kept burning, and the last bidder, when the candle went out, was entitled to the lot for which he bid.—Jac. Law Dict.

Inchoate, begun, but not completed. By the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 20, 'a simple signature on a blank stamped paper,' delivered by the signer in order that it may be converted into a bill, 'operates as a primæ facie authority to fill it up as a complete bill for any amount the stamp will cover, using the signature for that of the drawer, or the acceptor, or an indorser.'

Incident, a thing necessarily depending upon, appertaining to, or following another that is more worthy—as rent is incident to a reversion, and as a court-baron is incident to a manor.

Incipitur (it is begun). This was the technical commencement of a declaration, demurrer-book, judgment, etc.

Incite. It is a Common Law misdemeanour to incite any person to commit a crime. If the crime be actually committed, he who has incited another to the deed is, in the case of felony, an accessory before the fact; in the case of treason or misdemeanour, a principal.

Incitement to Disaffection Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 56). This Act provides for the prevention and punishment of endeavours to seduce members of His Majesty's Forces from their duty or allegiance; and it is an offence to distribute literature with such an aim among members of His Majesty's Forces; a search warrant may be granted in certain cases. The penalty on indictment may be two years or a fine up to 200*l.*, or on summary conviction, four months' imprisonment or up to 20*l.*, or in either case to both imprisonment and fine. Cf. Public Order Act, 1936.

Incidvile est, nisi totâ sententiâ inspectâ, de aliqua parte judicare. Hob. 171.—(It is improper to judge of any part unless the whole sentence be examined.)

Incivism, unfriendliness to the state or government of which one is a citizen.

Inclausa, a home-close, or inclosure near a house.

Inclosure, the fencing in by the lord of a manor of common or waste land for the purpose of cultivation. The Common Law power (see APPROVEMENT) has been extended and regulated under very numerous private and also by public Acts, with the aid of 'Inclosure Commissioners,' whose powers under the Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118), are now vested in the Ministry of Agriculture. Under the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 83, and see 3rd Sched., Part I., inclosing is an improvement for which no replacement of money is required and includes inclosing a garden by walls; see Re Earl of Dunraven's Settled Estates, 1907, 2 Ch. 417. See Cooke on Inclosures, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Inclosure'; and COMMONS.

Income-tax, a tax of so much in the pound of income, under five classifications, according as derived from (A) ownership of land or houses, etc., (B) occupation of land or houses, etc., (C) dividends from stocks or shares, (D) professional or trade earnings or profits, and any profit not included in the four previous classifications, and (E) official and other salaries. The Acts on this subject, dating from the Income-tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), which, to a great extent, repeats the phraseology of Addington's Act of 1806, are very numerous. Voluntary Easter gifts to an incumbent are assessable to income-tax (Cooper v. Blakiston, 1909, A. C. 104). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Property Tax.'

The tax in 1842, and for many years afterwards, was 7d. in the pound; in 1855, the year of the Crimean War, it rose to 1s. 4d., and in 1918 to 6s. The Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 13), for the first time differentiated (ss. 19 et seq.) between 'earned income' and income from other sources, and also laid down some stringent provisions with regard to making returns of income. For the present law, and the various abatements and exemptions, which have become extremely complicated, see the current Finance Acts, and consult the latest editions of Dowell or Konstam on Income Tax. See SUPER-TAX.

In commendam. See COMMENDAM.

In contractibus benigna, in testamentis benignior, in restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. Co. Litt. 112.—(In contracts the interpretation is to be liberal, in wills more liberal, in restitutions most liberal.)

In contractis tacite insunt quæ sunt moris et consuetudinis. (Persons are presumed to contract with reference to habits and customs).

In conventionibus contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectari placuit. (In agreements the intention of the parties, rather than the words actually used, should be regarded.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Incopolitus, a proctor or vicar.

Incorporated. The legal meaning of the term is 'united in a legal body' (Society of Accountants v. Goodway, 1907, 1 Ch. p. 496, per Warrington, J.).

Incorporated Law Society, now termed the Law Society, was founded by Mr. Bryan Holme in 1825, and incorporated in 1831 by Royal Charter; this was surrendered for a new Charter in 1845, by which, as amended by Supplemental Charters in 1872, 1903, and 1909, the Society now remains constituted. The Society was incorporated 'to facilitate the acquisition of legal knowledge, and for better and more conveniently discharging the professional duties of the members of the Society,' under the full title of 'The Society of Attorneys, Solicitors, Proctors, and others not being Barristers practising in the Courts of Law and Equity of the United Kingdom'; since the charter of 1903 it has been officially (as before then commonly) called 'The Law Society.'

The Society first instituted lectures for students in 1833, and was made registrar of attorneys and solicitors in 1843 by the Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 21.

On the decay of the Inns of Chancery, which in their later aspect were the Inns specially appropriated to attorneys, a Society was formed called 'The Society of Gentlemen Practisers in the several Courts of Law and Equity.' It was established in 1739, and was active and prosperous, at least until 1810. Mr. Bryan Holme was a member of this Society, and his portrait now hangs in the Law Society's Hall.

A Metropolitan Law Society was also formed in 1819, and there seems no doubt that the Law Society is the successor both of these two earlier professional Societies and of the Inns of Chancery.

The official account of the objects and constitution of the Society will be found in the Society's Handbook published in 1933.

The Society is, in the first place, a voluntary association of solicitors for their mutual protection and benefit, and in this connection is regulated by its charters and bye-laws. In the second place, it is a body exercising statutory powers affecting the profession generally. In this capacity the Society performs the duties of Registrar of Solicitors, has the custody of the Roll of Solicitors, conducts the examination of articulated clerks, deals, subject to appeal, with all applications for admission and for renewal of practising certificates, and exercises various powers as regards proceedings against unqualified persons: see the Solicitors Act, 1933 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37). Further statutory powers are vested in the Committee appointed by the Master of the Rolls under s. 4 of the Act, by whom all complaints against Solicitors for professional misconduct are heard. Under s. 5, the Committee can suspend or strike off the roll an offender, subject to a right of appeal to the Court (s. 8); see Encyclopædia of the Laws of England.

Every person who is or has been a practising solicitor in England or Ireland, or a writer to the signet, or writer in Scotland, is qualified to become a member of the Society. An applicant for admission must be proposed by a member and balloted for by the council, the governing body of the Society (see Bye-laws of the Society, Nos. 2 and 3). The Council consists of 50 members, of whom 40 are ordinary members, and are elected by the members of the Society. In addition, there are 10 extraordinary members elected by the Council on the nomination of the Provincial Law Societies. The duties of the Council are numerous and important. It examines through various committees all Bills brought into Parliament, and makes such remarks and suggestions as appear to it necessary (see General Regulations, No. 39) and organizes opposition to such as appear to affect injuriously the rights and privileges of members. The Society has long been active in supporting legal reforms, and is now usually referred to for suggestions and remarks on Bills affecting the principles or practice of the law, and upon all new rules and orders. Many reforms in law and practice have been initiated, and numerous Acts of Parliament have originated with or have been supported by the Society. Questions of professional practice and etiquette are almost daily being referred to the Council, and they also assist the members of the Society by giving information on new points of law or practice, and by obtaining judicial decisions on doubtful questions of general interest. The Council also advise members through the Scale Committee on questions relating to costs. A library containing upwards of 67,000 volumes, and a hall supplied with current publications and books of reference, the daily cause lists, telegraphic exchange news and telephone, and a conference-room are open daily for the use of members.

Classes and postal tuition for articled clerks form part of the Society's scheme of legal education.

A Provincial Meeting is usually held in the autumn of each year on the invitation of one of the country Law Societies. At these meetings an address by the President and other papers are read and discussed; and social gatherings, entertainments, and excursions are arranged.

Provincial Law Societies on somewhat similar lines have been established in various parts of the country.

Incorporation, the formation of a legal body, with the quality of perpetual existence and succession, except as limited by the Royal Charter or Act of Parliament effecting the incorporation.

Municipal Boroughs are incorporated by their charters; County Councils by s. 79 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41); see also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 2; Joint Stock Companies either by special Act or under the Companies Acts.

Incorporation by Reference, of an earlier statute by a later, judicially stigmatized in Knill v. Towse, (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 186. Whether there can ever be incorporation by implication is very doubtful; see per Farwell, L.J., in Chislett v. Macbeth, 1909, 2 K. B. at p. 815, and Lord Loreburn, L.C., Ib., 1910, A. C. at p. 223. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Incorporeal Chattels, incorporeal rights incident to chattels—e.g., patent rights and copyrights.—2 Steph. Com.

Incorporeal Hereditament. See HEREDITAMENT.

Increase, Affidavit of. Affidavit of payment of increased costs, produced on taxation. 'Of the costs of the pleadings, and the office fees of the proceedings, in the cause down to trial, the record will, in general, sufficiently inform the taxing-master; but the amount of the costs of the trial, including the evidence and the subpoenaing of and any payment to witnesses, counsel, and court fees, must be supported by affidavit, commonly called the 'Affidavit of Increase': Gray on Costs. See also Annual Practice, 1937, R. S. C. Ord. LXV., r. 16, and note. For forms of affidavit, see Chitty's Forms and Scott on Costs.

Increase of Rent and Mortgage (Restrictions) Acts. A series of statutes, each of a temporary character, curtailing the contractual rights, in respect of certain classes of property, of landlords and mortgagees. This legislation was rendered necessary, in the first instance, by the conditions caused by the outbreak of the Great War. The continuance of the protection to tenants and mortgagees of dwelling-houses afforded by the later Acts was made necessary by the housing shortage, caused principally by the economic effects of the war. The Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 78), was the first of such Acts: it restricted the right to levy distress or resume possession of property by landlords and of mortgagees to foreclose or realize their security. This Act was followed by a series of complicated statutes which imposed restrictions on increasing the rent and mortgage interest on properties falling within their scope. The obscure and ambiguous drafting of these Acts has given rise to much litigation: see Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17); and parts of the Rent Restrictions (Notices of Increase) Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 13); and Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 32), and the rules made thereunder; and also the Prevention of Eviction Act, 1924. The principal Acts now in force are the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920; the Rent Restrictions (Notices of Increase) Act, 1923; the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923; the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933; and the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935, all of which may be cited together as the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1935, and the rules and regulations made thereunder in respect of Overcrowding and Housing. See those titles.

In substance the Rent Restriction Acts now affect houses which were erected before 2nd April, 1919, and now called 'Class B' houses, of which either the rent or the rateable value on 6th April, 1931, in the Administrative County of London (see Halsb. L. E., vol. 20, p. 393, note (h)) did not exceed in the metropolitan police district 45*l.* per annum; in Scotland 45*l.*; and elsewhere 35*l.*; and 'Class C' houses, of which on the same date the rateable value did not exceed in the metropolitan police district or the City of London 20*l.*; in Scotland 26*l.* 5*s.*, or elsewhere 13*l.* Houses in Class B are decontrolled if the landlord was in possession on 31st July, 1923, or the landlord has regained or regains possession, of the whole house at any time after 31st July, 1923, or for other reasons under s. 2 of the Act of 1920, or otherwise under the Acts. But Class C houses, which were let on 24th June, 1933, cannot be decontrolled under s. 2 of 1920, after 24th June, 1933, and if such houses were decontrolled before that date under s. 2 of 1920, and have not been registered as provided by s. 2 of 1933, the decontrol is suspended until registration (see Stokes v. Little, 1935, 1 K. B. 182).

'Controlled' or 'statutory tenancy' means that the rent is limited by those Acts and that the tenancy cannot be determined unless the conditions specified by the Acts come into existence. The rent is measured by the rent paid or estimated to have been payable for the house on 4th August, 1914. This rent is called the 'standard rent.' After deduction of the rates, if any, included in the rent and payable by the landlord at that time the rent is called the 'net rent,' and if rates were not so included the net rent is the standard rent (s. 12 of 1920). The landlord is allowed to increase the standard rent (a) by the increase of current rates payable by him; (b) by 15 per cent. of the net rent; and (c) by 25 per cent. of the net rent or proportionately smaller percentages, according to whether he is responsible for the whole or any less part of the repairs. He may also charge 8 per cent. on improvements effected after July, 1920. The Acts and Rules and Regulations made thereunder provide for many other matters and should be referred to on any point of detail; see also the HOUSING ACT, 1936; DISTRESS; RECOVERY OF LAND; OVERCROWDING; LOCAL GOVERNMENT; PUBLIC HEALTH. Consult Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions, published by 'Law Notes'; Sophian or Safford on the Acts; Cairn's Leading Cases on Rent Restriction; Redman's Landlord and Tenant; and Woodfall, Landlord and Tenant. For Mortgage Restrictions, see MORTGAGE.

Incrementum, increase or improvement, opposed to decrementum or abatement.

Increment Value. The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7, c. 8), imposed (ss. 1-42) a duty charged on the amount, if any, by which the site value of the land on the occasion on which the charge is made exceeds the original site value of the land. This was called the increment value of land. With the exception of mineral rights duty, these duties were abolished by s. 57 of the Finance Act, 1920.

Incroachment. See ENCROACHMENT.

Incumbent, a clergyman in possession of an ecclesiastical benefice. As to resignation with pension, see the Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44); and the Clergy Pensions Measures, 1926 to 1928; and as to provision by the Public Worship Regulation Act for the better administration of the laws 'relating to the performance of public worship, according to the use of the Church of England,' see PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874; and see, generally, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

Incumbrance, a claim, lien, or liability attached to property; as a mortgage, a registered judgment, etc.

Incurramentum, the liability to a fine, penalty, or amercement.—Cowel's Law Dict.

In custodia legis [Lat.] (in the keeping of the law), a term used of goods which, from having been already seized by the sheriff under an execution, or being otherwise in the custody of the law, are exempt from distress for rent. By the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1709 (8 Anne, c. 18 [or 14]), as amended by the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 35 (2), the sheriff may not take goods on demised premises in execution unless the party at whose suit the execution issued pay to the landlord his arrears of rent, not exceeding six months' rent. As to goods seized under a County Court warrant, see County Courts Act, 1934, s. 134, reproducing with amendments the 1888 Act, s. 160; Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 35.

Indebitatus assumpsit [Lat.] (being indebted he undertook), that species of the action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff first alleged a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt. Since the Judicature Acts, obsolete as a technical form of action. See PLEADING.

Indecent Advertisement, for the purposes of the Indecent Advertisements Act, 1889, means any advertisement relating to any complaint or debility relating to or arising from sexual intercourse. The Act is directed against the public exhibition of such advertisements, and prohibits, inter alia, their display in public urinals and where they can be seen by persons passing along public streets.

Indecent Assault. See Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 52, whereby such an assault on a female is an indictable offence, punishable by imprisonment with or without hard labour up to two years; and s. 62, whereby such an assault on a male is punishable by penal servitude up to ten years, or imprisonment: consent of either girl or boy under sixteen being by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), no defence.

Indecent Exposure, an indictable offence at Common Law. Exposure of the person in or in view of any public street or place of resort, with intent to insult any female, is also an offence summarily punishable under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 4.

Indecent Prints or Books. The sale, or obtaining, or procuring of such prints, with intent to sell, is a misdemeanour. The Obscene Publications Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 83) ('Lord Campbell's Act'), gives summary powers to metropolitan or other stipendiary magistrates, or any two justices of the peace, to issue special warrants to constables for the searching of houses, etc., in which obscene books, pictures, etc., are suspected to be kept, on complaint on oath that the complainant believes that such books are there, and that one or more of the like character have been 'sold, distributed, exhibited, lent or otherwise published,' and on the magistrate, etc., being satisfied that any of the articles are of such a character that the publication of them would be a misdemeanour, and proper to be prosecuted as such—which must be stated (see Ex parte Bradlaugh, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 509)—he may order the seizure and destruction of such books, etc.

Publication is not excused by innocent motives (R. v. Hicklin, (1868) L. R. 3 Q. B. 360), nor by the fact that the publication is in the form of a report of judicial proceedings (Steele v. Brennan, (1872) L. R. 7 C. P. 261).

See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law (Offences against Peace, etc.).'

Indecimable, not titheable.

Indefeasible, not to be made void.

Indefinite Payment, where a debtor owes several debts to a creditor, and makes a payment, without specifying to which of the debts it is to be applied. See APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

Indemnity, a contract, express or implied, to keep a person harmless from loss which that person may incur by reason of some act, omission or event. It differs from a guarantee which requires a writing under s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds in that the latter guarantee contemplates the primary liability of a third person. As pointed out by Anson on Contracts, a form of indemnity may be illustrated by 'If you will supply goods to A. I will see you paid.' A guarantee, if 'A. does not pay you, I will.' There is, as a rule, a right of subrogation to all the remedies available to the person indemnified under an indemnity available to a person indemnifying—a guarantor has the right of subrogation as well as a right of recourse against the person guaranteed unless otherwise agreed. A great number of indemnities are implied at Common Law or statute, and the contract extends to all the loss suffered and is not limited in amount as a contract to pay a sum of money is limited. As to implied indemnities and indemnities of sureties, see Chitty on Contracts; THIRD PARTY.

As to indemnity between contractors in the case of accidents to workmen, see s. 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1926.

Marine and fire insurances are contracts of indemnity; see Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41); and Castellain v. Preston, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 380. Apparently, insurances against accidents to the assured are not contracts of indemnity and do not import the doctrine of subrogation (Halsb. L. E., 'Accident Insurance'). It should be observed that in contracts of indemnity or where otherwise a right of subrogation arises, any act of the person indemnified, which diminishes or destroys the right of the indemnifier against third parties, either destroys the right to an indemnity or reduces it proportionately; thus a landlord releasing a claim against his tenant for breach of covenant to repair may have to account for the cost of the repairs upon a claim under a policy against loss by fire. For indemnities upon rectification of the Land Register, see Land Registration Act, 1925, ss. 82–85.

Acts of Indemnity for neglect to take oaths of office, etc. (see, e.g., 30 & 31 Vict. c. 88, s. 1), were rendered unnecessary by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72, s. 16.

Indemnity Acts have also been often passed after insurrections for the relief of those engaged in their suppression; see, e.g., Phillips v. Eyre, (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. at p. 243, in which a Jamaica Act indemnifying the governor was held good, and see the Indemnity Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 48); and Restoration of Order in Ireland (Indemnity) Act, 1923; and Under Secretaries of State Act, 1929 (20 Geo. 5, c. 9).

Indenization, the act of making free, or of naturalizing.

Indenture, a deed indented between two or more parties, so called because duplicates of every deed inter partes were once written on one skin. The skin was cut in half irregularly or with a jagged edge: so when the duplicates were produced in court they were seen to belong to one another by fitting into one another. By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 56 (2), reproducing Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 5, it is provided that a deed purporting to be an indenture shall have the effect of an indenture though not indented or expressed to be an indenture. Under s. 57, L. P. Act, 1925, an indenture or any other deed may be described according to the nature of the transaction intended to be effected.

Index. A list in alphabetical order of separate items or subjects contained in any writing or book or otherwise of specified subjects. Under the Companies Act, 1929, ss. 97 and 98, limited companies are required to keep an index of names of registered members; also a list of prohibited books at the Vatican.

Index animi sermo.—(Speech is the exposition of the mind.)

India. In 1876, by the Royal Titles Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 6), Queen Victoria was empowered to add to the style of the Crown, with a view of recognizing the transfer of the Government of India to the Queen by the Government of India Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 106), and the addition of 'Empress of India' was made by Proclamation in April, 1876, with which addition as 'Emperor of India' it has passed to his present Majesty.

In any Act of Parliament passed after 1889 the expression 'British India' means 'all territories and places within her Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by her Majesty through the Governor-General of India or through any governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India,' and the expression 'India' means 'British India together with any territories of any native prince or chief under the sovereignty of her Majesty exercised through the Governor-General of India, or through any governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India.' The repealed Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 61), repealed wholly or in part a series of forty-seven earlier Acts from 1770 to 1912, with necessary re-enactments. For the earlier history of the country, see Mill's History of British India.

The Government of India Act, 1936 (Geo. 5), now regulates the Government of India, and introduces a Federation of Indian States and Provinces, the executive authority of which shall be exercised by the Governor-General, who has the advice of a Council of Ministers. The Federal Legislature consists of His Majesty represented by the Governor-General and two Chambers, the Council of State and the House of Assembly, known as the Federal Assembly. The Council of State is a permanent body—one-third of the members retiring in every third year; the Federal Assembly shall continue for five years unless dissolved sooner.

The Government of Burma Act, 1935 (26 Geo. 5, c. 3), regulates the Government of Burma. The executive authority is exercised by the Governor, who has the advice of a Council of Ministers. The Legislature consists of his Majesty, represented by the Governor, and two Chambers known as the Senate, consisting of 36 members, and the House of Representatives of 132 members.

Indian Bishops. See COLONIAL CLERGY, and the Government of India Act, 1915, ss. 115 to 123.

Indictitl, an abolished writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a Court-Christian to the King's Bench.

Indicavit (he has proclaimed), a writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by another clerk for tithes which amount to a fourth part of the profits of the advowson, when the suit belongs to the Common Law Courts, by West. 2, c. 5, 13 Edw. 1, st. 4. The patron of the defendant is allowed this writ, as he is likely to be prejudiced in his church and advowson if the plaintiff recover in the spiritual court.—Reg. Brev. 55.

Indicia [Lat.], signs, marks.

Indicted, charged in an indictment with a criminal offence. See INDICTMENT.

Indictee, a person indicted.

Indictio, an indictment.

Indiction, Cycle of, a mode of computing time by the space of fifteen years, instituted by Constantine the Great; originally the period for the payment of certain taxes. Some of the charters of King Edgar and Henry III. are dated by indictions.—Jac. Law Dict.

Indictment [fr. indico, Lat., to show], a written accusation against one or more persons of a crime formerly preferred to and presented upon oath by a grand jury. Grand juries were partly abolished by the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36). The bill of indictment is now preferred by any person before a Court in which a person charged may lawfully be indicted, and the proper officer shall, if the requirements have been complied with, sign the bill and it shall thereupon become an indictment. But bills of indictment may be preferred before grand juries of the Counties of London and Middlesex by virtue of certain enactments set out in the 1st Schedule (high treason and certain other offences triable in the King's Bench Division). Indictments were of a highly technical character until simplified by the Indictments Act, 1915, which directs that the particulars of the offence shall be 'set out in ordinary language.' See also Indictments Procedure Rules, S. R. & O., 1933, No. 745; Indictable Offences Rules, S. R. & O., 1933, No. 832.

Though it is usual to proceed before justices of the peace for commitment of the alleged offender to prison to await his trial at Assizes (see that title) or Quarter Sessions (see SESSIONS OF THE PEACE), or for his admission to bail (see that title), under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), before preferring an indictment, it is not obligatory to do so, and s. 9 of the Act leaves it to the absolute discretion (which must be exercised—Reg. v. Adamson, (1875) 1 Q. B. D. 201) of the justices either to summon the alleged offender before them, or to leave the prosecutor to his remedy by indictment unsupported by the preliminary commitment or admission to bail.

Two prisoners separately indicted cannot be tried together (R. v. Crane, 1921, 2 A. C. 299; R. v. Dennis, 40 T. L. R. 420).

Indictment de feloniam est contra pacem domini regis, coronam et dignitatem suam, in genere et non in individuo; quia in Angliā non est interregnum. Jenk. Cent. 205.—(Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his Crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.)

Indictor, he who indicts another for an offence.

Indirect Evidence, proof of collateral circumstances from which a fact in controversy, not directly attested by witnesses or documents, may be inferred. It is also called circumstantial and presumptive evidence. See Taylor or Best on Evidence.

Indistanter, forthwith; without delay.

Indivisum, that which is held in common without partition.

Indorsee, the person to whom a bill of exchange, promissory note, bill of lading, etc., is assigned by indorsement, giving him a right to sue thereon.

Indorsement [fr. in, Lat., upon, and dorsum, a back], anything written or printed upon the back of a deed or writing. The requisites of a valid indorsement of a bill of exchange, promissory note, or cheque, are laid down by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 32, the principal requisites being that the indorsement must be written on the bill itself (except in the case of an 'allonge' or 'copy' in a country where 'copies' are recognized) and signed by the indorser, his simple signature, without additional words, being sufficient; that it be an indorsement of the entire bill (though indorsement of a blank form may be valid—Glenie v. Tucker, 1908, 1 K. B. 263); and that where there are two or more indorsements, each is deemed to have been made in the order in which it appears on the bill, cheque, or note, until the contrary is proved. As to the recovery of the amount of the cheque by the drawer, after payment obtained by a forged indorsement, see North and South Wales Bank v. Macbeth, 1908, A. C. 137. See also DEED; MORTGAGE; RECEIPT.

Indorsement of Address. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. IV., it is provided that the solicitor of a plaintiff suing by a solicitor shall indorse upon every writ of summons the address of the plaintiff, and also his own name or firm and place of business, and also, if his place of business shall be more than three miles from the Royal Courts of Justice, another proper place, to be called his address for service, which shall not be more than three miles from the Royal Courts, where writs, notices, etc., may be left for him; and that if he be agent of another solicitor, he shall add the name or firm and place of business of the principal solicitor. See SUMMONS.

Indorsement of Claim. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. II., r. 1, every writ of summons in the High Court must be indorsed with a statement of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required. And by Ord. III. it is further provided that the indorsement of claim shall be made on every writ of summons before it is issued (r. 1). See, further, LEAVE TO DEFEND.

Indorser, he who indorses, i.e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange, etc.

In dubio hæc legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. Jur. Civ.—(In a doubtful point the construction which the words point out is the construction of the law.)

Inducement, an allegation of a motive; an incitement to a thing; the introductory part of a pleading.

Inducis legales, the days between the citation of a defendant and the day of appearance.

Inductare, to prorogue, postpone, respite.

Induction [fr. inductio, Lat., a leading into], the giving a parson possession of his church.

A clerk is not complete incumbent until induction, which is performed by a mandate from the bishop to the archdeacon, or if the church be exempt from archidiaconal jurisdiction, to the chancellor or commissary, or if it be a peculiar, to the dean or judge, who usually issues a precept to another clergyman to perform it for him.

The person who inducts takes the hand of the clerk, and lays it on the ring, key, or latch of the church-door, or wall of the church, or delivers a clod, turf, or twig of the glebe, and gives corporal possession of the church, saying:—

'By virtue of this mandate I induct you into the real, actual, and corporal possession of the church of [Stow], with all rights, profits, and appurtenances thereto belonging.'

The inductor then opens the doors, puts the clerk into the church, and tolls the bell to make his induction known. After which he indorses a certificate of the induction on the mandate.

Induction is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice or the corporal seisin, as institution (see INSTITUTION), which may take place anywhere, whereas induction can only take place in the church, is of the spiritual. A clerk thus presented is in full possession of the temporalities.

The oaths and subscriptions taken before induction were altered by the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), and now the incumbent on induction must declare—

That he assents to the Thirty-nine Articles and the Book of Common Prayer, and of the ordering of bishops, priests, and deacons, and believes the doctrine of the Established Church to be agreeable to the Word of God: and that he will use the form prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, and none other save as prescribed by lawful authority; and

That he has in no way made a contract, simoniacal to his knowledge, for the living, and will not perform any promise of that kind, made by others;

And he must take the oath of allegiance to the king. See Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122).

Indulto, a dispensation granted by the Pope to do or obtain something contrary to the Common Law.

Indument, endowment.

Industrial and Provident Societies. The statutes regulating these societies, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 117, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 80, were consolidated by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 45), which by s. 6 provided for the registration of societies 'for carrying on any labour, trade, or handicraft, including the buying or selling of land, of which no member shall claim an interest in the funds exceeding 200*l.*'

This Act was repealed and re-enacted with amendments by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 39), which provides for the registration as an industrial and provident society of any society for carrying on any 'industries, businesses, or trades specified in or authorized by its rules, whether wholesale or retail, and including dealings of every description with land,' but enacts that no member other than a registered society shall have any interest in the shares exceeding 200*l.*, and contains restrictive provisions as to banking. No society can be registered which does not consist of seven persons at least. The most important privileges of registration are :—Limited liability of members, exemption from income tax, membership of minors, and determination of disputes between members and the society in the manner determined by the rules, including determination, if the rules so provide, by a court of summary jurisdiction. The Act was amended by the Industrial and Provident Societies (Amendment) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 31), which provides (s. 1) for the registration of a society consisting of two or more other societies, and amends the law as to the audit of the accounts, nominations, and other matters. See also the Industrial Assurance Act, 1923, which provides safeguards for the poorer classes of assured persons. The Industrial and Provident Societies (Amendment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 4), provides safeguards for a member when any rules are amended so as to increase his liability to contribute to the share or loan capital, unless his consent to the rule has been obtained in writing.

Compare FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Industrial Assurance. See the Industrial Assurance Act, 1923 (repealing the Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 1896), which consolidates and amends the law relating to industrial assurance. The Act gives increased protection to the poorer classes of assured persons in respect of life insurance business the premiums upon which are received by collectors at intervals of less than two months. 'Industrial assurance funds' (life funds) cannot be made security for a loan other than a temporary bank overdraft. The Act contains important provisions as to forfeiture and surrender of policies, accounts and inspection, and the printing of portions of the Act on policies so as to draw the attention of policy-holders to rights conferred by the Act. See the Industrial Assurance and Friendly Societies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 28), which permits the issue of endowment policies; and see FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Industrial Disease. Compensation is provided for a workman under the Workmen's Compensation Act (which see) in respect of certain diseases. As to notification of an industrial disease occurring in a mine, see Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 79.

Industrial Exhibitions. Inventions and designs exhibited at industrial exhibitions are specially protected by s. 45 and s. 59 respectively of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), as amended by the Patents and Designs Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32).

Industrial Schools. References to these words are to be replaced by the words 'Approved Schools' by the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 108.

Sect. 44 of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), defined an 'industrial school' as 'a school for the industrial training of children in which children are lodged, clothed and fed as well as taught.' However, as to the present law, see APPROVED SCHOOLS.

Industriam, per, a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ may be acquired per industriam, i.e., by a man's reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by so confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty.—2 Steph. Com.

In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis. Plowd. 296.—(Where the rights are equal, the condition of the possessor is the better.) 'Hence it is a familiar rule, that in ejectment, the party controverting my title must recover by his own strength and not by my weakness.'—Broom's Leg. Maz.; and see IN PARI DELICTO, etc.

Inebriate. A drunken person. See DRUNKENNESS.

In esse (actually existing), distinguished from in posse, which means that which is not, but may be. A child before birth is in posse; after birth, in esse.

Inevitable Accident, that which cannot be avoided : used in leases together with fire or tempest as a cause of destruction of the demised premises excusing the payment of rent or an omission by the lessee to repair. The expression is also very commonly used in covenants for production of documents, exempting the covenantor from liability in the event of destruction by fire or other inevitable accident; but as pointed out by Mr. Davidson, Prec. of Conv., vol. ii., pt. i. p. 665, it is not accurate, for such accidents are not inevitable, and 'insuperable' is the better term. The word 'inevitable,' however, is used in the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 64 (9), relating to the effect of an undertaking for safe custody and acknowledgment of the right to production of documents.

As to ordering particulars of a defence of 'inevitable accident,' see Rumbold v. L. C. C., (1909) 25 T. L. R. 541.

Inewardus, a guard, a watchman.—Domesday.

In extenso, from beginning to end, leaving out nothing.

In extremis, at the last gasp.

In faciendo (in doing or in feaſance).

Infalſtatus, a capital puniſhment inflicted on the ſands or ſeaſhore—poſſibly, hurling down a cliff; cf. 'faſaiſe'—Sed. qu. See Ralph de Hengham, Summa Parva, cap. 3, and Selden's notes thereon.

Infamous Conduct in a Professional Reſpect. A term uſed by the General Medical Council to denote contraventions of the practice of the profeſſion, ſuch as advertising as well as diſgraceful or incompetent conduct; ſee Medical Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), s. 29.

Infamous Crime. Sending any letter threatening to accuſe another of an 'infamous crime,' whether the receiver be innocent or not, with intent to extort money, may be puniſhed up to penal ſervitude for life by s. 46 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), which defines an infamous crime within the enactment as ſodomy, or beſtiality, or aſſault with intent or attempt to commit, or inducement to commit or permit, ſuch crime. This ſection is repealed by the Larceny Act, 1916, which ſubſtantially re-enacts this ſection without the uſe of the words 'infamous crime' (s. 29).

Infamy, public diſgrace; total loſs of character. This does not now incapacitate from giving evidence.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1.

Infangenthef, a privilege of lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee.—Anc. Inſt. Eng.

Infant [fr. infans, Lat., one who cannot ſpeak], a perſon under twenty-one years of age, whoſe acts are in many caſes either void or voidable. See AGE.

At Common Law, the contracts of infants are divided into three claſſes: 1st. Thoſe which are abſolutely void; ſuch as are poſitively injurious to the intereſts of the infant, and can only operate to his prejudice; as a ſurety-bond, or a releaſe to his guardian.

2nd. Thoſe which are only voidable: ſuch as are beneficial to him, which he may affirm or avoid when he comes of age; as a conveyance of lands, a promiſſory note, an account ſtated.

3rd. Thoſe which are binding ab initio and need no ratification: ſuch as contracts for the public ſervice, articles of apprenticeship (ſee Green v. Thompson, 1899, 2 Q. B. 1), executed contracts of marriage, repreſentative acts as executor or trustee, contracts for neceſſaries. In an action brought for the price of goods, if the defendant pleads infancy, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the goods were neceſſaries (Nash v. Inman, 1908, 2 K. B. 1).

By the Infants Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62), it is enacted (ſs. 1 and 2) that:—

1. All contracts whether by ſpecialty or by ſimple contract henceforth entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent, or to be lent, or for goods ſupplied, or to be ſupplied (other than contracts for neceſſaries), and all accounts ſtated with infants ſhall be abſolutely void; provided always that this enactment ſhall not invalidate any contract into which an infant may by any exiſting or future ſtatute, or by the rules of Common Law or Equity, enter, except ſuch as now by law are voidable.

2. No action ſhall be brought whereby to charge any perſon upon any promiſe made after full age to pay any debt contracted during infancy, or upon any ratification made after age of any promiſe or contract made during infancy, whether there ſhall or ſhall not be any new conſideration for ſuch promiſe or ratification after full age.

The Law of Property legiſlation of 1925 introduced ſome modifications into the law relating to infants. By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (6), a legal eſtate in land is incapable of being held by an infant. He cannot be appointed trustee of any ſettlement or truſt or become mortgagee of a legal eſtate (ſs. 19 and 20, ibid.), or an eſtate owner of settled land (Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 26 and 27), but a married infant can give receipts for income (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 21). By s. 27 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, a conveyance of a legal estate in land to an infant for his benefit shall operate only as an agreement for valuable consideration to execute a settlement as there provided and in the meantime to hold the land in trust for the infant, but an equitable interest in settled land may be vested in or transferred to an infant. Under the Judic. Act, 1925, s. 165, administration with the will annexed is to be granted to the guardian of an infant who has been appointed executor of a will or other person appointed by the Court for him, until the infant attains the age of twenty-one years and probate has been granted to him under s. 47 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925; infants who do not attain a vested interest, i.e., attain twenty-one years of age or marry, are excluded from the distribution of the residuary estate of an intestate but the statutory powers of advancement and provisions relating to maintenance and accumulation of income are to apply, and infants may be permitted to use personal chattels which form part of the estate.

The 5th section of the Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 4), follows the Act of 1874 as respects loans, while the 1st and 2nd sections of the same Act make it a misdemeanour to invite by circular, etc., an infant to bet or borrow money. See Milton v. Studd, 1910, 2 K. B. 118.

An infant is liable for torts committed by him unless the tort has arisen out of a contract; see R. Leslie v. Shiell, 1914, 3 K. B. 607, where the authorities are discussed by Lord Sumner. As to whether a parent can by ratification become liable for the tort of his infant child, see Moon v. Towers, (1860) 8 C. B. N. S. 611. In that case Willes, J. (ibid., p. 611), said: 'No man ought, as a general rule, to be responsible for acts not his own.' As to the criminal liability of infants, see AGE; CHILDREN.

Ward of Court.—The general superintendence and protective jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the persons and property of infants is a delegation of the rights and duties of the Crown—the universal guardian of infants—and is retained for the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56), and an infant under such guardianship is termed 'a ward of Court.' The Court has jurisdiction to commit a ward of Court to prison for contempt of Court, e.g., marrying without consent (Re H.'s Settlement, 1909, 2 Ch. 260).

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 44, it is provided that, subject to express provisions of any other Act, in questions relating to the custody and education of infants, the rules of equity shall prevail. The father at Common Law had the right to the custody of his infant child and the right to appoint testamentary guardians. The guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), and the guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 45), place the mother and father in the position of equality, making the welfare of the child 'the first and paramount consideration.'

See, further, GUARDIANSHIP, WARD, and CHILDREN; and consult Eversley on the Domestic Relations; Simpson on Infants; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Infants and Children.'

Infant Life Protection Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), now repealed and replaced by the Children Act, 1908. See CHILDREN.

Infant Settlements Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43), preserved by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 27 (3), but so that a legal estate in land is not vested in an infant. By virtue of the Act of 1855 every infant (if a male of twenty, or if a female of seventeen years, s. 4, and see Re Phillips, (1887) 34 Ch. D. 467), upon or in contemplation of marriage, may, with the sanction of the Chancery Division of the High Court, make a valid settlement or contract for a settlement of property. The Act gets rid entirely of the disability arising from infancy, though not of disability on any other ground (Seaton v. Seaton, (1888) 13 App. Cas. 61). Consult Seton on Judgments; Dan. Ch. Pr.

Infanticide, the killing of a child immediately after it is born. The felonious destruction of the foetus in utero is more properly called fœticide, or criminal abortion.

In every case in which an infant is found dead, and its death becomes the subject of judicial investigation, the great questions which present themselves for inquiry are:—

- (1) What is the age of the child?
- (2) Was the child born alive?
- (3) If born alive, how long had it lived?
- (4) If born alive, by what means did it die?

If it be proved that its death was owing to violence, it is then to be ascertained who the murderer of it is. If suspicion fall upon the mother, it is to be determined—

- (1) Whether she has been delivered of a child; and,

(2) Whether the signs of a delivery correspond as to time, etc., with the appearances developed in the child.

There are two ways in which a child may be born alive: (1) The cord may be pulsate, showing that it is alive, yet it may not respire. (2) It may be born and respire.

When a child is born alive, but has not yet respired, its condition is like that of the fœtus in utero. It lives merely because the fœtal circulation is still going on. In this case none of the organs undergo any change. The case of a child who is born alive and respire is tested by respirations. The proofs of this test are deduced from the changes which take place in the system as soon as respiration commences.

See this subject fully discussed in Taylor's Med. Jur. cc. xxxviii. et seq.; and Guy's Foren. Med. 118 et seq.

The Infanticide Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 18), provides that where a woman who has not fully recovered from the effect of giving birth to a child so that the balance of her mind is still disturbed causes the death of such newly-born child, she shall be guilty of infanticide (and not murder) and punishable as for manslaughter. The jury may, however, find the woman guilty of concealment of birth under Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 60, or of an offence under the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 1, or child destruction, under Infant Life (Preservation) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 34).

Infectious Diseases. It is an indictable offence to expose in a public frequented highway a person suffering from an infectious disorder (R. v. Vanlandillo, (1815) 4 M. & S. 73). The Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), ss. 143 to 180, repealing (from October, 1937) ss. 120-143 of the Public Health Act, 1875, contains various provisions calculated to prevent the spread of dangerous infectious diseases.

Notification.—The Public Health Act, 1936, also repeals (from October, 1937) the Infectious Diseases Notification Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 72), and enjoins the notification to the Medical Officer of Health of the district of certain specific diseases therein named, and also of other diseases added to the list by the local authority, s. 343 enacting that 'notifiable disease.'— means any of the following diseases, namely, small-pox, cholera, diphtheria, membranous croup, erysipelas, the disease known as scarlatina or scarlet fever, and the fevers known by any of the following names, typhus, typhoid, enteric, relapsing, and includes as respects any particular district any infectious disease to which Part V. or corresponding enactment this Act has been applied by the local authority of the district in manner provided by that part or that enactment.

Section 147 of the Act provides for the extension of the application of the Act, and for public notice being given of it.

Prevention.—By s. 143 (ibid.) general powers are conferred on the Minister of Health for the prevention and treatment of infectious diseases, including danger to public health from vessels, after consultation with the Board of Trade, and aircraft, after consultation with the Home Secretary. These powers are to be enforced by County Councils, local and port health authorities, Customs and Excise, and the Coastguard, with the consent of the respective departments. By Order in Council, the regulations (including quarantine) may extend to Northern Ireland, if outside the powers of Parliament there, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. By s. 151, principals of schools may be required to send to the Medical Officer of Health for the district complete lists of names and addresses of day scholars who may be suffering from a notifiable disease. By s. 152 infected articles may not be sent to a laundry or public wash-house before disinfection or without proper notice. Home work, such as tailoring or other specified work, in any premises in which a notifiable disease occurs may be forbidden by the local authority (s. 154). By s. 155 dealers in rags and old clothes are absolutely prohibited from selling or delivering any article of food or drink to any person, or any article whatsoever to children under fourteen. Under s. 156 infected matter is not to be thrown into dustbins. Sections 157 and 158 provide against the letting of premises or rooms, and for notice to the owner after recent cases of notifiable disease. Other provisions relate to the disinfection and removal to hospitals of patients suffering from such disease, and to removal, burial, or cremation of bodies after death.

Infeoffment, the act or instrument of feoffment, or investiture, synonymous with sasine, the instrument of possession.—Scots term.

Inferior Courts. They are the court baron, the hundred court, the borough civil court, the county court, the mayor's court, London, and also all courts of a special jurisdiction; but the county courts are by far the most important of them. They are all controllable by writ of prohibition if they exceed their jurisdiction. See, further, the Borough and Local Courts of Record Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 86); and as to the jurisdiction of such courts, and the rules of procedure in force therein, see also the Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 201-209, and COUNTRY COURTS.

The Inferior Courts Judgments Extension Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 31), following the procedure of the Judgments Extension Act, 1868, which applies to superior courts only, renders, to a certain extent, judgments obtained in inferior courts in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively, effectual in any other part of the United Kingdom; but the working of the Act is very much cramped by the provision of s. 10, that the Act is not to apply against persons domiciled in any of the countries respectively, unless the whole cause of action arose, and the summons was personally served upon the defendant within the district of the inferior court in which the action is brought.

Infeudation, the placing in possession of a freehold estate; also the granting of tithes to mere laymen.

Infidel, one who does not accept the Christian religion.

In fieri [Lat.] (in course of accomplishment).

Infract, or Insoena, violence committed on a person by one inhabiting the same dwelling.

In formâ pauperis (in the character of a pauper). Every poor person, having cause of action, was entitled by 11 Hen. 7, c. 12, which is in affirmance of the Common Law, to have writs according to the nature of the case, without paying the fees thereon, and the judges might assign him counsel and solicitor, who acted gratis. This discretionary indulgence was confined to plaintiffs at Common Law, but was extended by Courts of Equity to defendants.

The statute 11 Hen. 7, c. 12, is repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883, but its provisions and those of the Chancery Orders and Common Law Rules (which gave effect to it in somewhat different terms) are thrown into one code by R. S. C., Ord. XVI., rr. 22-31 G., by which a person may be admitted to sue or defend as a poor person on proof that he has a reasonable cause of action or defence and that his means do not exceed 50*l.*, his clothes, household goods, tools of trade, and the subject-matter of the cause excepted, or such larger sum not exceeding 100*l.* as the judge in special circumstances may direct. In London and the District Registries lists are kept of counsel and solicitors willing to undertake conduct of actions on behalf of poor persons without remuneration.

Appeals in formâ pauperis to the House of Lords are checked by the Appeal (Formâ Pauperis) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 22), which gives the House power to refuse a petition for leave to sue.

Informal, deficient in legal form.

Informality, want of legal form.

Information, an accusation, or complaint; also, communicated knowledge.

Information in Chancery. Where a suit was instituted on behalf of the Crown or Government, or of those of whom it had the custody by virtue of its prerogative (such as idiots and lunatics), or whose rights are under its particular protection (such as the objects of a public charity), the matter of complaint was offered to the Court by way of information by the Attorney- or Solicitor-General, and not by way of petition. When a suit immediately concerned the Crown or Government alone, the proceeding was purely by way of information, but where it did not do so immediately, a 'relator' was appointed who was answerable for costs, etc.; and if he were interested in the matter in connection with the Crown or Government, the proceeding was then by information and bill. Informations differed from bills in little more than name and form; and the same rules were substantially applicable to each.—Story's Eq. Plead. The procedure is now by ordinary action in the High Court; see R. S. C. 1883, Ord. I., r. 1; but the term 'information' is still used to designate an action by the Attorney-General in his official capacity.

A Crown information (which was formerly filed in the Court of Exchequer, but is now instituted on the Revenue side of the King's Bench Division) is a suit for recovering money or other chattels, or for obtaining satisfaction, in damages, for any personal wrong committed in the lands or other possessions of the Crown. It is instituted to redress private wrongs, while criminal informations are resorted to to punish public wrongs, or heinous misdemeanours. See EX OFFICIO INFORMATIONS; and Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104). The most usual informations are, in cases of intrusion, for trespasses on Crown lands; debt, for Crown moneys due upon breaches of penal statutes; and in rem, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the Crown, no one claiming them, as treasure-trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays.

Information and complaint for an indictable offence has to be sworn before a justice of the peace: Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s. 1 (where it is termed 'charge or complaint'), and Sched. A (where it is termed 'information and complaint').—Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law.'

Informations before a justice of the peace against a person alleged to have committed an offence punishable on summary conviction must be laid within six months, and need not be in writing or on oath unless some Act of Parliament (i.e., the Act under which the particular offence is punishable) otherwise require, and must be for one offence only, and not for two or more offences.—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), ss. 1, 10, 11; s. 11 is extended as to the time within which proceedings under Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 112, may be brought by the Road Traffic Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 33 (1).—Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices.'

As to criminal, English, and Latin informations, see those titles; also QUO WARRANTO; NUISANCE.

Informatus non sum (I am not informed, or, I have no instructions).

Informor, a person who prosecutes those who break any law or penal statute; also an approver. See QUI TAM; APPROVER; COMMON INFORMER.

Infortunium, Homicide per, where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. See HOMICIDE.

Infra, in a book, refers the reader to a subsequent page or part of the book.

Infra annum luctus (within the year of mourning). The phrase is used in reference to the marriage of a widow within a year after her husband's death, which was prohibited by the Civil Law. See Cod. 5, 9, 2.

Infringement [fr. infringo, Lat., to break], breach or violation, applied to the breach of a law or violation of a right, as of copyright or patent right.

Infugare, to put to flight.—Leg. Canuti, c. 32.

Infula, a coif, or a cassock.—Jac. Law Dict.

Inge, meadow, or pasture.—Ibid.

Ingenuitas, liberty given to a servant by manumission.—Leg. H. 1, c. 89.

Ingenuitas regni, the commonalty of the kingdom.

In gremio legis [Lat.] (in the bosom or protection of the law).

Ingress, Egress, and Regress, free entry into, going forth of, and returning from a place.

Ingressu, an abolished writ of entry. It was also called præcipe quod reddat.—Cowel.

Ingressus, the relief which an heir at full age paid to the head lord for entering upon the fee, etc.—Blount.

In gross. See GROSS.

Ingrossator magni rotuli, clerk of the pipe; a former Exchequer officer.

Ingrossing, writing the fair copy of a deed or instrument for the formal execution of it by the parties thereto. See ENGROSSING.

Inhabited House Duty. See HOUSE DUTY.

In hæc verba, in these very words.

Inheritance, or hereditary succession, is the title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law.

The 'canons of inheritance' are the rules directing the descent of real property throughout the lineal and collateral consanguinity of the owner dying intestate.

These rules have been abolished in the case of deaths after January 1st, 1926, with a few exceptions (see HEIR), by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 51, but they still affect the devolution before 1926 of all titles to estates of inheritance.

Inheritance Act.—The Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106), materially altered the old canons of real property descent, but because the Act does not extend to any descent which took place on the death of any person who died before the 1st of January, 1834, it is deemed expedient to give both old and new:—

Old Canons.—The old Canons, which obtain in cases of ancestors dying before the 1st of January, 1834, are the following:—

(1) That inheritances shall lineally descend to the issue of the person who last died actually seised, in infinitum, but shall never lineally ascend.

(2) That the male issue shall be admitted before the female.

(3) That where there are two or more males in equal degree, the eldest only shall inherit; but the females all together.

(4) That the legal descendants in infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor; that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done had he been living.

(5) That on failure of lineal descendants, or issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to his collateral relations being of the blood of the first purchaser, subject to the three preceding rules.

(6) That the collateral heir of the person last seized must be his next collateral kinsman of the whole blood.

(7) That in collateral inheritances the male stocks shall be preferred to the female (that is, kindred derived from the blood of the male ancestors, however remote, shall be admitted before those from the blood of the females, however near), unless where the lands have in fact descended from a female.

Present Canons.—The Canons according to the new law grafted upon the old are the following :—

(1) That inheritances shall, in the first place, lineally descend to the issue of the last purchaser in infinitum ; by ' purchaser ' being meant the person who last acquired the land otherwise than by descent.

(2) That the male issue shall be admitted before the female.

(3) That where two or more of the male issue are in equal degree of consanguinity to the purchaser, the eldest only shall inherit, but the females all together.

(4) That all the lineal descendants, in infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor ; that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done had he been living.

(5) That on failure of lineal descendants or issue of the purchaser, the inheritance shall descend to his nearest lineal ancestor.

(6) That the father and all the male paternal ancestors of the purchaser, and their descendants, shall be admitted before any of the female paternal ancestors, or their heirs ; all the female paternal ancestors and their heirs before the mother, or any of the maternal ancestors, or her or their descendants ; and the mother and all the male maternal ancestors, and her and their descendants, before any of the female maternal ancestors, or their heirs.

(7) That a kinsman of the half blood shall be capable of being heir ; and that such kinsman shall inherit next after a kinsman in the same degree of the whole blood, and after the issue of such kinsman when the common ancestor is a male, and next after the common ancestor when such ancestor is a female.

(8) That in the admission of female paternal ancestors, the mother of the more remote male paternal ancestor and her heirs shall be preferred to the mother of a less remote male paternal ancestor and her heirs ; and in the admission of female maternal ancestors, the mother of the more remote male maternal ancestor and her heirs shall be preferred to the mother of a less remote male maternal ancestor and her heirs.—Williams' Real Property ; Watkins on Descents ; Sugden's Real Property Statutes.

(9) Where there shall be a total failure of heirs of the purchaser, or where any lands shall be descendible, as if an ancestor had been the purchaser thereof, and there shall be a total failure of the heirs of such ancestor, then, and in every such case, the land shall descend, and the descent shall thenceforth be traced from the person last entitled to the land as if he had been the purchaser thereof ; see s. 19 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), which is to be read as a part of s. 20 of the Inheritance Act, 1833.

Inhibition. An ancient synonym for PROHIBITION, which see.

In the Ecclesiastical Law, the command of a bishop or ecclesiastical judge that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty. See, e.g., Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), s. 5 ; Benefices (Ecclesiastical Duties) Measure, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, No. 8) ; Dale's Case, (1881) 6 Q. B. D. 376.

Under the Land Registration Act, 1925, an order of Court or entry by the chief land registrar inhibiting temporarily the registration or any dealing with registered land or a registered charge ; see L. R. Act, 1925, s. 58, L. R. Rules 230-234, and 237, and Fortescue-Brickdale and Stewart Wallace, 'Land Registration.'

In the Scots Law : (1) A writ whereby the debtor or party inhibited is prohibited from contracting any debt which may become a burden on his heritable property. See 31 & 32 Vict. c. 101, s. 156, and Sched. (2) A writ prohibiting and discharging all persons from giving credit to a man's wife.—Bell's Law Dictionary.

In his quæ de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriæ vel loci non est alleganda. 11 Co. 85.—(In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.)

Inhoc, or Inhoke [fr. in, within, and hoks, a corner], corner or part of a common field ploughed up and sowed with oats, etc., and sometimes fenced in when the rest of the field lies fallow.—Kenn. Glos.

In invidiam, to excite a prejudice.

Iniquum est aliquem rei suæ esse iudicem. In propriâ causâ nemo iudex sit.—12 Co. 13.

See NEMO DEBET ESSE JUDEX IN PROPRIA CAUSA.

Initialia testimonii. In former times, before examining a witness in chief in Scotland, he was first examined as to his disposition towards the parties, whether he bore ill-will to either of them, or had been prompted what to say, or had received any bribe.—Bell's Law Dict. It is somewhat similar to our voir dire, which see.

Initials, the first letters of names. By the Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42), s. 12, it was directed that in all actions upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other written instruments, any of the parties to which were designated by the initial letter or letters, or some contraction of the Christian or first name or names, it should be sufficient to designate such persons by the same initial letter or letters, instead of stating them in full.

Signature by initials is a good signature within the Statute of Frauds (Phillimore v. Barry, (1808) 1 Camp. 513); a good signature of a will (In the goods of Wingrove, (1851) 15 Jur. 91; In the goods of Hinds, (1851) 16 Jur. 1161); and a good subscription as regards interlineations in a will (In the goods of Blewitt, (1880) 5 P. D. 116). Under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 145, 'initials' includes a recognized abbreviation of a Christian name.

Initiate, tenant by courtesy, the husband is so called when a child is born—capable of inheriting the land subject to his courtesy.

In invitum [Lat.], against an unwilling party.

In iudicio non creditur nisi juratis. Cro. Car. 54.—(In a trial credence is given only to those who are sworn.) For admission of unsworn evidence of a child, however, in case of cruelty, etc., to child, see Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 38. See CHILDREN (Evidence).

Injunction. This is the discretionary process of preventive and remedial justice, whereby a person is required to refrain from doing a specified meditated wrong, not amounting to a crime. It is either (1) interlocutory, i.e., provisional or temporary, until the coming in of the defendant's answer, or until the hearing of the cause; or (2) perpetual, i.e., forming part of a decree made at a hearing upon the merits, whereby the defendant is perpetually inhibited from the assertion of a right, or perpetually restrained from the commission of an act contrary to equity and good conscience. As to mandatory injunctions, see post.

Prior to the Judicature Act injunctions were grantable by the Court of Chancery only (except to prevent the repetition of a breach of contract or injury under s. 79 of the C. L. P. Act, 1854, or the infringement of a patent, for which purposes a Common Law court might grant them), and injunctions, called 'common injunctions,' were frequently granted by that court to stay a suitor from proceeding in a court of Common Law to assert a right which it was contrary to equity that he should assert. Such an injunction might, upon a proper case being presented to the Court, be granted at any stage of the proceedings at law. Thus an injunction would be granted to stay trial; after verdict to stay judgment; or after judgment to stay execution.

By s. 41 of the Judicature Act, 1925, however, it is enacted that no proceeding in the High Court of Justice, or before the Court of Appeal, shall be restrained by injunction; but every matter of equity on which an injunction against the prosecution of any such cause or proceeding might have been obtained, if the Act had not passed, may be relied on by way of defence thereto, it being provided, however, that the Court may direct a 'stay of proceedings.'

Amongst public nuisances, restrainable either upon information or at suit of a private person immediately grieved by them, may be enumerated obstructions to highways and bridges, public rivers and harbours, and everything that renders the enjoyment of life and property hazardous and uncomfortable. In the case of a private nuisance, there must be such an injury as from its nature is not susceptible of being compensated by damages, or as from its continuance or permanent mischief must occasion a constantly recurring grievance which cannot be otherwise adequately prevented than by an injunction; as where the injury is irreparable or where injury to health or trade, destruction of the means of subsistence, or permanent ruin to property may ensue—e.g., from the obstruction of ancient lights of a dwelling house, blocking up of water-courses, diversion of streams from mills, the back flowage on mills, pulling down of the banks of rivers and exposing adjacent lands to inundation, or neighbouring mills to destruction, etc.

The piracy of a copyright, or the invasion of a patent, can be restrained, and the Court will direct an account of the books printed, and the profits made by the infringer.

A special injunction may be obtained whenever a proper case can be made for it ; thus injunctions have been granted to restrain the following acts : the publication of letters, for the writer of a letter has a joint property in it with the person to whom it is addressed, the receiver having only a special property in it ; the publication of a libel ; the proper use by one man of the trademarks or name of another person ; the disclosure of secrets acquired in the course of a confidential employment ; the alienation of property ; the negotiation of bills of exchange and promissory notes obtained by fraud or collusion ; the transfer of stock ; the receipt of dividends ; the sale of specific chattels ; the vexatious alienation of real property pendente lite ; the sale of trust property ; the improper presentation to a benefice ; the appointing of a minister to a dissenting chapel ; the dealing with or the sailing of a ship ; the breach of covenants ; and see Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., 1895, 1 Ch. at pp. 322, 323.

In a proper case damages may be awarded either in addition to or in substitution for an injunction (see Gilling v. Gray, (1910) 27 T. L. R. 39). As to the recovery of damages in lieu of an injunction for an injury which is threatened but not yet done, see Leeds Industrial Society v. Slack, 1924, 40 T. L. R. 745. By s. 25, sub-s. 8, an injunction may be granted by an interlocutory order 'in all cases in which it shall appear to the Court to be just or convenient that such order should be made'; and see Ord. L. r. 6.

In addition to the injunctions mentioned above, which have for their object the restraining of the defendant from committing some apprehended wrong, there is a third class called mandatory injunctions, where the Court goes further and compels a defendant who has actually completed the wrongful act to undo what he has done and restore matters to their former condition ; thus, in a proper case a defendant may be ordered to pull down a building which he has erected in defiance of the plaintiff's rights, even though the building has been completed before the writ was issued. As to the principles on which the Court proceeds in such cases, see Daniel v. Ferguson, 1891, 2 Ch. 27 ; Van Joel v. Hornsey, 1895, 2 Ch. 774 ; Woodward v. Battersea Corporation, (1911) 104 L. T. 51 ; and as to the form of the order, see Jackson v. Normanby Brick Co., 1899, 1 Ch. 438. Consult Kerr or Joyce on Injunctions.

In jure, non remota causa sed proxima spectatur. Bacon, Max., reg. 1.—(In law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is regarded.) The maxim is chiefly applied to cases of marine insurance, as to which it was held by the House of Lords in Dudgeon v. Pembroke, (1877) 2 App. Cas. 284, that any loss caused by perils of the sea is within the policy though it would not have happened but for the concurrent action of some cause, as unseaworthiness, which is not within it.

The maxim is also frequently applied to measure of damages, as to which see Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854) 9 Ex. 341, where it was laid down that only such damages are recoverable for breach of contract as (1) arose naturally from the breach itself, or (2) might reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both contracting parties at the time of the contract as resulting from breach. See CAUSA CAUSANS and Broom's Leg. Max.

Injuria. Injury ; a wrongful act done. See DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA.

Injuria non excusat injuriam.—(One wrong does not justify another.) See Hilton v. Eckersley, (1856) 25 L. J. Q. B. 199.

Injuria non præsuntur. Co. Litt. 232 b.—(Injury is not presumed).

Injury, any damage done to another, either in his person, rights, reputation, or property, for which an action lies at law.

Inlagare, to admit or restore to the benefit of the law ; to in-law, or render law-worthy.

Inlagary, or Inlagation, a restitution of an outlaw to the protection and benefit of the law.—Bract. l. 3, tr. 2, c. 14.

Inlagh, a person within the law's protection, contrary to ulaggh, an outlaw.

Inland, demesne land ; that which was let to tenants being denominated outland (utland).—Domesday.

Inland Bill of Exchange, 'a bill which on the face of it purports to be (a) both drawn and payable within the British Islands ; or (b) drawn within the British Islands upon some person resident therein.'—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 4. Any other bill is a foreign bill, but unless the contrary appear on the face of the bill the holder may treat it as an inland bill.—Ibid.

Inland Revenue. That portion (by far the largest) of the public revenue (which is derived from the taxation of home commodities and duties on property and income, houses, stamps, probates, legacies, etc., as distinguished from the portion derived by customs duties (see CUSTOMS) from imported commodities—such as foreign wine and spirits, tea, etc. It is supervised by Inland Revenue Commissioners (the number of whom, now four, is not limited by statute, and the quorum of whom is two), and a large number of enactments relating to its regulation are contained in the consolidating Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21). By s. 39 of that Act 'inland revenue' means 'the revenue of the United Kingdom collected or imposed as stamp duties, taxes, and duties of excise' (see that title), 'and' placed under the care and management of the Inland Revenue Commissioners.' By 8 Edw. 7, c. 16, the management of excise duties were transferred to the Commissioners of Customs and Excise.

The High Court has power to make the Commissioners pay costs (Re Hardy's Brewery, 1910, 2 K. B. 257).

A 'Customs and Inland Revenue Act' was for many years passed annually, for the purpose of imposing the taxes proposed in the Annual Budget of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and sanction by vote of the House of Commons; and in and since 1894 a 'Finance Act' has been passed for the same purpose.

Inland Trade, trade wholly carried on at home, as distinguished from Commerce, which see.

Inlantal, Inlantalé, demesne or inland, opposed to delantal, or land tenanted.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Inleased, insnared.—Co. 2 Inst. 247.

Inlegiare, to admit a person to the protection of the law, after undergoing a legal punishment for a delinquency.

In limine (at the outset), preliminary.

In loco parentis (in the place of a parent).

A person undertaking the responsibility, care and duty to make provision of a father towards others who are not his children (Powys v. Mansfield, (1837) 3 My. & Cr. 359).

In malam partem, in a bad sense, so as to wear an evil appearance.

In medias res, into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

Innamium, a pledge.

Inner House. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Innings, lands recovered from the sea; when rendered profitable they are termed gainage lands.—Jac. Law Dict.

Innkeeper, proprietor of a common inn for the accommodation of travellers in general.

All persons are deemed innkeepers who keep houses where a traveller is furnished, for profit, with everything which he has occasion for whilst on his way. They are bound to take in all travellers and wayfaring persons, and to entertain them for a reasonable time (see Lamond v. Richard, 1897, 1 Q. B. 541) if they can accommodate them, at a reasonable charge, provided they behave themselves properly; and they have a lien upon the goods of their guests for board and lodging, but may not detain their persons or seize their clothing in actual wear. They are also liable for any loss of or injury to goods, money, and baggage of their guests; and responsible for the acts of their servants and domestics, as well as for the acts of other guests (Calve's case, (1584) 8 Rep. 32, and 1 Smith's L. C.); and the liability arises as soon as the relationship of guest and innkeeper begins, and is irrespective of the fact that some one other than the particular guest is going to pay for the accommodation (Wright v. Anderton, 1909, 1 K. B. 209). But the liability of innkeepers at the Common Law having been found to press hardly upon them, the Innkeepers Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 41) (as to which see Spice v. Bacon, 1877) 2 Q. B. D. 463, provided that no innkeeper should be liable to make good to any guest any loss or injury to goods or property brought to his inn, not being a horse or other live animal, or any carriage, to a greater amount than the sum of 30*l.*, except—

1. Where such goods have been stolen, lost, or injured through the default or neglect of the innkeeper or his servants.

2. Where such goods have been deposited expressly for safe custody with the innkeeper.

By 'expressly' is meant that the bailor's intention must be brought to the mind of the bailee or his agent in some reasonable and intelligible manner (Whitehouse v. Pickett, 1908, A. C. 357). A copy of the Act must be exhibited in the inn to entitle the innkeeper to the benefit of its provisions.

And it has been further provided by the Innkeepers Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 38), that in addition to his right of lien, the innkeeper may, after six weeks, sell by public auction all goods (advertised at least one month beforehand), horses, etc., left with him by a person leaving the inn in his debt. See also Public Health Act, 1936, s. 157 (3), as to notifiable diseases. See Mews's Digest, tit. 'Innkeeper.'

Innocent Conveyances, a covenant to stand seised; a bargain and sale; and release; so called because, since they convey the actual possession by construction of law only, they do not confer a larger estate in property than the person conveying possesses, and therefore, if a greater interest be conveyed by these deeds than a person has, they are only void, pro tanto, for the excess. But a feoffment of such larger estate was a tortious conveyance, and therefore, under such circumstances, would have been void altogether, and produced a forfeiture. But by the 4th section of the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), a feoffment made after October 1st, 1845, shall not have any tortious operation. It is, therefore, an innocent conveyance.

Innominate Contracts, those which had no particular names, as permutation and transaction.—Civ. Law.

Innonia, an inclosure.—Spelm.

Innotesimus [fr. innotesco, Lat., to make known], a kind of letters patent.—Jac. Law. Dict.

In notis, in the notes.

Innovation, an exchange of one obligation for another, so as to make the second come in place of the first.

In novo casu novum remedium apponendum est. 2 Inst. 3.—(A new remedy is to be applied to a new case.)

Innoxiare, to purge one of a fault and make him innocent.—Leg. Ethelred. c. 10.

Inns of Chancery, so called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who were officers of the Court of Chancery. There were nine of them—Clement's, Clifford's, Lyon's, Furnival's, Thavies', Symond's, New Inn, and Barnard's and Staple Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the Inns of Court. See 3 Rep., Pref., p. 18; Report of Royal Commission, 1855.

Inns of Court. The four bodies which exercise the right of admitting persons to practise at the Bar, viz., the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn.—2 Reeves, 360; 3 Rep., Preface, p. 18. No means of obtaining the rank of barrister-at-law exists but that of becoming enrolled as a student in one or other of these Inns, and afterwards applying to its benchers for a call to the Bar. After the passing of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 71), women have been admissible to practise at the Bar.

The Inns of Court from time to time agree on certain 'Consolidated Regulations,' as to the admission of students, the mode of keeping terms, the education and examination of students, the calling of students to the Bar, and the taking out of certificates to practise under the Bar. These Regulations, a copy of which can be obtained on application to any one of the Inns, contain full information as to the steps necessary to be taken in order to being called to the Bar. See BENCHERS; and consult Six Lectures on the Inns of Court and of Chancery, by W. Blake Odgers, K.C., and others.

Innuendo [fr. innuo, Lat., to nod], a word used in statements of claim, indictments, and other pleadings, to ascertain a person or thing named before, or to connect an expression with a certain person; as to say, he (innuendo—i.e. meaning the plaintiff) did so and so.—4 Rep. 17. Its ordinary use is in actions of libel and slander, where it may be defined as 'a statement by the plaintiff of the construction which he puts upon the words himself, and which he will endeavour to induce the jury to adopt at the trial' (Odgers on Libel). Where the words primâ facie are not actionable, an innuendo is essential to the action (ibid.). As to interrogatories for the purpose of establishing an innuendo, see Heaton v. Goldney, 1910, 1 K. B. 754.

Inofficious Testament, a will not in accordance with the testator's natural affection and moral duties.

Inops consilii (lacking advice).

Inordinatus, an intestate.

In pacato solo, in a country which is at peace.

In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis.—(In equal fault, the condition of the possessor is the more favourable.) Where both parties are equally in the wrong, the defendant holds the stronger ground. The law will take notice of an illegal transaction to defeat a suit, not to maintain one. Thus, in Taylor v. Chester, (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. 309, the plaintiff failed to recover the half of a 50l. note deposited with the defendant as a security for a debt contracted for wine and suppers supplied to the plaintiff by the defendant for consumption in a brothel kept by her, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not recover without showing the true character of the deposit. And see IN ÆQUALI JURE MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS.

In pari materiâ [or materie], in an analogous case or position.

Inpeny, and Outpeny, customary payments on alienation of tenants, etc.

In Person. A party, plaintiff or defendant, who sues out a writ or other process, or appears to conduct his case in Court himself, instead of through solicitor or counsel, is said to act and appear in person. Any party except one suing or defending in forma pauperis, or a corporation (Re London County Council, etc., Arb. (1897) 13 T. L. R. 254), may do this.

In personam. All civil actions are either in personam or in rem; actions at law in personam are those which seek recovery of damages, etc. So in equity the Court acts in personam; thus it will make a decree against a defendant provided he is within the jurisdiction although the subject-matter of the suit may be situate abroad. 'The strict primary decree in this Court,' said Lord Hardwicke, 'as a Court of Equity, is in personam'; see Penn v. Lord Baltimore, (1750) 1 Ves. Sen. 444; W. & T. L. C. See IN REM.

In pleno lumine, in public; in common knowledge; in the light of day.

In posse (in a state of possibility).

In præsentî (at the present time).

In promptu, in readiness; at hand.

In propria personâ (in one's own proper person).

Inquest, judicial inquiry.

Inquest, Coroner's. See CORONER.

Inquest of Office, an inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ sent to them for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. See Hubback on Succession, p. 80; and ESCHEATS.

Inquilinus, the hirer of a house.—Civil Law.

Inquirendo, an authority given to some official person to institute an inquiry concerning the Crown's interests.

Inquiries. Under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921 (11 Geo. 5, c. 7), upon resolution by both Houses of Parliament, His Majesty or a Secretary of State may appoint a tribunal with all the powers of the High Court, or in Scotland the Court of Session, to inquire into a definite matter of urgent public importance under various statutes. Departmental inquiries may or must in certain circumstances be instituted, e.g., inquiries under the Factory, Local Government, Merchant Shipping (Wreck Inquiries), Housing, Town and Country Planning, Road Traffic and other Acts.

Inquiry, Court of, frequently appointed by the Army authorities to ascertain the propriety of resorting to ulterior proceedings against a person charged before it. The 4th section of the Army (Annual) Act, 1901

(1 Edw. 7, c. 2), allows the evidence (previously unsworn) to be given on oath. The person charged (if the report of the Court be against him) has no right to a court-martial, nor to redress from the Courts of Law.

Inquiry, Writ of. This is a writ addressed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, stating the proceedings in an action, and 'because it is unknown what damages the plaintiff has sustained,' commanding the sheriff that, by the oath of twelve men of his county, he diligently inquire into the same, and return the inquisition into Court. The writ is necessary after an interlocutory judgment, the defendant having let judgment go by default, to ascertain the quantum of damages.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIII., r. 5, it is provided that where the defendant fails to appear and the plaintiff's claim is for detention of goods and damages, or either of them, interlocutory judgment may be entered, and a writ of inquiry shall issue to assess the value of the goods and the damages, or the damages only, as the case may be; see also Ord. XXXVI., r. 57. By Ord. XXXIII., r. 2, the Court or a judge may at any stage of the proceedings in a cause or matter direct any necessary inquiries or accounts to be made or taken. Inquiries may be made in district registries (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 66).

Inquisitio post mortem (inquest after death). This was an inquisition taken after the death of a tenant in capite (a class comprising at one time almost all the men of property in the kingdom) in which the death of the deceased tenant and the name and age of his heir were found by a jury and returned of record. As evidence of pedigrees these inquisitions were of the utmost value. See Hubback on Succession, p. 584.

Inquisition, inquiry, inquest; the finding of a tribunal charged to inquire. The three best known inquisitions are:—

1. A coroner's inquisition, which is (see Coroners Act, 1887, s. 4, sub-s. 3) a certificate of the verdict of the jury, 'setting forth, so far as such particulars have been proved to them, who the deceased was, and how, when, and where the deceased came by his death; and if he came by his death by murder or manslaughter, the persons, if any, whom the jury find to have been guilty of such murder or manslaughter, or of being accessories before the fact to such murder.' The inquisition must be signed by the jurors. A form is given in the Third Schedule of the Coroners Rules, 1927 (S. R. & O. 1927, No. 344/L. 13). See also CORONER.

2. Inquisition as to lunacy, which is an inquiry directed by the judge in lunacy, as to whether a person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. It is held before a jury, if the person alleged to be of unsound mind demands a jury, unless the judge is satisfied by personal examination that he is not mentally competent to form and express a wish to that effect. See Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 90-107. By s. 90, sub-s. 2, the jury may specially find that the person is incapable of managing himself, but capable of managing his affairs. And see PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND and Mills' and Poyser's Lunacy Practice.

3. Inquisition under the Lands Clauses Acts, which is the verdict and judgment, after an inquiry before a sheriff and jury, as to the amount of purchase-money or compensation due to a claimant under those Acts. See s. 50 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, which, however, uses the term 'verdict and judgment,' and not 'inquisition.'

Inquisitor, any officer, as a sheriff, coroner, etc., having power to inquire into certain matters.

In re (in the matter of). An expression used in intitling matters other than actions, in which there is not any plaintiff and defendant, especially in the Court of Bankruptcy.

In rem. Civil actions are divided into actions in rem and actions in personam. A judgment in rem is a judgment pronounced on the status of some particular subject-matter. Such are actions for the condemnation of a ship in the Court of Admiralty; suits for nullity of marriage, etc. See IN PERSONAM; ADMIRALTY; ss. 22 & 23 Judic. Act, 1925.

Inrolment [fr. irrotulatio, Lat.]. See ENROLMENT.

Insanity. See PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND.

Inscriptiones, written instruments by which anything was granted.

Insetenta, an inditch, or grave in a ditch.

Insidiatores varium, way-layers.

Insignia, ensigns or arms.

Insiliarius, an evil counsellor.

Insillium, evil advice or counsel.

In simili materia, dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

Insimul computasset (he accounted together), a writ of action of account which lay for things uncertain. Obsolete.

Insimul tenuit, a species of the abolished writ of formedon, brought against a stranger by a co-parcener on the ancestor's possession.

Insinuatio, registration amongst the public records.—Civ. Law.

In solido, in the whole, applied to a joint contract.

Insolvency, the state of one who has not property sufficient for the full payment of his debts. An insolvent, as distinguished from a bankrupt, was an insolvent who was not a trader: for until the passing of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, only a trader could be made bankrupt in the sense of obtaining an absolute discharge from his debts, while the future estate of an insolvent remained liable for his debts even after his discharge. The Acts from time to time in operation for the relief of insolvent debtors were 53 Geo. 3, c. 102; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 23-120; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102; and the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), s. 230. By the Bankruptcy Repeal and Insolvent Court Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 83), all the enactments on this subject theretofore existing were repealed, and provision was made for winding up and terminating all matters pending under the Acts for the relief of insolvent debtors. For administration of insolvent estates of a deceased person by the Chancery Division, see Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 34 and 1st Sched. And under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, a woman may be made bankrupt, even though she is not carrying on a trade except in respect of any contracts entered into, or debt or obligation incurred before 2nd August, 1935, if she was not then carrying on a trade (s. 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914). See BANKRUPT.

In specie, in its own form and essence, not in the form of an equivalent: in coin, as distinguished from paper money.

Inspector, a prosecutor or adversary.

Inspection, examination.

Trial by Inspection was resorted to when, for the greater expedition of a cause, some point or issue, being either the principal question, or one arising collaterally out of it, it was decided by the judges of the Court upon the evidence of their own senses. Obsolete. See 3 Bl. Com. 331. As to inspection by a judge or jury, see R. S. C., Order L.

Inspection of Written Documents. It was provided by the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), s. 6, that in any action or other proceeding the Court or a judge might, on application by either party, compel the opposite party to allow the party making the application to inspect all documents in the custody or under the control of such opposite party relating to such action or other legal proceeding, and if necessary to take examined copies of the same, or to procure the same to be duly stamped. Even prior to this Act the Court would, in certain cases, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, order inspection of specific documents.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXI., rr. 15-18, either party is prima facie as a matter of right entitled to inspect (after notice) documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits of the other, and may, by leave of a judge, and upon an affidavit, inspect other documents in possession of the other; and by Ord. L., r. 3, any party to a cause may, by order of the Court or a judge, inspect any property or thing which is the subject of the cause. By rr. 4 and 5 of the same Order, both a judge and a jury (see also VIEW) have powers of inspection of such property or things. There are similar provisions in the County Court Rules.

Inspector, an overseer, examiner and reporter. There are government and local authority inspectors of factories, mines, shops, weights and measures, ancient monuments, schools, explosives, inebriate reformatories, railways, food, housing and sanitation, Health and Unemployment Insurance, to name a few only of the extensive powers of investigation and inspection by government and other public bodies. As to Board of Trade inspectors to investigate the affairs of a company, see Companies Act, 1929, s. 135; and inspectors appointed by the company itself by special resolution (s. 137, ibid.).

Inspector-General of the Forces. An officer originally appointed in 1904, whose duty it is to inspect the Army and report upon its efficiency to the Army Council. The office is now in abeyance.

Inspectorship, Deed of, an instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more person or persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent affairs on behalf of the creditors. See COMPOSITION; and the repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 125, 127. Compare 'committee of inspection'; as to which, see Bankruptcy Rules, 1915, r. 294, and in companies (winding up by the Court), under the Companies Act, 1929, ss. 198-201, and, upon voluntary winding up, appointed by creditors, s. 240 (ibid.).

Inspeximus (we have inspected), the first word of an ancient charter, or royal grant. An exemplification of the enrolment of a charter or of letters-patent is so called.—Co. Litt. 225 b.

Installation, the ceremony of inducting or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing of a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order.

Instalment, a portion of a debt. When a debt is divided into two or more parts, payable at different times, each part is called an instalment, and the debt is said to be payable by instalments. A provision making the balance of instalments payable on default in payment of one instalment is not a penalty, and there is no objection to it in point of law (Wallingford v. Mutual Society, (1880) 5 App. Cas. 685). Where, in a county court, judgment has been obtained for not more than 20*l.*, exclusive of costs, the Court may order payment by instalments.—County Courts Act, 1934, s. 96, replacing County Courts Act, 1888, s. 105, as amended by s. 18 (1) of the County Courts Act, 1919.

As to delivery by instalments of goods sold, see s. 31 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, by which, 'unless otherwise agreed, the buyer is not bound to accept delivery by instalments'; and see HIRE PURCHASE.

An instalment due according to the terms of an allotment of shares in a limited company is not a 'call' (Croskey v. Bank of Wales, (1863) 4 Giff. 314).

Instance Court of Admiralty. See ADMIRALTY.

Instant, immediately; at once.

Trial instant was had where a prisoner between attainder and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted.

When a party is ordered to plead instant he must plead the same day.

Instar dentium [Lat.] (like teeth). See INDENTURE.

In statu quo (in the condition in which it was). See STATUS QUO.

Instaurum, a stock of cattle.

In stipulationibus cum quaeritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. D. 45, l. 38, s. 18. (When questions arise in the construction of agreements, words are to be construed against the person using them); thus the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promissor.

Institor, a consignee or factor; one who superintends the business of a store or shop.

Institorial Power, the charge given to a clerk to manage a shop or store.—1 Bell's Com. by McLaren, 506, 507.

Institute, a commentary, a treatise. In Scotland, a person to whom an estate is first given by destination or limitation.

Institutes of Lord Coke, four volumes by Lord Coke (more properly called Sir Edward Coke), published A.D. 1628, and very frequently edited. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures compiled by Littleton, a judge of the Common Pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable Common Law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and year-books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of Co. Litt., or as 1 Inst. The second volume is a comment upon Magna Charta and other old Acts of Parliament, without systematic order; the third, a more methodical treatise of the pleas of the Crown; and the fourth, an account of the several species of courts, including the High Court of Parliament and of the House of Commons as well as the House of Lords under that title. These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 Inst., without any author's name.

Institution, used in several senses: e.g. (1) Laws, rites, and ceremonies enjoined by authority, as permanent rules of conduct or of government. (2) A commitment of the cure of souls by the bishop to the incumbent, whereby the benefice becomes filled. The clerk kneels before the bishop or his deputy, who reads the words of the institution out of a written instrument, drawn for this purpose, with the episcopal seal appended, which the clerk holds in his hand during the ceremony. Notice, one month before institution, must be given by the bishop to the churchwardens of the name of the person whom he proposes to institute: Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 2 (2). The clerk by institution (which may take place anywhere) becomes parson as to the spirituality, may celebrate Divine service, enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the profits of the benefice as from the death of his predecessor; though he cannot grant, or let, or claim a freehold in them, or bring an action for them till induction, which can take place only in the church to which the clerk is inducted. See INDUCTION. Institution being given to a clerk, a particular entry of it should be made in the register of the ordinary, not only that such a clerk received institution on such a day and year, but if the clerk were presented, at whose presentation, and whether in his own right or in another's, and if collated or presented by the Crown, then whether jure pleno or per lapsum temporis. Such entries should be carefully preserved, for the letters of institution may be destroyed or lost, and the patron's title may suffer from want of evidence upon whose presentation institution was given (Mirehouse on Advoc., p. 187). (3) A society for promoting any public object, as a charitable or benevolent institution, or literary and scientific institutions. (4) In the Civil Law, the appointment of a debtor as heir—i.e., to carry on the legal existence, the persona of the testator.

By the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 39), an institution (s. 5) carried on for charitable or reformatory purposes where 'any manual labour is exercised in or incidentally to the making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing, washing, cleaning, or adapting for sale, of articles not intended for the use of the institution,' is within and has to conform to the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), unless it carries on the work under a scheme approved by the Secretary of State.

Institutiones. It was the object of Justinian to comprise in his Code and Digest, or Pandects, a complete body of law. But these works were not adapted to the purposes of elementary instruction, and the writings of the ancient jurists were no longer allowed to have any authority, except so far as they had been incorporated in the digest.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq. It was therefore necessary to prepare an elementary treatise, and the Institutes were published a month before the Pandects, A.D. 533, and designed as an elementary introduction to legal study (legum cunabula). The work was divided into four books, subdivided into titles.

The Institutes are the elements of the Roman Law, and were composed at the command of the Emperor Justinian, by Trebonian, Dorotheus, and Theophilus, who took them from the writings of the ancient lawyers, and chiefly from those of Gaius, especially from his Institutes and his books called Aureorum (i.e., of important matters).

The Institutes are divided into four books, each book into several titles, and each title into several parts—the first of which is called Principium, and those which follow, paragraphs. The first book of the Institutes has twenty-six titles, the second twenty-five, the third thirty, and the fourth eighteen; in all, ninety-nine titles. First, it is to be observed that the division is triple—Persons, Things, and Actions—under which the subject-matter of the four books of the Institutes is comprised. The first book treats of the rights of Persons ; the second, third, and five first titles of the fourth, of Things ; and Actions are the subjects treated of from the sixth title of the fourth book to the end. The first book treats of Persons, but it is from Title III. only ; for the first two, which are by way of introduction, explain Justice, Law, and Right ; the meaning of the Right or State of Persons follows in two divisions, which complete the remaining part of the first book.

According to the chief Division of Persons treated of from Titles III. to VIII. of the first book, men are either Free or Slaves. The condition of all slaves is the same, but it is not so with free men, of whom some are free by birth, others by emancipation.

The second Division of Persons begins at Title VIII. of the first book, and is explained in the following titles of that book. It is of independent persons, and of such as are under the power of another. The power of masters over their slaves, and of fathers over their children, is treated of ; after which is shown the manner of acquiring paternal power—viz., by marriage, legitimation, and adoption, and how that power may be lost.

Title XIII. to the end of the first book treats of Pupils, or such as have Tutors ; of Minors, or such as have Curators appointed to them ; and lastly, of persons who are of age and masters of their own actions.

In Title XX. matters relating to Curators, and in the last three of this book, three things, common to Tutors and Curators, are treated of. These are : the security they are obliged to give to indemnify Pupils and Minors ; the lawful causes exempting persons from being Tutors or Curators, and those for which they may be deprived of their offices.

Things are treated of in Title I. of the second book to Title VI. of the fourth, under three heads—their divisions, the way of acquiring them, and the means by which they become due to us. The divisions are principally two ; by the first, things are divided into those which belong to individuals and those which do not ; by the second, they are corporeal or incorporeal. The property in things is acquired either by Natural Law or by Civil Law.

Title II. explains the second Division of Things, which are either corporeal or incorporeal : and here real or personal services, as being incorporeal things, are treated of. The modes of acquisition introduced by the Civil Law follow ; and the property of Things, according to the Civil Law, acquired either by particular or universal title.

Title VII. treats of Usucaption or just Usurpation and the conditions which it requires, and Title VII. of Donations ; Titles VIII. and IX. of those who have the power of alienation, and those through whom property may be acquired.

Title III. shows how a Testament made in the form prescribed by law, and not invalidated, may be carried into execution, which is done by the heir accepting the succession.

Fiduciary Bequests are treated of in Titles XXIII. and XXIV.

Testamentary Successions, which take place before others, are explained in the last fifteen titles of the second book.

Title I. of the third book, and those that follow, treat of Legal Successions, admissible only in default of Testamentary.

Title V. treats of the Succession to Intestates, to which the cognati, or female side, were admitted by the Prætorian equity, according to the degree of cognation.

The Title, in conclusion, treats of those who were excluded from this Prætorian succession, because allied to the deceased only by a servile relation.

The succession of Freemen is the subject of Title VII., and the assignment of Freemen that of Title VIII.

After disposing of the question of Succession, which by the Civil Law is the first mode of acquiring property by universal title, the other five modes which followed, by the Prætorian succession, are called bonorum possessio ; acquisition by abrogation ; the adjudication of the goods of a deceased person, in order to make the enfranchisement of slaves effectual ; and the two abrogated successions, per bonorum venditionem and ex Senatus-Consulto Claudiano, Titles IX.—XII.

We then come to the last point relating to Things—viz., Obligations—being the means whereby things accrue to us. The principal division of them is into two kinds—Civil, or those constituted by the laws, or at least recognized by the Civil Law, and Prætorian, or those which the Prætor has established by his own authority, also called honorary. There is a further division of obligations into four kinds, for they arise : (1) ex contractu ; (2) quasi ex contractu ; (3) ex maleficio ; (4) quasi ex maleficio.—Title XIII., 1 and 2. First it is shown what an Obligation is, and the causes producing a mixed Obligation—that is, partly natural and partly civil, as a contract, quasi-contract, crime or offence.

Contracts made by words are called Stipulations, the general principles of which are first explained, in order to arrive at the chief divisions of that kind of contract. The first division is of the Stipulation made between the person who demands and him that promises, and of that made between several who stipulate or promise together.

The second is of the Stipulation made by free persons or slaves.

The third is of Stipulations that are called judicial, Prætorian, common, or conventional.

The fourth is of Stipulations called equitable (utiles), or good in law, and of Stipulations which are inutiles.

The fifth is of Principal and Accessory Stipulations, called sureties or cautions.

Title XXII. treats of Written Contracts. The five following titles explain contracts made by the sole consent of the contracting persons, which are the contracts of purchase, of hire, of partnership, and of mandate.

Title XXVIII. treats of Quasi-Contracts; the next shows how Obligations are to be acquired; and the last, in what manner they may be extinguished. Having spoken of Obligations which arise from contracts or quasi-contracts, the first five titles of the fourth book treat of obligations arising out of faults and quasi-faults—delicta or quasi delicta. The rest of the book, from Title VI. to Title XVI., is devoted to the treatment of Actions. It begins with the definition of an Action, which is followed by several divisions explained in Title VI., according to the chief and principal of which Actions are either real, personal, or mixed. The second is of Actions derived from the Civil Law, and such as have their foundations in Prætorian equity. The third is of Actions by which the plaintiff seeks to recover a thing belonging or due to him, and of those by which the punishment of the offender only is aimed at, and of such actions by which both are intended. The fourth division is of Actions by which the plaintiff sued for the single, double, treble, or quadruple value of the thing he would recover. The fifth is of Actions of good faith, strict law, and arbitrary.

The sixth is of Actions in which the total of what is due is sued for, and in which the defendant is either not sued for the whole, or in consequence of which he is condemned to pay only so much as his circumstances will allow.

After these divisions of actions are explained, Title VII. treats of certain Prætorian Actions which are liable to, and which proceed from, contracts made by slaves or children under power, or else by persons to whom they have committed the management of their affairs.

Title VIII. speaks of Actions that may be brought against a master for an error committed by his slave.

Title IX. of Actions to which the owner is liable for the hurt or damage done by a beast.

Title X. directs what persons are to be employed in carrying on lawsuits.

Title XI. treats of the security required of the parties to a suit, or such as appear for them.

Title XII. sets forth the nature of temporary or perpetual Actions, and what Actions the law affords to or against heirs; which those are which lie in their favour and not against them; and lastly, those which are neither allowed for nor against them.

Title XIII. treats of Exceptions, and Title XIV. of Replications.

Title XV. of Injunctions, or Actions to put the party injured into possession.

Title XVI. declares the Penalty against such as commence vexatious suits.

Title XVII. prescribes rules to be observed by judges in the several suits brought before them.

And Title XVIII., the last, shows what were the Roman public prosecutions, which every one had free liberty to institute, and of which the penalties were established by the laws called Judiciorum Publicorum Leges.

The Institutes are quoted in the same manner as the Code and Pandects, with the letter I. or Inst.: thus, § si adversus 12, I. De Nuptiis, is nothing more than the twelfth paragraph of the Title De Nuptiis, which, on reference to the index, will be found to be the tenth of the first book. This is usually now cited I. l. 10, 12.—1 Colqu. R. C. L. s. 61.

Instruct, to convey information—as a client to a solicitor, or as a solicitor to a counsel; to authorize one to appear as advocate.

Instrument [instrumentum, Lat., fr. instruo, to prepare or provide], a formal legal writing—e.g., a record, charter, deed or transfer, or agreement. By s. 205 (1) (viii.) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, 'Instrument' (for the purposes of the Act) 'does not include a Statute, unless the Statute creates a Settlement.' See also Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 117; see also TRUST INSTRUMENT; VESTING INSTRUMENT. A telegram and an envelope with a falsified postmark have been held to be 'instruments' within the meaning of the Forgery Act, 1861, s. 38, now replaced by s. 7, Forgery Act, 1913 (R. v. Riley 1896, 1 Q. B. 309; R. v. House, 28 T. L. R. 186); also an engine.

Instruments, writings not under seal.

In subsidium (in aid).

Insuoken miltures, a quantity of corn paid by those who are thirled to a mill. See THIRLAGE.

Insufficiency, an answer in Chancery was said to be insufficient when it did not specially reply to the specific charges in the bill.

If a plaintiff conceived an answer to be insufficient, he might take exception to it in writing, stating the parts of the bill which he alleged were not answered, and praying that the defendant might in such respect file a further and full answer to the bill. Scandal and impertinence in an answer must have been disposed of before its sufficiency could be considered. See INTERROGATORIES; and Dan. Ch. Pr.

Insuper, debiting or charging a person in an account.—Exchequer term. See an example of its use in Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), s. 112.

Insurance, the act of providing against a possible loss, by entering into a contract with one who is willing to give assurance, that is, to bind himself to make good such loss should it occur. In this contract, the chances of benefit are equal to the insured and the insurer. The first actually pays a certain sum, and the latter undertakes to pay a larger, if an accident should happen. The one renders his property secure; the other receives money with the probability that it is clear gain. The instrument by which the contract is made is called a policy; the stipulated consideration, a premium. As to what is known as a coupon policy, i.e., a coupon cut out of a diary, etc., see General Accident, etc., Assce. Corp'n. v. Robertson, 1909, A. C. 404.

Insurable Interest must be possessed by the person taking out a policy; he must be so circumstanced as to have benefit from the existence of the person or thing insured, and some prejudice from its destruction (Lucena v. Crauford (1806), 3 Bos. & P. 75; 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 269); a mere hope of profit is not insurable (ibid.). See also the Assurance Companies (Gambling Policies) Act, 1909, as to marine policies. The interest of the insured must exist (a) marine insurance, at the time of loss; (b) life, at time of effecting the insurance; (c) fire, throughout the period insured.

Insurances generally provide either against risks at sea, or losses by fire, death, or accident; but losses by burglary or by default of clerks, and, in fact, almost all kinds of risk, chance and liability, are now commonly insured against.

Insurances are effected sometimes by companies or societies, and sometimes by individuals, the risk being in either case diffused amongst a number of persons. Companies formed for carrying on this business have generally a large subscribed but uncalled capital, so as to enable them to raise large sums to make good extraordinary losses.

Marine Insurance.—The practice of marine insurance is older than insurance against fire and upon lives, and the whole of the law is now codified in the Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41). The Act renders void any policy of marine insurance in which the insured has not an 'insurable interest,' or expectation of such interest, as being in the nature of gaming or wagering. The Marine Insurance Act, 1745, which it repeals, made provision much to the same effect, and the Life Assurance Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 48), has similar enactments as to assurances on lives 'or on any other event or events whatsoever'; see these statutes and the cases on them in Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Insurance (Life and Accident)' and 'Insurance (Sea).' An attempt is also made still further to restrain gambling by the Marine Insurance (Gambling Policies) Act, 1908 (9 Edw. 7, c. 12), under which 'p. p. i.' (policy proof of interest) policies are prohibited. There is an ad valorem duty on policies of sea insurance.

While all fire and life insurances are made at the risk of companies, which include within themselves the requisites of security, wealth, and numbers, a large proportion of marine insurances is made at the risk of individuals called underwriters.

The underwriters meet in a subscription room at Lloyd's, at the back of the Royal Exchange. The joint affairs of the subscribers to these rooms are managed by a committee chosen by the subscribers. Agents (who are commonly styled Lloyd's agents) are appointed in all the principal ports of the world, who forward regularly to Lloyd's accounts of the departures of ships from, and arrivals at, such ports, as well as of losses and other casualties; and, in general, all such information as may be supposed of importance towards guiding the judgments of the underwriters. These accounts are regularly filed, and are accessible to all the subscribers. The principal arrivals and losses are besides posted in two books, placed in two conspicuous parts of the room; and also in another book, which is placed in an adjoining room, for the use of the public at large.

The rooms are open from 10 a.m. till 5 p.m.; but the most considerable part of the business is transacted between one and four.

Merchants and shipowners who manage their own insurance business procure blank policies, which they fill up to meet the case, and submit them to underwriters, by whom they are subscribed or rejected. Each policy is handed about in this way until the amount required is complete. Merchants and shipowners also give orders to insurance brokers, who undertake and are responsible for the business of insuring; and to them likewise are transmitted the orders for insurance from the outports and manufacturing towns.

The common form of policy is 'Lloyd's Policy,' and it has been twice scheduled to statutes, viz., to 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, and to 30 Vict. c. 23, both of them Revenue Acts. The policy was settled in its present form in 1779, but most of its provisions are of much earlier date. Many of the insurance companies have slightly altered some of its provisions, but it is recognized as the typical British policy. Every line, and almost every word of it, has been judicially construed, and has now acquired a conventional meaning.—Chalmers and Owen on Marine Insurance.

The policy is very badly drawn, and has more than once been described in words of well-merited judicial abuse: Buller, J., e.g., speaking of it in Brough v. Whitmore, (1791) 4 T. R. 210, 2 R. R. at p. 364, as 'always described in Courts of Law as an absurd and incoherent instrument.'

'Lloyd's Policy' is set out in the schedule to the Act of 1906, which also gives Rules for its construction.

Besides individual underwriters and companies, there are associations formed by shipowners, who agree, each entering his ships for a certain amount, to divide the losses sustained by any of them. These are institutions of long standing, but since the alteration of the law in 1824, appear to be on the decline. The formation originated in a twofold reason: 1st, that the underwriters charged premiums more than commensurate with the risk; and, 2ndly, that they did not afford adequate protection.

The losses against which a merchant or shipowner is not protected by insurance in this country in usual form are the following:—

(1) Acts of our own Government. (2) Breaches of the Revenue laws. (3) Breaches of the law of nations. (4) Consequences of deviation. (5) All losses arising from unseaworthiness. Unseaworthiness may be caused in various ways—such as want of repair, want of stores, want of provisions, want of nautical instruments, insufficiency of hands to navigate the vessel, or incompetency of the master. (6) All loss arising from unusual protraction of the voyage. (7) All loss to which the shipowner is liable when his vessel does damage to others. (8) Average clause.

Average is a name applied to a certain description of loss, to which the merchant and shipowner are liable. There are two kinds of average—general and particular.

(a) General average comprehends all loss arising out of a voluntary sacrifice of a part of either vessel or cargo, made by the captain for the benefit of the whole. If a captain throw part of his cargo overboard, cut loose an anchor and cable, or cut away his masts, the loss is distributed over the value of the ship and cargo as general average.

(b) Particular average comprehends all loss occasioned to ship, freight, and cargo, which has not been wholly or partly sacrificed for the common safety or which does not otherwise come under the heading of general average or total loss.

Losses where the goods are saved, but in such a state as to be unfit to forward to their destination, and where the ship is rendered unfit to repair, are called 'partial or salvage loss.' The leading distinction between particular average and salvage loss is, that in the first, the property insured remains the property of the assured, the damage sustained being made good by the insurer; in the second, the property is abandoned to the insurer, and the value insured claimed from him, he retaining the property so abandoned. See CONSTRUCTIVE TOTAL LOSS.

All the elements of general average may be classed under four heads: (1) Sacrifice of part of the ship and stores. (2) Sacrifice of part of the cargo and freight. (3) Remuneration of service required for general preservation to be distinguished from the cue and labour clause (q.v.) in Marine Insurance policies, which does not cover general average contributions or salvage, see Marine Insurance Act, 1906, s. 78 (2). (4) Expense of raising money to replace what has been sacrificed, and to remunerate services. See Arnould on Marine Insurance.

Fire Insurance.—Insurance against fire is a contract of indemnity (Farrell v. Tibbits, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 560), by which the insurer, in consideration of a certain premium received by him in a gross sum or by annual payments, undertakes to indemnify the assured against all loss or damage to houses or other buildings, stock, goods, and merchandise, by fire during a specified period.

Insurances against fire are hardly ever made by individuals, but almost always by corporations or joint-stock companies, of which there are several in all the considerable towns throughout the Empire.

The conditions on which the different offices insure are contained in the proposals printed on the back of the policies, and it is in most instances expressly conditioned that they undertake to pay the loss, not exceeding the sum insured, 'according to the exact tenor of their printed proposals.'

Sometimes no one office will insure to the amount required; and in such a case it is done by different offices. To prevent frauds by insuring the full value in various offices, there is, in the proposals issued, an article requiring notice of any other insurance upon the same houses or goods, that the same may be specified and allowed by indorsement, so that each office may bear its proportion of loss; and unless such notice is given, the insurance is void.

The risk commences in general from the signing of the policy, unless there be some other time specified. Policies of insurance may be annual, or for a term of years at an annual premium; and it is usual for the office, by way of indulgence, to allow a period of fifteen days or longer after the expiration of each year for the payment of the premium for the next year; and provided the premium be paid within that time, the insured is considered as within the protection of the office. As to the rights as between vendor and purchaser of land to the benefit of a policy effected by the vendor before alienation, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 47, &c. See DAYS OF GRACE.

Insurances are generally divided into common, hazardous, and doubly hazardous.

(α) Common insurances.—(1) Buildings covered with slates, etc., and built with brick or stone, etc., and wherein no hazardous trade or manufacture is carried on, or hazardous goods deposited. (2) Goods in buildings as above described—such as household goods, plate, etc. The premium upon these, with certain exceptions, is usually 1s. 6d. per cent. per annum.

(β) Hazardous insurances.—(1) Buildings of timber or plaster, or not wholly separated by partition-walls of brick or stone, or not covered with slates, etc., and thatched barns having no chimney, but in which hazardous goods are deposited, etc. (2) Ships and craft, with their contents (lime-barges, with their contents, alone excepted).

(γ) Doubly Hazardous insurances.—(1) Thatched buildings having chimneys, etc., and hazardous buildings in which hazardous goods are deposited, etc. (2) All hazardous goods deposited in hazardous buildings and in thatched buildings having no chimney nor adjoining to any building having a chimney.

The stamp-duty of 1s. 6d. formerly payable in respect of insurances against fire has been abolished by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 121, s. 12.

As to relief against forfeiture for not insuring against fire according to covenants in a lease, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146, and FORFEITURE. For insurances under mortgages, see that Act, ss. 101, 108.

Life Insurance. A risk in respect of the life of a human being is very ordinarily called Life Assurance in distinction to other kinds of insurance; but the distinction has no legal significance, and is by no means strictly adhered to. As to the necessity for an 'insurable interest,' see the Life Assurance Act, 1774, mentioned above. There are three classes of life insurance companies. The first class consists of corporations or joint-stock companies, who undertake to pay fixed sums upon the death of individuals insuring with them; the profits made by such companies being wholly divided among the proprietors. The second class are also corporations, or joint-stock companies, with proprietary bodies; but instead of undertaking to pay specified sums upon the death of the assured, they allow the latter to participate to a certain extent in the profits of the business. The mode is not the same in all; in some the principle on which the allotment is made is not disclosed. The third species of company is that which is formed on the basis of mutual insurance. In this there is no proprietary body distinct from the assured; the latter share among themselves the whole profits of the concern, after deducting the expenses of management.

Accident Insurance.—This is a contract under which the insurer in consideration of an annual premium undertakes to pay the assured a certain sum per week during such time as he is incapacitated by an accident, or a capital sum in the event of the accident proving fatal, the terms depending on the wording of the particular policy. As to the meaning of 'accident,' see Re Scarr, 1905, 1 K. B. 387; Macgillivray on Insurance Law.

The Assurance Companies Act, 1908 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), repeals earlier Acts and consolidates and amends the law as to all persons or bodies who carry on business of all or any of the following classes :—

(a) Life assurance business; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies of assurance upon human life, or the granting of annuities upon human life;

(b) Fire insurance business; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies of insurance against loss by or incidental to fire;

(c) Accident insurance business; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies of insurance upon the happening of personal accidents, whether fatal or not, disease, or sickness, or any class of personal accidents, disease, or sickness;

(d) Employers' liability insurance business; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies insuring employers against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen in their employment;

(e) Bond investment business; that is to say, the business of issuing bonds or endowment certificates by which the company, in return for subscriptions payable at periodical intervals of two months or less, contract to pay the bond-holder a sum at a future date, and not being life assurance business as hereinbefore defined.

and, under the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 42 :—

(f) Motor vehicle insurance business, that is to say, the business of effecting contracts of insurance against loss of, or damage to, or arising on and of or in connection with the use of motor vehicles, including third party risks (as amended as to third party risks by the R. T. Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 10—17.

The most important provision perhaps is (s. 2) the requirement of a deposit of 20,000*l.* in respect of each class of business, and see the Road Traffic Act, 1930, ss. 42 and 43, as to third party and motor vehicles insurance with a deposit of 15,000*l.* This deposit (under the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, as amended by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 42) is, upon a winding-up, not earmarked for risks but available for the general creditors of the company (South-East Lancashire Insurance Co., 1935, Ch. 225). Other provisions require the separation (s. 3) of funds, and regulate the keeping of accounts and preparing of balance sheets (s. 4) as well as the audit of such accounts (s. 9).

Schedules to the Act give the forms applicable to the various classes of businesses. The Industrial Assurance Act, 1923, as amended by the Industrial Assurance Acts, 1926 and 1929 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 11 and 19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 28), applies the Act of 1909 to Industrial Assurance Companies with certain modifications. The Acts of 1926 and 1929 consolidate and amend the law relating to industrial assurance. See that title and the Acts.

Compulsory Insurance.—Motor vehicles must be insured against third party risks: see Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 35. See Monk v. Courtney, 1935, 1 K. B. 75 (owner permitting passenger to drive so that car was uninsured, liable in damages for breach of statutory duty).

The Third Parties (Rights against Insurers) Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 25), gives third parties right to direct recourse against the insurers where the insured has insured against liabilities to third parties and the insured has become bankrupt or, if a company, is being wound up, or in the hands of a receiver or debenture holders.

By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 11, where a married man or woman insures his or her life expressly for the benefit of his or her wife, husband, or children, the policy moneys are not subject to his or her debts, unless an intent to defraud creditors be proved. A husband has an insurable interest in the life of his wife (Griffiths v. Fleming, 1909, 1 K. B. 805). Money paid as premiums and obtained by misrepresentation of a company's agents can be recovered (Refuge Assurance Co. v. Kettlewell, 1909, A. C. 243). Consult Porter, Bunyon or Macgillivray on Insurance. And see NATIONAL INSURANCE.

Insured. The person assured against loss.

Insurer. The person assuring against loss.

Intakers, receivers of stolen goods.

Intendent, a person who has the charge, direction, and management of some office or department.

Intendment, the true meaning.

Intentio, a count.—Bract.

Intention. See ACTUS NON FACIT REUM; MALICE.

Intentione, a writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder.—Fitz. N. B. 203.

Inter alla (amongst other things).

Inter canem et lupum (between the dog and the wolf), twilight; called also mock shadow, daylight's gate, and betwixt hawk and buzzard.

Interecdere, to become bound for another's debt.—Civ. Law.

Intercommoning, where the commons of two manors lie together, and the inhabitants of both have time out of mind pastured their cattle promiscuously in each. See COMMON.

Interdict, Interdiction, an ecclesiastical censure prohibiting the administration of the offices of religion, either to particular persons or in particular places, or both, but usually the latter; see Hall. Mid. Ages, ch. vii., pt. i. This severe censure has been long disused. In the Civil Law interdicts were certain formulæ by which the process ordered or forbade something to be done; they were chiefly employed in disputes as to possession, or quasi-possession, and were nearly equivalent to our writ of injunction. For a division of them, see Sand. Just. Also, in Scots Law, an injunction.

Interdiction of Fire and Water [interdictio ignis et aquæ, Lat.], banishment by an order that no man should supply the person banished with fire or water, two of the necessities of life.

Interesse termini, an executory interest, being a right of entry which a lessee acquired in land by virtue of a demise. It could not, before entry, be enlarged by a release from the lessor (except the term be created by an assurance under the Statute of Uses, which does not require an entry), because the lessee had no actual estate; yet such a release would extinguish the rent and also the interesse termini. The lessee could assign this interest, but it did not merge in the freehold subsequently acquired. A person having a mere interesse termini had no estate, could not bring an action of trespass, or for damages, or on a covenant for quiet enjoyment; see Wallis v. Hands, 1893, 2 Ch. 75, and cases there cited by Chitty, J.

The doctrine of interesse termini has been abolished by the L. P. Act, s. 149, which provides that, as from the commencement of the Act (1st January, 1926), all terms of years absolute shall (whether the interest is created before or after such commencement) be capable of taking effect at law or in equity, according to the estate, interest or powers of the grantor, from the date fixed for the commencement of the term, without actual entry.

Interest. 1. Money paid at a fixed rate per cent. for the loan or use of some other sum, called the principal. It is distinguished into simple and compound. (a) Simple interest is that which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance made by law, or agreement of parties. (b) Compound interest is when the arrears of interest of one year are added to the principal and the interest for the following year is calculated on that accumulation.

By the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 3 (1): 'In any proceedings tried in any court of record for the recovery of any debt or damages, the court may, if it thinks fit, order that there shall be included in the sum for which judgment is given, interest at such rate as it thinks fit on the whole or any part of the debt or damages for the whole or any part of the period between the date when the cause of action arose and the date of the judgment.'

'Provided that nothing in this section—

'(a) shall authorize the giving of interest upon interest; or

'(b) shall apply in relation to any debt upon which interest is payable as of right whether by virtue of any agreement or otherwise; or

'(c) shall affect the damages recoverable for the dishonour of a bill of exchange.'

2. Sects. 28 and 29 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1933, shall cease to have effect. For the law on these repealed ss. 28 and 29, see L. C. & D. Ry. Co. v. S. E. Ry. Co., 1892, 1 C. H., p. 146; Re Edwards, (1891) 61 L. J. Ch. 22; and London, Chatham & Dover Rail Co. v. South Eastern Rail. Co., 1893, A. C. 429.

Judgments and, under the Arbitration Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 14), s. 11, sums due under arbitrators' awards carry interest at four per cent.: (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 17.

By the Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 63 (3), (1), the taxing officer may allow interest on moneys disbursed by a solicitor for his client, and on moneys of the client in the hands of the solicitor and improperly retained by him. And see r. 7 of the G. O. under the Solicitors Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44).

3. Interest is vulgarly taken for a terme or chattel real and more particularly for a future terme or, in pleading, interesse termini. Ex vi termini, it extendeth to estates, rights and titles that a man hath of, in, to or out of lands.—1 Inst. 345 b.

4. Equitable interests, all estates, interests, and charges in or over land or in the proceeds of sale thereof not being legal estates.

An equitable interest 'capable of subsisting as a legal estate' means such as could validly subsist or be created as a legal estate under the Law of Property Act, 1925; see s. 205 (x), ibid.

4. Such a personal advantage derivable from his judgment as disqualifies a judge from hearing the cause by virtue of the rule: 'Nemo debet iudex esse in causâ sua propria,' as where the judge is a shareholder in a company which is plaintiff or defendant in an action; thus, in Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., (1852) 3 H. L. C. 759, in which Lord Chancellor Cottenham, a shareholder in the defendant company, had given judgment in its favour, the judgment was on that account set aside by the House of Lords.

See also Reg. v. London County Council, 1892, 1 Q. B. 190; and other cases in Mews's Digest, tit. 'Public Officer.'

The right to take objection to hearing by a judge on the ground of interest is often waived by counsel on the judge announcing his interest; see, e.g., Law Times newspaper of June 30, 1906, at p. 222.

The Companies, the Railways (see Wakefield Local Board v. West Riding and Grimsby Ry. Co., (1865) L. R. 1 Q. B. 84), and the Lands Clauses Acts, by their definition of 'Justices,' express the implied disqualification by interest; so, with an extension and an exception, does s. 40 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24) (see A.-G. v. Cozens, (1934) 50 T. L. R. 320); and so, with a positive injunction upon the Railway Commissioners to sell railway stock, etc., does s. 5 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873; but the Jurisdiction in Rating Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 11), and the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 304, remove the disqualification from judges of the High Court or Court of Appeal.

It is also provided by many statutes (see, e.g., the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 12, as extended by Local Government Act, 1894. See now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 76, that members of local authorities shall be disqualified from voting, etc., at meetings if they be interested in any contract which is the subject for consideration. See BIAS.

Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. Co. Litt. 303.—(It concerns the state that there be an end of lawsuits.) See LIMITATION, and Brown v. Dean, 1910, A. C. at p. 374, per Lord Loreburn, L.C.

Interest Suit. An action in the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice, in which the question in dispute is as to which party is entitled to a grant of letters of administration of the estate of a deceased person.

Interest upon Interest, compound interest.

Interested Witness, a witness is not excluded from giving evidence by reason of his interest in the matter in question.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1.

Interim Order. One made in the meantime, and until something is done.

Interlineation, the insertion of any matter in a written instrument after it is engrossed or executed. A deed may be avoided by interlineation, unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution or attestation. If there be any interlineation or erasure in the jural of an affidavit, the affidavit cannot be read, unless authenticated by initials of officer, etc.—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVIII., r. 12.

Interlineations in a will after execution, except so far as not 'apparent' (as to which see Finch v. Combe, 1894, P. 191), must, by s. 21 of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), be executed as the Will itself (see WILL), but the signature of the testator and the subscriptions of the witnesses may be by initials. See INITIALS.

Interlocutor. In Scotland, the pronouncement of any order of a Court.

Interlocutory. An interlocutory order or judgment is one made or given during the progress of an action, but which does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties—e.g., an order appointing a receiver or granting an injunction, and a motion for such an order is termed an interlocutory motion. For rules as to interlocutory orders in proceedings in the Supreme Court, see R. S. C., Ords. L., LII.

Interloper [fr. inter, Lat., between, and loopen, to run], a person who intercepts the trade of others.

Interment. See BURIAL.

International Copyright. See Copyright Act, 1911, s. 29; and COPYRIGHT.

International Law. I. Public Law: The law of nations, strictly so called, was in a great measure unknown to antiquity, and is the slow growth of modern times, under the combined influence of Christianity, intercourse, commerce and war.

II. Private Law (Conflict of Laws): It is plain that the laws of one country can have no intrinsic force, proprio vigore, except within the territorial limits and jurisdiction of that country. They can bind only its own subjects and others who are within its jurisdictional limits; and the latter only while they remain therein. No other nation, or its subjects, is bound to yield the slightest obedience to those laws. Whatever extra-territorial force they are to have is the result not of any original power to extend them abroad, but of that respect which, from motives of public policy, other nations are disposed to yield to them, giving them effect, as the phrase is, sub mutuae vicissitudinis obtentu, with a wise and liberal regard to common convenience and mutual benefits and necessities.

The first and most general maxim stated in international jurisprudence is that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction in its own territory.

Another maxim is, that no state or nation can, by its laws, directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or persons not resident therein, natural-born subjects or others. This is a natural consequence of the first proposition.

From these two maxims flows a third, that whatever force the laws of one country have in another depends solely upon the municipal law of the latter.

Huberus has laid down that all persons who are found within the limits of a government, whether their residence is permanent or temporary, are to be deemed subjects thereof: and that the rulers of every empire, from comity, admit that the laws of every people, in force within its own limits, ought to have the same force everywhere, so far as they do not prejudice the powers or rights of other governments, or of their citizens. One exception to this doctrine is that the courts of this country will not enforce the penal laws of another country. The King of Spain's fortune having been forfeited by the Spanish Government, any situate here remains his property (Banco de Vizcaya v. Don Alfonso de Bourbon, 151 L. T. 499). The same principle applies to the practice, procedure, and rules of evidence in a foreign court. Lib. 1, title 3, De Conflictu Legum, s. 2, p. 538. Consult Story's Conflict of Laws, cc. i. and ii.; Wheaton's International Law; Westlake's Pr. Intern. Law; Dicey's Conflict of Laws; and Hall's International Law.

Internuncio, or Internuncius, a messenger between two parties; also, the pope's representative in other countries.

Interpellation, a citation or summons.

Interpleader, the process whereby a person, who is or expects to be sued by two or more parties, claiming adversely to each other, for a debt or goods in his hands, but in which he himself has no interest, obtains relief by procuring such parties to try their rights between or amongst themselves only. Where the applicant is a sheriff, and claim is made to goods seized in execution by any other than the person against whom the execution issued, the process is called a 'sheriff's interpleader.' At one time an independent suit in Equity, called a 'bill of interpleader,' had to be brought against the two rival claimants by the person having no interest, but the Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58), instituted a more simple and expeditious procedure, whereby the Court in which such person was sued might call the rival claimants before it, and stay the action against such person; and this Act, with its amendments under the C. L. P. Act, 1860, was incorporated, but by reference only, into the Rules of Court of 1875. In 1883 the two Acts were thrown expressly into the form of rules by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LVII., the Acts themselves being repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act of the same year.

Interpolate, to insert words in a complete document. See INTERLINEATION.

Interpolation, the act of interpolation; the words interpolated.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magnis valeat quam pereat, that interpretation is to be made that the thing may rather stand than fall.

Interpretation. See CONSTRUCTION.

Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63). A most important statute, repealing and re-enacting Lord Brougham's Act of 1850 (13 Vict. c. 21), 'for shortening the language used in Acts of Parliament' and other similar Acts, and further shortening such language. By this Act, in Acts passed after 1850, words importing the masculine gender include females, words in the singular include the plural, and words in the plural include the singular; also, definitions are provided of 'month,' 'land,' 'parish' (see those titles), and other terms.

The Act also provides that:—

In this Act and in every other Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, references to the Sovereign reigning at the time of the passing of the Act or to the Crown shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as references to the Sovereign for the time being, and this Act shall be binding on the Crown (s. 30).

Statutory powers to make rules, etc., may be exercised from time to time, and the power to make rules, etc., includes a power to rescind or amend them (s. 32).

Where an offence is committed against more Acts than one, the offender may be prosecuted under any such Acts (s. 33).

The repeal, in any Act passed after 1850, of repealing enactments, does not revive the enactments repealed (s. 11).

Statutory powers to make rules, etc., may be exercised at any time after the passing, and before the commencement, of any Act which does not, by virtue of the Acts of Parliament (Commencement) Act, 1793 (33 Geo. 3, c. 13), commence on the day of the Royal Assent, s. 37 enacting that :—

Where an Act passed after the commencement of this Act is not to come into operation immediately on the passing thereof, and confers power to make any appointment, to make, grant, or issue any instrument, that it to say, any Order in Council, order, warrant, scheme, letters-patent, rules, regulations, or bye-laws, to give notices, to prescribe forms or to do any other thing for the purposes of the Act, that power may, unless the contrary intention appears, be exercised at any time after the passing of the Act, so far as may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation at the date of the commencement thereof, subject to this restriction, that any instrument made under the power shall not, unless the contrary intention appears in the Act, or the contrary is necessary for bringing the Act into operation, come into operation until the Act comes into operation.

It is also provided by s. 38 that :—

Where this Act or any Act passed after the commencement of this Act (i.e., after 1st January, 1890) repeals and re-enacts, with or without modification, any provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed, shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted.

This is a generalization of a modern form in consolidating Acts : see, e.g., s. 313 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

For further provisions of the Act, see DISTANCE ; MONTH ; PARISH ; REPEAL ; SERVICE ; STATUTORY DECLARATIONS.

Interpretation Clause, a clause of an Act of Parliament or document which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in other clauses of the Act or document ; see, e.g., s. 334 of the Public Health Act, 1936, replacing s. 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), and see also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 305. Almost all modern Acts define the sense in which certain terms are used for the purposes of the Act.

Interpretation clauses have been much complained of by judges : see Mewa's Digest, tit. ' Statute,' p. 1886 ; but they make an Act, by shortening, much easier to read, and indeed in their complicated matters with which modern legislation deals, their use is absolutely indispensable. It should, however, be observed that the definitions in such clauses are generally exclusively referable to the Statute, or Part, or Section to which they are expressed to relate and do not necessarily govern the meaning of the term in any other context.

Interpreters, persons sworn at a trial to interpret the evidence of a foreigner or a deaf and dumb person to the Court. As to the liability of an interpreter for perjury, see Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), s. 1.

Interregnum, the time during which a throne is vacant in elective kingdoms : for in such as are hereditary, as in England, there can be no interregnum, the sovereign in his artificial capacity never dying.

Interrogatories, written questions addressed on behalf of one party to a cause, before the trial thereof, to the other party, who is bound to answer them in writing upon oath.

In the Courts of Equity either party could from very early times interrogate the other. In the Courts of Law this power was first given by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 51, which, however, only allowed it to be exercised by leave of the Court or a judge. Under the present practice interrogatories can only be administered in the High Court by leave of the Court, i.e., a Master at Chambers, and the particular questions proposed to be asked must be submitted for his approval ; a sum, generally 5*l.*, may be ordered to be paid into Court as security for costs. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXI., and consult Bray or Ross on Discovery. As to interrogatories in the County Courts, see C. C. Rules, 1903, Ord. XVI. An order for interrogatories cannot be made in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (Sutton v. G. N. Ry., 1909, 2 K. B. 791). But see 1925 Act, Sched. I., s. 6.

In terrorem (by way of terrifying). Where a condition which the law will not carry out is attached to a gift or a legacy without a gift over, as where a legacy otherwise lawful is left so that it shall be avoided upon the happening of a condition such as disputing the will, this condition is said to be in terrorem only, and is void.

Interruption, a term applied in Scots Law to the step requisite by law to stop the running of the period of limitation.

Intervention. A third person not originally a party to a suit, but claiming an interest in the matter, may interpose at any stage of the suit in defence of his own interest, whenever affected either as to person or property. This is called intervention, and was peculiar to the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts. It is now practised in actions or suits in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court. An intervener must take the cause as he finds it at the time of his intervention, and can only do what he might have done had he been a party in the first instance; but the Court may relax this rule under special circumstances.

In probate actions, any person not named in the writ may intervene and appear in the action as heretofore on filing an affidavit showing that he is interested in the estate of the deceased (R. S. C., Ord. XII., r. 23). And in an Admiralty action in rem any person not named in the writ may intervene and appear as heretofore on filing an affidavit showing that he is interested in the res under arrest, or in the fund in the registry (ibid., r. 24). As to actions for the recovery of land, see ibid., r. 25.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 181, the king's proctor, or any other person, may intervene in any suit for the dissolution of marriage, on the ground that the parties have been guilty of collusion, or that material facts have been suppressed.

Intestate, one who has left no will. In regard to all the deaths before 1925, if he left no heir, his real property escheated (see ESCHEAT) to the Crown or lord of the manor, and his personal property was administered by a nominee of the Crown for the benefit of the Crown. The A. E. Act, 1925, s. 51, abolished the old rules of descent, and the intestate estates of persons dying after 1925 are, with some exceptions, administered and distributed according to the provisions of that Act. See DISTRIBUTION and ADMINISTRATOR; WIDOW.

Swinburne, Godolphin, and others of the early writers on the subject apply the term to one who dies leaving a will, but not appointing an executor; the term testament being formerly applied only to a will which appointed an executor. See Swinburne, pt. 1, s. 1; and 1 Williams on Executors.

Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), ss. 2 and 3, whereby administration for the Crown of the personal estate of an intestate is conducted on similar principles to those of an ordinary administration. The sections have been reproduced and amended by ss. 30 and 57, A. E. Act, 1925. The other provisions of the Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (except s. 55), have been repealed by the A. E. Act, 1935. By the repealed sections, when a person died intestate and without an heir, his estate, legal or equitable, in any incorporeal hereditament, and any equitable estate in any corporeal hereditament, escheated to the Crown. Provision was also made for the waiver of the rights of the Crown in certain cases. See ESCHEAT.

Intestates Estates Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 29), repealed and not re-enacted by the A. E. Act, 1925, in the case of persons dying intestate after 1925. See WIDOW. By the Act of 1890 the real and personal estate of every man dying wholly intestate after September 1, 1890, leaving a widow but no issue, is directed to belong to his widow if the net value should not exceed 500*l.*, while if it should exceed 500*l.* the widow obtains 500*l.* and a charge upon the whole of the estate for that term, in addition to her interest and share in the remainder of the estate, 'with interest thereon from the date of the death of the intestate, at 4 per cent. per annum until payment.' As to the meaning of 'intestate,' see Re Cuffe, 1908, 2 Ch. 500.

As to Scotland, see the Intestate Husband's Estate (Scotland) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 10), as amended by 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 9, which is framed on the lines of the English statute.

Intol and Utol, toll or custom paid for things imported or exported.

In totidem verbis (in so many words).

In toto, altogether.

Intoxicating liquors. The sale of intoxicating liquors by retail in England and Wales is now mainly regulated by the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), which repealed (see Sched. VII.) the whole or part of thirteen earlier Acts. The effect of this statute is shortly as follows:—

1. Grant of Licence.—Defining 'intoxicating liquor' as meaning 'spirits, wine, beer, porter, cider, perry, and sweets, and any fermented, distilled, or spirituous liquor which cannot, according to any law for the time being in force, be legally sold without an excise licence'; two licences are in every case required (except where the sale is in theatres or on packet-boats, railway restaurant cars, or canteens, or of methylated spirits or spruce, or by the holders of wholesale spirits or wine licences)—one from the justices of the peace, and one from the Inland Revenue, the first discretionary, and the second obtainable as of right, on production of the justices' licence. The justices' licence is grantable only at a 'general annual licensing meeting,' held in every division of a county, and in every borough having a separate commission of the peace, in the first fourteen days of February (s. 10). The Licensing Act, 1921, s. 11, provides that any liquor found on analysis at any time to be of an original gravity not exceeding 1,016 degrees and to contain not more than 2 per cent. of proof spirit, which may be sold under the excise laws without an excise licence, is not to be deemed beer or an intoxicating liquor within the meaning of the Act of 1910.

2. Character of Licence.—The licences are either (a) general, authorizing the sale of any kind of liquor to be drunk either on or off the premises where sold, or (b) particular, authorizing the sale of only wine or beer or spirits, as the case may be, to be drunk on and off, or only off the premises where sold, as the case may be.

The general licence is commonly called an 'alehouse licence' or a 'public-house licence,' the licence for sale for consumption on or off the premises an 'on-licence,' and that for sale for consumption off the premises only an 'off-licence.'

3. Duration of Licence.—Each licence (except 'a new licence,' see below) is expressed (see s. 4) to be for one year only, commencing from the 5th of April, and a licence is not extended by transfer or special removal.

4. Renewal.—A licence granted by way of renewal requires no confirmation. From a refusal to renew, the grounds of which must be specified in writing (s. 18 (2)), there is (see s. 29) an appeal to quarter sessions. Holders of certain wine and beer licences, if first granted before 1869 (before which year wine and beer might be sold without a justices' licence), have special privileges (see Sched. II.)

Before 1904 justices had an absolute discretion (subject to compliance with procedure as to notices, etc.) to refuse to renew the general 'public-house licence' (Sharpe v. Wakefield, 1891, A. C. 173), though prior to that decision the usual practice was to renew such licences in all cases except where actual misconduct on the part of the holder was shown.

Since the passing of the Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 23), this absolute discretion has been taken away and the power in the licensing justices to refuse the renewal of an old 'on-licence' is confined to certain grounds specified in the First and Second Schedules to the Act of 1910. These 'specified grounds' vary according to whether the licence in respect of the premises in question was in force on (1) 1st May, 1869, called 'old' beer-house licences, (2) 25th June, 1902, or (3) 15th August, 1904. Licences first granted since that date can never be the subject of renewal. Their continuance will be dealt with in the same way as the grant of a new licence.

The owners of premises licensed before 1869 under special Acts for the sale of beer or wine no longer enjoy the privilege of renewal as of right in the absence of ground for refusal affecting the character of the licensee or his house. One important distinction, however, between these ante-1869 licences and other existing on-licences is drawn by the Act: the renewal of them cannot be refused without compensation on the grounds of structural deficiency or unsuitability, as can the renewal of other existing on-licences.

In the case of other 'on-licences' the grounds of non-renewal must rest mainly on misconduct, but it is further provided that in every case of the refusal of the renewal of an 'on-licence' existing at the time of the passing of the Act by licensing justices they are to state in writing the grounds of refusal, and also (indirectly and clumsily) that renewals may be refused without compensation on the ground of an habitual and persistent refusal 'to supply suitable refreshment (other than intoxicating liquor) at a reasonable price,' or because 'the holder of the licence has failed to fulfil any reasonable undertaking given to the justices on the grant or renewal of the licence.' See R. v. Dodds, 1905, 2 K. B. 40.

5. Transfer and Removal.—For the purposes of transfer the licensing justices at the general annual licensing meeting appoint (s. 22) not less than four or more than eight transfer sessions. The cases in which and the persons to whom a transfer can be granted are set out in Sched. IV.

A removal of the licence is the removal from the premises in respect of which it was granted to other premises. Such a removal is either an 'ordinary removal,' and is in the discretion of the licensing justices, and the procedure is similar to that required for the grant of a 'new licence' (see below) and must be confirmed by the 'confirming authority' (s. 26); or is a 'special removal,' i.e.

one which was necessary because the premises are about to be pulled down for some public purpose or have been rendered unfit for use by reason of fire (s. 24), and then the procedure is similar to that for a transfer (s. 27).

6. Compensation for Non renewal.—The power of the licensing justices of any licensing district to refuse a renewal on the ground that the licences in that district have become too many is transferred from the licensing justices to quarter sessions, and they are constituted the compensation authority (s. 2); but quarter sessions can exercise such power only (1) on a reference from the licensing justices (s. 19), and (2) on payment of compensation to the dispossessed licensees (s. 20).

The reference is obligatory on the licensing justices when they are of opinion that the question of renewal requires consideration on other than the 'specified grounds' (s. 19), and a consideration of their reports is obligatory on quarter sessions, which may refuse the renewal. The compensation is a sum equal to the difference between the value of the licensed premises as licensed and their value as unlicensed, together with any depreciation in trade fixtures. It is to be paid to 'the persons interested,' and in default of agreement between them and quarter sessions the amount of it is to be determined by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue subject to appeal to the High Court of Justice, but the compensation authority has power to refer questions to the county court.

The moneys required for these payments are to come out of a compensation fund to be constituted by quarter sessions annually imposing, 'unless they certify to the Secretary of State that it is unnecessary to do so in any year,' charges on all old 'on-licences' renewed within their area. The charges are in proportion to the value of the licensed premises and at rates not exceeding certain maxima set out in Sched. III., ranging from 1l. on premises under 15l. yearly value to 100l. on premises of 900l. yearly value or more. If the tenure of the holder of the licence is leasehold, he may deduct (s. 21 (3)) from his rent a percentage of the charge, lessening with the length of his term, ranging from 88 per cent. in the case of an unexpired term of two years to 1 per cent. for 55 to 60 years, a person whose unexpired term does not exceed one year being entitled to treatment as a freeholder, and to deduct 100 per cent. The charges are to be levied as part of the corresponding Excise licence duties, and a deduction can be made in respect of them in Income Tax Returns (Smith v. Lion Brewery Co., 1911, A. C. 150; Usher's Brewery v. Bruce, 1915, A. C. 433).

7. New Licences.—The powers and regulations as to the grant of new licences inaugurated by the Act of 1904 are continued in the Consolidation Act, ss. 12–15. The jurisdiction to confirm new licences is in the quarter sessions, who are constituted the confirming authority except in boroughs (see below), and the licensing justices in granting 'on-licences' are armed with most comprehensive and far-reaching powers. They may attach such conditions as to payment, tenure, and 'any other matters' as 'they think proper in the interest of the public,' it being obligatory in every case to attach such conditions as 'having regard to suitable premises and good management' they 'think best adapted for securing to the public any monopoly value which is represented' by the increased value arising in the opinion of the justices from the licence being attached. New licences may also be granted for terms not exceeding seven years, instead of for one year only, as before 1904 had been the practice for some 150 years. At the end of the seven years or other fixed period an application for re-grant is to be treated as an application for a new licence and not for a renewal, and during that time the licence is to be subject to forfeiture if any condition imposed on the grant is not complied with or if the licence holder is convicted of any offence (s. 14 (4)). The confirming authority, however, i.e., in counties quarter sessions, in boroughs not having ten justices a joint county and borough committee, and in other boroughs the whole body of justices (s. 2 (3))—may 'with the consent of the justices authorized to grant the licences vary any conditions attached to the licence' (s. 14 (5)).

8. Register of Licences.—The clerk of the licensing justices keeps (s. 50) a register in which are entered the names of the owners of licensed premises and the holders of the licences. Every conviction is entered on the register as well as forfeitures, and disqualifications of premises or persons. A registration fee of 1s. is payable on every grant, renewal, transfer, or removal.

9. Police Regulations.—The holders of licences are subject to very strict police regulations. Their houses must be closed at certain hours, and may be entered by the police at any time (s. 81). They are subject to penalties for permitting drunkenness or gaming, for harbouring constables or prostitutes, for sale to children under 14 (see CHILDREN), and other offences (ss. 65-85). In some cases a conviction entails forfeiture of the licence.

10. Procedure, and Home Office Rules.—Quarter sessions may divide their area into districts for the purposes of the Act (s. 5), and may delegate any of their powers under it to a committee appointed in accordance with rules to be approved by the Home Office (s. 6), and except in a county borough shall so delegate their power of confirming the grant of a new licence, and of determining any question as to the refusal of a licence under the Act. The Home Office also may make general rules for carrying the Act into effect, and particularly providing for provisional renewal of licences included in reports of justices as not to be renewed without consideration, for regulating the management and application of the compensation fund, for constituting where requisite standing committees of quarter sessions, and for regulating the procedure of quarter sessions on the consideration of the reports of licensing justices, and on any hearing as to the refusal of renewals or the approval or division of the amount to be paid as compensation. See also Licensing Act, 1921, which repeals ss. 54, 56, 61, 62, and Sched. VI. of the Act of 1910, and repeals part of s. 58 (2) and alters the hours during which intoxicating liquor may be sold, making the necessary modifications to the relevant sections (see Part II. of Sched. I.). For further alterations in the law, see the Act itself and the schedules thereto. The Licensing (Permitted Hours) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 26), passed to remedy the decision in R. v. Sussex Licensing J.J., (1934) 50 T. L. R. 410, gives power to the justices to increase the permitted hours only during the summer period by half an hour, but never for more than eight consecutive weeks.

Clubs must be registered, but the distribution of intoxicating liquors among the members has been described as 'a transfer of special property in the goods' (Graff v. Evans, (1882) 8 Q. B. D. 373); it is not a sale.

A bonâ fide but ill-conducted club may be struck off the register (s. 95); there are penalties for supplying liquor in an unregistered club (s. 93). The Intoxicating Liquor (Sale to Persons under Eighteen) Act, 1923, restricts the sale of intoxicating liquor to young persons. Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 6, prohibits children to be allowed in bars of licensed premises with certain obvious exceptions, namely, children of licence holder, railway refreshment rooms, etc. See CHILDREN, sub. tit. Sale of Liquor. See LIQUOR LICENCES.

Consult the works of Paterson, Mackenzie, Talbot, Montgomery.

Intare mariscum, to drain a marsh or low ground, and convert it into herbage pasture.

In transitu (during the passage). See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Intrinscum servitium, common and ordinary duties with the lord's court.—Kenn. Gloss.

Intromission, the assuming possession and management of property belonging to another either on legal grounds or without any authority, which latter is termed vicious intromission.—Scots Law.

Intruder. See INTRUSION.

Intrusion, the entry of a stranger after a particular estate of freehold is determined before him in reversion or remainder. Where a tenant for life dies seised of certain lands or tenements, and a stranger enter thereon after such death of the tenant, and before any entry of him in remainder or reversion, such stranger is called an intruder. Intrusion was one of the five modes, the others being disseisin, abatement, discontinuance and forcement, which constituted adverse possession, from which time was computed under the old Limitation Acts.

The writ of entry on intrusion is abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27).

Intrusion, Information of. See INFORMATION.

Inure, to take effect.—Cowel.

In vacuo, without object; without concomitants, or coherence.

Invaditare, to pledge or mortgage lands.

In vadio, in gage; in pledge.

Invasiones, the inquisition of serjeanties and knights' fees.—Cowel.

Invecta et illata. The subjects covered by the landlord's hypothec (q.v.) includes the ordinary equipment of the premises—furniture, stock in trade, etc. It does not include money, bonds, personal clothing, tools of trade, nor the property of the tenant's family.

Invention, Title by, the mode of acquiring an ownership in patent-rights and copyrights. See COPYRIGHT and LETTERS PATENT.

Inventiones, treasure-trove.—Cowel.

Inventory, a list or schedule, containing a true description of goods and chattels, or furniture, etc., made upon a sale or upon a lease of a furnished house, or (see Woodfall, L. & T.) on a distress for rent, or by an executor of his testator's effects, or by an administrator of those of the intestate.

In ventre sa mère (in his mother's womb). See EN VENTRE SA MÈRE.

Inveritare, to make proof of a thing.—Jac. Law Dict.

Invest, to give possession; to lay out money. As to investments which a trustee may make, see TRUST FUNDS.

Institute, the open delivery of seisin or possession. The ceremonial introduction to some office or dignity.

In viridi observantia, present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.

Invito domino [Lat.] (without the assent of the lord or owner).

Invoice [perhaps corrupted fr. envoyez, Fr., send], a written account of the particulars of goods sent or shipped to a purchaser, factor, etc., with the value, or prices, or charges annexed.

Iota, the minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word 'jot' is derived therefrom.

I. O. U., a written acknowledgment of a debt, so called because it commences with those letters, which custom has substituted for the words I owe you, because they have the same sound. It ordinarily runs thus:—
'To Mr. A. B., I. O. U. Twenty pounds.
C. D. January 1st, 1916.'

If in the above form, it requires no stamp, being neither receipt, agreement, not promissory note. If it contains a promise to pay the money, it must be stamped as a promissory note, or as an agreement, if it contain terms of agreement the subject of which is of the value of 5*l.* It should be addressed to the creditor by name, but that is not essential to its validity. It is evidence of an account stated with the creditor, if named; if he is not named, it is primâ facie evidence of an account stated with the person producing it. It is not negotiable.

Ipsè dixit [Lat.] (he himself said it), a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

Ipsò facto (by the very act itself). A censure of excommunication in the Ecclesiastical Court, immediately incurred for divers offences, after lawful trial.

Ire ad largum (to go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty).

Ireland was a distinct kingdom until 1801, when the Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Union Acts'), formed the 'United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.' This Act confirmed the eight Articles of Union, and provided for Irish representation in both Houses of Parliament at Westminster. Redistribution of the Irish seats in the House of Commons was carried out in 1832, 1867, and 1885. The constant demand for a separate Parliament for Ireland led to the introduction of various Bills, but it was not until 1914 that the Government of Ireland Act of that year was placed on the Statute Book. The operation of this Act was suspended for the duration of the war. The demand of the Irish Republicans of the South for a complete severance led to the Government of Ireland Act, 1920, which superseded the Act of 1914. It provided for separate Governments in Northern and Southern Ireland, each with an Executive and Legislature of two chambers, and a Council of Ireland to co-ordinate the work of the two Legislatures. Northern Ireland accepted and brought this Government into being, Sir James Craig becoming the first Prime Minister of Northern Ireland. The Republicans (Sinn Féin, 'Ourselves Alone') of Southern Ireland refused to accept the Act, and after prolonged negotiations between the Cabinet of the United Kingdom and representatives of Sinn Féin a Peace Treaty was signed on 6th Dec., 1921. This Treaty, which conferred 'Dominion status' on the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann), was given the force of law by the Irish Free State (Agreement) Act, 1922 (12 Geo. 5, c. 4), and carried into effect by the Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (Session 2), 13 Geo. 5, c. 1. This Act has annexed to it the Constituent Act of the Dáil Éireann, to which reference should be made. The Constitution of the Irish Free State came into operation on 6th Dec., 1922.

The Irish Free State (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1922 (Session 2), 13 Geo. 5, c. 2, modifies the Government of Ireland Act, 1920, as contemplated in Art. 12 of the Treaty. This modification involved the abolition of the High Court of Appeal for Ireland, and provided for appeal from decisions of Courts in Northern Ireland to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland, and thence to the House of Lords. For particulars of the Courts of Irish Free State, see the Courts of Justice Act, 1924 (Irish Free State Acts, 1924, No. 10).

Irish Handloom Weavers. See TRADE MARKS.

Irish and Scots Courts' Judgments. As regards Northern Ireland and Scottish judgments, a judgment of a Superior Court of Northern Ireland or Scotland is enforceable after registration of a certificate thereof by the High Court of Justice in England, under the Judgments Extension Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 54 (preserved by Judic. Act, 1925, s. 224); and a judgment of an inferior Court is similarly enforceable by an English county court, under the Inferior Courts Judgments Extension Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 31). Irish Free State judgments of the Courts may not be so enforced under the Judgments Extension Act, 1868, since references to 'Ireland' in any enactment passed before the establishment of the Irish Free State to the United Kingdom or to Ireland are in the application of that enactment in Great Britain or Northern Ireland to be construed as exclusive of the Irish Free State (see Stat. R. & O. 1923, No. 405, Art. 2). The Act of 1868 applies only to debt, damages and costs, but judgments of the Chancery Courts of Northern Ireland may be extended by the Chancery Courts here under the Crown Debts Act, 1801 (41 Geo. 3, c. 90). The facilities under the Acts of 1801 and 1868 are reciprocal in these countries. See also Part II. of the Administration of Justice Act, 1920, extended by the Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 13), s. 7, which made provision for the reciprocal enforcement of judgments of superior Courts between the United Kingdom and other parts of His Majesty's Dominions: its application is limited by the Act of 1933, however, to such countries as have been included within the scope of the Act of 1920 by Orders in Council under the Act of 1920, in existence at the date of an extending Order in Council under the Act of 1933. See R. S. C., Ord. XLIA.

Irregularity, disorder, departure from rule. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXX., non-compliance with the rules renders proceedings liable to be set aside as irregular, but does not render them void unless the Court or a judge so direct. Order LIV., r. 24, of the County Court Rules, 1903, is to the same effect.

Irremovability, Status of, of poor persons, by one year's residence, under Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 93. See STATUS OF IRREMOVABILITY.

Irreplevable, or Irreplevisable, that which cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties.

Irrevocable, incapable of being revoked; powers of appointment are sometimes executed so as to be irrevocable (see POWERS OF APPOINTMENT); no will is ever irrevocable. A contract not to revoke a will is valid, for breach of which an action will lie, but the covenant is not specifically enforceable (Robinson v. Ommamney, (1882) 23 C. D. 285).

Irritancy, the becoming void; forfeiture.

Irritant Clause, a provision by which certain prohibited acts specified in a deed are declared to be null and void. A resolutive clause dissolves and puts an end to the right of a proprietor on his committing the acts so declared void.—Scots Law.

Ish, termination, as of a tenancy. See Black v. Clay, 1894, A. C. 368.—Scots Law.

Isle of Man. See MAN, ISLE OF.

Issint [Nor.-Fr.], thus, so.

Issuable Plea, a plea on which a plaintiff may take issue, and go to trial upon the merits. See NOW STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Issuable Terms. Hilary and Trinity were so called because in them issues were made up for the assizes. But for town causes all the four terms were issuable. The division of the legal year into terms is now abolished, so far as relates to the administration of justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 26). See R. S. C., Ord. LXIII.

Issue [fr. exitus, Lat.], used in several senses:—(1) The legitimate offspring of parents. The word 'issue' in a will was either a word of purchase or of limitation, as would best answer the intention of the testator; and for the effect of the word in the case of a deed, see Norton on Deeds. Now the rule in Shelley's case (q.v.), having been abolished by s. 131, in instruments made or in wills upon death after 1925, 'issue' will be construed as a word of purchase (s. 131, Law of Property Act, 1925), and s. 130, by implication abolishes the rule in Wild's case, (1599) 6 Co. Rep. 16 b, 17 a (q.v.), in such cases.—2 Fonbl. Eq. 69.

(2) The profits arising from lands or tenements, amerciements, or fines.

(3) Event, consequence, evacuation, sending forth.

(4) The point in question, at the conclusion of the pleadings between contending parties in an action, when one side affirms and the other denies.

It is provided by the present rules of pleading that the plaintiff by his reply may join issue on the defence, and that if the plaintiff does not deliver a reply, or any party does not deliver any subsequent pleading, within the proper time, the pleadings are to be deemed closed and all the material statements of fact in the pleading last delivered will be deemed to have been denied and put in issue, so that a formal joinder of issue is unnecessary. By Ord. XXXIII., r. 1, a judge may direct preparation of issues, and settle them if the parties differ. See Williams v. Stanley, 1926, 2 K. B. 37, as to the meaning of issue in regard to costs, and see PLEADING. Consult Odgers on Pleading; Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings.

In Scottish practice, the question put to a jury in a civil case is termed an 'issue.'

Item [Lat. also], a word used when any article is added to the former.

Iter, a footway; a right of passage.

Iule [fr. jol, Got., a sumptuous treat], Christmas.

J.

Jacens, lying in abeyance.

Jack Ketch. See KETCH, JOHN.

Jacobus, a gold coin worth 24s., so called from James I., who was king when it was struck.

Jactitation [fr. jactilo, Lat., to boast], a false pretension to marriage.—Canon Law.

The suit of jactitation of marriage (jactitationis matrimonii causa), though a rare proceeding, may still be brought in the Divorce Court by the express terms of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 6 (replaced by Judicature Act, 1925, s. 21), when a person falsely boasts that he or she is married to another whereby a reputation of their marriage may ensue. The party injured sues for the purpose of having perpetual silence enjoined upon the unjustifiable boaster. See Thompson v. Rourke, 1893, P. 70.

Jactivus, lost by default; tossed away.

Jactus, or Jactura mercium (a throwing away of goods), jetsam, which see.

Jaghire, Jaghur, Jagir (literally, the place of taking). An assignment to an individual of the government share of the produce of a portion of the land. There were two species of jaghires; one, personal, for the use of the grantee; another, in trust for some public service, most commonly the maintenance of troops.—Indian.

Jail [fr. geôle, Fr.], a prison or gaol.

Jamaica Government Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 12). Jamaica is administered by a governor, called captain-general, assisted by a legislative council and a privy council. And see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 55.

Jamma, Jumma, total amount, collection, assembly. The total of a territorial assessment.—Indian.

Jammabundy, Jummaundy, a written schedule of the whole of an assessment.—Ibid.

Jampnum, furze, or grass, or ground where furze grows; as distinguished from arable, pasture, or the like.—Co. Litt. 5a.

Jaques, small money.—Staund. P. C., c. xxx.

Javelin-men, yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

Jedburgh Justice, otherwise called Jeddart Justice, that unjust procedure whereby a person is sentenced first and tried afterwards. Jedburgh is a Scots Border town in Roxburghshire, where frequent conflicts took place between English and Scots Borderers before the Union. The turbulence of the Scots Borderers led to the establishment of a court where very summary justice was administered, but whether any actual trial took place after sentence was passed is doubtful. Compare LYNCH LAW, from which, however, it differs from the fact of the 'justice' being done by a duly constituted authority.

Jejunium, fasting.—Jac. Law Dict.

Jeman, a yeoman.

Jeofails, Statutes of. So called because when a pleader in the old days of oral pleading perceived any slip in the form of his allegation, he acknowledged the error by the expression j'ay faille (I have made a slip), and under these statutes obtained liberty to amend.

Jerguer, or Jerquer, an officer of the custom-house who oversees the waiters.—Crabb's Tech. Dict.

Jervis's Acts, 11 & 12 Vict. cc. 42 (the Indictable Offences Act, 1848), 43 (the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848), and 44 (the Justices Protection Act, 1848), regulating (1) the commitment by justices of persons accused of indictable offences; (2) the summary conviction by justices of persons charged with trivial offences; and (3) the bringing of actions against justices—so called because they were prepared and passed through parliament by Chief Justice Jervis, then Attorney-General, in 1848. These Acts, as amended, are still in force.

Jesse. A large brass candlestick, usually hung in the middle of a church or choir.

Jesuits, members of the Society of Jesus, a Roman Catholic religious order, founded in 1534 by Ignatius Loyola and confirmed by a Bull of Paul III. in 1540, its main object being to stem the tide of the Reformation by active propaganda. The Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), by ss. 28–37, rendered Jesuits liable to banishment on conviction on indictment from the United Kingdom, and an attempt was made in 1902 to enforce the Act. See Law Journal Newspaper, 1st Feb., 1902, for judgment of Mr. Kennedy at the Marlborough Street Police Court on refusing a summons, and R. v. Kennedy, (1902) 86 L. T. 753, in which the High Court held that they had no jurisdiction to compel Mr. Kennedy to issue the summons; the sections were virtually a dead letter (Re Smith, 1914, 1 Ch. 937), and are now repealed as to Great Britain by the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 55). See ROMAN CATHOLICS.

Jetsam, Jettison, or Jetson [fr. jeter, Fr.], goods or other things which having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, included in 'wreck' (see that title) by s. 510 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. See also FLOTSAM and LIGAN.

Joux de Bourse, speculating in the public funds or stock.—French phrase.

Jews. Several statutes were passed in the reign of Queen Victoria respecting the Jews. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 52, giving them relief as to municipal offices; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 58, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, ss. 21, 22, as to their marriages; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, s. 5, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 63, as to their making declarations as a qualification for office; and the Jews Relief Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49), empowering either house of Parliament by resolution to allow them to omit the words 'upon the true faith of a Christian' from the form of oath then required to be taken by members of Parliament. The Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), has since prescribed a form of oath containing no reference to the faith of a Christian, and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), repeals 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, and the Jews Relief Act, 1858, except s. 4, which provides that the official patronage of a professing Jew shall devolve on the Archbishop of Canterbury. By s. 3 of the Jews Relief Act, 1858, nothing in that Act contained was to extend to enable professing Jews to hold the office of Lord Chancellor.

Various Acts exempting or making special provisions for Jewish religious observances and customs have been passed. See Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), ss. 47 and 48, as to substitution of Sunday for Saturday working; Slaughter of Animals Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 39); and Retail Meat Dealers Shops (Sunday Closing), and Shops (Sunday Trading Restriction) Acts, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, cc. 30 & 53), enabling Jews to trade on Sundays under certain conditions.

The Statute de Judeismo, or Les Estatutes de Jeuerie (Statutes of the Realm, vol. i., p. 221), of uncertain date, but probably passed in 1375 (though Coke put the date at 1390), which prohibited usury by Jews and compelled them to wear a distinctive dress, was not expressly repealed until 1846, by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59. For curious comment on the Statute by Lord Coke, see 2 Inst., where it is observed that 15,060 Jews banished themselves in consequence of the statute, and were not banished by Parliament.

The Act of 1753 (26 Geo. 2, c. 26), to enable foreign Jews to be naturalized without taking the Sacrament, was replaced in 1754 by 27 Geo. 2, c. 1.

See, generally, Henriques on the Return of the Jews to England, published in 1905.

Jobber, one who buys or sells for a speedy profit by re-sale or re-purchase; on the Stock Exchange, a dealer in stocks and shares, 'dealers' constituting one of the two classes of members of whom the House consists, transacting business with dealers or brokers only; the other class being brokers who act as buying or selling agents for and deal with the public. See STOCK EXCHANGE.

Jocalla, jewels, paraphernalia.

Jocelst, a little manor or farm.

Jocus partitus, an election between two proposals.—Bract., l. 4, tr. 1, c. 32.

John Doe, the name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment; he was sometimes called Goodtitle. See EJECTMENT. So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.—Juv. Sat. iv. 13.

Joinder of Causes of Action, coupling two or more matters in the same suit or proceeding.

Under the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 41, causes of action, of whatever kind, provided they were by and against the same parties and in the same rights, might be joined in the same suit; but this did not extend to replevin or ejectment; and where two or more of the causes of action so joined were local, and arose in different counties, the venue might be laid in either of such counties, but the Court or a judge had power to prevent the trial of different causes of action together if such trial would be inexpedient, and in such case such Court or judge might order separate records to be made up, and separate trials to be had. The joinder in one bill in equity of distinct and independent matters, which was termed multifariousness, was a ground of objection to the bill. See MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XVIII., the plaintiff may in many cases unite in the same action and the same statement of claim several causes of action, subject to various powers of the Court or a judge to order separate trials. Consult Orders on Pleading.

Joinder in Pleading, accepting the issue and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue in fact, by the opposite party. See now ISSUE.

Joinder of Parties. See PARTIES.

Joint, combined ; shared amongst many ; in the same possession.

Joint Flat, a flat which was issued against two or more trading partners. Abolished. See FIAT.

Joint-heir, a co-heir. See LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1932, as to equitable interests of joint heirs in tail.

Joint-stock Banks, joint-stock companies for the purpose of banking. They are regulated, according to the date of their incorporation, by charter, or by 7 Geo. 4, c. 46 ; 7 & 8 Vict. cc. 32 and 113 ; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 45 (in Scotland and Ireland) ; 20 & 21 Vict. cc. 49 and 91 ; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 32 ; or by the Companies Act, 1929, in substitution for previous Acts, which makes registration under it compulsory in the case of a partnership consisting of more than ten persons. It is believed that the liability of the shareholders in chartered banks is in most if not in all cases limited to some amount fixed by the charter, generally twice the amount of their shares. Under the Companies Act, the liability may be either limited or unlimited, and most banks registered under the old Companies Act of 1862 were unlimited until 1880, when many took advantage of the Companies Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 76), to register anew as limited ; see now Companies Act, 1929, ss. 321, 322, 359 and 380. The Act of 1879, however, repealing and replacing s. 182 of the Companies Act, 1862, provided for unlimited liability in respect of bank-notes, and the same provision is repeated in the Companies Act, 1929. By s. 360 (ibid.), banks registered under the Act as a limited company are under an unlimited liability in respect of notes issued by them, and their members are liable for the debts of the bank to the extent of the amount paid to note-holders out of the general assets. The sale and purchase of shares in joint-stock banking companies is regulated by the Banking Companies (Shares) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 29), which, in order to prevent speculative transactions, requires that the numbers of the shares shall be distinguished in the contract of sale, which is otherwise to be void ; but this enactment, which, although making it a misdemeanour to insert false numbers, imposes no penalty for not inserting the numbers at all, is not regarded (see LEEMAN'S ACT) on the Stock Exchange. Consult Grant or Hart on Banking ; Smith's Mercantile Law ; Lindley on Company Law ; and see BANK ; BANKER ; BANK-NOTES.

Joint-Tenancy. This tenancy is created where the same interest in real or personal property is, by the act of the party, passed by the same matter of conveyance or claim in solido, and not as merchandise, or for purposes of speculation, to two or more persons in the same right, either simply, or by construction or operation of law jointly, with a jus accrescendi, that is, a gradual concentration of property from more to fewer, by the accession of the part of him or them that die to the survivors or survivor, till it passes to a single hand, and the joint-tenancy ceases.

This jus accrescendi holds place as well in equity as at law. Equitable estates, therefore, are subject to joint-tenancy and its properties. The trust as well as the term passes to the survivor ; and if the estate of two joint tenants is assigned in trust for them, or such a trust is raised by implication, the equitable interest follows the nature of the former legal estate.

The Courts of Law and Equity disfavour this mode of holding property beneficially.

During the feudal rigour, however, and when assurances were simple, joint-tenancy was found to be most useful. It was adopted to prevent dower and courtesy attaching. It avoided wardship, primer seisin, and other feudal imposts of the same description, for the title by the survivorship is paramount. A conveyance was made to the father and son, or to several co-trustees, of whom the interested owner was one, and a descent was thus avoided. By the Dower Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 105) no title of dower affects a joint estate, whether legal or equitable.

Anciently, joint-tenancy was favoured because it did not induce fractions of estates, and returning to early principles the Land Legislation of 1925 has employed the tenure generally as the machinery by which legal estate may in such cases always be in some person, called the estate owner, who is competent to give a title to the whole estate without the concurrence of other parties. That legal estate has been vested in trustees for sale as joint-tenants in the following cases, in joint-tenancy, estates in common or undivided shares, and coparceners; see infra. For the purpose of limitations over, it was until the Land Legislation of 1925 became law much more accommodating than a tenancy in common, unless cross-remainders are expressed or implied. The law itself now adopts it in cases of trustees for sale upon the statutory trusts for sale (see L. P. Act, 1925, ss. 34 et seq.), assignees in bankruptcy, and others, though they differ in some respects from simple joint-tenants.

Before 1926 there might be a joint-tenancy for life, or in fee, or in remainder, but not in tail, unless the donees, being male and female, might lawfully marry; otherwise the donees possess estates for life only, with several inheritances in tail. An estate cannot be granted to two or more jointly and severally, for severally is repugnant and they take as joint-tenants.

This and the following paragraphs still hold good in respect of equitable interests in joint estates in land, the beneficial ownership of a legal estate in land of joint-tenants having been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, and the beneficial ownership converted into an equitable interest (s. 1 (3), ibid.). And the paragraphs may be read where the context so admits as referring to the incidents, both at law and in equity, in regard to all titles existing before 1926, and to equitable interests only after 1st January, 1926.

When an estate is granted to two or more persons without any modifying and disjunctive words, they take, according to the common law rule, as joint-tenants. For example, if an estate be granted to A. and B. for their lives, they become joint-tenants of the freehold; if to A. and B. and their heirs, they are then joint-tenants of the fee. While equity recognizes this rule, yet it has laid down many exceptions to it, amongst the most important of which are the following:

(1) If two join in lending money on mortgage, though they take a joint security, yet equity holds that it could never have been intended that their interests should survive, the fair presumption being that each means to lend his own money, and to be repaid his own again. The consequence is, that on the death of one the survivor who holds the entire legal estate by survivorship is deemed by equity a trustee for the personal representatives of the deceased co-mortgagee until the money be repaid. Equity then treats the two mortgagees as tenants in common. Where a mortgage is made to trustees who did not appear in that character on the face of the deed (lest the title be incumbered with notice of their trust), it was usual to insert a clause, called a joint account clause, providing against the application of this rule of equity; see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 111, reproducing Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 61.

(2) When two persons purchase an estate, and advance the purchase-money between them in unequal portions, equity treats them as tenants in common, notwithstanding the transfer be made to them generally, but the inequality must appear on the face of the conveyance. If, however, the consideration-money be paid by them in equal portions, and the transfer is general, then equity has not any ground to infer that this was not a joint purchase of the chance of survivorship, and they must be deemed, even in equity, as joint-tenants. Should one expend money in the repair and improvement of the estate, he will have a claim or lien on the estate for the amount of such money.

(3) When partners in trade purchase property for the partnership concern, equity treats them as tenants in common, holding the survivor to be trustee of the legal estate for the personal representatives of the deceased partner as to his share. Wares, merchandise, and stock in trade belonging to partners, survive to the representatives of the deceased partner. The lex mercatoria excludes the jus accrescendi for the benefit of commerce, which is pro bono publico, the maxim being jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet.

A joint-tenancy, if created by the convention of parties, must arise out of the same deed, will, or claim, for there must exist a unity of title between them which must be by purchase, and not by mere operation of law, and the estate must vest in them at one and the same time; for a joint-tenancy must subsist ab initio; an estate cannot become a joint-tenancy by the happening of any circumstances ex post facto. Upon the vesting of land in new trustees the estate vests anew in the new and continuing trustees. There is no accession to an old title. The same interest must be given to the parties, for one joint-tenant cannot have one estate in the property as for life, and the other as for years; and they must hold it by the same undivided possession, for each has an undivided moiety of the whole, and not the whole of an undivided moiety, though since the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 12, the possession of one joint-tenant is no longer to be deemed the possession of the other or others.

Joint-tenants being seised per my et per tout, or, as Coke says, totum conjunctim et nihil per se separatim, enjoy a survivorship (jus accrescendi) which is held to be as good as a right by descent, the title of the survivor being paramount. It is a continuation of the estate by the survivorship of the tenants, the estate passing among the joint-owners without any perceptible degree of transition but the diminution of the number of persons to enjoy it. The last survivor now takes the whole (equitable interest) as if the estate had originally been given to him only (see Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, Sched., amending s. 36 of the L. P. Act, 1925, and see Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 159, sub-s. (4)), unless, before 1926, any of his companions have conveyed away his own share in his lifetime, which, of course, each can do; so a partial alienation is a severance pro tanto, for alienatio rei prafertur juri accrescendi.

The right of survivorship is necessarily reciprocal; for otherwise there would be different degrees of interest in the same estate, which is inconsistent with the nature of joint-tenancy. A body corporate, therefore, whose existence has no natural termination, cannot at Common Law be joint-tenant with a natural person; and as survivorship is necessarily included in joint-tenancy, two corporations cannot be joint-tenants together; for both being considered by the law of perpetual duration, it is impossible for one to survive the other. With regard to stock transferable at the Bank of England or Ireland, this law is altered by s. 6 of the National Debt (Stockholders Relief) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 39), passed in consequence of Law Guarantee and Trust Society v. Bank of England, (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 406, which provides that such stock 'may be transferred to and held in the names of an individual and a body corporate, or of two or more bodies corporate, and any such holding shall in its relation to the bank be deemed a joint-tenancy'; and, finally, the Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20), has abrogated the common law rule entirely by the provision that 'a body corporate shall be capable of acquiring and holding any real or personal property in the same manner as if it were an individual.'

The freehold in joint-tenants was so entire that they could not grant, nor bargain and sell, nor surrender or devise to each other, much less exchange with or enfeoff one another; the proper mode of assurance from one joint-tenant to another was, and as to equitable interests still is, a deed of release, and the fee passed in such a case without the word 'heirs.' No right of dower or courtesy attaches to this estate, for the jus accrescendi is preferred to all charges and incumbrances which do not amount to at least a partial alienation of the share by a lease for life; and a devise by a joint-tenant, during the existence of the joint-tenancy, is void. The maxim is, jus accrescendi prafertur ultimae voluntati necnon oneribus. By the Wills Act, 1837, a general devise passes after-acquired property; lands, acquired jure accrescendi, will consequently pass.

A curious question sometimes arose as to what is the law in case it cannot be proved which of two or more joint-tenants is the survivor (Wing v. Angrave, (1860) 8 H. L. C. 183); see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 184, and COMMORIENTES.

By s. 36 (1) of the L. P. Act, 1925, where a legal estate (not being settled land) is beneficially limited or held in trust for any persons as joint-tenants, the same shall be held on trust for sale in like manner as if the persons beneficially entitled were tenants in common but not so as to sever the joint-tenancy in equity. By sub-sec. 2, severance of a joint-tenancy of a legal estate so as to create a tenancy in common in land shall not be permissible, whether by operation of law or otherwise, but the right of a joint-tenant to release his interest to the other joint-tenants is not affected, nor is the right to sever a joint-tenancy in an equitable interest. See Law of Property (Entailed Interests) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 27), and UNDIVIDED SHARES; INFANT; ENTIRETIES.

The severance and destruction of this estate may be effected in several ways, as—

(1) By a voluntary deed of partition among the tenants agreeing to hold the property in severalty, for this is a disunion of their possession, and they have then but a separate interest in the several parts of the land, and the jus accrescendi is gone.

(2) By alienation without partition, as by one joint-tenant either releasing his share to the other, or conveying it away to a third person, for this is a destruction of the unity of title. A covenant to sell by a joint-tenant severs the estate in equity, provided it can be specifically performed, but not at law.

(3) By accession of interest, either by one joint-tenant purchasing the interest of the others, or by his acquiring the whole estate by survivorship, whereby the unity of interest is dissolved.

(4) By notice under L. P. Act, 1936, s. 36, sub-s. (2), or by conveyance, s. 72 (ibid.).

(5) After 1925, by a partition under s. 29 (3), of the L. P. Act, 1925. Before 1925, by a partition of sale under the Partition Acts, now repealed. See PARTITION.

(6) Limitation of action under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 12, a joint-tenant in possession to the exclusion of the other or others may obtain a title under the Statute against the other or others. The entry of the one joint-tenant apparently does not vest the possession of another joint-tenant; see Carson's Real Property Statutes (notes to s. 12, supra).

Jointress, or Jointress, she who has an estate settled upon her by her husband, to hold during her life, at least provided she survive him.

Jointure, strictly, a joint estate limited to husband and wife, but in common acceptation extended also to a sole estate limited to the wife only. To a legal jointure these four things were requisite :—

The old rules were : (1) The jointure must take effect immediately on the death of the husband. (2) It must be for her own life at least, and not pur autre vie, or for any term of years, or for any smaller estate. (3) It must be made to herself, and no other in trust for her. (4) It must be made, and so in the deed particularly expressed to be, in satisfaction of the whole, and not of part of her dower. It may be made either before or after marriage; if made after marriage she may waive it, and claim her dower. 2 Bl. Com. 137.

The Statute of Jointures, 11 Hen. 7, c. 20, was repealed by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 17, except as to lands comprised in settlements made before the passing of this Act. See DOWER; and 20 Hen. 8, c. 10.

Since estates for life are not legal estates now (L. P. Act, s. 1), jointure lands which are settled and not consisting of the fee simple or a lease for years vested absolutely in the jointress may be over-reached upon conveyance to a purchaser of the land charged under the provisions of s. 2 of that Act. Although the existence of a jointure charged upon the estate of an absolute owner in fee simple converts that land into settled land (Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 1 (v.)), the absolute owner may convey the land, not as settled land, but subject to the charge (L. P. (Amend.) Act, 1926).

Jokelet [fr. yokelet], a little farm such as requires a small yoke of oxen to till it.

Joncaria, or Juncaria [fr. junc, Fr., a rush], land where rushes grow.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Journal, a day-book or diary of transactions used by merchants, mariners, tradesmen, etc., in their business.

Journals of Parliament, minutes of proceedings in Parliament. If purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown or to either House of Parliament, copies of these are admitted in evidence, by virtue of s. 3 of the Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), without proof that they were so printed.

Journey-choppers, Journ-choppers, Gern-choppers, regrators of yarn.—8 Hen. 6, c. 5. See REGRATING.

Journeyman [fr. journée, Fr., a day's work], a workman hired by the day, or other given time.

Journey's Accounts, the shortest possible time between an abatement of one writ and the issuing of another. Obsolete.—6 Rep. 10.

Judalsmus, or Judaism, the religion of the Jews; also usury; also the dwelling-places of the Jews.—Jac. Law Dict.

Judex ad quem, a judge to whom an appeal is made.

Judex a quo, a judge from whom is an appeal.

Judge [fr. juge, Fr.; judex, Lat.], one invested with authority to determine any cause or question in a court of judicature.

To secure the dignity and political independence of the judges of the Supreme Court, it is enacted by s. 5 of the Jud. Act, 1875 (replaced by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 12), repeating in effect a provision of the Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2), that the judges of the Supreme Court (with the exception of the Lord Chancellor, who goes out with the Ministry) shall hold their office during good behaviour, subject to a power of removal by the Crown on an address by both Houses of Parliament; prior to the Act of Settlement, they held office during the pleasure of the Crown. They may not sit in the House of Commons.

The qualification is, by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 9, replacing s. 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, ten years' standing at the Bar for a judge of the High Court of Justice, and fifteen years' standing at the Bar or one year's service as a judge of the High Court for a judge of the Court of Appeal. Prior to the Judicature Acts, judges of the superior courts of Common Law (superseded by the High Court of Justice) had to be serjeants-at-law (see that title), and any serjeant-at-law might be appointed judge. The appointment is by the sovereign by letters-patent. Fifteen years' service as a judge, or disability by permanent infirmity, entitles to a pension by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 14, replacing s. 14 of the Act of 1873.

By Jud. Act, 1925, s. 4, in the Chancery Division of the High Court there are, in addition to the Lord Chancellor, six judges, and in the King's Bench Division, in addition to the Lord Chief Justice, there are nineteen judges, two having been added by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Amendment) Act, 1935 (25 Geo. 5, c. 2), s. 1. In the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division there is the President and two judges. In the Court of Appeal, in addition to the Master of the Rolls, there are five Lords Justices. The Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division are ex officio judges of the Court of Appeal.

The county court judges are appointed, under County Courts Act, 1934, s. 4, replacing s. 8 of the County Courts Act, 1888, by the Lord Chancellor, their number being limited to sixty, the qualification being at least seven years' standing at the Bar. For 'inability or misbehaviour' they are removable by the Lord Chancellor. See COUNTRY COURTS.

No action lies against a judge for anything said or done in his judicial capacity; but if a judge act without jurisdiction he may be made to answer for the consequences of his acts (Anderson v. Gorrie, 1895, 1 Q. B. p. 671; Scott v. Stansfield, (1868) L. R. 3 Ex. 220). In the latter case the defendant had said to the plaintiff (an accountant and scrivener), while trying a case in which he was defendant, 'You are a harpy, preying on the vitals of the poor,' and it was held that no action lay. If a judge has a personal interest in the action, he is incapacitated from officiating, on the principle that Nemo debet esse iudex in propria sua causa, unless the parties agree that he should decide the cause. See Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., (1852) 3 H. L. C. 759; but this incapacity, where it arises from an interest as one of several ratepayers only, is abolished by the Jurisdiction in Rating Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 11), and also by s. 304 of the Public Health Act, 1936. See INTEREST.

The following are the chief maxims relating to judges:—

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur. (The judge is condemned when a guilty person escapes punishment.) This is taken from Publius Syrus, a Roman poet of the first century, and is the motto of the Edinburgh Review.

Judicis est jus dicere non dare.—Lofft, 42. (It is the duty of a judge to declare, not to make law.)

Nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa.—(No man ought to be judge in his own cause.) Earl of Derby's case, 12 Rep. 114.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur questio, sed de scientia sive sit error juris sive facti.—Bac. Max. 17. (The good faith and honesty of purpose (so Bouvier, Law Dict., but Broom has it 'the honesty and integrity') of a judge cannot be questioned, but his knowledge, whether of law or fact, can.) Bacon's own paraphrase is: 'The law doth so much respect the certaintie of judgement, and the credit and authoritie of judges as it will not permit any error to be assigned that impeacheth them in their trust and office, and in wilful abuse of the same, but onely in ignorance, and mistaking either of the law or of the case in matter of fact.'

Judge Advocate, Judge Advocate-General.

The Judge Advocate-General is an officer appointed by letters-patent under the Great Seal. He is under the orders of the Secretary of State for War to whom he acts as legal adviser. One of his functions is to review court-martial proceedings. All general military courts-martial are attended by a judge advocate acting by deputation, either special or general, under the hand and seal of the judge advocate-general; or by a person appointed by general officers commanding the forces abroad, to execute the office of judge advocate. The duties of an officiating judge advocate at a court-martial are to superintend the proceedings, to make a minute of the proceedings, and to advise the Court on points of law, of custom, and of form, and so far to assist the prisoner as to elicit a full statement of the facts material to the defence. The proceedings of general courts-martial held at home are transmitted by the officiating judge advocate to the judge advocate-general, to be laid before the Crown, with a statement, by the officiating judge advocate, of any circumstances which in his opinion may affect the legality of the decision. The proceedings of courts-martial held abroad are also transmitted as directed by the order convening the Court or to the judge advocate-general, and preserved in his office. See Clode on Military Law.

The Judge Advocate of the Fleet and deputy judge advocates occupy similar functions in the Navy. When a court-martial has been ordered, the person nominated president appoints an officiating judge advocate, in the absence of a judge advocate or his deputy. His duties are nearly the same as those of the officiating judge advocate on military courts-martial. See Thring's Criminal Law of the Navy; and Naval Regulations and Instructions, chap. xi.; and see the Naval Discipline Acts, 1866 and 1884.

Judge's Notes. See NOTES.

Judge Ordinary, the judge of the Court for Divorce.

Judger, a Cheshire juryman.—Jac. Law Dict.

Judges' Chambers. See CHAMBERS.

Judgment [fr. judgement, Fr.], judicial determination; decision of a Court.

Under the former practice of the superior Courts, this term was usually applied only to the Common Law Courts, the term 'decree' being in general use in the Court of Chancery. The expression 'Judgment,' however, is now used generally, except in matrimonial causes, the term 'judgment' including 'decree' (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 225, replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 100).

The several species of judgments are either:—

(a) Interlocutory, given in the course of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the action. See INQUIRY; SUMMONSES; and ORDERS; and the various titles of the subjects of such judgments as MANDAMUS; INJUNCTION, etc.

(β) Final, putting an end to the action by an award of redress to one party, or discharge of the other, as the case may be.

By the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 120, a plaintiff or defendant having obtained a verdict in a cause tried out of term, was entitled to issue execution in fourteen days, unless the judge who tried the cause, or some other judge, or the Court, ordered execution to issue earlier or later, with or without terms; but by the present Rules of the Supreme Court execution may issue forthwith on judgment, unless stayed. See EXECUTION; and as to registration of Judgments, Chit. Stat., tit. 'Judgment and Execution' and 'Land Charges'; and see ESTOPPEL; CONTRACTS OF RECORD; ELECTION; FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

The word 'judgment' is also used to denote the reasons given by the Court for its decision.

Judgment-debtor. One against whom a judgment ordering him to pay a sum of money stands unsatisfied. He may, by order of the Court or judge, be orally examined by the judgment creditor as to debts owing to him by third parties, and be compelled to produce books and documents, with a view to attaching any debts due to him (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLV., r. 1). See ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS.

Judgment-debtor Summons. The Bankruptcy Act, 1861, ss. 76–85, provided for the issue of this kind of summons by a judgment creditor in default of payment of whose debt the debtor might be adjudicated bankrupt. It was replaced in 1869 by the 'Debtor's Summons' under s. 7 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, which was itself replaced by the 'Bankruptcy Notice' under the Acts of 1883 and 1914.

Judgment Summonses. As to commitment upon the same in the county court, see COMMITMENT.

Judgments Extension Act, 1868. By this Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 54) (preserved by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 224) the judgments of the superior Courts of either England, Scotland, or Northern Ireland may be enforced as judgments in either of the other two countries upon registration (in a prescribed manner) of certificates thereof in the country in which such judgments are sought to be enforced. By the Inferior Courts Judgment Extension Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 31), the principle of this Act was, with the limitation of personal service, extended to inferior Courts. See INFERIOR COURTS; IRISH JUDGMENTS.

Part II. of the Administration of Justice Act, 1920, makes provision for the reciprocal enforcement of judgments of superior Courts between the United Kingdom and other parts of the Empire. The Act is limited to such parts of His Majesty's Dominions as have been included within its scope by Orders in Council; and by the Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 13), s. 7, Part II. of the Act of 1920 ceases to have effect except in relation to any Dominion to which the Act of 1920 was extended at the date of an Order under the Act of 1933. See R. S. C., Ord. XLIA., and Annual Practice.

Judicatores terrarum, persons in the county Palatine of Chester who, on a writ of error, were to consider of the judgment given there, and reform it, otherwise they forfeited 100l. to the Crown by custom.—Jenk. Cent. 71.

Judicature Acts, 1873, 1875 and 1925 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, and 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49); the 1875 Act came into operation on the 1st of November, 1875, and consolidated the pre-existing superior Courts into one Supreme Court, consisting of the High Court and the Court of Appeal. The 1925 Act consolidates the Judicature Acts, 1873–1910, and other enactments relating to the Supreme Court of Judicature in England and the administration of justice therein; this 1925 Act has been amended in some minor particulars by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 26), and subsequent Acts. See SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Judicature.'

Judices pedanei, judges chosen by the litigants.—Civ. Law.

Judicial acts. Numerous statutes give summary power to justices of the peace, and declare that certain acts shall only be valid if done by two magistrates. If it be only a ministerial act, it is not requisite that the two magistrates should be together at the time of doing the act; if it be judicial, they must. All persons concerned in the exercise of judicial functions are protected from the consequences of acts for which they would be liable if they arose out of proceedings which were simply administrative or ministerial. See Halsbury's Laws of England, 'Public Authorities.'

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, a tribunal of Privy Councillors, established by 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 92, for the disposal of appeals to the Sovereign in Council. It consists of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President and ex-Lords President, the six Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and such other members of the Privy Council as shall from time to time hold or have held 'High Judicial Office,' i.e., judges of the Supreme Courts of England or Ireland, Court of Session in Scotland, and not more than seven judges of the superior Courts of the self-governing Colonies (or other possession fixed by Order in Council), and not more than two judges of any High Court in India as shall be nominated by the King.

The Committee sits in Downing Street, Whitehall. Appeals are conducted before it as before a Court, although in form it reports to the King advising that an appeal should be allowed or disallowed: consequently dissenting opinions are not disclosed. The principal matters which come before the Judicial Committee are:—(1) Appeals from the Courts in the Dominions, Colonies and other Dependencies, e.g., Canada, Ceylon, India, Irish Free State, Australia, Channel Islands, etc. (2) Ecclesiastical appeals. (3) All appeals in prize cases from all Admiralty Courts. (4) Appeals under s. 4 of the Copyright Act, 1911. (5) Appeals in respect of schemes for endowed schools; see Education. Consult Wheeler's Privy Council Law; Halsbury's Laws of England, tit. 'Courts'; and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Privy Council.'

Judicial Discretion. Such matters in the course of a trial as are to be decided summarily by the judge, and cannot be questioned afterwards, are said to be within his discretion. Various matters incidental to the conduct of a cause before trial are also by statute left in the discretion of the Court, or a judge at chambers. Discretion is thus defined by Coke, in Rooke's case, 40 Eliz.: 'Discretion is a science of understanding, to discern between falsity and truth, between wrong and right, between shadows and substance, between equity and colourable glosses and pretences, and not to do according to their wills and private affections; for, as one said, talis discretio discretionem confundit.'

Judicial Documents, proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into: (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incidental to any judicial proceedings.—See 1 Stark. Evid. 252.

Judicial Notice. Of many things, such as the course of nature, the common law of England, public statutes, the existence of a war in which this country is engaged, standard almanacs, the rule of the road (to keep on the left side), and the constitution of the government, a Court does not require any proof. See Best on Evidence, s. 253; Taylor on Evidence, part i., ch. 2; Powell on Evidence, 9th ed., pp. 145 et seq.

Judicial Oath, the oath to be taken 'as soon as may be after acceptance of office' by the judges of the Supreme Court, and by justices of the peace for counties and boroughs. An affirmation may be substituted by every person for the time being by law permitted to make affirmation instead of oath. See Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), ss. 4, 10, 11, by which the form is:—

I do swear that I will well and truly serve our Sovereign in the office of _____, and I will do right to all manner of people after the laws and usages of this realm, without fear or favour, affection or ill-will. So help me God.

Judicial Separation, granted either to husband or wife on the ground of adultery, cruelty, rape, sodomy, bestiality, non-compliance with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, or desertion without cause for two years and upwards (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 185); also by justices, under the Married Women (Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925, to the wife, on the conviction of the husband of aggravated assault, or on the ground of persistent cruelty, forcing her to live apart from him, or on the ground of his being an habitual drunkard (Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5); and relief can also be obtained by a husband where the wife is an habitual drunkard (ibid.). Under Maintenance Acts the husband can be ordered to make weekly payments to his wife, which can be enforced by imprisonment (R. v. Richardson, 1909, 2 K. B. 851), but her judgment creditor cannot obtain equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver of such payments (Paquine v. Snary, 1909, 1 K. B. 688). See also Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 51). See also DIVORCE.

Judicial Trustee, a trustee appointed by, and to act under the control of, the Court, under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35). Such a trustee may be appointed either jointly with any other person or as sole trustee, and if sufficient cause is shown in place of all or any existing trustees (s. 1); and the administration of the estate of a deceased person is a 'trust' within the meaning of the Act (ibid.). A judicial trustee is an officer of the Court, and he may be remunerated out of the trust property and his accounts must be audited once a year and a report thereon made to the Court (ibid.). See also Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, and Lewin on Trusts.

Judicial Writs, writs issuing from the Court in which proceedings are commenced under its seal, and tested in the name of its chief judge, as distinguished from original writs, which issued out of the Court of Chancery.

Judicis est jus dicere, non dare. Loosely, a judge should administer the law as he finds it, not make it.

Judicium Dei (judgment of God), a term applied by our ancestors to the now prohibited trials of undiscovered perpetrators of crimes; as those by arms and single combat; or by ordeals, as by fire or red-hot ploughshares (see ORDEAL), which were founded on the belief that God would work a miracle rather than suffer innocence to perish.

Judicium redditur in invitum. Co. Litt. 248 b.—(Judgment is given against one, whether he will or not.)

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. 2 Inst. 380.—(Judgment is always taken for truth.) See RES JUDICATA.

Jugulator, a cut-throat or murderer.

Jugum terræ, a yoke or land, containing half a plough-land.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Juncare, to strew rushes.—Pat. 14 Edw. 1.

Juncaria. See JONCARIA.

Junta, or Junto [Lat.], a select council for taking cognizance of affairs of great consequence requiring secrecy; a cabal or faction.

Jura personarum (the rights of persons).

Jura regalia, royal rights; royal prerogatives. See Bac. Abr. Prerogative.

Jura rerum (the rights which a person may acquire in things).

Jura summa imperii (the supreme rights of dominion).

Jurat, the statement at the foot of an affidavit of the names of the parties swearing it, and of the officer before whom it is sworn, of the date, and of any other necessary particulars, as that the affidavit of a blind person was read in the presence of the officer to such person. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVIII., rr. 9, 13, 14; and for the form in lieu of jurat where affirmation is made, see Oaths Act, 1888, s. 4.

Also an officer in the nature of an alderman, sworn for the government of many corporations. The twelve assistants of the bailiff in Jersey are called jurats.

Jurata, the jury-clause in a nisi prius record. The entry jurata ponitur in respectu is abolished.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 104.

Juration, the act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

Jurator, a juror.

Juratores sunt iudices facti. Jenk. Cent. 61.—(Juries are the judges of fact.)

Jure divino (by divine right).

Jure emphyteutico (by the law of rents and services).

Jure naturæ æquum est injuria fieri locupletiores. D. 50, 17, 206.—(By the law of nature it is just that no one should be enriched by the detriment or injury of another.)

Juridical, acting in the distribution of justice.

Juridical Days, days in court on which the laws are administered.

Jurisconsulti, or Jurisprudentes, men who studied the forms and, in time, the principles of Civil Law, and expounded them for the benefit of their friends and dependents. See Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Jurisdiction, legal authority; extent of power; declaration of the law. Jurisdiction may be limited either locally, as that of a county court, or personally, as where a court has a quorum, or as to amount, or as to the character of the questions to be determined.

Juris et de jure (of law and from law). A conclusive presumption, which cannot be rebutted, is called a presumption juris et de jure.

Jurisinceptor, a student of the Civil Law.

Jurisprudence, the science of law, especially of Roman Law.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, just atque injusti scientia. Just. Inst., 1, 1.—(Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of the right and the wrong.)—Sand. Just.

Jurist, a civil lawyer, a civilian.

Juris Utrum, an abolished writ which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof.—Fitz. N. B. 48.

Jurnedum, a day's travelling.

Juror, one who serves on a jury.

Jurors' Book, a list of persons qualified to serve on juries.

Jury [fr. jurata, Lat.; jure, Fr.], a number of persons sworn to deliver a verdict upon evidence delivered to them touching the issue.

Trial by jury may be traced to the earliest Anglo-Saxon times. One of the judicial customs of the Saxons was that a man might be cleared of an accusation of certain crimes, if an appointed number of persons (juratores, or more properly compurgatores) came forward and swore to a verdictum, that they believed him innocent. It is remarkable that for accusations of any consequence among the Saxons on the Continent, twelve juratores was the number required for an acquittal. Similar customs may be observed in the laws of Athens and Rome, where δικασται and judices answer to jurors, and of the continental Angli and Frisiones, though the number of jurors varied.

See, as to the introduction and growth of trial by jury in England, Forsyth's History of Trial by Jury; and for comments on and proposed amendments of the law, see Erle's Jury Laws and their Amendment, published by Stevens & Sons in 1882.

The procedure relating to trials by jury was amended by Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933. In Hope v. Great Western Railway Co., 1937, 2 K. B. 130, the Court of Appeal held that trial by jury upon application of a party under s. 6 of the Act was a matter in the discretion of a Court or judge.

Qualification.—The property qualification of jurors is fixed by the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 1, for common jurors, at 10*l.* a year freehold, or 20*l.* a year leasehold, or assessment to the poor-rate or house-duty for a house of 30*l.* a year in Middlesex and 20*l.* a year in other counties (except the county of London, the qualification for which is the same as for Middlesex); the qualification for a special jury, by s. 31 of the same Act, and the Jurors Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), s. 6, is having those property qualifications and being also legally entitled to be called an esquire, or being a person of higher degree, or being a banker or merchant, or occupying a house of a certain rateable value. Until the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919, women were disqualified at common law from acting as jurors except in the case of a Jury of Matrons (q.v.). Now the qualifications are the same for each sex.

Certain persons, as aliens, felons, lunatics, blind and deaf persons, are disqualified. Exemption from service may be claimed by peers, M.P.'s, clergymen, ministers and priests, judges, magistrates, barristers and solicitors in actual practice, notaries public, officers of both Houses of Parliament, of the Supreme Court, and of metropolitan magistrates, clerks of the peace, coroners and deputies, sheriffs' officers and servants, solicitors' managing clerks, police, J.P.'s within their own jurisdiction, members of corporations, etc., governors of prisons, superintendents of asylums, registered medical practitioners, chemists, dentists, officers and members of H.M. forces, servants of Post Office, Customs, and Inland Revenue, H.M. Household, Masters of Trinity House and members of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board and the Port of London Authority, and pilots. Application should be made for exemption to the registration officer under the Juries Act, 1922.

Special jurors are summoned to try the more important or difficult jury cases in the King's Bench Division.

Grand jury, abolished (except in a few cases) by the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36), is summoned by the sheriff of every county for every commission of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery. The grand jury is instructed in the articles of their inquiry by the presiding judge. They sit in private, and receive indictments inquiring, upon their oaths, whether there be sufficient cause shown by the evidence of the prosecution to call upon the accused persons to answer before a petty jury. See GRAND JURY.

A coroner's jury may consist of any number, not less than seven or more than eleven. Juries in all criminal trials and civil trials in the superior courts, and in writs of inquiry, consist of twelve men, neither more nor less. Juries in county courts consist of eight (County Courts Act, 1934, s. 93).

Before the Act of 1870 there was an old rule in criminal cases against allowing jurors food, drink, or fire after the summing up, but now they are allowed reasonable refreshment at their own expense. Except on a trial of murder, treason or treason-felony, juries may separate in the same way as on a trial for misdemeanour, i.e., to their own homes, being charged not to converse with any person on the subject of the trial.

Remuneration.—There is no statutory remuneration for common jurors in the High Court; s. 22 of the Act of 1870, which fixed a remuneration of ten shillings a day for common jurors, and a guinea a day for special jurors, was repealed by 34 Vict. c. 2. Special jurors get a guinea a cause by s. 34 of the County Juries Act, 1825. In the county courts jurors get a shilling apiece. In some cases a juror gets a customary allowance for trying causes, but in no case for trying prisoners.

An alien is no longer entitled to be tried by a jury de medietate linguae; see British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, s. 18. See GRAND JURY; SPECIAL JURY; TRIAL; INQUIRY, WRIT OF; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Juries'; as to effect of wrong service of a juror, see IDEM SONANS.

In Scotland, the jury in a civil case numbers twelve. Actions properly for damages, declarators of rights of way, and reductions of wills on the ground of facility or essential error, are the more important types of cases tried by jury. The jury in criminal cases numbers fifteen.

Jury Process, the writ for the summoning of a jury. They were the distingas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum, and the venire juratores facias, now abolished. A jury is summoned by precept. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77.

Jury of Matrons is a jury composed entirely of matrons, which is impanelled in two cases only: (1) upon a writ de ventre inspiciendo, which see; (2) where a female prisoner is condemned to be executed, and pleads pregnancy as a ground to postpone the completion of the sentence until after her confinement. Upon this a jury of matrons, or discreet women, inquire into the plea; should they bring in their verdict that the prisoner is enceinte, the execution is stayed until the birth of the child, after which, as a rule, the Crown commutes the punishment.

Jus, law, right, equity, authority, and rule.

A Roman 'magistratus' generally did not investigate the facts in dispute in such matters as were brought before him; he appointed a judex for that purpose, and gave him instructions. Accordingly, the whole procedure was expressed by the two phrases Jus and Judicium; of which the former comprehended all that took place before the magistratus (in jure), and the latter all that took place before the judex (in judicio). Originally, even the magistratus was called judex, as, for instance, the consul and prætor (Liv. iii. 55); and under the empire the term 'judex' often designated the præses.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

All law (jus) is distributed into two parts—Jus Gentium and Jus Civile—and the whole body of law peculiar to any state is its Jus Civile (Cic. de Orat. i. 44). The Roman Law, therefore, which is peculiar to the Roman state, is its Jus Civile, sometimes called Jus Civile Romanorum, but more frequently designated by the term Jus Civile only, by which is meant the Jus Civile of the Romans.

The Jus Gentium is viewed by Gaius as springing out of the Naturalis Ratio, common to all mankind, which is still more clearly expressed in another passage (i. 89), where he uses the expression 'omnium civitatum jus' as equivalent to the Jus Gentium, and as founded on the Naturalis Ratio.

The Naturale Jus and the Jus Gentium are therefore identical. Cicero (Off. iii. 5) opposes Natura to Leges, where he explains Natura by the term Jus Gentium, and makes Leges equivalent to Jus Civile.

In the partitiones (c. 37) he also divides Jus into Natura and Lex.

There is a threefold division of Jus made by Ulpian and others, which is as follows:—Jus Civile; Jus Gentium, or that which is common to all mankind; and Jus Naturale, which is common to man and beasts. The foundation of this division seems to have been a theory of the progress of mankind from what is commonly termed a state of nature; first, to a state of society, and then to a condition of independent states. This division had, however, no practical application, and must be viewed merely as a curious theory, except so far as positive law, which may be said to be the expression of specialized requirements traceable to natural instincts, is a development of Ulpian's Jus Naturale.

Another division is referred to and sometimes expressed by the words Jus and Fas (fas et jura sinunt.—Virg. Georg. i. 269), the law of things not pertaining to religion, and of things pertaining to it; also respectively opposed to one another by the terms Res Juris Humani et Divini (Instit. ii. tit. 1). As the components of a single generalization, 'jurisprudentia.'

The terms Jus Scriptum and Non Scriptum, as explained in the Institutes (i. tit. 2), comprehended the whole of the Jus Civile; for it was all either Scriptum or Non Scriptum, whatever other divisions there might be (Ulp. Dig. 1, tit. 1, s. 6). Jus Scriptum comprehended everything, except that 'quod usus approbavit.' This division of Jus Scriptum and Non Scriptum does not appear in Gaius. It was borrowed from the Greek writers, and seems to have little or no practical application among the Romans.

There is another division of the matter of law which appears among the Roman jurists, viz., the Law of Persons, which is expressed by the phrase (1) 'jus quod ad personas pertinet,' (2) 'vel ad res' (the Law of Things), and (3) 'vel ad actiones' (the Law of Procedure) (Gaius, i. 8).—Cf. Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Jus constitui oportet in his quæ ut plurimum accidunt non quæ ex inopinato. D. 1, 3, 3.—(Law ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence.)

Jus accrescendi (the right of survivorship). See JOINT-TENANCY.

Jus accrescendi præfertur ultimæ voluntati. Co. Litt. 185 b.—(The right of survivorship is preferred to the last will.)

Jus ad rem, an inchoate and imperfect right; such as a person promoted to a living acquires by nomination and institution.

Jus æsneclæ, the right of primogeniture.

Jus albinatus, the droit d'aubaine, which see.

Jus Anglorum, the laws and customs of the West Saxons, in the time of the Heptarchy, by which the people were for a long time governed, and which were preferred to all others.—Jac. Law Dict.

Jus Civile, the interpretation of the laws of the Twelve Tables, and now of the whole system of the Roman Laws.

Jus Civitatis, Roman citizenship, including (1) public rights; suffragium et honores and jus provocationis, the right of appeal in capital cases from the tribunal to the assemblies of the public; and (2) private rights; connubium et commercium. Originally, the full enjoyment was restricted to the patricians. In the course of centuries of development plebeians obtained all these rights and they were conferred by law on aliens, not by right of naturalisation but either as individuals or as members of the same community. Cf. Fustel de Coulanges, 'Le Cité Antique,' Hunter's Rom. Law.

Jus Commune, the Common Law.

Jus Coronæ, the right of the Crown.

Jus curialitatis Angliæ, the courtesy of England, which see.

Jus deliberandi, the right which an heir has in Scots Law of deliberating for a certain time whether he will represent his predecessor. See ANNUS DELIBERANDI.

Jus devolutum, the right of the Church of presenting a minister to a vacant parish, in case the patron shall neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law.

Jus disponendi, the right of disposition; the right of disposition by will; the right to call upon a trustee to execute conveyances of the legal estate, as the cestui que trust directs.

Jus dividendi [Med. Lat.], the right of disposing of realty by will.—Du Cange.

Jus duplicatum, the right of possession of as well as the right of property in a thing.

Jus ex injuria non oritur.—A right cannot arise to any one out of his own wrong.)

Jus feciale, the law of nations.—Roman Law.

Jus fideiurarium, a trust.

Jus fodendi, a right of digging.

Jus gentium, the law of nations.—Roman Law. See Maine's Ancient Law, ch. iii., and International Law.

Jus habendi, the right to be put in actual possession of property.

Jus habendi et retinendi, a right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

Jus hæreditatis, the right of inheritance. See DESCENT.

Jus honorarium, the body of Roman Law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistr. te, particularly the prætors.

Jus imaginis, the right of using pictures and statues of ancestors among the Romans. It had some semblance to the right of bearing a coat of arms amongst us.

Jus in personam, a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

Jus in re, a complete and full right; a real right, or a right to have a thing, to the exclusion of all other men.

Jus iurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. Grotius, l. 2, c. xiii. s. 10.—(The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that the Deity is invoked.) See OATH.

Jus liberorum, a privilege granted to such persons in ancient Rome as had three children, by which they were exempted from all troublesome offices.

Jus mariti, the right, if any, to his wife's property and succession which a husband possesses by right of marriage. See HUSBAND AND WIFE; MARRIED WOMAN; WIDOW.

Jus merum, pure or mere right.

Jus naturale est quod apud omnes homines eandem habet potentiam. 7 Co. 12.—(Natural right is that which has the same force among all men.)

Jus non patitur ut idem bis solvatur. (Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.)

Jus Papirianum, the laws of Romulus,

Numa, and other kings of Rome, collected by Sextus Papirius, who lived in the time of Tarquin the Proud.

Jus pascendi, the right of grazing.

Jus patronatus, a commission granted by a bishop to some persons, usually his chancellor and others, of competent learning, to inquire who is the rightful patron of a church.

Jus possessionis, a right of possession.

Jus postliminii. See POSTLIMINIUM.

Jus prætorium, the discretion of the prætor in Roman Law, as distinguished from the leges, or standing law. See CIVIL LAW.

Jus precarium, a right by courtesy or sufferance for which the remedy was only by entreaty or request.

Jus presentationis, a right of presenting.

Jus privatum, the civil or municipal law of Rome.

Jus quæsitum, a select or special law.

Jus recuperandi, intrandi, etc., a right of recovering and entering land, etc.

Jus relictæ, the right of a widow in her deceased husband's personality; if there be children, she is entitled to a third of it; if there be none, to a half. But see now the Intestate Husband's Estate (Scotland) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 10). See REASONABLE PARTS.

Jus relictæ. This right was introduced by the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 21), s. 6, of which enacts that the husband shall take the same share and interest in his wife's movable estate which is taken by a widow in her deceased husband's movable estate.

Jus respicit æquitatem. Co. Litt. 24.—(Law has regard to equity.)

Jus spatlandi, a right to walk about at pleasure over the land of another person; no such right is known to English law, see International Tea Stores Co. v. Hobbs, 1903, 2 Ch. p. 172; A.-G. v. Antrobus, 1905, 2 Ch. p. 198.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori.—(A right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor.)

Jus tertii, the right or title of a third person. In Scots Law normally, a tertius has no title to enforce a contract even though he may have an interest that it is carried out. But when a contract shows that the object of the parties to it was to advance the interests of a tertius, and the tertius is named, then a jus quæsitum tertio is created which gives the tertius a title to sue.

Jus venandi et piscandi, the right of hunting and fishing.

Justa, a certain measure of liquor, being as much as was sufficient to drink at once.—Dugd. Mon. t. 1, 149.

Justice [fr. justitia, Lat.], the virtue by which we give to every man what is his due, opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates, or commutative, respecting common transactions among men. See JUSTITIA.

Justice, High Court of. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Justicements, all things appertaining to justice.

Justicer, administrator of justice.

Justices, officers deputed by the Crown to administer justice and do right by way of judgment. The judges of the Supreme Court are called justices, but the word is usually applied to petty magistrates who sit to administer summary justice in minor matters, and who are commonly called justices of the peace. They were first appointed in 1327 by 1 Edw. 3, st. 2, c. 16, and are now appointed by the king's special commission under the Great Seal, the form of which was settled by all the judges in 1590, and continues, with little alteration, to this day. Consult Putnam's Early Treatises on the Practice of the Justices of the Peace in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries. This appoints them all, jointly and severally, to keep the peace in the county named; and any two or more of them to inquire of and determine felonies and other misdemeanours in such county committed, in which number some particular justices, or one of them, are directed to be always included, and no business done without their presence, the words of the commission running thus:—Quorum aliquem vestrum, A., B., C., D., etc., unum esse volumus, whence the justices so named were usually called justices of the quorum; but the modern practice is to include all the justices in the quorum clause. A justice named in the commission is not at liberty to act until he has taken the oath of allegiance and judicial oath in the form respectively prescribed by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 82), and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 2. These justices ('stipendiary magistrates' excepted: see MAGISTRATE) act gratuitously, receiving no salary or fees.

By the Justices Qualification Act, 1744 (18 Geo. 2, c. 20), every justice for a county had to have an estate of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, in fee, for life, or a given term, of the yearly value of 100*l.*, or a reversion or remainder expectant upon such lease as in the Act mentioned, with reserved rents of the clear yearly value of 300*l.* per annum; but two years' occupation of a dwelling-house of not less than 100*l.* annual value would of itself give a qualification by the Justices Qualification Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 54); but both these Acts are repealed by the Justices of the Peace Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 16), by which 'the qualification by estate required in the case of a justice of the peace for any county' is abolished, as also is the residential qualification required by 2 Hen. 5, st. 2, c. 1, in the case of justices residing within seven miles of the county. The Act of 1906 also allows a solicitor, if otherwise qualified, to be appointed a county justice (reproduced by Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 54), but prohibits any solicitor being a justice, or any partner of his, from practising directly or indirectly before the justices for that county or any borough within the county. A clergyman is not, as a rule, appointed if a layman is available (see 19 Sol. Journ. 896).

Borough Justices (in addition to the mayor and ex-mayor, who are justices ex officio in every borough) are appointed by the Crown in boroughs having a separate commission of the peace. They must reside, while acting, in or within seven miles of the borough, or occupy property therein, but they need not be burgesses or have such qualification by estate as was required for a justice of the county.—Mun. Corp. Act, 1882, ss. 155–157. See also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 18.

By s. 304 of the Public Health Act, 1936, a justice of the peace is not to be disqualified from acting in cases arising under that Act by reason only of his being liable in common with others to contribute to or be benefited by any council rate or fund for payment of expenses.

Women may be appointed justices of the peace (Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919, s. 1).

The office of Justice of the Peace subsists during the pleasure of the Crown, and is determinable (1) by express writ under the Great Seal; (2) by writ of supersedeas; (3) by a new commission; (4) by accession to the office of sheriff during the year of the shrievalty.

The duties of a justice of the peace are of a varied character. They are of four principal kinds: (1) To commit offenders to trial before a judge and jury, upon being satisfied that there is a prima facie case against them. This power is chiefly regulated by 'Jervis's Act' (No. 1), 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42: see, especially, ss. 9, 25. (2) To convict and punish summarily. The procedure in these matters is chiefly regulated by 'Jervis's Act' (No. 2) (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, while the power itself is given by the particular statute dealing with the subject-matter of the offence. (3) To act, if county justices, as judges at Quarter Sessions, where their chairman presides and tries indictments with a jury, and such justices as attend the Quarter Sessions sit as a Court of Appeal from the decisions of justices in petty sessions. (4) The licensing of places for the sale of intoxicating liquor, and of persons to deal in game.

As to procedure against juvenile offenders, see Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), and JUVENILE COURTS, JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

The management of such administrative business as the licensing of theatres, the levying of county rates, the establishment and maintenance of reformatory and industrial schools, etc., is transferred from the justices to county councils (see that title) by s. 3 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), as amended by Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51).

Justices of Appeal, the title borne by the ordinary judges of the Court of Appeal, under Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4, until the Jud. Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 9), by s. 4 (replaced by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 6 (3)), gave them the style of 'Lords Justice of Appeal' (see that title).

Justice-seat, the principal Court of the Forest.

Justiceship, rank of office of a justice.

Justifiable, proper to be examined in courts of justice.

Justiciar or Justiciary, Chief, an officer instituted by William the Conqueror, of high importance in our early history, a lord chief justice. He presided in the King's Court and in the Exchequer, and his authority extended over all other courts. He was ex-officio regent of the kingdom in the king's absence. Writs ran in his name and were tested by him. The last who filled the office and bore the title of Capitalis Justitarius Angliæ was Philip Basset, temp. Henry III. See Jac. Law Dict.

Justiciary, High Court of, the supreme Criminal Court of Scotland, consists of the Lord Justice General, the Lord Justice Clerk, and the other Judges of the Court of Session who are ex-officio Lords Commissioners of Justiciary. It has jurisdiction in all cases of crime committed in Scotland or in a British ship at sea. It sits in Edinburgh, and, on circuit, at various other places. It has certain appellate jurisdiction, the principal of which is that provided for by the Criminal Appeal (Scotland) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 15) (see CRIMINAL APPEAL). When exercising this jurisdiction, three Lords Commissioners are a quorum.

Justiciatus, judicature; prerogative.

Justices, a writ directed to the sheriff in some special cases, by virtue of which he might hold plea of debt in his county court for a large sum; whereas by his ordinary power he was limited to sums under 40s.—Fitz. N. B. 117; 3 Bl. Com. 36.

As the sheriff could not, by this process, or the judgment to be obtained thereupon, arrest the defendant's body, but only take his goods, and as the cause might be removed at the defendant's pleasure into the superior courts, this process fell into desuetude.

Justifiable Homicide, the killing of a human creature without incurring any legal guilt. It is of various kinds:—

(1) The due execution of public justice, in putting a malefactor to death who has forfeited his life by the laws of his country.

(2) It may be committed for the advancement of public justice, as in the following instances: (α) Where an officer or his assistant, in the due execution of his office, either in a criminal or civil case, arrests, or attempts to arrest, a person who resists and who is killed in the struggle. (β) In case of a riot or rebellious assembly, officers endeavouring to disperse the mob are justified in killing them, both at Common Law and by the Riot Act (1 Geo. 1, c. 5). (γ) Where the prisoners in a gaol assault the gaoler or officer, and he in his defence kills any of them; it is justifiable for the sake of preventing an escape. (δ) Where an officer or his assistant, in the due execution of his office, arrests, or attempts to arrest, a person for felony or a dangerous wound given, and he having notice thereof flies and is killed by such officer or assistant in pursuit. (c) Where, upon such offence as last described, a private person, in whose sight it has been committed, arrests or endeavours to arrest the offender, and kills him in resistance, or flight, under similar circumstances.

(3) Where committed for the prevention of any forcible or atrocious crime, but not if the crime is unaccompanied by force.

If two shipwrecked persons get on the same plank, but finding it not able to save them both, one of them thrusts the other from it, whereby he is drowned, this is said by Lord Bacon and others to be justifiable, but such is not the law of England. See Reg. v. Dudley, (1884) 14 Q. B. D. 273, in which, where a shipwrecked crew were dying of famine, it was held, upon a special verdict, not to be justifiable homicide but wilful murder for two of them to kill a boy to feed upon his body. The prisoners in this case were sentenced to death, but the sentence was commuted to six months' imprisonment.

Justification, a maintaining or showing a sufficient reason in court why the defendant did what he is called upon to answer, particularly in an action of libel; a defence of justification is a defence showing the libel to be true, or in an action of assault showing the violence to have been necessary.

If in a libel action a defendant pleads justification he must give particulars of the matters upon which he intends to rely in support of his plea (see R. S. C., Order XXXVI, r. 37); but it is otherwise if the plea is only one of fair comment (Digby v. Financial News, Ltd., 1907, 1 K. B. 502). Consult Odgers on Libel.

Justificators, a kind of compurgators, or those who by oath justified the innocence or oaths of others, as in the case of WAGER OF LAW, q.v.

Justified. Hanged. Scots term.

Justifying Bail, proving the sufficiency of bail or sureties in point of property, etc. See BAIL.

Justifying Security. Administrators in certain cases are required by the Court of Probate to give justifying security—i.e., the sureties to the administration bond must, in an affidavit, swear that they are, after the payment of their debts, worth a sum specified. Justifying security is required by the Court according to the circumstances of each case, subject to the rule that whenever administration is granted in default of the appearance of persons cited, but not personally served with the citation, or for the use and benefit of a person of unsound mind, unless it is granted to a committee appointed by the Court of Chancery, justifying security must be given.—1 Williams on Executors.

Justinianist, a civilian; one who studies the civil law.

Justitia, a statute, law, or ordinance. Also a jurisdiction, or the office of a judge.—Jac. Law Dict.

Justitia debet esse LIBERA, quia nihil iniquius venali justitia; PLENA, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et CELER, quia dilatio quædam negatio. 2 Inst. 56.—(Justice ought to be unbought, because nothing is more hateful than venal justice; full, for justice ought not to halt; and quick, for delay is a kind of denial.) Compare the 29th chapter of Magna Charta, post, MAGNA CHARTA.

Justitia plepoudrous, speedy justice.—Bract., 334.

Justitium, a ceasing from the prosecution of law, and exercising justice in places judicial. The Vacation.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Justs, or Jousts, exercises between martial men and persons of honour, with spears, on horseback; different from tournaments, which were military exercises between many men in troops.

Juvenile Courts. These courts first received statutory recognition by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67).

These are now governed by ss. 45 to 49 of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12). The Court must 'sit either in a different building or room from that in which sittings of Courts other than juvenile Courts are held' (s. 47 (2)).

The general public also are not admitted to these courts, but bond fide representatives of the Press cannot be excluded (s. 47 (2)). The Second Schedule of the Act governs the constitution of these courts and in the Metropolitan Police Court District, and they are now held in buildings other than police courts, and consist of a police magistrate and two J.P.'s, one of whom must be a woman. See also Juvenile Courts (Constitution) Rules, 1933 (S. R. & O., 1933, No. 647/L. 20), and CHILDREN.

Juvenile Offenders. The various methods of dealing with juvenile offenders are governed by ss. 50 to 60 of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12). See s. 54 with regard to committal in custody in a remand home, and s. 57 with regard to sending to approved schools. With regard to the summary trial of children and young persons for certain indictable offences, see the Third Schedule of the Act and s. 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49). See also CHILDREN; INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS; REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

Juvena, an ancient name of Ireland.

Juxta formam statuti (according to the form of the statute).

K.

Kabani, a person who, in Oriental states, supplies the place of our notary public. All obligations, to be valid, are drawn by him; and he is also the public weigh-master; and everything of consequence ought to be weighed before him.

Kabooleat, properly Kabuliyat, a 'written agreement, especially one signifying assent, as the counterpart of a revenue lease, or the document in which a payer of revenue, whether to the government, the zemindar, or the farmer, expresses his consent to pay the amount assessed upon his land.' (Wilson's Indian Glossary.)

Kala, a key, quay, or wharf.—Old Records.

Kalage, or Kalaglum, a wharfage-due.

Kain, poultry, etc., renderable by a vassal to his superior.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Kalaconna, a duty paid by shopkeepers in Hindustan who retail spirituous liquors; also the place where spirituous liquors are sold.—Indian.

Kalendæ, rural chapters, or conventions of the rural dean and parochial clergy, which were formerly held on the calends of every month; hence the name.—Paroch. Antiq. 604.

Kalendar, now spelled calendar, q.v.

Kalends. See CALENDIS.

Kantref [Brit.], the division of a county; a hundred in Wales. See CANTRED.

Karlë, the best beer in a religious house. See CARITAS.

Karle, a churl.—Domesday.

Karrata fœnl, a cart-load of hay.

Kay, a quay, or key.

Kazy, a Mohammedan judge or magistrate in the East Indies, appointed originally by the Court of Delhi to administer justice according to their written law; under the British authorities his judicial functions ceased, and his duties were confined to the preparation and attestation of deeds, and the superintendence and legalization of marriage and other ceremonies among the Mohammedans.—Indian.

Keating's (Sir H. S.) Act, for summary procedure on bills of exchange (18 & 19 Vict.

c. 67). Superseded by R. S. C., Ord. III., r. 6, and repealed (with savings for inferior courts by s. 7) by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 49), writs under it having been done away with by R. S. C., Ord. II., r. 6. It has been repealed as regards the county court by the County Courts Act, 1919.

Kebbar, or Culler, the refuse-sheep drawn out of a flock.—Cooper's Thesaur.

Keelage, a privilege to demand money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbour.—Termes de la Ley.

Keelhale, Keelhaul, or Keelrake, to drag a person under the keel of a ship by means of ropes from the yardarms—a punishment formerly practised in the Navy.

Keels, vessels for the carriage of coals.

Keeper of the Great Seal, Lord, a judicial officer who used to be appointed in lieu of the Lord Chancellor.—5 Eliz. c. 18.

Keeper of the Privy Seal, now called the Lord Privy Seal, through whose hands all charters, etc., pass before they come to the Great Seal. The office of Lord Privy Seal is always held by a Cabinet Minister.

Keeper of the Queen's Prison. This officer was appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department during pleasure.—Abolished 25 & 26 Vict. c. 104.

Keepers of the Liberty of England. See CUSTODES LIBERTATIS, etc.

Keeping House, confining oneself within the privacy of home to defeat creditors; an act of bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY.

Keeping the Peace. See PEACE.

Kennelworth Edict (dictum sive edictum de Kennelworth). An edict or award between Henry III. and those who had been in arms against him; so called because made at Kenilworth Castle in Warwickshire, anno 51 Hen. 3, A.D. 1266. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five years' rent of the estates forfeited.—Hale's Hist., p. 10, n. (d).

Kentlage, a permanent ballast, consisting usually of pig-iron, cast in a particular form, or other weighty material, which, on account of its superior cleanliness, and the small space occupied by it, is frequently preferred to ordinary ballast.—Abbott on Shipping, 5.

Kenyon-Slaney Clause, s. 7 (6) of the Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), and is as follows:—

(6) Religious instruction given in a public elementary school not provided by the local education authority shall, as regards its character, be in accordance with the provisions (if any) of the trust deed relating thereto, and shall be under the control of the managers : Provided that nothing in this subsection shall affect any provision in a trust deed for reference to the Bishop or superior ecclesiastical or other denominational authority so far as such provision gives to the Bishop or authority the power of deciding whether the character of the religious instruction is or is not in accordance with the provisions of the trust deed.

The clause was inserted on a motion of Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, M.P. for the Newport division of Shropshire, but the proviso was added by the House of Lords. This clause was repealed and re-enacted by the Education Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 51) s. 29 (5) (c).

Keeps, contrivances for supporting, when at rest, the cage in which miners travel up and down the shaft of a mine ; see the Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 40 (4) ; also a local name for bee-hives.

Kerhere, a customary cart-way ; also a commutation for a customary carriage duty.

Kernellatus, fortified or embattled.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Kernes, idlers, vagabonds.

Ketch, John, the public executioner in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. Formerly a popular name for those who succeeded him in his office.

Keyus, a guardian, warden, or keeper.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 71.

Khalsa, pure, unmixed. An office of government in which the business of the revenue department was transacted under the Mohammedan Government, and during the early periods of British rule. Khalsa lands are lands the revenue of which is paid into the Exchequer.—Indian.

Khiraj, tax, tribute, land-tax.—Ibid.

Kladder, an engrosser of corn to enhance its price.—Ainsworth.

Kliddle, Kidel, or Kodel [fr. kidellus, Lat.], a dam or open wear in a river, with a loop or narrow cut in it, accommodated for the laying of wheels or other engines to catch fish.—2 Inst. 38 ; and see, per Lord Selborne, C., Neill v. Duke of Devonshire, (1882) 8 App. Cas. at p. 144.

Kidnapping [fr. kind, Dut., a child, and nap, to steal], the forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country, and sending them into another. It is an offence punishable at Common Law by fine and imprisonment ; and the kidnapping a child under fourteen is made felony by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 56.

See also Pacific Islanders Protection Act,

1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19) (amended by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 51), for the prevention and punishment of criminal outrages upon natives of the islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Kilderkin, a measure of 18 gallons.

Kilketh, an ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry.

Kill, Irish for a church or cemetery ; used as a prefix to the names of many places in Ireland.

Killaglum, keelage (which see).

Killyth-stallion, a custom by which lords of manors were bound to provide a stallion for the use of their tenants' mares.

Kln or Klndred [fr. cynren, Sax.], relation by blood.

There are two degrees of kindred : the one in the lineal or direct line ascending or descending, and the other in the collateral or indirect line.

The right of representation of kindred for the purposes of distribution of personality, in the descending line, reaches beyond the great-grandchildren of the same parents ; but in the collateral line it was not allowed to reach beyond brothers' and sisters' children under the Statutes of Distribution, but now the right is conferred on the issue of any person entitled to succession upon intestacy of person dying after 1925 (except parents or grand-parents) under the Statutory Trusts, s. 47, Administration of Estates Act, 1925.

Kin-bote, compensation for the murder of a kinsman.—Old Saron Law.

King, the head and governor of a country. The King, under his present style or title, George VI., by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, derives his title from the Act of Settlement of 1700 (12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2), by which the Crown 'of England, France and Ireland' was settled, after the death of William III. and Princess Anne without issue, on the Electress Sophia of Hanover 'and the heirs of her body being Protestants' ; the Union with Scotland Act, 1706 (6 Anne, c. 11), which constituted one kingdom of Great Britain ; and the Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67), as varied by the Government of Ireland Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 67), and the Royal and Parliamentary Titles Act, 1927 (17 Geo. 5, c. 4), whereby 'United Kingdom' shall, on and after the 12th April, 1927, mean Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Southern Ireland having ceased to be an integral part of the United Kingdom, and under the Irish Free State Agreement Act, 12 Geo. 5, c. 4, Sched., acquiring the status of a dominion, and see also the Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 Geo. 5, c. 4), s. 4, enacting, subject to the provisions of the Act, that no Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the 11th December, 1931, shall extend to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion unless it is expressly declared in that Act that the dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

The King has all spiritual and ecclesiastical jurisdiction by virtue of s. 8 of the Elizabethan Act of Supremacy, 1 Eliz. c. 1 (though Henry VIII.'s Act of Supremacy, 26 Hen. 8, c. 1, declaring Henry to be supreme head on earth of the Church of England, repealed by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8, continued repealed by the Elizabethan Act), and his supremacy over the Church of England is also declared by the First of the Canons of 1603.

The King is also head of the Army (subject to the illegality of a standing Army, to keep up which an Annual Act of Parliament [see ARMY] is necessary), of the Navy, and by ss. 3, 4 of the Militia Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 49), of the Militia. He appoints archbishops and bishops by virtue of 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, and judges of the Supreme Court under s. 5, Judicature Act, 1873.

There is no legislative power in either or both Houses of Parliament without the King.—13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 1, s. 3.

For rights of the people as against the King, see BILL OF RIGHTS; and see, further, CIVIL LIST; CROWN; SIGN MANUAL; NULLUM TEMPUS. Consult Jac. Law Dict., tit. 'King.'

King-geld, a royal aid; an escuage.

Kings-at-Arms. The principal herald of England was of old designated king of the heralds, a title which seems to have been exchanged for king-at-arms about the reign of Henry IV. The kings-at-arms at present existing in England are three: Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy, besides Bath, who is not a member of the college. Scotland is placed under an officer called Lyon King-at-Arms, and Ireland is the province of one named Ulster. See HERALD.

King's Bench. The Court of King's or Queen's Bench (so called because the King used formerly to sit there in person (though the judges determined the causes), the style of the Court still being coram ipso rege, or coram ipsâ reginâ) was a Court of record, and the Supreme Court of Common Law in the kingdom, consisting of a chief justice and four puisne justices, who were by their office the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land.

This Court, which was the remnant of the aula regia, was not, nor could be, from the very nature and constitution of it, fixed to any certain place, but might follow the King's person wherever he went, for which reason all process issuing out of this Court in the King's name was returnable 'ubicunque fuerimus in Angliâ.' For some centuries, and until the opening of the Royal Courts, the Court usually sat at Westminster, being an ancient palace of the Crown, but might remove with the King as he thought proper to command.

The jurisdiction of the Court was very high. It kept all inferior jurisdictions within the bounds of their authority, and might either, by writ of certiorari, remove their proceedings to be determined here, or, by writ of prohibition, prohibit their progress below. It superintended all civil operations in the kingdom. (See QUO WARRANTO.) By writ of mandamus it commanded magistrates to do what their duty required in every case where there was no other specific remedy. By writ of habeas corpus it protected the liberty of the subject by speedy and summary interposition. It took cognizance both of criminal and civil causes: the former in what is called the Crown side or Crown office, the latter in the plea side of the Court. On the Crown side it took cognizance of all criminal causes, from high treason down to the most trivial misdemeanour or breach of the peace, and into it also indictments from all inferior Courts might be removed by writ of certiorari. See CERTIORARI; HABEAS CORPUS; MANDAMUS; QUO WARRANTO.

On the plea side it exercised a general jurisdiction over all actions between subject and subject, with the exception of real actions and suits concerning the revenue. Its jurisdiction in civil action was formerly limited to trespass or injuries said to have been committed vi et armis, but by means of fictitious proceedings called Bill of Middlesex and Latitat (which see) it usurped jurisdiction over all personal actions; direct jurisdiction in all such actions being given by 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, which abolished these fictitious proceedings. Error lay from this Court to the Exchequer Chamber.

The jurisdiction of this Court, under the name of the Queen's Bench, was assigned, by s. 34 of the Jud. Act, 1873, to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, and by Order in Council under s. 32 of the same Act the Common Pleas and Exchequer Divisions were in February, 1881, merged in the same Queen's Bench Division—since the death of Queen Victoria styled the King's Bench Division. The Lord Chief Justice of England, besides being an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4), is President of the Division (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 31). See now Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 2-5, 9-17, 18, 19; by the Judicature Act, 1935, the number of judges in the K. B. D. has been increased to nineteen.

King's Books. They contain the Valor Beneficiorum—i.e., value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which valuation the first-fruits and tenths were collected and paid, and the clergy rated. This value was certified by certain commissioners, pursuant to 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, confirmed by 1 Eliz. c. 4.

King's Counsel, barristers appointed counsel to the Crown, and called within the Bar. They answer in some measure to the advocates of the revenue, advocati fisci, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the Crown without special licence, which is not refused unless the Crown desires to be represented by the individual in the case. Each King's Counsel had a small salary, but it is not so now. Under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 25 (repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1875), they might act as judges of assize when named in the commission, and may, and often do, act as such judges, as being 'persons usually named in the commission' under s. 29 of the Jud. Act, 1873, and being expressly authorized so to be named by s. 37 of that Act. See now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 70; see ADVOCATES, FACULTY OF.

King's Evidence. See APPROVER.

King's Evil, scrofula, formerly supposed to be cured by the King touching the sufferer and hanging round his neck a white ribbon to which was fastened a gold coin; for an account of the ceremony of 'touching,' see Macaulay's Hist. of England, ch. xiv.

King's Keys. The King's Keys are, in law phrase, the crow-bars and hammers used to force doors and locks in execution of the King's warrant.—Scott's Antiquary.

King's Printer has the liberty of printing the Bible, Prayer Book, Statutes, and Acts of State, to the exclusion of all other presses, except those of the two universities, and by 56 & 57 Vict. c. 66, all Statutory Rules. By the Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), s. 3, all copies of private, local, and personal Acts of Parliament, not public Acts, if purported to be printed by the Queen's printers, and all copies of the journals of either House of Parliament, and of royal proclamations purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown, or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all Courts, etc., without any proof being given that such copies were so printed, and see 45 & 46 Vict. c. 9, and 7 Edw. 7, c. 16, as to colonial and dominion Acts and Orders.

King's Proctor, the proctor or solicitor representing the Crown in the Probate and Divorce Court. In proper cases it is his duty to intervene in petitions for dissolution or for declaration of nullity of marriage to defeat collusion or the suppression of material facts. In his official capacity he cannot intervene to show cause against a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage being made absolute without the leave of the Court (Gray v. Gray, (1861) 30 L. J. P. & M. 96). In the case of an unsuccessful intervention the King's Proctor may be condemned in costs (Carter v. Carter, 1910, P. 151). See Judicature Act, 1925, s. 181.

King's Silver, the money which was paid to the King, in the Court of Common Pleas for a licence granted to a man to levy a fine of lands, tenements, or hereditaments to another person; and this must have been compounded, according to the value of the land, in the alienation office, before the fine would have passed.—2 Inst. 511. See FINE.

King's Widow, a widow of the King's tenant-in-chief, who was obliged to take oath in Chancery that she would not marry without the King's leave.

Kinsfolk, relations; those who are of the same family.

Kinsman, a man of the same race or family.

Kinswoman, a female relation.

Kintal, or Kintle [fr. centum, Lat.], a hundred pounds in weight. See QUINTAL.

Kintledge, a ship's ballast. See KENT-LAGE.

Kipper-time, the space of time between the 3rd of May and the Epiphany, in which fishing for salmon in the Thames, between Gravesend and Henley-on-Thames, was forbidden.—Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. 3.

Kirby's Quest, an ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the Exchequer, so called from its being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to King Edward I.—Jac. Law Dict.

Kirk [fr. cyrcce, Sax.; κυριακή, Gk.], a church.

Kirk-note or Kirk-mote, a meeting of parishioners on Church affairs.

Kirk-officer, the beadle of a church in Scotland.

Kirk-session, a parochial Church Court in Scotland, consisti<sup>g</sup> of the ministers and elders of each parish.

Kissing the Book, kissing the New Testament on taking an oath (see that title). This practice, which has of late years been much objected to on sanitary grounds, is peculiar to English Courts, and even in them has not been in use for much more than 150 years; the original practice having been for the witness only to place his hand on the New Testament in order to take the 'corporal oath' (see that title, and see Best on Evidence, 9th ed., at p. 147).

The practice of kissing the thumb, or some part of the Book instead of the Book itself, was emphatically condemned by the late Mr. Justice Byrne at the close of the Michaelmas sittings in 1901 (see Times for Dec. 23), who observed that there was no excuse whatever for a witness refraining from kissing the Book, when by taking advantage of the Oaths Act to swear by uplifted hand he could get rid of the obligation to swear in the ordinary form. The practice of kissing the thumb only, though followed by many to escape infection, is perhaps followed by more from a notion that the moral obligation to keep the oath taken is extinguished, and that the offence of perjury is not committed. The whole practice of taking an oath has now been altered by the Oaths Act, 1909. See OATH.

Kist, stated payment, instalment of rent.—Indian.

Kleptomania [fr. κλέπτω, Gk., to steal; and μανία, frenzy], insanity in the form of an irresistible propensity to steal. Consult Taylor's Med. Jur.

Knaeker is defined by the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 15 (e), as meaning 'a person whose trade or business it is to kill any cattle not killed for the purpose of the flesh being used as butcher's meat.' As to the regulations under which such business may be carried on, see ss. 5 and 6 of the Act and the First Schedule thereto. See also Slaughter of Animals Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 39), s. 4, Sched. II.

Knave, a portion of grain given to a mill-servant from tenants who were bound to grind their grain at such mill. See THIRLAGE.

Knight, a title of honour; when used simply, denoting a knight bachelor, who does not belong to any Order of Knighthood. It entitles the person on whom it is conferred to be styled 'Sir,' and his wife 'Dame.' The recognised courtesy title of Lady — is, however, almost universally adopted for the wife of a knight bachelor. A knight is now made by the sovereign touching him with a sword as he kneels, and saying, 'Rise, Sir—,' or by Letters Patent. See Halsbury's 'Laws of England.'

Knightencourt, a court which used to be held twice a year by the Bishop of Hereford.

Knightenguild, an ancient guild or society formed by King Edgar.

Knighthood, the character or dignity of a knight. The union of chivalry with the feudal system, and the decay of both, gave rise to knight-service and the compulsion of landowners to become knights or pay a fine, but by 16 Car. 1, c. 20, no man can be compelled to take the Order of Knighthood. See Sir N. H. Nicholas's History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire.

Knight-marshal, an officer in the royal household who has jurisdiction and cognizance of offences committed within the household and verge, and of all contracts made therein—a member of the household being one of the parties.

Knight-service, formerly the most universal and most honourable species of tenure, being entirely military; a feudal tenure. Abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24. See TENURE.

Knights Bachelors [fr. bas chevalier, Fr.], the most ancient though lowest order of knighthood, formerly entitled to a pennon in battle. See BAS-CHEVALIERS; KNIGHT.

Knights of the Bath [militie balnei, Lat.], an order instituted by Henry IV. and revived by George I. They are so called from the ceremony formerly observed of bathing the night before their creation.—Dugd. Antiq. of Warw. 531.

Knights of the Order of the British Empire, founded 1917.

Knights of the Garter [equites garterii, vel periscelidis, Lat.], otherwise called Knights of the Order of St. George. This order was founded by Richard I., and improved by Edward III., A.D. 1344. They form the highest order of knights. See GARTER.

Knights of the Order of the Indian Empire, founded 1878.

Knights of the Royal Victorian Order, founded in 1896.

Knights of St. Michael and St. George, an order instituted in 1818, with precedence after equal classes of the Order of the Star of India.

Knights of St. Patrick, instituted in Ireland by George III. in 1783, revised in 1905. They have no rank in England.

Knights of the Order of the Star of India, founded in 1861.

Knights of the Thistle. This order is said to have been instituted by Achaius, King of Scotland, A.D. 819. The better opinion, however, is that it was instituted by James V. in 1534, was revived by James VII. (James II. of England) in 1687, and re-established by Queen Anne in 1703. See Nicholas's History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire. They have no rank in England.

Knights Bannerets [milites vexillarii, Lat.], those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle, formerly entitled to a banner in battle. They have been said to rank, generally, after Knights of the Garter. 1 Bl. Com. 403.

Knights of the Chamber [milites camerae, Lat.], those created in the sovereign's chamber in time of peace, not in the field.—2 Inst. 666.

Knight's Fee [feodum militare, Lat.], twelve plough-lands, the value of which was 20*l.* per annum (2 Inst. 596). By the grant of a knight's fee, land, meadow, and pasture may pass as parcel of it, and even a manor if it is usually called so. Consult Shep. Touch. 92, 93. Selden contends that it was as much as the king was pleased to grant upon condition of having the service of a knight.—Tit. of Hon., p. ii., c. v., ss. 17, 26. See TENURE.

Knights of the Shire, the old title of members of Parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to burgesses, who represent boroughs, so called because it was necessary that they should be knights.

Knights of the Post, hiring witnesses.

Knock-out. The arrangement made between persons attending an auction to refrain from bidding in competition one with the other on the sale of certain articles and for the subsequent private sale among themselves of the articles thus bought at a low price.

At Common Law such an agreement is not illegal (Rawlins v. General Trading Co., 1921, 1 K. B. 635), and to an action by the purchaser of goods sold by auction for the delivery up of the goods, the fact that the sale was a 'knock-out' does not of itself afford a defence (Cohen v. Roche, 1927, 1 K. B. 169), but now the Auctions (Bidding Agreements) Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 12), prohibits a dealer from giving any consideration or reward to anyone for abstaining or having abstained from bidding, under penalty on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 100*l.* or imprisonment for not more than three months. A bond fide joint account, a copy of such agreement has been deposited before purchase with the auctioneer, is not an offence.

Knopa, a knob, nob, bosse, knot.

Knot (nautical mile), a division of the log-line. So a ship going eight nautical miles in the hour is said to go eight knots. The nautical mile has been fixed by the British Admiralty at 6,080 feet. The land mile is 5,280 feet.

Know-men, or just-fast men, the Lollards in England.

Koran, or Alcoran, the Mohammedan book of faith. It contains both ecclesiastical and secular laws. Consult Gibbon's Dec. and Fall, ch. 1.

Kut-Kubala, a mortgage-deed or deed of conditional sale, being one of the customary deeds or instruments of security in India as declared by regulation of 1806, which regulates the legal proceedings to be taken to enforce such a security. It is also called Byebil-wuffa. See a form in 8 W. Rep. p. 29.

Kymortha [Welsh], rhymor, minstrel, or other vagabond who makes assemblies and collections.—Barr. on Stat. 360.

Kyth [fr. cognatus, Lat.], kin or kindred.

L.

Label [fr. labellum, Lat.], a narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed, writing, or writ, hanging at or out of the same; and an appending seal is called a label (Jac. Law Dict.). As to the seller of a mixed article protecting himself from the penalties of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, by means of a label, see s. 8 of the Act, and the Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), s. 4, and see ADULTERATION.

Labina, watery land.—Old Records.

Laborarilis, an ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labour, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer.—Reg. Brev. 189.

Labour Bureau, defined in the Labour Bureau (London) Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 13), as 'an office or place used for the purpose of supplying information, either by the keeping of registers or otherwise, respecting employers who desire to engage workpeople and workmen who seek engagement or employment.' The Act empowers the council of any metropolitan borough to establish and maintain such a bureau out of the general rate.

Labour Exchange, referred to by the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935 (25 Geo. 5, c. 8), s. 113, 1 (K), as 'EMPLOYMENT EXCHANGE.' The Labour Exchanges Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 7), gives the Board of Trade (now Minister of Labour) power to establish and maintain labour exchanges, and section 5 defines 'labour exchange' as meaning 'any office or place used for the purpose of collecting and furnishing information, either by the keeping of registers or otherwise, respecting employers who desire to engage workpeople and workpeople who seek engagement or employment.'

Labour, Hard. See HARD LABOUR.

Labourers, servants in husbandry or manufactures, not living intra mania. Various repealed Acts of Parliament (see, e.g., 5 Eliz. c. 4) have vested in the justices of the peace the power of compelling persons not having any visible livelihood to go out to service in husbandry, or in certain specific trades, for the promotion of honest industry. A 'labourer' is a man who digs and does other work of that kind with his hands (per Brett, M.R., Morgan v. London General Omnibus Co., (1884) 53 L. J. Q. B. 352); but a farmer is not a labourer within the Sunday Observance Act, 1877 (29 Car. 2, c. 7) (R. v. Silvester, (1864) 33 L. J. M. C. 79; but compare R. v. Wortley, (1851) 21 L. J. M. C. 44). Nevertheless, a driver of a motor omnibus is 'engaged in manual labour' (Smith v. Associated Omnibus Co., 1907, 1 K. B. 916).

Professional footballers are not employed 'by way of manual labour' (In re National Health Insee. Act, 1924; In re Professional Players of Association Football, 1928, W. N. 96). See, further, MASTER AND SERVANT.

Labourers' Dwellings. Prior to 1890 the following five sets of enactments provided for the erection and maintenance of healthy 'labourers' dwellings,' the first three of the five being materially amended by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72):—

(1) The Labouring Classes Lodging Houses and Dwelling Houses Acts, 1851, 1866, and 1867. These Acts might be 'adopted' by the town council of a borough and other local authorities. Upon the adoption of the Acts, corporate land might be appropriated and lodging-houses erected thereon, or money might be borrowed by the local authorities for erecting such houses on other land.

The Act of 1885 amended the procedure for adopting these Acts, allowed land to be bought for the purpose of the Acts, and allowed separate houses to be erected under the process of the Acts.

(2) The Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Act, 1868, amended by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 64, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 54. Under this Act town councils and other urban sanitary authorities had power to direct the demolition or improvement of separate dwellings unfit for human habitation and the building and maintaining of better dwellings in lieu thereof.

The Act of 1885 took away from an owner, required to demolish such dwellings, the power which he had under these Acts of requiring the local authority to purchase the dwellings of him.

(3) The Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875, amended by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 63, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 54. Under this Act a town council or other urban sanitary authority might frame schemes for the improvement of a body of houses, courts, or alleys, within particular areas. The schemes required the confirmation of the Local Government Board, the Metropolitan Board of Works, or a Secretary of State, according as the improvements were to be effected in the country or in London.

The Act of 1885 extended these Acts to all urban sanitary districts.

(4) The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 111. By this enactment, which reproduced the repealed Working Men's Dwellings Act, 1874, a municipal corporation might, with the approval of the Treasury, convert corporate land into sites for working men's dwellings—i.e., 'buildings suitable for the habitation of persons employed in manual labour and their families'—and grant leases for that purpose for 999 years, or any shorter term, of any parts of the corporate land.

This enactment was untouched by the Act of 1885, and also by the consolidating Act of 1890 presently referred to.

(5) The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72), which amended the above enactments, as above mentioned, also enacted that settled land might be sold, let, or exchanged, for the erection thereupon of dwellings for the working classes at less than the market value.

All these Acts are consolidated, with amendments of no very great importance by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70), amended by the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, 1900 and 1903, the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Acts, 1909 and 1919, the Housing (Additional Powers) Act, 1919. See also Public Works Loans Acts, 1920 (s. 5) and 1922 (s. 4), and Housing Acts, 1921, 1923, 1924, 1930 and 1936; and see HOUSING OF WORKING CLASSES; WORKMEN.

Labourers, Statute of, 31 Edw. 3, c. 7 (repealed as long obsolete by Statute Law Revision Act, 1863), whereby justices of the peace had power to regulate the rate of wages, which had risen to an abnormal height owing to the scarcity of labour arising out of the 'Black Death.'

Labouring Classes. See WORKMEN.

Lac, Lak, Lakh, or Lauk, in Indian computation 100,000, e.g., a lac of rupees.

Lace, a measure of land equal to one pole. This term is widely used in Cornwall.

Lacerta, a fathom.—Old Records.

La Chambre des Estelles, the Star Chamber.—Law French.

Laches [fr. lâcher, Fr., to loosen], slackness, negligence in pursuing a legal remedy whereby the party forfeits the benefit upon the principle Vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt. See that maxim; also Nullum tempus occurrit regi; and LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Lacta, a defect in the weight of money.

Lacuna, a ditch or dyke; a furrow for a drain; a blank in writing.—Old Records.

Lada, purgation, exculpation. There were three kinds: (1) That wherein the accused cleared himself by his own oath, supported by the oaths of his consacrmentals (compurgators), according to the number of which the lada was said to be either simple or three-fold; (2) Ordeal; (3) Coroned. See CORONED BREAD.

Also, a service which consisted in supplying the lord with beasts of burden; or, as defined by Roquefort: Service qu'un vassal devoit à son seigneur, et qui consistoit à faire quelques voyages par ses bêtes de somme.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Lada [fr. lathian, Sax.], a lath, or inferior court of justice; also a course of water, or a broadway.

Lade, or Lode, the mouth of a river.

Laden in Bulk, freighted with a cargo which is neither in casks, boxes, bales, nor cases, but lies loose in the hold, being defended from wet or moisture by a number of mats and a quantity of dunnage. Cargoes of corn, salt, etc., are usually so shipped.

See now the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 and 1906, s. 452 and s. 11. See also Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 9).

Lading. See BILL OF LADING.

Lady [fr. hœf dig, Sax., loaf-day, which words have in time been contracted into the present appellation]. It was the fashion for the lady of the manor, once a week or oftener, to distribute to her poor neighbours, with her own hands, a certain quantity of bread. The title is borne by the wives of knights, and of all barons and knightly degrees above them, either in their own right, or by courtesy, except the wives of bishops; but see DAME.

Lady-court, the court of a lady of the manor.

Lady-day, the 25th of March in every year, being the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin, and one of the usual quarterly days for the payment of rent, etc. Lady-day, under the old style, was April 6th.

Lædorum, reproach.—Girald. Camb. c. 14.

Læsæ majestatis, erimen, the crime of treason.—Glanville, l. 1, c. 11.

Læsio ultra dimidium vel enormis, the injury sustained by one of the parties to an onerous contract when he had been overreached by the other to the extent of more than one-half of the value of the subject-matter—e.g., when a vendor had not received half the value of property sold, or the purchaser had paid more than double value.—Colq. Rom. Civ. Law, s. 2094. See Moyle's 'Contract of Sale in Civil Law.'

Læsione fidel, Suits pro, proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts for spiritual offences against conscience, for non-payment of debts, or breaches of civil contracts. By entertaining them the clergy attempted to turn the Spiritual Courts into tribunals for the administration of equity; but these suits were prohibited by the Constitutions of Clarendon.—10 Hen. 2, c. 15.

Læt [fr. litus, lidas, letus], one of a class between servile and free.—Palgrave, i. 354.

Lætare Jerusalem, Lent or Easter offerings, so called from these words in the hymn of the day. They are also denominated quadragesimalia.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Læthe, or Lathe, a division or district peculiar to the county of Kent.—Spelm.

Læfordswie [fr. hlaford, Sax., lord, and swic, betrayal], a betraying of one's lord or master.

Laga, law.—Old term.

Lagan or lġan [fr. lġgan, Sax.], goods tied to a buoy and sunk in the sea; also a right which the chief lord of the fee had to take goods cast on shore by the violence of the sea.—Bract. l. 3, c. ii.; 5 Rep. 106 b; also the goods themselves; included in 'wreck' (see that title) by s. 510 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. See DROITS OF ADMIRALTY; FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Lage-day, a day of open court; the day of the county court.

Lage-man, a juror.—Cowel.

Lagen, a measure of six sextarii.—Fleta, l. 2, c. viii.

Lagh [fr. laga, Sax.], law. Obsolete.

Laghsite, a breach of law; a punishment for breaking the law.

Lagon. See LAGAN.

Lagos. A West African settlement of the Crown (see 34 & 35 Vict. c. 8), now part of the Colony of Nigeria (Letters Patent, 29th November, 1913), S. R. & O. 1913, p. 2388.

Lagotrophy [fr. λαγώς, Gk., a hare; and τροφή, to nourish], a warren of hares.

Lagu, law; also used to express the territory or district in which a particular law was in force, as Denalagu, Mercna lagu, etc.—See Præfatio ad Wilk. L. Anglo-Sax. 16.

Lahman, or Lagemannus, an old word for a lawyer.—Domesday, l. 189.

Lah-slit, a mulct for offences committed by the Danes.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Lala, a roadway in a wood.—Dugd. Mon. t. 1, p. 483.

Lalc [fr. λαός, Gk., people], one who is not in holy orders, or not engaged in the ministry of religion.

Lairwite, or Lecherwite, a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of some manors.—4 Inst. 206.

Lalty [fr. λαός, Gk., people], the people, as distinguished from the clergy. See LAYMAN.

Lambard's Archalonomia, a work printed in 1568, containing the Anglo-Saxon laws, and those of William the Conqueror and of Henry I.

Lambard's Eirenarcha, a work upon the office of a justice of the peace, which having gone through two editions, one in 1572, the other in 1581, was reprinted in English in 1599.

Lambeth Degrees. Degrees conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury. These degrees are conferred without examination, but are now usually confined to degrees in divinity. A Lambeth medical degree does not entitle the holder to be registered as a medical practitioner.

Lame Duck, a cant term on the Stock Exchange meaning that a broker or jobber cannot fulfil his contracts; it is libellous (Morris v. Langdale, (1800) 2 Bos. & Pul. 284).

Lammas [said to be derived from a custom by which the tenants of the Archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of Mass, on the 1st of August, to bring a live lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may be corrupted from latter-math. Others derive it from a Saxon word, signifying loaf-mass, because on that day our forefathers made an offering of bread composed of new wheat], the gule or 1st of August, and the second of the four cross quarter-days of the year.—Encyc. Londin.; Wheat. Com. Pr.

Lammas Lands. Lands over which there is a several right of either arable or meadow crop but as soon as the crop has been taken a commonable right of pasturage arises generally from about Lammas (1st August) (reaping time), until 25th March (sowing time), in which the holders who had the several rights are included. No right by grant exists except in a corporation or other trustees for the benefit of the inhabitants, the latter being an indefinite body unascertainable at the time of grant. See the repealed Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 13; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Tithe,' as to commutation of tithe thereon, and see Baylis v. Tysen-Amherst, (1877) 6 Ch. D. 500.

Lancaster, a county of England erected into a palatine in the reign of Edward III., and granted by him to his son John for life, that he should have jura regalia and a king-like power to pardon treasons, outlawries, etc., and make justices of the peace and justices of assize within the county, and all processes and indictments to be in his name. It is now vested in the Crown. It has a separate Chancery Court, the procedure of which is regulated by Acts of 1850, 1854, and 1890 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 43, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 82, and 53 & 54 Vict. c. 23), the last of these Acts conferring on the Court exactly the same jurisdiction as that of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (see Judicature Act, 1925, s. 18 (2)); the Common Pleas became vested in the High Court, but the Chancery at Lancaster was not so vested. See also Chancery of Lancaster Rules, 1930, and Chancery of Lancaster (Companies) Rules, 1930, printed in 1930, W. N. Part II., pp. 63, 68. See COUNTY PALATINE and DUCHY COURT OF LANCASTER.

Lanceti, vassals who were obliged to work for their lord one day in the week, from Michaelmas to autumn, either with fork, spade, or flail, at the lord's option.—Spelm.

Land, in its restrained sense, means soil, but in its legal acceptance it is a generic term, comprehending every species of ground, soil or earth, whatsoever, as meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furze, and heath; it includes also houses, mills, castles, and other buildings; for with the conveyance of the land, the structures upon it pass also. And besides an indefinite extent upwards, it extends downwards to the globe's centre, hence the maxim, Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos; or, more curtly expressed, Cujus est solum ejus est altum. See Co. Litt. 4 a.

In an Act of Parliament passed after 1850 'land' includes messuages, tenements and hereditaments, houses, and buildings of any tenure.—Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205 (1) (ix.), 'land' for the purposes of the Act includes land of any tenure, and mines and minerals, whether or not held apart from the surface, buildings or parts of buildings (whether the division is horizontal, vertical or made in any other way), and other corporeal hereditaments; also a manor, an advowson, and a rent and other incorporeal hereditaments, and an easement, right, privilege, or benefit in, over, or derived from land; but not an undivided share in land. A conveyance of land does not pass title rent-charge by implication (Public Trustee v. Duke of Lancaster, 1927, 1 K. B. 516).

Water, by a solecism, is held to be a species of land; e.g., in order to recover possession of a pool or rivulet of water, the action must be brought for the land—e.g., ten acres of 'land covered with water'—and not for the water only; see Hampton Urban Council v. Southwark Water Company, 1900, A. C. 3.

Land Charge, a rent or annuity or principal moneys charged otherwise than by deed upon land under Act of Parliament for securing to any person the money spent by him, or under that Act, as a charge under the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (see DRAINAGE), or s. 20 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, for repayment of compensation of tenant's improvements. See s. 4 of the Land Charges Registration and Searches Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 51), by s. 12 of which a 'land charge,' created after the commencement of that Act—i.e., after 1st January, 1889—is void against a purchaser for value of the land charged therewith, unless it has been registered in the 'Register of Charges,' in the manner mentioned in that Act, since transferred to the Land Registry by virtue of the Land Charges Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 26), now repealed by the Land Charges Act, 1925. By this Act the system of compulsory registration of charges over land has been greatly extended and no purchaser of land would be well advised to forego a preliminary search for such charges, both in the Land Registry and the local registries. The search is essential for the ascertainment of title.

Five registers are kept at the Land Registry at Red Lion Square, in addition to those kept under former statutes: (1) Lis Pendens (see that title); (2) annuities existing before the 1st January, 1926 (now closed, see Class E, infra); (3) writs and orders affecting land, and (4) DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT (see that title), as defined by the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 47); the 5th, Land Charges, has been subjected to great changes. This register is made up (see s. 10 of the Act) of Class A, Statutory Land Charges, Class B, similar charges not made on the application of any person, if created or conveyed after 1925, and not being local land charges. Class C (i.) every first and subsequent mortgage if created after 1925 or if created before 1926, acquired under a conveyance made after 1925, of a legal estate except mortgages protected by a deposit of deeds, or within the jurisdiction of a district registry, such as Yorkshire, and registered there, and mortgages and charges registered under the Companies Act, 1929. (ii.) Limited or statutory owner's charges. (iii.) Every equitable charge which is not (a) protected by a deposit of deeds, or (b) arising from or affecting an interest under a trust for sale or settlement, or (c) included in another class of land charge; (iv.) estate contracts (q.v.). The fourth, Class D, in this register affects (i.) Inland Revenue charges for death duties, (ii.) restrictive covenants created after 1925 except covenants in leases, and (iii.) easements, rights and privileges created after 1925; Class E, annuities created before 1926 and registered after 1925. Pending actions, writs and orders affecting land and deeds of arrangement must be registered anew every five years. Failure to register charges created after 1888 under Class A avoids the charge against any purchaser of land if not registered before completion of purchase; under Class B, or Class C, mortgages, limited or statutory owner's charges and equitable charges, failure to register avoids the same charge against any purchaser of the land charged or any interest therein; and failure to register estate contracts or charges in Class D will avoid the charge only against the purchaser of a legal estate for money or money's worth. It should be remembered that purchaser under the Land Charges Act, 1925, means any purchaser for valuable consideration unless he is referred to otherwise, e.g., as a purchaser for money's worth (ss. 13 and 20, ibid., see PURCHASER). The Registration of Land Charges under the Land Charges Act must not be confused with registration of charges on registered land or notice of incumbrances or equitable interests on or in registered land which can be registered or noted under the Land Registration Act, 1925. Registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925, or under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 79, does not, as against registered purchasers or incumbrancers, protect charges which should be registered or noted under the Land Registration Act, 1925. See s. 23, L. C. Act, 1925, and see Land Charges Act, 1925; also LOCAL LAND CHARGES and NOTICE.

Land Commissioners, the title by the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 48, of the commissioners formerly called 'The Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commissioners.' By s. 26 of that Act, a certificate of these commissioners that an 'improvement' within that Act has been effected is, in the absence of an Order of the Court, an authority to trustees to pay for the improvement out of 'capital money,' and by s. 28 a tenant for life must maintain and repair an 'improvement' at his own expense during such period, if any, as the commissioners by certificate in any case prescribe.

All powers and duties of the Land Commissioners were transferred to the Board of Agriculture by the Board of Agriculture Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 30).

Land Drainage Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44) repeals all prior Land Drainage Acts, as well as many other Acts relating to drainage, and consolidates the existing law with amendments. Commissioners of Sewers are abolished. A system is set up to provide for the care of all watercourses whereby land is drained.

There are two kinds of drainage districts, catchment areas and other drainage districts, either within, and subsidiary to, a catchment area, or outside it; each drainage district is governed by a drainage board, or a Catchment Board in the case of a catchment area.

Catchment areas, the drainage of which is directed to a main river, are set out in Part I., Schedule I., but they may be increased; each catchment area is governed by a Catchment Board constituted by the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, which has exclusive jurisdiction over the main river and general supervision over the drainage of the area and Drainage Boards (with representation of County Councils and County Borough Councils) in that area. In each catchment area the internal Drainage Boards are constituted on an elective basis, under the supervision of the Catchment Board.

The Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries may constitute separate drainage areas outside catchment areas, and Drainage Boards to govern them. The Commissioners of Sewers are abolished and previously existing drainage is reformed with a view to make the whole administration of the county uniform. See also Land Drainage (Compulsory Purchase of Land) Regulations, 1931, S. R. & O., 1931, No. 3; Land Drainage (Form of Rate Book) Regulations, 1931, S. Landa, an open field; a field cleared from wood.—Old Records.

Land-agende, Land-hiaford, or Land-rica, a proprietor of land; lord of the soil.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Land-boe [Sax.] (libellus de terra, Lat.), the deed or charter by which lands were held.—Spelm.

Land-cheap, a fine paid in some places on the alienation of lands.

Landea, a ditch, in marshy lands, to carry water into the sea.—Du Cange.

Landefrieus, a landlord; a lord of the soil.

Landegandman, an inferior tenant of a manor.—Spelm.

Land-gabel, a tax or rent issuing out of land. Spelman says it was originally a penny for every house. This land-gabel, or land-gavel, in the register of Domesday, was a quit-rent for the site of a house, or the land whereon it stood; the same as what we now call ground-rent.

Landmeters [agrimensores, Lat.], measures of land.—Tomlins' Law Dict.

Landrights, rights which charged the land whoever possessed it. See TRINODA NECESITAS.—Cowell's Law Dict.

Landlord, he of whom land or tenements are holden; who has a right to distrain for rent in arrear, etc.—Co. Litt. 57. See Foa or Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, and also the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 70.

Landlord and Tenant. A tenancy arises when the owner of an estate in land, called the lessor or landlord, agrees expressly or by implication to allow another person, called the lessee or tenant, to enjoy the exclusive possession and use of the land for a period less than the landlord's estate in it, generally upon payment of rent. The landlord's estate is called the reversion, and at common law a power of distress for rent is incident to the reversion.

Leases or tenancies may be (1) for any agreed period such as for years or less, e.g., for a year, half-year, quarter or week; (2) from year to year; (3) at will; (4) on sufferance; or (5) they may arise upon estoppel; or (6) exist by force of a statute (see LEASE; INCREASE OF RENT). In a narrower sense the words 'tenancy' and 'landlord and tenant' are generally restricted to lease of a house or land for occupational purposes. If nothing appears to the contrary, either expressly or by implication, in the lease or agreement, the landlord is not liable for any repairs and the tenant is liable to use the premises in a tenant-like manner and to restore the premises to the landlord at the end of the term in the state in which they were when he entered upon them subject to the deterioration which would ensue naturally during the term, having regard to the purpose for which they were let, and the tenant's implied agreement for tenant-like user of the premises. Beyond these obligations a tenant is not under any implied obligation to repair or reinstate the premises if destroyed or damaged by the act of God, natural decay, or by tempest or fire (see Yellowly v. Gover, (1855) 11 Exch. 174; Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135). The landlord is not under any implied obligation to repair or under any warranty that the premises are fit for the purposes for which they are taken except as to fitness upon letting furnished premises (see Collins v. Hopkins, 1923, 2 K. B.), or as to fitness and repair in the case of small houses under the Housing Acts (see that title), and Jones v. Phillips and Green, 1925, 1 K. B. 659, as to the difference between the landlord's liability to repair under the Housing Act of 1925, and a tenant's undertaking to keep and leave in good tenable repair (fair wear and tear excepted). His only obligation in law is an implied agreement or covenant that the tenant shall quietly enjoy and possess the premises during the term free from disturbance by the landlord or by persons claiming against him or by paramount title, though it is said that in any letting short of a demise by deed the implied warranty does not extend to disturbance by title paramount (see Markham v. Paget, 1908, 1 Ch. 697; and Jones v. Lavington, 1903, 1 K. B. 253). Another implied obligation on the tenant's part is that he is liable to an action of debt for the rent. All these implied warranties and obligations arise out of privity of estate so that if the reversion on the one hand or the lease on the other is assigned, the original lessor or lessee is no longer bound by these obligations, which devolve with the reversion and the land upon the respective assignees, but if the obligation in any form is expressed by way or covenant or agreement, the implied covenant is excluded as a rule and the obligation becomes binding by privity of contract, so that the original contractors are bound during the whole term to each other by contract and to the assignees by privity of estate only; thus a lessee is liable for the rent and covenants notwithstanding assignment, while assignees being only bound by privity of estate, their obligations cease upon assignment over. Further, assignees are only bound by covenants running with the land (see that title), such as to pay rent, repair, not to assign or otherwise touching and concerning the thing demised; they are not bound by privity of estate by their predecessor's personal undertakings which do not affect the premises comprised in the lease, although, of course, if the assignee has covenanted with his assignor to the like effect, he becomes bound by his personal contract with the latter.

Formerly, covenants in respect of things having reference to the subject-matter of the lease not in existence at the date of covenant would not bind assigns unless they were named, but the word 'assigns' in such covenants is not now necessary under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 79, in leases made after the 31st December, 1925; on the other hand, the benefit of such covenants ran with the assigns without being named by s. 58 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, repealed and reproduced as amended by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 78, in leases made after the commencement respectively of the Acts of 1882 and 1925, according to their respective provisions.

Houses are usually let at an 'inclusive' or 'exclusive' rent. 'Inclusive' means that the landlord undertakes to pay the rates and do the repairs or part of them. 'Exclusive,' that the burden of these as well as the payment of rent falls upon the tenant. As a rule, the usual and proper covenants and agreements by the tenant in an exclusive lease are to pay the rent, rates and outgoings except landlord's taxes, to keep and deliver up the premises in repair or good tenantable repair. An unqualified covenant to keep in repair means to reinstate and keep the premises in the state when the covenant begins to operate (Walker v. Hatton, 10 M. & W. 249), even though destroyed by fire, etc. 'Good tenantable repair' was explained in Proudfoot v. Hart, 25 Q. B. D. 42, as such repair as having regard to the age, character and locality of the house would make it reasonably fit for the occupation of a reasonably-minded tenant of the class who would be likely to take it. For the effect of the exception for 'reasonable wear and tear' in covenants to repair, see Taylor v. Webb, supra, and Times Newspaper, 6th February, 1937; (C. A.) disapproving dicta in Haskell v. Marlow, 1928, 2 K. B. 45. These covenants are frequently supplemented by undertakings to paint at agreed periods, to insure, not to assign or underlet without the landlord's permission, as modified by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19 (1) (a), and otherwise.

In all leases and tenancy agreements the landlord, as a rule, qualifies his implied covenant for quiet possession so as to exclude his liability for acts of persons under a paramount title.

Apart from agreement or condition terminating the lease or proviso for re-entry, a lessee or tenant has an exclusive right to possession of the premises for the whole term, even against the lessor, and when the latter is under any obligation in regard to the premises, the tenant generally agrees expressly to give the requisite notice and allow the landlord at all reasonable times to inspect and enter for the agreed purposes. Further, even if the tenant fails to pay the rent or commits breaches of covenant, the landlord cannot enter unless the lease or agreement contains a proviso for re-entry in those events (see that title, and the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 210, as affected by the Judic. Act, 1925, s. 99, 1 (f), (g), and Sched. I.). As to relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent, see Judic. Act, 1925, s. 46; for breach of covenants, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146, as amended by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 18. As to agricultural tenancies, see AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS; DISTRESS. See also FIXTURES; LEASES; and other titles relating to the subjects above referred to.

Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36), provides 'for the payment of compensation for improvements and goodwill to tenants of premises used for business purposes or the grant of a new lease in lieu thereof,' and in other respects amends the law of landlord and tenant. Sects. 1 to 3 deal with the conditions under which a tenant may claim compensation for improvements. Sect. 4, with conditions under which a tenant on leaving may claim compensation for goodwill attached to the premises by reason whereof they could be let at a higher rent. Sect. 5 provides for the granting of a new lease when the sum which could be awarded under s. 4 would not compensate the tenant for his loss of goodwill. Other provisions of the Act ameliorate the position of the tenant with regard to breaches of repairing covenants and also with regard to covenants against assignment, covenants against improvements without consent and covenants against alteration of user without consent. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Land-man [fr. terricola, Lat.], a tenant.

Landmark, an object fixing the boundary of an estate or property.

Land-reeve, a person whose business it is to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedgetimber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, drift-ways, and water-courses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachment of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste, and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others; and to report the same to the manager or land-steward.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), amended by 23 & 24 Vict.

c. 106, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18, applicable to England and Ireland, the Public Act of Parliament whereby railway companies and other public bodies, authorized by special Act of Parliament to take the land of individuals for the purpose of such special Act, enter upon and make compensation for the land. Sects. 3 and 5 apply this general Act to every undertaking established by any special Act passed after its date by which the purchase or taking of lands for such undertaking is authorized and incorporate the general Act with such special Act except when or in so far as it is expressly excluded.

The Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 59), varied the principles of compensation provided by the Lands Clauses Acts upon compulsory purchase by a Government Department or a local or public authority, inter alia, compensation under the Act of 1919, is to be based on the value of the land which a willing seller might expect to obtain, and not, as under the Lands Clauses Acts, the value to the owner whatever the market value, if any, might be. Nor is the potential value of the land to be taken into account under the Act of 1919. 'Public authority,' for the purposes of the Act of 1919 (see s. 12), means any body of persons not trading for profit authorized by or under any Act to carry on a railway, dock, water or other public undertaking, and see the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 51), and the Land Drainage Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44). Again, under the Lands Clauses Acts, the value can be decided by a sheriff's jury or by arbitration, or if the claim does not exceed 50*l.*, by two justices of the peace. Under the Act of 1919 the assessment must be referred to an official arbitrator or to an agreed arbitrator or to an assessment by the Commissioners for Inland Revenue (s. 8 of 1919). Subject to the requirements of any particular statute, the Lands Clauses Acts, however, apply to the acquisition of land by public authorities in so far as the Acquisition of Land Act, 1919, is not inconsistent with the provisions of those Acts.

Among the Acts embodying the Lands Clauses Acts, 1845, and the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, with modifications, are the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, the Restriction of Ribbon Development Act, 1935, the Housing Act, 1936, and the Public Health Act, 1936. Very drastic reductions of compensation are provided for in these Acts where the property is in a bad state or situated in a clearance, improvement or redevelopment area, and otherwise.—Jepson's Lands Clauses Acts; Cripps or Gordon on Compensation.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (Scotland) (8 & 9 Vict. c. 19, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106), differs in form only from the above, most of the sections being word for word the same. A separate Act was necessitated by reason of the difference in the Scots law and procedure.

Land-steward, a person who overlooks or has the management of a farm or estate.

Land-tax, a tax laid upon land and houses, which in 1689 (1 Will. & Mary, c. 3) superseded all the former methods of taxing either property or persons in respect of their property, whether by tenth or fifteenths, subsidies on land, hydages, scutages, or talliages. Although generally a charge upon a landlord, yet it is a tax neither on landlord nor tenant, but on the beneficial proprietor, as distinguished from the mere tenant at rack-rent; and if a tenant have to any extent a beneficial interest, he becomes liable to the tax pro tanto, and can only charge the residue on his landlord. Houses and buildings appropriated to public purposes are not liable to land-tax. As to its origin and inequality, see 3 Hall. Cons. Hist. 135; Miller on the Land-tax; Bourdin on Land-tax.

The more agricultural counties, upon which the burden of the tax has fallen most heavily by reason of the depreciation in value of agricultural land, were greatly relieved by s. 31 of the Finance Act, 1896, which fixes the maximum at one shilling in the £ in any parish, instead of at four shillings, which former maximum it had reached or approached in more than one agricultural county, such as Norfolk, Essex, Lincolnshire, and Suffolk.

The sum fixed by the Land Tax Act, 1797 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5), to be paid for the land-tax in Great Britain was 2,037,627*l.* 9*s.* 0*d.*, made up by contributions of fixed amount from the counties and boroughs as named by that Act. The tax was annual until 1798, when by an Act of that year, the Land Tax Perpetuation Act, 1798, it was made perpetual upon the basis of the valuation of 1689. The same Act provided for the redemption of the tax, but the redemption clauses were shortly afterwards superseded by the Land Tax Redemption Act, 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 116), under which, together with the Land Tax Redemption Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 123), and other enactments, the most important being s. 32 of the Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), as amended by the Finance Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 64, it may be redeemed by a capital payment of twenty-five times its amount. Up to 1876 about 800,000*l.* of the original 2,000,000*l.* had been redeemed.

The chief exemptions from the tax are colleges and hospitals.

For the various statutes for the better regulation of land-tax and its redemption, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Land Tax,' and ss. 31–36 of the Finance Act, 1896. See also Finance Acts, 1898 (s. 12), 1918 (s. 21), 1920 (s. 63), 1921 (s. 64), 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 10), s. 54.

Names of Commissioners.—Curious 'Land Tax Commissioners' Names Acts' are passed from time to time (see, e.g., the Land Tax Commissioners' Names Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 25), to constitute the persons therein named Land Tax Commissioners, at first expressly by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 75, an Act which contained 300 pages, and afterwards by reference to a schedule signed by and deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons.

Land-walter, an officer of the custom-house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof. In some ports they also execute the office of a coast-waiter. They are likewise occasionally styled searchers, and are to attend and join with the patent-searcher in the execution of all dockets for the shipping of goods to be exported to foreign parts; and in cases where drawbacks on bounties are to be paid to the merchant on the exportation of any goods, they, as well as the patent-searchers, are to certify the shipping thereof on the debentures.—Encyc. Londin.

Langeman, a lord of a manor.—1 Inst. 5.

Langeolum [fr. lana, Lat.], an undergarment made of wool, formerly worn by the monks, which reached to their knees.—Dugd. Mon. t. 1, 419.

Languidus, in ill-health; a return made by a sheriff to a writ, when the removal of a person in his custody would endanger his life. See DUCES TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS.

Lanis decre scientiâ Walliæ traducendis absque custumâ, etc., an ancient writ that lay to the customer of a port to permit one to pass wool without paying custom, he having paid it before in Wales.—Reg. Brew. 279.

Lano niger, a sort of base coin, formerly current in this kingdom.—Mem. in Soac.

Lapidation, the act of stoning a person to death.

Lapis marmorius, a marble stone about twelve feet long and three feet broad, placed at the upper end of Westminster Hall, where was likewise a marble chair erected on the middle thereof, in which our sovereigns anciently sat at their coronation dinner, and at other times the Lord Chancellor.—Orig. Jurid.

Lapse [fr. lapseus, Lat.], error; failing in duty.

(1) A benefice is said to lapse when the patron does not exercise the right of presentation within six calendar months (182 days) after the avoidance of the benefice, exclusive of the day of the avoidance. In such case there is a devolution of the rights of patronage from a neglectful patron to the bishop as ordinary, to the metropolitan as superior, and to the sovereign as patron paramount of all the benefices in the realm.

(2) A devise or legacy is said to lapse when the devisee or legatee dies before the testator. In such case the devise or legacy falls into the residuary real or personal estate, as the case may be. If a residuary devise or bequest lapses, the property falls into the intestate estate of the testator (see Easum v. Appleford, (1840) 5 My. & Cr. 56; Re Whitrod, 1926, 1 Ch. 118). If, however, the devisee or legatee should be a child or other issue of the testator, and should die leaving issue surviving at the testator's death, then, by s. 33 of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), the devise or bequest does not lapse, but takes effect as if the devisee or legatee had died immediately after the testator; and see s. 32 of the same Act as to a devise for an estate-tail. Extended to personalty settled in tail under s. 130 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. For the case of a devise of freehold land to an infant dying after 1925, unmarried, after the testator's death, see Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 51 (3). It is also a general rule that a trust legacy does not lapse by the death of the trustee in the testator's lifetime the legacy survives for the benefit of the beneficiary. Consult Jarman or Theobald on Wills; Roper on Legacies.

Larceny [fr. larcin, Fr.; latrocinium, Lat.], contracted from latrocinium, the unlawful taking and carrying away of things personal, with intent to deprive the rightful owner of the same. Larceny is a felony, and is either simple or accompanied with circumstances of aggravation.

(1) Simple larceny at Common Law, or plain theft. To constitute the offence there must be an unlawful taking, which implies that the goods must pass from the possession of a true owner (including one who has a qualified property only in the goods, as a bailee), and without his consent; where there is, then, no change of possession, or a change of it by consent, or a change from the possession of a person without title to that of the true owner, there cannot be a larceny. As to the difference between property parted with by the owner of his own free will, however fraudulently influenced, in other words, between property 'entrusted' and 'possession by a trick,' see Oppenheimer v. Frazer, 1907, 2 K. B. 50, and Lake v. Simmons, 1926, 2 K. B. 51, and see FALSE PRETENCES. If a delivery be obtained from the owner by a person having animus furandi at the time, and he afterwards unlawfully appropriates the goods in pursuance of that intent, it is larceny. There must not be only a taking, but a carrying away (cepit et asportavit). A bare removal from the place in which he found the goods, though the thief does not quite make off with them, is a sufficient asportation or carrying away. It must be of personal goods, and not of the realty or things adhering thereto, or savouring thereof. The taking and carrying away must be with intent to deprive the owner of the thing taken or, as it is expressed, animo furandi. Larceny may be committed of a thing the owner of which is unknown, provided it appear that there is some person other than the taker in whom the ownership resides. Larceny was formerly divided into petit, where the value of the property was not more than twelve pence, and grand, where it exceeded that amount; but this distinction was abolished by s. 2 of the Larceny Act, 1861. The punishment for simple larceny is in ordinary cases penal servitude for the term of three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and if the offender be a male under the age of 16 years, with or without whipping.

(2) Larceny in a dwelling-house. Whosoever shall steal in any dwelling-house any chattel, money, or valuable security to the value of 5*l.* or more shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years; and whosoever shall steal any chattel, money, or valuable security in a dwelling-house, and shall, by any menace or threat, put any one being therein in bodily fear, shall be liable to the same punishment.

(3) Larceny from the person. It is either,

(a) Privately stealing, as picking a person's pocket;

(β) Open and violent larceny from the person, or robbery, called by the civilians rapine; as to which, see ROBBERY.

Embezzlement is distinguished from the offence of larceny as being committed in respect of property which is not, at the time, in the actual or legal possession of the owner. See EMBEZZLEMENT; and Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 17-19.

The Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), together with those sections of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), which this Act left unrepealed, constitute with subsequent amendments a complete code of the subject. See as to larceny generally, Archbold's or Roscoe's Crim. Evid. and Russell on Crimes.

Larceny (Advertisement) Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 65). By the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 102, a penalty of 50*l.* is imposed on any person publishing an advertisement for the return of stolen goods 'without questions being asked,' recoverable by any one suing for it. This leading to vexatious actions by common informers against the publishers of newspapers, the Act of 1870 enacts that no such action be brought against printers or publishers of newspapers without the consent of the Attorney-General, etc.

Lardarius regis, the king's larderer, or clerk of the kitchen.

Larding Money [fr. lardarum, Lat.]. In the manor of Bradford, in Wilts, the tenants pay to their lord a small yearly rent by this name, which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the masts of the lord's wood, the fat of a hog being called lard; or it may be a commutation for some customary service of carrying salt or meat to the lord's larder.—Dugd. Mon., t. 1, p. 321.

Larrons [fr. latro, Lat.], thieves.

Lascar, a native Indian sailor; 'the term is also applied to tent-pitchers, inferior artillery-men, and others.'—Wilson's Indian Glossary.

Agreements by masters or owners of ships with lascars are regulated by s. 125 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, reproducing s. 544 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and saving nine unrepealed sections (ss. 25-34) of 4 Geo. 4, c. 80.

Lashite or Lashite, a kind of forfeiture during the government of the Danes in England.

Last [fr. hloetan, Sax.; lest, Fr.], a burden; a weight or measure of fish, corn, wool, leather, pitch, etc.

Lastage or Lestage [fr. lastagium, Lat.], a custom exacted in some fairs and markets to carry things bought whither one will. But it is more accurately taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Also, custom paid for wares sold by the last, as herrings, pitch, etc.—Jac. Law Dict.

Lastatinus, an assassin or murderer.—Wals.

Last Court, a court held by the twenty-four jurors in the marshes of Kent, and summoned by the bailiffs, whereby orders are made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, etc., for the preservation of the said marshes.

Last Day of Term. On the last day of each of the four terms the junior barrister present in every court of law was entitled to make his motion the first, and so on, in order of juniority, to the senior outer-barrister; afterwards, among the Queen's Counsel and serjeants, the senior began. For the purposes of the administration of justice the division of the legal year into terms has been abolished (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 26). See SITTINGS.

Last Heir, he to whom lands came by escheat for want of lawful heirs—that is, in some cases the lord of whom the lands were held, but in others the sovereign.—Bract. l. 7, c. xvii. See ESCHEAT.

Last Resort. A court from which there is no appeal is called the court of last resort.

Lata culpa dolo æquiparatur (gross negligence is tantamount to fraud). It has been said that this maxim does not hold in English law; negligence, however great, does not of itself constitute fraud (Le Lievre v. Gould, 1893, 1 Q. B. p. 498, per Lord Esher, M.R.), but a statement made with a reckless disregard of its truth or untruth has the same effect as a statement which is wilfully untrue.

Latching, an underground survey.

Latent [fr. latens, Lat.], hidden, concealed; secret. See AMBIGUITY.

Latent Defect. A defect which could not previously to an accident have been avoided by care or discovered by reasonable examination. A carrier of passengers is not liable for injury to them arising from a latent defect in his coach (Redhead v. Midland Ry. Co., (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. 379). Upon sale of goods, the seller will be answerable for a latent defect if the buyer expressly or by implication makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required so as to show that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14. See Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., 1905, 1 K. B. 608).

Latera, sidesmen, companions, assistants.

Lateralare, to lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways, used in descriptions of lands.

Lath, or Lathe, a part of a county. In some counties there is an intermediate division between the shire and the hundred—as lathes in Kent, and rapes in Sussex—each of them containing three or four hundreds or wapentakes.

Lathreeve, Ledgreeve, or Trithlin-greve, an officer under the Saxon government who had authority over a lath.

Latimer [fr. latinier, Fr., form of latiner], an interpreter, according to Coke (2 Inst. 515). It is suggested that it should be latiner, because he who understood Latin might be a good interpreter. Camden makes it signify a Frenchman or interpreter (Britan., f. 598).

Latin, the language of the ancient Romans. There are three sorts of law Latin: (1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers. (2) False or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs; though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc. (3) Words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians; called lawyers' Latin.

English superseded Latin as the courts' language by virtue of 4 Geo. 2, c. 26.

Latin Information. The name of an information and action by the Crown, the Duchy of Lancaster or the Duke of Cornwall in the nature of civil proceedings to recover debt or damages for a tort or otherwise, see A.-G. v. Valle-Jones, 1935, 2 K. B. 209 (damage by loss of services); an English information is an information in equity on the revenue side of the King's Bench Division (see Halsb. L. of E., title 'Crown Practice').

Latiniarius, an interpreter of Latin.

Latitat (he lies hid), a writ whereby all persons were originally summoned to answer in personal actions in the King's Bench; so called because it is supposed by the writ that the defendant lurks and lies hid, and cannot be found in the County of Middlesex (in which the Court is holden) to be taken by bill, but has gone into some other county, to the sheriff of which this writ was directed to apprehend him there.—Fitz. N. B. 78; Termes de la Ley. Abolished by the (repealed) Uniformity of Process Act, 1832 (2 Wm. 4, c. 39). See BILL of MIDDLESEX.

Lator [fr. latus, Lat.], a bearer, a messenger.

Latro, he who had the sole jurisdiction de latrone in a particular place (mentioned in Leg. W. I.). See INFANGENTHEF.

Latrocinatio [fr. latro, Lat., a robber], the act of robbing; a depredation.

Latrocinium, the prerogative of adjudging and executing thieves; also larceny, theft.—Old Charter.

Latrocinj, larceny.

Latter-math, a second mowing; the after-math.

Laudare, to advise or persuade; to arbitrate.

Laudatio, testimony delivered in court concerning an accused person's good behaviour and integrity of life. It resembled the practice which prevails in our trials of calling persons to speak to a prisoner's character. The least number of the laudatores among the Romans was ten.

Laudator, an arbitrator.

Laudibus (de) Legum Angliæ. Sir John Fortescue, who had been some time chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of Henry VI., is said to have written this work, while in exile with the Prince of Wales, and others of the Lancastrian party, in France. Sir John was then made chancellor; and in that character he supposes himself holding a conversation with the young prince on the nature and excellence of the laws of England compared with the civil law and the laws of other countries. He considers at length the mode of trying matters of fact by jury, and shows how it excels that by witnesses. He informs us that some of our princes wished to introduce the civil law merely for the sake of governing in the arbitrary way allowed by that law, which declares, quod principi placuit legis habet vigorem. He then proceeds to examine some other points of difference between the Civil and Common Law, always deciding in favour of our own. He concludes his book with a short account of the societies where the law of England was studied, the degrees and ranks in the profession, with the manner in which they were conferred; to these are subjoined some short remarks on the conduct and delay of suits.—4 Reeves, 113.

Laudimium, the fiftieth part of the value of an estate paid by a new proprietor to the tenant for investiture or leave of possession.—Civil Law.

Laudum, an arbitrament or award.—Wals.

Laughe, frank-pledge.—2 Reeves, 17.

Launcesgay, a kind of ancient weapon, prohibited by 7 Rich. 2, c. 13.

Laund or Lawnd, an open field without wood.—Blount.

Laundry. By s. 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 39), there are included in the list of non-textile factories and workshops within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22):—

(29) Laundries carried on by way of trade or for the purpose of gain, or carried on as ancillary to another business or incidentally to the purposes of any public institution.

The Act further controls the period of employment of women in laundries (s. 2) and also contains other regulations (ss. 3 and 4) for their proper management.

Sending infected articles which have not been properly disinfected or without proper notice to laundries, private or public, is prohibited by Public Health Act, 1936, s. 152.

Laureate or Laureat [fr. laurea, Lat.] an officer of the household of the sovereign, whose business formerly consisted only in composing an ode annually, on the sovereign's birthday, and on the new year; sometimes also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.—Warton's Hist. of English Poetry. The annual birthday ode has been discontinued for many years. The title is derived from the circumstance that in classical times and in the Middle Ages the most distinguished poets were solemnly crowned with laurel. From this the practice found its way into our universities; and it is for that reason that Selden, in his Tiles of Honour, speaks of the laurel crown as an ensign of the degree of mastership in poetry. A relic of the old university practice of crowning distinguished students of poetry exists in the term 'Laureation,' which is still used at one of the Scotch Universities (St. Andrews), to signify the taking of the degree of Master of Arts.

Laurels, pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king's head laureated; hence the name.

Lavatorium, a laundry or place to wash in; a place in the porch or entrance of cathedral churches, where the priest and other officiating ministers were obliged to wash their hands before they proceeded to Divine service.

Lavatories. In factories and workshops, see Public Health Act, 1936, s. 46; Shops, Shops Act, 1934; Public, ss. 87 to 89, P. H. Act, 1936.

Lavina. See LABINA.

Law [fr. lage, lagea, or lah, Sax.; loi, Fr.; legge, Ital.; lex, fr. ligo, Lat., to bind], a rule of action to which men are obliged to make their conduct conformable. A command, enforced by some sanction, to acts or forbearances of a class: see Austin's Jurisprudence; 1 Bl. Com. 38. A principle of conduct may be observed habitually by an individual or a class. When sufficiently formulated or defined to be observed uniformly by the whole of a class it may become a custom; or it may be imposed on all individuals who consent or are unable to resist its application and the sanction or penalty which is imposed for non-compliance, and in that case it becomes a law. If, in addition, the law and its sanction are imposed by, or by authority of a sovereign, the law becomes 'positive' (see Austin's Jurisprudence). Short of positive law the principle may be called a moral or social law. Generally speaking, jurisprudence is concerned only with positive law, and law in its ordinary legal sense means positive law. See LEX.

The law of foreign countries is a question of fact in English Courts. See FOREIGN LAW.

Law is also sometimes used as opposed to Equity, meaning the principles followed in Common Law Courts in contradistinction to those which were administered only in courts of equity: now, however, in all branches of the Supreme Court and in inferior courts (Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 24, 89, 91) (now Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 36-43, 44, 202), full effect is to be given to all equitable rights. See, further, s. 25 (now Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 44, 45), by which the law on several points has now been altered.

Law Agents (Scotland). Solicitors in Scotland; generally members of a Society. See SOLICITORS.

Law Courts, the name popularly given to the Royal Courts of Justice. See that title.

Lawday, a court-leet, or view of frankpledge.

Lawful. The natural meaning in a statute of the words 'it shall be lawful' is permissive only, but if the words are used to effectuate a legal right, they are compulsory (Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, (1890) 5 App. Cas. 182): see Craies, or Maxwell or Hardcastle on Statute Law.

Lawful Day, a day on which a court may sit.

Lawing of Dogs, the cutting several claws of the forefeet of dogs in the forest, to prevent their running at deer.

Lawless Court [quia dicta sine lege, Lat.], 'a tribunal held on King's Hill, at Rochford, in Essex, on Wednesday morning next after Michaelmas Day, yearly, at cock-crowing, at which court they whisper, and have no candle, nor any pen nor ink, but a coal; and he that owes suit or service there, and appears not, forfeits double his rent.'—Cam. Brû. Obsolete.

Lawless Man [ex lex, Lat.], an outlaw.

Law List, a list of barristers, solicitors, and other legal practitioners, giving their addresses, and the dates of their entering the profession. The present 'Law List,' which has been published annually since 1801, is primâ facie evidence that the persons therein named as solicitors or certificated conveyancers, are such.—Solicitors Act, 1850 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 22.

Law of Marque. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Law, Martial. See MARTIAL LAW.

Law Merchant [lex mercatoria, Lat.], that part of the law of England which governs mercantile transactions. It is founded upon the general custom of merchants of all nations, which, though different from the general rules of the Common Law, has been gradually engrafted into it and made to form part of it. See Introduction to Smith's Merc. Law.

Law Officers of the Crown, shortly termed 'Law Officers,' the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General, this definition was contained in s. 93 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, but deleted by the Patents and Designs Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 13 and Sched. Consult Norton-Kyshe's Attorney-General and Solicitor-General of England.

The Scottish Law Officers are the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor-General (q.v.).

Law of Property Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 16). This statute came into operation on 1st January, 1926. With the Amending Acts of 1924 and 1926 (15 Geo. 5, c. 5), it provides for the abolition of copyhold and customary tenure; the extinguishment of manorial incidents (but not, apart from the lord's consent of his rights to mines, minerals, franchises, fairs and sporting rights), and the conversion of perpetually renewable leaseholds into long terms. The other provisions of this Act, sometimes called Lord Birkenhead's Act of 1922, have been repealed or consolidated and amended by the Law of Property Acts, 1925 to 1932.

Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 20), with amending Acts, 1926, 1929 and 1932 (cited together as the Law of Property Acts, 1925 to 1932), has consolidated and effected changes in the land laws with the object of simplifying the transfer and conveyance of land. An important change was the abolition of all legal estates or tenures in land, except an estate in fee simple in possession, and a term of years absolute in or in certain incorporeal hereditaments arising out of annexed to or charged upon the legal estate in land. Any number of these legal estates can exist in respect of the same piece of land or incorporeal hereditament; for instance, land may be held in fee simple, leased and mortgaged at the same time. All other estates and interests in land are reduced to equitable interests. All mortgages of the same legal estate under the statutory conditions are legal estates. None being for the whole fee simple or the term, but each for a term taken out of the fee or original term which remains in the mortgage and so that each subsequent mortgage overlaps the previous one and takes up some of the residue of the legal estate still remaining in the mortgagor (see MORTGAGES).

The chief legal estates which have been converted into equitable interests from the 1st January, 1926, are: (1) Tenancies in common or in undivided shares in land (see UNDIVIDED SHARES). (2) Limited estates, less than the fee or entire term, e.g., entailed estates, estates for life, in remainder whether vested or contingent, and married women's estates subject to a restraint upon anticipation (see SETTLED LAND). (3) Legal estates of infants in fee simple, legal estate not being capable of being held by an infant (see INFANTS). The object of these changes being that the entirety of the legal estate should be in the hands of an owner or joint owners of full age who can deal with the whole estate without the concurrence of holders of equitable interests in favour of a purchaser for value by means of an expedient which is generally termed 'the CURTAIN,' that is to say, in outline: (a) trustees for sale as to undivided shares; (b) the tenant for life or other statutory owner of the fee in trust for limited or settled estates and infants' estates; (c) personal representatives as to the estate of the deceased, whether testate or intestate; (d) mortgagees; (e) an order of Court as provided, may, with certain exceptions set out in sub-s. (3) of s. 2,

L. P. Act, 1925, convey the whole of the legal estate in the fee simple or term free from, i.e., over-reaching, any of the equitable interests covered or curtailed by the powers exercisable by the respective donees under (a), (b), (c), (d), or (e), to a purchaser for value without disclosing, or putting him upon inquiry concerning the equitable interests or title to the same so withheld from his notice (see, generally, Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 1 and 2). A person not included in the classes referred to, e.g., a sole beneficial owner in possession of his property, selling it in exercise of his powers as such owner, cannot take advantage of the curtain except in so far as it may have been properly used in connection with any link in his own title; see further, LAND CHARGES; MORTGAGE; REGISTRATION OF TITLE.

The registration of equitable interests and some legal charges under the Land Charges Act, 1925, has to some extent preserved the legal rights against the land of the owners of these equities (see LAND CHARGES). Subject to the Acts all equitable interests which are enforceable in a Court of Equity are preserved (see s. 3 of the L. P. Act, 1925). A substantial part of the Law of Property Acts consists of the modifications necessary or to give effect to the changes in the law and to simplify the investigation of title. See also ABSTRACT CONDITIONS OF SALE; COMMONS; LEASES; LEGAL ESTATE; MORTGAGE; NOTICE; PERPETUITIES; and Wolst. and Ch. Conv. Statutes.

Notwithstanding these changes, the old law of real property as it existed on the 31st December, 1925, is still in force subject to express statutory modification in regard to the equitable interests to which the old legal estates in land have been reduced, and the old law is applicable for the purpose of ascertaining the title of the persons claiming land or any interest therein up to the 1st January, 1926.

Law Reform. By the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), all causes of action shall with certain exceptions survive on the death (after the 24th July, 1934) of any person against or for the benefit of his estate. See actio personalis, and by s. 1 (2) it is enacted:

Where a cause of action survives as aforesaid for the benefit of the estate of a deceased person the damages recoverable for the benefit of the estate of that person:—

- (a) shall not include any exemplary damages;
- (b) in the case of a breach of promise to marry shall be limited to such damage, if any, to the estate of that person as flows from the breach of promise to marry ;

- (c) where the death of that person has been caused by the act or omission which gives rise to the cause of action, shall be calculated without reference to any loss or gain to his estate consequent on his death, except that a sum in respect of funeral expenses may be included.

See Rose v. Ford, (1937) 53 T. L. R. 873.

The rights conferred by the Act are in addition to the rights conferred on the dependants of deceased persons by the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, or by the Carriage by Air Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 36), and the liabilities are provable in the administration of an insolvent estate, notwithstanding that they are in the nature of unliquidated damages arising otherwise than by a contract, promise or breach of trust. See further, ADOPTION ; LEGITIMATION ; BASTARDY ; FUNERAL EXPENSES ; also INTEREST and LIMITATIONS.

The Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 30), confers rights to property belonging to a married woman and qualifies that property as if she were a feme sole (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY). The Act also modifies the law relating to restraint upon anticipation (see that title), abolishes a husband's liability for his wife's torts and ante-nuptial obligations (see HUSBAND AND WIFE) ; amends the law relating to joint tortfeasors or damages recoverable in more than one action against joint or several tortfeasors in respect of damages which are the result of a tort and provides for contribution between the tortfeasors. By s. 6 of the L. R. Act, 1935 :—

- (1) Where damage is suffered by any person as a result of a tort (whether a crime or not)—

(a) judgment recovered against any tortfeasor liable in respect of that damage shall not be a bar to an action against any other person who would, if sued, have been liable as a joint tortfeasor in respect of the same damage ;

(b) if more than one action is brought in respect of that damage by or on behalf of the person by whom it was suffered, or for the benefit of the estate, or of the wife, husband, parent or child, of that person, against tortfeasors liable in respect of the damage (whether as joint tortfeasors or otherwise) the sums recoverable under the judgments given in those actions by way of damages shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount of the damages awarded by the judgment first given ; and in any of those actions, other than that in which judgment is first given, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to costs unless the court is of opinion that there was reasonable ground for bringing the action ;

(c) any tortfeasor liable in respect of that damage may recover contribution from any other tortfeasor who is, or would if sued have been, liable in respect of the same damage, whether as a joint tortfeasor or otherwise, so, however, that no person shall be entitled to recover contribution under this section from any person entitled to be indemnified by him in respect of the liability in respect of which the contribution is sought.

(2) In any proceedings for contribution under this section the amount of the contribution recoverable from any person shall be such as may be found by the court to be just and equitable having regard to the extent of that person's responsibility for the damage ; and the court shall have power to exempt any person from liability to make contribution, or to direct that the contribution to be recovered from any person shall amount to a complete indemnity.

(3) For the purposes of this section—

(a) the expression 'parent' and 'child' have the same meanings as they have for the purposes of the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908 ; and

(b) the reference in this section to 'the judgment first given' shall, in a case where that judgment is reversed on appeal, be construed as a reference to the judgment first given which is not so reversed and, in a case where a judgment is varied on appeal, be construed as a reference to that judgment as so varied.

(4) Nothing in this section shall—

(a) apply with respect to any tort committed before the commencement of this Part of this Act ; or

(b) affect any criminal proceedings against any person in respect of any wrongful act ; or

(c) render enforceable any agreement for indemnity which would not have been enforceable if this section had not been passed.

See CONTRIBUTION.

Law Reports. Reports of judgments of courts on points of law, published for the purpose of being used as precedents (see (REPORTS)). Prior to 1865, these reports were all executed and published as mere private speculations, one reporter or pair of reporters being usually, though not always, accredited by the chief judge of each court. For an account of these reporters and their works, see Handbook of English Law Reports, by Master Fox. In 1865 'The Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales' began to publish monthly the reports called The Law Reports. These, though perhaps the best known, have no monopoly—for contemporaneous monthly reports are published under the name of The Law Journal, and contemporaneous weekly reports under the names of The Law Times Reports, The Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter and All England Reports, and The Times Law Reports. All reports made by members of the Bar and published on their responsibility may be cited in argument. For abbreviations, see tables in, e.g., Mews's Digest.

The Scottish reports (civil cases) from 1907 onwards are known as 'Session Cases' and are published annually. They are cited thus, e.g.: '1934 S. L. 121.' House of Lords cases thus: 1934, S. C. (H. L.) 33.' The reports prior to 1907 are in five series, referred to by the names of the editors—Shaw, Dunlop, Macpherson, Rettie, and Fraser. They are cited by the number of the volume in the series, and the initial of the editor, thus: '12 R. 121.'

Cases are also reported in The Scots Law Times (S. L. T.).

Law Society. See INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

Law Spiritual [lex spiritualis, Lat.], the ecclesiastical law.—Co. Litt. 344.

Law Suit, an action or litigation.

Law Terms.—See TERMS.

Lawyer, a person learned in the law, as a counsel, or solicitor.

Lay [fr. λαός, Gk.], not clerical or not professional; regarding or belonging to the people, as distinct from the clergy or a particular profession.

Lay Corporations, bodies politic; they are either: (1) Civil, created for temporal purposes; or (2) Eleemosynary, for charitable purposes.

Lay Days, running or consecutive days; a term used as to the time of loading and unloading ships, etc. See DEMURRAGE.

Laye [fr. ley, Old Fr.], law.

Lay Fee, lands held in fee of a lay lord, as distinguished from those lands which belong to the Church.

Lay Impropriators, lay persons to whose use ecclesiastical benefices have been annexed. At the dissolution of the monasteries by stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 28, and 31 Hen. 8, c. 13, the appropriations of the several parsonages which belonged to them were given to the king. The same had been done in former reigns when the alien priories were dissolved and given to the Crown. From these two roots have sprung all the lay impropriations or secular parsonages, they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the Crown to laymen. See APPROPRIATION and LAY RECTOR.

Lay Investiture of Bishops, putting a bishop into possession of the temporalities belonging to his bishopric.

Lay People, jurymen. Obsolete.

Lay Rector. A person holding by title under lay impropriation (see that title). As to the lay rector's liability to repair, see Morley v. Leacroft, 1896, P. 92, and Stuart v. Haughley Parish Church Council, 104, L. J. Ch. 314, with the right to contribution from other lay impropriators. As to any right to occupy a seat in the chancel of a church, see Stileman-Gibbard v. Wilkinson, 1897, 1 Q. B. 749.

Laystall [Sax.], a place for dung or soil.

Lazar [old Fr. lazare, from Lazarus of the New Testament (Luke xvi. 20)]. A leper, any person infected with a nauseous and pestilential disease.

Lazaret, or Lazaretto, places where quarantine is to be performed by persons coming from infected countries; to escape from them was punishable by a fine of 200*l.*, and for a quarantine officer to permit any person to leave them without a Privy Council Order was felony under the Quarantine Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 78), repealed by the Public Health Act, 1896, itself repealed and replaced as from 1st October, 1937, by the Public Health Act, 1936.

Lea or Ley, a pasture.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Leading Cases. A case so frequently followed as to become invested with peculiar authority is termed a 'leading case.' The leading cases on important points of law were collected and published by Mr. John William Smith with copious notes in 1837, and a similar collection on points of equity, by Messrs. White and Tudor, in 1849. See also RULING CASES.

Leading Question, a question which suggests to a witness the answer which the party examining desires. See Best on Evidence; Powell on Evidence. Such questions are not allowed to be put except in cross-examination, except as to matter not in dispute, and preliminary inquiries, name and address, etc., of witnesses.

It is not easy to lay down any precise general rule as to what are leading questions; on the one hand, it is clear that the mind of the witness must be brought into contact with the subject of inquiry; on the other, that he ought not to be prompted to give a particular answer, or to be asked any question to which yes or no would be conclusive. But how far it may be necessary to particularize, in framing the question, must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case.

If a witness by his conduct show himself decidedly adverse to the party calling him it is in the discretion of the Court to allow him to be examined as if on cross-examination.—Tayl. on Evid.

League [fr. ligue, Fr. ; ligo, Lat.], a treaty of alliance between different states or parties. It may be offensive, or defensive, or both. It is offensive when the contracting parties agree to unite in attacking a common enemy ; defensive when the parties agree to act in concert in defending each other against an enemy.

Also a measure equal to three English miles, or 3,000 geometrical paces.

League of Nations (Société des Nations) is a conventional assembly which was set up early in 1920 at the conclusion of the War of 1914-1919, with a membership of 58 States. The Covenant, consisting of 26 Articles at the beginning of each of the Peace Treaties, is its charter, pledging these States to promote international co-operation, and achieve peace and security by accepting obligations not to go to war, and to respect treaties. Among the important principles which underlie the League are the 'collective system,' e.g., collective action to prevent aggression, as well as to assist members to carry on their common interests more effectively ; the duty of reduction of armaments ; equality for States, e.g., recognition of greater responsibility of large Powers, with legal equality for all, large or small ; undertaking to use peaceful settlement for disputes, with recognition that any war is the responsibility of all peoples ; provision of means for adapting existing rights, when necessary, to justice. The League's machinery, the only existing one on adequately large scale, includes a Council ; a larger Assembly ; a Secretariat which constitutes the first International Civil Service ; the Hague Court of Justice, the first World Court of Law ; the International Labour Organization, providing first machinery for securing standards of labour conditions which can guard against abuse and economic competition ; regular, efficient technique for carrying on, by conference and personal contact, the technical business of government where, more and more, the interdependence of countries makes common action imperative ; discussion in public. More than 400 treaties have been concluded, varying from security pacts like Locarno, to the General Act, providing means for peaceful settlement of any dispute, which are linked up with the League's machinery and the Hague Court ; the latter, at the same time, is building up a cumulative body of international case law, while the new practice of giving 'advisory opinions' has been of marked help to the Foreign Offices in handling many problems. The first Secretary-General of the League was Sir Eric Drummond ; in 1933 he was succeeded by M. Avenol.

League of Nations Union (at 15 Grosvenor Crescent, London, S.W.1) is a British voluntary organization, under a Royal Charter, of which the object is to educate and make effective public opinion concerning the League.

Leakage, an allowance made to merchants for the leaking of casks or the waste of liquors.

Leal, loyal, belonging to law.

Leap-year, otherwise called bissextile [fr. bis and sextilis (dies) ] from its introduction to make up the loss of the six hours by which the course of the sun annually exceeds the 365 days allowed for.

Leap-year, which happens every fourth year, thus consists of 366 days instead of 365 by the addition of a day to the 28 days in other years of February. The day thus added was by Julius Caesar appointed to be the day before the 24th of February, which among the Romans was the sixth of the calends, and which on this occasion was reckoned twice, hence the term bissextile.

Lease [either from locatio, Lat., the letting of property, or laisser, Fr., to let, or leapum, or leasum, Sax., to enter lawfully], sometimes also called demise (demissio), is a grant of property for life, or years, or from year to year or at will, by one who has greater interest in the property. The person granting is called the lessor, who is possessed of the reversion (as to a reversion being essential to a lease, see 1 Platt on Lease, pp. 9 et seq.) ; he to whom the property is granted, the lessee. The consideration is usually the payment of a rent or other annual recompense. The ancient operative words were 'demise, lease, and to farm let,' or 'demise and lease.'

The Law of Property Act, 1925, makes a distinction between leases for years which become legal estates if they consist of terms of years absolute and leases for life which have been converted into merely equitable interests if created under a settlement, but by s. 149 of the Act leases for life at a rent or in consideration of a fine have been converted into terms of 90 years, terminable by notice as there provided. A term of years absolute is defined (see s. 205 (xxvii.) of the Act) as a term of years, whether or not at a rent either certain or determinable, but not a lease for life or lives, or (not after 1925) limited to take effect in possession within 21 years as required by the Act ; see infra.

Until 1926, under a lease for years, except a lease operating under the Statute of Uses, the lessee must have entered into the leased premises, for before entry he had only an interesse termini by virtue of his Common Law assurance, a right which could be assigned, but not surrendered, and which did not prevent the merger of two estates by its interposition, nor itself occasion a merger. The interest in a term in futuro is also called the interesse termini. By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 149, the doctrine of interesse termini was abolished and as from 1st January, 1926, all terms of years absolute, whether created before or after that date, take effect from the date fixed for commencement of the term without actual entry, and a term at a rent or in consideration of a fine limited after 1925 to take effect more than 21 years from the date of its creation is void, a contract for such a term is also void but leases of an equitable interest under settlement or power to mortgage in settlements, or by way of indemnity and like purposes under the settlement are excepted from the prohibition, and a further exception to the rule is made by sub-s. (5) of s. 149, which saves legal terms taking effect in reversion expectant on a larger term.

The Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 51 to 55, reproducing and amending the Statute of Frauds, ss. 1, 2 and 3, and the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 3, requires that for the purposes of creating a legal estate all leases are to be by deed except leases taking effect in possession for a term not exceeding three years and at the best rent which can be reasonably obtained without taking a fine, and such excepted leases may be made otherwise than by deed, i.e., by parol. The doctrine of part performance is not affected (s. 55 (d)). Under that doctrine leases which would be void because they are not made by deed may be enforceable as an agreement upon the same terms as if the lease had been granted (Walsh v. Lonsdale, (1882) 21 C. D. 9). Further, all agreements for a lease except a lease which may be made by parol (see above) must in all cases be in writing; L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40 (reproducing part of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds), unless the agreement is partly performed and specifically enforceable (see Maddison v. Alderson, (1853) 8 App. Cas. 467). Agreements which are not in writing and not specifically enforceable are interests at will only (see L. P.

Act, 1925, s. 54). Possession by the tenant and receipt of rent by the landlord are good evidence of a tenancy.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 56, causes for the specific performance of contracts for leases are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; COMPENSATION; GOODWILL; APPORTIONMENT; FORFEITURE; CONDITION; RENEWAL; also Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Landlord and Tenant'; and consult Foa, Woodfall or Redman on Landlord and Tenant.

Lease and Release, a mode of conveyance which derived its effect from the Statute of Uses, compounded of a lease for a year at Common Law, or a bargain and sale for a year under the Statute of Uses, and a Common Law Release. This compound conveyance originated thus: The Statute of Enrolments (27 Hen. 8, c. 16) seemed to be confined to cases where an estate of inheritance or freehold, or the use thereof, was to be made or take effect by reason only of a bargain and sale; it was therefore concluded that if a bargain and sale were first made for an estate less than freehold, as for one year, and then the inheritance or freehold were superadded by a separate deed of release, the transaction could not be affected by the statute; and that such release to the bargainee would be valid, without his entry upon the lands, as a consequence of the strong words in the Statute of Uses which converts all vested uses at once into legal estates. The convenience and general applicability of the lease and release recommended and established it as a common assurance. For it was preferable to a bargain and sale, and to a covenant to stand seised to uses, because it effected a transfer of the legal estate under the rules of the Common Law, and therefore the declarations of uses upon it needed not to be confined to persons from whom a consideration moved. It was also preferable to a bargain and sale, and still more to a feoffment, because no additional ceremony was necessary to its operation; but the transfer of property in land might have been effected by it in any part of the world, as instantaneously as the payment of money. And where the subject of conveyance was land in reversion or remainder, it was also preferable to a mere deed of grant, as it made it unnecessary for the grantee, if his title were called in question, to prove that there was a particular estate in existence at the time of the grant. See 2 Sand. Uses and Trusts, 73; 4 Reeves, 355.

By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21 (repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1874, No. 2) conveyance by release without a lease was made effectual; and by the Real Property Act, 1845, s. 2 (see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 51), the immediate freehold of corporeal tenements is deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery, and the conveyance by lease and release has thus become obsolete.

Leasehold, a chattel, interest and a dependent tenure derived either from a freehold, leasehold or (before 1926) copyhold or larger leasehold estate. See LEASE and TERM OF YEARS ABSOLUTE.

Leases, Ecclesiastical. Leases by ecclesiastical corporations are made under certain restrictions imposed by statutes of which the principal one is the Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842, and see Agric. Holdings Act, 1923, ss. 20 and 26. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Lease (Ecclesiastical)'; Woodfall, 'Landlord and Tenant.'

Leasing, or Lesing, gleaning.

Leasing-making, slanderous and untrue speeches to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of the sovereign, his council and proceedings, or to the dishonour, hurt, or prejudice of the sovereign or his ancestors.—Scots Acts, 1584, 1585, and 1703, c. 4.

Leave and Licence, a defence to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

Leave to Defend. The repealed Bills of Exchange Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67), commonly called 'Keating's Act,' allowed actions on bills or notes commenced within six months after being due, to be by writ of summons in a form provided by the Act, and, unless the defendant should within twelve days obtain leave to appear and defend the action, allowed the plaintiff to sign judgment on proof of service. This procedure was retained by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. II., r. 6, but abolished in 1880 by Ord. II., r. 6 (annulled 1917).

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. III., r. 6, as amended by R. S. C. 1933, in respect of forfeiture for non-payment of rent, it is provided that in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand (see QUANTUM MERUIT) in money, or possession where a tenancy has expired or been determined by notice to quit, or has become liable to forfeiture for non-payment of rent, the writ of summons may, at the option of the plaintiff, be specially endorsed with or accompanied by a statement of his claim as of the remedy to which he claims to be entitled; in which case, if the defendant fail to appear, judgment may be signed for the amount claimed; and by Ord. XIV., r. 1, as amended by R. S. C. 1933, it is further provided that where the defendant appears to a writ of summons specially indorsed with or accompanied by a statement of claim under Ord. III., r. 6, the plaintiff may on affidavit made by himself or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts, verifying the cause of action and the amount claimed (if any liquidated sum is claimed), and stating that in his belief there is no defence to the action except as to the amount of damages claimed, if any, apply to a judge for liberty to enter judgment for such remedy or relief or upon the statement of claim the plaintiff may be entitled to. The judge therefore, unless the defendant shall satisfy him that he has a good defence to the action on the merits or shall disclose such facts as may be deemed sufficient to entitle him to defend the action generally, may make an order empowering the plaintiff to enter such judgment as may be just, having regard to the nature of the remedy or relief claimed.

Relief from Forfeiture for Non-payment of Rent. By Rule 10 of Order XIV., added by the Rules of January, 1902:—

A tenant shall have the same right to relief after a judgment under this order for recovery of land on the ground of forfeiture for non-payment of rent as if the judgment had been given after trial.

Leccator, a debauched person.—Cowel.

Lecherwite [fr. legum, Sax., to lie with; wite, penalty], a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors.—4 Inst. 206. See LAIRWITE.

Le congrès, a species of proof on charges of impotency in France, coitus coram testibus. Abolished A.D. 1677.

Lectrinum, a pulpit.—Dugd. Mon., tom. iii. p. 243.

Lecture, in the Copyright Act, 1911, includes address, speech and sermon, and 'delivery,' in the case of a lecture, includes delivery by means of any mechanical instrument (s. 35 (1)); and see ss. 1 (2), 2 (1) (v.), 17. Consult Macgillivray on the Copyright Act, 1911.

Lecturer [fr. pralector, Lat.], an instructor, a reader of lectures; also a clergyman who assists rectors, etc., in preaching, etc. See the Lecturers and Parish Clerks Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 59).

Ledger-book, a book in the prerogative Courts, considered as their rolls.

Ledgreve or Ledgrave. See LATHREVE.

Ledo, the rising water or increase of the sea.

Leeman's Acts. So called after the introducer, Mr. George Leeman, M.P. for York City. (1) The Banking Companies (Shares) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 29), by which contracts for sale of bank shares are void unless the numbers of the shares sold are set forth in the contract; this Act is believed to be a dead letter on the Stock Exchanges, but is in full legal force (Neilson v. James, (1882) 9 Q. B. D. 546). (2) The Borough Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 91), much amended (see BOROUGH FUND) by the Borough Funds Act, 1903—authorizing the application of the funds of municipal corporations, and other governing bodies, under certain conditions, towards promoting or opposing Parliamentary and other proceedings for the benefit or protection of the inhabitants. See now Local Government Act, 1933 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 51), which repeals the Act of 1903 except as to London.

Leet, Court, an inferior court in manors. See COURT-LEET.

Leets or Lacts, meetings which were appointed for the nomination or election of ecclesiastical officers in Scotland.

Lega or Lacta, the alloy of money.

Legable [fr. legabilis, Lat.], capable of being bequeathed.

Legacy [fr. legatum, Lat.]. A legacy is a gift of personality by will, and, arising as it does from the mere bounty of the testator, it is postponed to the claims of creditors. There are four kinds of legacies:—(1) General, when it does not amount to a bequest of any particular thing or money, as distinguished from all others of the same kind; as if a testator give A. 50*l.* or a diamond ring, not referring to any particular diamond ring as distinguished from others. (2) Specific, when it is a bequest of a particular thing, or sum of money, or debt, as distinguished from all others of the same kind, as if a testator give B. 'my diamond ring.' (3) Demonstrative, when it is in its nature a general legacy, but there is a particular fund pointed out to satisfy it, as if a testator bequeath 1,000*l.* out of his Reduced Bank Three per Cents. And (4) Cumulative, or substitutional, when a testator by the same testamentary instrument, or by different testamentary instruments, has bequeathed more than one legacy to the same person, and the question arises whether he intended the second legacy to be cumulative—i.e., in addition to the first, or substitutional for it. If by different instruments he has given legacies of equal, greater, or lesser sums to the same person, the Court, considering that he who has given more than once must, primâ facie, be intended to mean more than one gift, awards to the legatee all the legacies. If, however, they are not given simpliciter, but the motive of the gift is expressed, and in such instruments the same motive is expressed, and also the same sum is given, the Court considers these two coincidences as raising a presumption that the testator did not by a subsequent instrument mean another gift, but a repetition only of the former gift. See CUMULATIVE LEGACIES.

A legacy not exceeding 500*l.* can be recovered in the County Court, by s. 67 of the County Courts Act, 1888, taken from the repealed Act of 1865, which first gave an equitable jurisdiction to County Courts. See now County Courts Act, 1934, s. 52.

Pecuniary legacies bear interest from the expiration of twelve months from the testator's death; the executor may pay them before, but he is not compelled to do so.

Upon and subject to the particular construction of the will, if a legacy be bequeathed to a person to be paid or payable at the age of twenty-one, or any other age or certain determinate term, and the legatee die before that age, this is such an interest vested in the legatee immediately on the testator's death, that it goes to his executor or administrator, it being debitum in præsentî, though solvendum in futuro, the time being annexed to the payment and not to the gift itself; but if a legacy be bequeathed to a person at twenty-one, or if, or when, or in case, or provided he shall attain twenty-one, or at any future definite period, and he die before that age or period, the legacy lapses, these expressions being construed as annexing the time to the substance of the legacy, so that the right of the legatee is made to depend upon his being alive at the time fixed for its payment. The giving of interest on a legacy to a legatee, let the interest be ever so small, or a provision for his maintenance until the time for payment of the legacy, provided it be equal in amount to the interest, as a rule, vests the legacy; but not, it seems, where the legacy is payable out of land, much less where anything appears on the will to show that the legacy was not intended to vest. See ADEMPMENT; ABATEMENT; LAPSE; MAINTENANCE and SATISFACTION. Consult Roper on Legacies; Theobald on Wills.

In the Roman Law a legacy was an injunction given to the heir to pay or give over a part of the inheritance to a third person. For its four kinds, see Sand. Just., 7th ed. 222, or Cum. Civ. Law, 160.

Legacy Duty, a tax paid to Government on legacies and shares of residue, rising from 1 to 10 per cent. in proportion to the distance of relationship between the testator or intestate and legatee. The personal representative is liable to pay the duty. He must show a receipt signed by the legatee giving certain particulars, including the amount or value of the legacy and the duty payable thereon. Duty is then paid and the receipt is stamped. If the duty is not paid by the personal representative the legatee is chargeable. The principal Acts relating to the legacy duty are the Legacy Duty Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 52); the Stamp Act, 1815 (55 Geo. 3, c. 184); the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), ss. 41-43; and the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, pt. iii. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Death Duties.' Consult Hanson or Norman on Death Duties.

Legal, (1) lawful; according to law; (2) opposed to equitable.

Legal Rights of spouses and children in Scotland. See TERCE; COURTESY; JUS RELICTÆ; JUS RELICTI; LEGITIM.

Legalls homo, a person who stands rectus in curiâ, neither outlawed, excommunicated, nor infamous.

Legalls moneta Angliæ, lawful money of England.—Co. Litt. 207.

Legamannus. See LAGE-MAN.

Legantine, or Legantine Constitutions, ecclesiastical laws enacted in national synods, held under the Cardinals Otho and Othobon, legates from Pope Gregory IX., and Pope Clement IV., in the reign of King Henry III., about the years 1220 and 1268.

Legatary [fr. legatum, Lat.], a legatee.

Legate, a deputy, an ambassador, the Pope's nuncio.

There are three kinds:—(1) Legates à latere, being such as the Pope commissions to take his place in councils, and so called, because he never gives this office to any but his favourites and confidants, who are always à latere—at his side. (2) Legates de latere or legati dati, those entrusted with apostolical legation, and acting under a special commission. (3) Legates by office, or legati nati, those that were legates by virtue of their offices, as, in England, the Archbishop of Canterbury in former times.—Encyc. Londin.

Legatee, one who has a legacy left to him.

Legation, an embassy or mission.

Legator, one who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Legatum, a legacy given to the church or an accustomed mortuary.

Legem facere, to make law upon oath. See Selden's Notes on Hengham's Summar, 133.

Legem ferre or rogare [Lat.], to propose a law.—Rom.

Legem habere, to be capable of giving evidence upon oath. See OATH.

Legem sciscere [Lat.], to give consent and authority to a proposed law, applied to the consent of the people.—Rom.

Leger, Leiger, or Ledger [fr. legger, Dut., to lie], anything that lies in a place; as, a leger-book, a book that lies in a counting-house; leger-ambassador, a resident ambassador.

Legergild. See LAIRWITE.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. 2 Roll. Rep. 410.—(Later laws abrogate prior contrary laws.) See REPEAL.

Legiosus, litigious, subjected to a course of law.

Legislation, the making of law; any set of statutes.

Legislature, the power that makes laws. See PARLIAMENT.

Legitim, the legal share of the father's free movable property due, by Scots law, on his death to his children. Where a father dies leaving a widow and children, his free movable estate is divisible into three equal parts; one-third part is divided equally amongst all the children, whether of his last or of any former marriage, as legitim; another third goes to his widow as her jus relictæ; and the remaining third is called 'dead's part,' which the father may dispose of as he pleases by will. If he die intestate, the 'dead's part' goes to his children as his next-of-kin. If the father leave no widow, the legitim is one-half instead of one-third.—Bell's Scots Law Dict. And see REASONABLE PARTS.

Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93), which provides that any natural-born subject of the King, being domiciled in England or Ireland, or claiming any real or personal estate situated in England, may apply to the High Court of Justice for a decree, declaring that the petitioner is the legitimate child of his parents, and that the marriage of his father and mother, or of his grandfather and grandmother, was a valid marriage, or for a decree declaring that his own marriage was valid. See also Legitimacy Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), applying the 1858 Act in cases also of legitimation by subsequent marriage of parents and giving jurisdiction therein to the County Court.

Legitimate Child, one between whose parents subsisted the relation of marriage either at time of procreation or of birth, or at some intervening or subsequent period.

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents. Formerly not recognized by the Law of England, though always allowed under the Civil Law in Scotland and most European countries and many British colonies.

Now recognized in England and Wales by the Legitimacy Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), as from 1st January, 1927. The Act provides for the legitimation of an illegitimate person by the subsequent marriage of the parents, but not if the other person was married to a third person at the time of the illegitimate person's birth. It further provides for declarations of legitimacy, the rights of legitimated persons to take interests in property, succession, personal rights and obligations, and as to persons legitimated by extraneous law. See for summary of law before 1927 an article by Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick, K.C.S.I., in the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, No. 13, New Series (1904).

In the British Colonies such as Ceylon, Canada, and South Africa, where the civil law of legitimation prevailed before the British occupation, that law has been left undisturbed; in the other Colonies to which the colonists took the British law against legitimation with them, that law has been altered by statute and legitimation introduced, e.g., New Zealand (1894), S. Australia (1898), Queensland (1899), New South Wales (1902), Victoria (1903).

See the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, New Series, vol. vi. Pt. I. (1904).

Legitime, that portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.—Civ. Law. See LEGITIM.

Legitimi hæredes, agnati because the inheritance was given to them by a law of the Twelve Tables.—Sand. Just., 7th ed. 280.

Legritula, a fine for criminal conversation with a woman.—Old Records.

Leldgrave, an officer under the Saxon government who had jurisdiction over a lath. See LATH.

Leigh, a meadow.

Lelpa, one who escapes or departs from service.—Spelm.

Lent [fr. lentin, Sax., spring], the time from Ash Wednesday to Easter Day. The forty days of Lent are days of fasting or abstinence.

Leod, the people, nation, country, etc.

Leodlum, liege.

Leocht-geseot [symbolum luminis, Lat.], a tax for supplying the church with lights.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Lep and Lace, a custom in the manor of Writtle, in Essex, that every cart which goes over Greenbury within that manor (except it be the cart of a nobleman) shall pay 4d. to the lord.—Blount.

Leporarius, a greyhound.—Cowel.

Leporium, a place where hares are kept.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, 1035.

Leproso amovendo, an ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or leazar, who thrusts himself into the company of his neighbours in any parish, either in the church, or at other public meetings, to their annoyance.—Reg. Brev. 237.

Le Roy (or la Reine) le veut.—(The King (or the Queen) wills it.) The form of the royal assent to public Bills in Parliament.

Le Roy n'est lié par aucun statut s'il ne fut expressément nommé.—(The King is not bound by any statute unless he be expressly named therein, as, e.g., in the Patents, etc., Act, 1883, and the Interpretation Act, 1889.)

Le Roy (or la Reine) remercie ses bons sujets, accepte leur bënëvolence et ainsi le veut. (The King (or the Queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it thus.) The form of the royal assent to a Bill of supply.

Le Roy (or la Reine) s'avisera.—(The King (or the Queen) will consider of it.) The form of words used to express a denial of the royal assent.

Leschewes, trees fallen by chance, or wind-falla.—Brooke's Abr. 341.

Lesion, the injury suffered in consequence of inequality of situation by one who does not obtain a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract.—Civ. Law.

Les lois ne se chargent de punir que les actions extérieures.—(Laws charge themselves with punishing overt acts only.) That is, 'so long as an act rests in bare intention it is not punishable.'

Leslegend, an inferior officer in forests to take care of the vert and venison therein, etc.

Les Prélats, Seigneurs, et Communes en ce présent Parlement assemblées, au nom de tous vos autres sujets, remercient très humblement votre Majeste, et prie à Dieu vous donner en santé bonne vie et longue.—The prelates, lords, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, in the name of all your other subjects, most humbly thank your Majesty, and pray to God to grant you in health a good and long life.) The form of words used by the clerk in an act of grace or indemnity, which originates with the Crown, or, so to speak, has the royal assent before it is agreed to by the two Houses.

Lessa, a legacy.—Dugd. Mon., tom. i. p. 562.

Lessee, the person to whom a lease is made or given.

Lessons, Table of, see the Prayer Book (Table of Lessons) Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 37), whereby the use of a revised table of Lessons to be read in church was authorized and directed to be inserted in the Prayer Book in lieu of the existing table; and the Revised Tables of Lessons Measure, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, No. 3), which provides an alternative table.

Lessor, one who lets anything to another by lease.

Lessor of the Plaintiff. See EJECTMENT.

Lestagefree, lestage-free, or exempt from the duty of paying ballast-money.

Lestagium, lestage or lestage; a duty laid on the cargo of a ship.

Leswes or Lesues, pastures.—Domesday; Co. Litt. 4 b.

Let, 'without let or hindrance,' without obstruction.

Leta, a court-leet.

Lethal Weapon, deadly weapon.

Letherwite. See LAIRWITE.

Letter of Absolution, the mode formerly resorted to by an abbot for the release of his brethren, in order to qualify them for entering into some other order of religion.

Letter of Attorney. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Letter-claus (littera clausa), close letter, so called in contradistinction to letters-patent, because the former is commonly sealed up with the royal signet, or privy seal; whereas letters-patent are left open and sealed with the broad seal.

Letter of Credit, a letter written by a merchant or correspondent to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with a certain sum of money.

Letter of Exchange, a bill of exchange, which see.

Letter of Horning. See HORNING.

Letter of Licence, an instrument in writing whereby the creditors of a man who had failed to meet his engagements gave him time for the payment of his debts, and undertook that in the meantime he should be free from arrest for debt; but arrest for debt was abolished by the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), subject to the provisions of that Act.

Letter-missive. When a peer was made a defendant in the Court of Chancery, the Lord Chancellor sent a letter-missive to him, to request his appearance, together with a copy of the bill, petition, and order; if he neglected to appear to this, he was then served with a copy of the bill and a citation to appear and answer; if he continued still in contempt, a sequestration nisi, which was made absolute in the usual way, issued immediately against his lands and goods, without any of the arresting processes of attachment, etc., which cannot affect a Lord of Parliament. See 1 Dan. Ch. Pr.

Also, for electing a bishop, a letter-missive from the sovereign is sent to the dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect. See CONGÉ D'ÉLIRE.

Letters. The recipient or lawful possessor of letters has all the rights in them incident to property except that he is not entitled to publish them or paraphrase of them (Philip v. Pennell, 1907, 2 Ch. 577; Oliver v. Oliver, (1861) 31 L. J. C. P. 4). As to copyright, see Macgillivray on Copyright.

Letters of Administration. See ADMINISTRATION.

Letters of Marque, commissions for extraordinary reprisals for reparation to merchants taken and despoiled by strangers at sea, grantable by the Secretaries of State, with the approbation of the Sovereign and Council; and usually in time of war, etc.—Lex Merc. 173. The words marque and reprisal are used as synonymous terms, although the latter is, strictly, taking in return; the former passing the frontiers in order to such taking.—Du Cange, tit. 'Marcha.'

These letters are grantable by the law of nations, wherever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another, and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs. In this case letters of marque and reprisal may be obtained in order to seize the bodies or goods of the subjects of the offending state, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found; and, in fact, this custom seems dictated by nature. The necessity, however, is obvious of calling in the sovereign power to determine when reprisals may be made, else every private sufferer would be a judge in his own cause.—4 Hen. 5, c. 7; Muratori's Antichità Italiane, tit. 'Rappresaglie'; Malvezzi's Chron. of Brescia.

But the term itself is now somewhat differently applied. If during war a subject should take an enemy's ship, without commission from the Crown, the prize would, by the effect of the prerogative, become a droit of Admiralty, and would belong, not to the captor, but to the Crown. To encourage merchants and others to fit out privateers or armed ships in time of war, the Lords of the Admiralty have been in former times empowered by various Acts of Parliament, and sometimes by proclamation of the Sovereign in Council, to grant commissions to the owners of such ships, and the prizes captured by them have been directed to be divided between such owners and the captains and crews. But the owners, before the commission is granted, give security to the Admiralty to make compensation for any violation of treaties between those powers with whom the nation is at peace; and that such armed ship shall not be employed in smuggling. These commissions were called letters of marque, in which sense alone the term is now accepted.—2 Steph. Com. By Order in Council, dated 29th of March, 1854, 'general reprisals' were granted against the ships, vessels, and goods of the Emperor of Russia, and to give the benefit of all the prizes taken by her Majesty's ships to the captors.

On the 16th of April, 1856, the plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey assembled in congress at Paris, signed a declaration, of which the first article was 'Privateering is and remains abolished.' The United States of America were invited to accede to this declaration, but declined.

Letters-patent, or Letters Overt [fr. littera patentes, Lat.], writings of the sovereign, sealed with the Great Seal of England, whereby a person or public company is enabled to do acts or enjoy privileges which he or it could not do or enjoy without such authority. They are so called because they are open with the seal affixed and ready to be shown for confirmation of the authority thereby given. Peers are sometimes created by letters-patent, and letters-patent of precedence were granted to barristers. By letters-patent aliens are made denizens, and especially new inventions are protected; hence the incorporeal chattel of patent-right.

A 'patent-right' is a privilege granted by the Crown to the first inventor of any new contrivance in manufactures, that he alone shall be entitled, during a limited period, to make articles according to his own invention—Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. 1, c. 3.

To be the subject of a patent-right an article must be material and capable of manufacture, an idea or scientific law or hypothesis cannot be patented: it must be new within the United Kingdom and not known to the public at the date of grant and show some utility. The person applying for the patent must be the true and first inventor of it; yet where the secret is acquired abroad by one who afterwards introduces it into the realm, he is considered by the law as the true inventor.

The various statutes regulating the procedure for obtaining a patent were consolidated, with amendments, by the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), and further amended by Patents and Designs Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 80), and 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32), which, proceeding on the principle that an inventor is a person to be encouraged, simplifies and renders less expensive the procedure for granting a patent and enforcing the rights under it. The rights conferred do not extend beyond Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man (patents elsewhere, such as in any of the Dominions or foreign countries must be applied for locally); see infra. Section 1 is as follows:

1.—(1) An application for a patent may be made by any person who claims to be the true and first inventor of an invention, whether he is a British subject or not, and whether alone or jointly with any other person.

(2) The application must be made in the prescribed form, and must be left at, or sent by post to, the Patent Office in the prescribed manner.

(3) The application must contain a declaration to the effect that the applicant is in possession of an invention, whereof he, or in the case of a joint application one at least of the applicants, claims to be the true and first inventor, and for which he desires to obtain a patent, and must be accompanied by either a provisional or complete specification.

(4) The declaration required by this section may be either a statutory declaration or not, as may be prescribed.

Applications may be made at once for a complete specification or for a provisional specification. The provisional specification protects the inventor pending the examination of the complete specification when lodged and during formalities required for the grant of the letters patent on the complete specification, which must be lodged within 12 months of first application. Opposition to the grant is heard by the Comptroller of the Patent Office subject to appeal to an Appeal Tribunal (s. 12 of the Act of 1932). When granted, the patent must be sealed on a stamped application within 21 months. The grant entitles the patentee to all rights and profits in the invention. Upon infringement of the patent the patentee can protect his rights by injunction and a claim for damages. The patent is valid for 16 years with a further period of 7 to 14 years if the High Court decide that the invention has not been sufficiently remunerated. The patent is subject to certain rights of the Crown which may be reserved on the grant, and if the invention is likely to be useful in war the naval and military authorities may acquire it upon compensation agreed by the Treasury. The patent may be registered in such foreign countries as are parties to a Convention with this country, within 12 months, and it is assignable under seal either absolutely or with time or regional limits. Upon death, the patent rights vest in the personal representatives. It should be noted that the invention may be revoked if it is worked exclusively outside the United Kingdom at the end of 4 years from the date of grant, and revocation or a compulsory licence may be obtained if the invention is not being worked adequately, or if it is capable of, and is not being worked on a commercial scale in the United Kingdom after 4 years from the date of grant. Inventors should obtain the assistance of a chartered patent agent.

Letters of Request : (1) The mode of commencing an original suit in the Court of Arches, instead of proceeding in the first instance in the Consistory Court. These letters dispense with instituting a suit in an inferior ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and authorize it in the superior court, otherwise only a Court of Appeal. The judge of the inferior court waives his jurisdiction, which attaches to the appellate court, without consent from the intended defendant.—1 Hagg. Eccl. R. 4, note (a).

See also Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), s. 13, by which a bishop may send a case by letters of request to the Court of Appeal to the province.

(2) The words 'letters of request' are used with reference to the 'request to examine witnesses in lieu of a commission,' which may be made under R. S. C., Ord. XXXVII., r. (6) (a), to the courts of foreign countries and the Colonies. It is the only method of obtaining evidence in some countries. See notes to the above rule in Annual Practice.

Letters of Safe-conduct. No subject of a nation at war with us can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized by our subjects, unless he has letters of safe-conduct, which, by divers old statutes, must be granted under the Great Seal, and enrolled in Chancery, or else are of no effect—the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms.—Chitty's Prerogatives of the Crown, p. 48, and Vattel by Chit. 416. But passports or licences from our ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity; see ALIEN ENEMY.

Lettres de Cachet. See CACHET.

Lettres d'État, letters formerly issued in France in favour of government officials suspending legal proceedings against them.

Leuca, a measure of land, the extent of which is not precisely known: some say 1,500 paces. Ingulpus, p. 910, says 2,000 paces. In Dugd. Mon., tom. i. p. 313, it is 480 perches. Spelman says a mile.

Leucata, a space of ground as much as a mile contains.—Dugd. Mon., tom. i. p. 768. And so it seems to be used in a charter of William the Conqueror to Battle Abbey.

Levant et couchant [levantes et cubantes, Lat.], cattle that have been so long in the ground of another that they have lain down and risen to feed; supposed to be a day and a night.—Termes de la Ley.

Levari facias (that you caused to be levied), a writ of execution at Common Law, commanding the sheriff to levy or make of the lands and chattels of the judgment-debtor the sum recovered by the judgment. The sheriff was not authorized to sell or extend the lands, or deliver them to the creditor, but could only collect the debt from the issues and profits of the land, and from the sale of the chattels. This writ, long superseded by the writ of elegit, was formally abolished by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 146, sub-s. 2.

Levitical Degrees, degrees of kindred within which persons are prohibited to marry. They are set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus. By 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, it is declared that all persons may lawfully marry, but such as are prohibited by God's law; and it is declared by the same statute, that 'no reservation or prohibition (God's law except) shall trouble or impeach any marriage without the Levitical degrees.' See MARRIAGE.

Levy [fr. levo, Lat.], the act of raising money or men.

Lex, law. In the Roman Law it was a resolution adopted by the old Roman populus (Patricians and Plebeians) in the comitia, on the motion of a magistrate of senatorial rank, as a consul, a prætor, or a dictator.

The principal maxims under this head are as follows:—

Lex Angliæ nunquam sine Parlamento mutari potest. 2 Inst. 218.—(The Law of England cannot be changed but by Parliament.)

Lex citius tolerare vult privatum damnum quam publicum malum.—(The law more readily tolerates a private loss than a public evil.)

Lex finget ubi subsistit æquitas. 11 Co. 90.—(The law will supply a fiction where equity subsists.) See FICTION.

Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. Hob. 96.—(The law does not compel to impossibilities.) See IMPOSSIBILITY.

Lex non curat de minimis. Hob. 88.—(The law cares not about trifles.)

Lex respicit æquitatem. Co. Litt. 24 b.—(The law regards equity.)

Lex spectat naturæ ordinem. Co. Litt. 197 b.—(The law has regard to the order of nature.)

Lex deralsnia, the proof of a thing which one denies to be done by him where another affirms it; defeating the assertion of his adversary, and showing it to be against reason or probability; this was used among the old Romans as well as the Normans.—Cowel.

Lex fori, the law of the place of action.

The forms of remedies, modes of proceeding, rules of evidence and execution of judgments are regulated by the laws of the place where the action is instituted; or, as the civilians express it, according to the lex fori. See British Linen Co. v. Drummond, (1830) 10 B. & C. 903; 34 R. R. 595, and Preface vi.; and Hansen v. Dixon, (1907) 96 L. T. 32. Consult Dicey's Conflict of Laws.

Lex judicialis, an ordeal.—Leg. H. 1.

Lex Julia majestatis, a law promulgated by Augustus Cæsar among the Romans, comprehending all the ancient laws that had before been enacted to punish transgressors against the State.—4 Steph. Com.

Lex hostilis de furtis, a Roman law which provided that a prosecution for theft might be carried on without the owner's intervention.—4 Steph. Com.

Lex loci contractus (the law of the place of the contract). Generally speaking, the validity of a contract is decided by the law of the place where it was made. If valid there, it is, by the general law of nations (jure gentium), held valid everywhere, by the tacit or implied consent of the parties. The rule is founded not merely in the convenience, but in the necessities of nations; for otherwise it would be impracticable for them to carry on an extensive intercourse and commerce with each other. The whole system of agencies, of purchases and sales, of mutual credits, and of transfers of negotiable instruments, rests on this foundation; and the nation which should refuse to acknowledge the common principles would soon find its whole commercial intercourse reduced to a state like that in which it now exists among savage tribes.

The same rule applies to the invalidity of contracts; if void or illegal by the law of the place of the contract, they are generally held void and illegal everywhere. This would seem to be a principle derived from the very elements of natural justice. The code expounds it: Nullum enim pactum, nullam conventionem, nullum contractum, inter eos videri volumus subsequutum, qui contra hunt lege contrahere prohibente (Inst. l. i., tit. 14, l. 5). If void in its origin, it seems difficult to find any principle upon which any subsequent validity can be given to it in any other country. But there is an exception to the rule as to the universal validity of contracts:—'No nation is bound to recognize or enforce any contracts injurious to its own interests, or its subjects.' See Ogden v. Ogden, 1908, P. 46; CONFLICT OF LAWS; and consult Dicey's Conflict of Laws, and Westlake on Private International Law.

Lex loci delicti (the law of the place of the tort or wrong).

Lex loci rei sitæ (the law of the place where the thing is situate). It is sometimes also called lex situs. As to real or immovable property, the general rule of the Common Law is, that the laws of the place where such property is situate exclusively govern in respect to the power to contract, the rights of the parties, the modes of transfer, and the solemnities which should accompany them; see Freke v. Lord Carbery, (1873) L. R. 16 Eq. 461; Bank of Africa v. Cohen, 1909, 2 Ch. 129. The title, therefore, to real property can be acquired, passed, and lost only according to the lex loci rei sitæ.—Story's Confli. of Laws, s. 424. See Westlake on Private International Law; Dicey's Conflict of Laws.

Lex mercatoria, the mercantile law or general body of European usages in commercial matters.—1 Steph. Com.

Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. (The law does not urge to impossibilities.)

Lex non scripta, the unwritten or Common Law, which includes general and particular customs, and particular local laws; 1 Steph. Com. See Common Law.

Lex sacramentalis, purgation by oath.—Leg. H. 1.

Lex scripta, the written or statute law.

Lex scripta si cesset, id custodiri oportet quod moribus et consuetudine inductum est; et si quā in re hoc defecerit, tunc id quod proximum et consequens ei est; et si id non appareat, tunc, jus quo urbs Romana utitur servari oportet. 7 Co. 19.—(If the written law be silent, that which is drawn from manners and customs ought to be observed; and if that is in any matter defective, then that which is next and analogous to it. [See ANALOGY; COMMON LAW; and the remarks of Parke, J., in Mirehouse v. Rennel, (1830) 8 Bing. 515.] And if that does not appear, then the law which Rome uses should be followed.)

The last maxim of Lord Coke is so far followed at the present day that, in cases where there is no precedent of the English Courts, the Civil Law is always heard with respect, and often, though not necessarily, followed.

Lex semper intendit quod convenit rationi. (The law is to be taken to intend that which is reasonable.)

Lex sitū. See LEX LOCI REI SITÆ.

Lex spectat naturæ ordinem. (The law contemplates the natural succession of things.)

Lex talionis, the law of retaliation.

Lex terræ, the law of the land.

Lex uno ore omnes alloquitur. 2 Inst. 184.—(The law speaks to all with the same mouth.)

Lex Wallensia, the Welsh law.

LEY or LOI, law; the oath with compurgators; also a meadow.

LEY GAGER, a wager of law; one who commences a lawsuit.—Cowell's Law Dict.

Leyerwite. See LAIRWITE.

Leze-majesty, an offence against sovereign power; treason; rebellion.

Liard, a farthing.

Libel [fr. libellus, Lat.; libelle, Fr.]. False defamatory words, if written and published, constitute a libel: Odgers on Libel, p. 1. 'Everything printed or written, which reflects on the character of another, and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been' (O'Brien v. Clement, (1846) 15 M. & W. 435, per Parke, B.). A statement in a talking film is a libel and not merely a slander (Youssof v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture Corporation, 78 Sol. Jo. 617). As to publication by dictation, etc., to a typist, see Osborn v. Boulter & Son, 1930, 2 K. B. 226. All contumelious matter that tends to degrade a man in the opinion of his neighbours, or to make him ridiculous, will amount (when conveyed in writing, or by picture, effigy, or the like.—Monson v. Tussauds, Ltd., 1894, 1 Q. B. 671) to libel. A writing of fictitious character which incidentally contains the name of a real person may be a libel: see Jones v. Hulton & Co., 1910, A. C. 20, where Lord Loreburn said (p. 23): 'Libel is a tort which consists in using language which others knowing the circumstances would reasonably think to be defamatory of the person complaining of any injured by it.' The term also legally includes such writings as are of a blasphemous, treasonable, seditious, or immoral kind. As to the averment in an indictment for obscene libel, see R. v. Barraclough, 1906, 1 K. B. 201.

Both the author and the publisher of a libel are liable to be either sued or indicted by the party libelled; but it is a defence in either case that the matter complained of was written or printed on what is called a privileged occasion—either (a) absolute privilege, statements in judicial proceedings, in Parliament, or by Ministers of the Crown in advising their sovereign (Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby, (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 255); but a report not judicially determining a right or the guilt or innocence of any one is not absolutely privileged (O'Connor v. Waldron, 78 Sol. Jo. 859); or (b) qualified privilege, i.e., upon an occasion which justified the writing or printing of it; e.g., that the defendant was giving a character of a servant, or commenting upon a matter of general interest to the public. No privilege, however, attaches to information supplied by a trade protection society to its customers for the purposes of profit and not from sense of duty if such information is injurious to the character of another. The mere fact of a contract to supply information does not create such a duty or common interest that communications made in fulfilment of the contractual obligations are privileged. The underlying principle is the common convenience and welfare of society, and not the convenience of individuals. See Macintosh v. Dunn, 1908, A. C. 390. The Libel Law Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), gives 'privilege' to fair and accurate newspaper reports of proceedings of a court, or public meeting. Standen v. South Essex Recorders Ltd., (1934) 50 T. L. R. 365 (comments in newspaper on proceedings at local authority meeting).

Proof of malice or spite will rebut a defence of privileged occasion, but neither want of truth nor malice are relevant to the defence of absolute privilege.

Threatening to publish a libel with the intent to extort anything valuable, etc., is punishable as a misdemeanour (Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 31); and see BLACKMAIL.

It is a good defence to an action of libel, that the libel was true; see M'Pherson v. Daniels, (1829) 10 B. & C. at p. 272. A defence that the plaintiff assented to a publication which was made may also be good—on the principle volenti non fit injuria (Chapman v. Lord Ellesmere, 1932, 2 K. B. 431). As to the discretion of the judge in awarding or withholding costs upon a verdict for nominal damages, see Martin v. Benson, 1927, 1 K. B. 771. But to be a defence to an indictment, a plea justifying on the ground of the truth of the libel must further allege that its publication was for the public good (Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), s. 6); but if the libel is blasphemous or seditious, no evidence of its truth will be received (R. v. M'Hugh, 1901, 2 Ir. R. 569). It is also by s. 6 a misdemeanour to maliciously publish any defamatory libel: see R. v. Munslow, 1895, 1 Q. B. 758. As to newspaper libels, see NEWSPAPERS; and for the law of the subject generally, consult Odgers or Fraser on Libel; also Addison on Torts, and Clerk and Lindsell on Torts. See FAIR COMMENT; JUSTIFICATION; PUBLICATION; and SLANDER.

As to trade libels, it has been held by the House of Lords in White v. Mellin, 1895, A. C. 154, that an action will not lie for a false statement disparaging a trader's goods where no special damage is proved. Nor will any injunction be granted to restrain a trade libel without proof of special damage (ibid.).

In the Spiritual Court a libel means the articles drawn out in a formal allegation setting forth the complainant's ground of complaint.—3 Bl. Com. 100.

In Scots law it is the form of the complaint or ground of the charge, on which either a civil action or criminal prosecution takes place.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Libellant, the suitor-plaintiff who files a libel in an ecclesiastical case.

Libellee, the suitor-defendant against whom a libel has been filed.

Libelli famosi, scurrilous publications of a libellous nature. See LIBEL.

Libellus conventionalis, the statement of a plaintiff's claim in a petition presented to the magistrate, who directed an officer to deliver it to the defendant.—Civ. Law.

Libri assisarum, the Book of Assizes or Pleas of the Crown, being the fifth part of the Year-Books.

Libri feudorum, a code of the feudal law, compiled by direction of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published at Milan, A.D. 1170.

Libri homo, a freeman.

Libri judicialis of Alfred, King Alfred's Dome-Book, which see.

Libri niger domus regis (the black book of the King's household), the title of a book in which there is an account to the household establishment of King Edward IV., and of the several musicians retained in his service, as well for his private amusement as for the service in his chapel.

Libera, a livery or delivery of so much corn or grass to a customary tenant, who cut down or prepared the said grass or corn, and received some part or small portion of it as a reward or gratuity.

Libera batella, a free boat, a right of fishing.

Libera chasea habenda, a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor, after proof made by inquiry of a jury that the same of right belongs to him.—Reg. Brev. 36.

Libera piscaria, a free fishery.

Libera wara, a free measure of ground.

Liberam legem amittere, to lose one's free law (called the villainous judgment), to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one's body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators, but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment. Hawk. P. C. 61, c. lxxii., s. 9; 3 Inst. 221.

Liberate, a writ that lay for the payment of a yearly pension or other sum of money, granted under the Great Seal, and addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the Exchequer. Also a writ to the sheriff for the delivery of possession of lands and goods extended or taken upon the forfeiture of a recognizance. Also a writ that issued out of Chancery, directed to a gaoler, for delivery of a prisoner who has put in bail for this appearance.—Fitz. N. B. 432.

Liberatio, money, meat, drink, clothes, etc., yearly given and delivered by the lord to his domestic servants.—Blount.

Liberation, payment.—Civ. Law.

Libertas ecclesiastica, Church Liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Co. Litt. 116.—(Liberty is that natural faculty which permits every one to do anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.)

Libertate probandâ, an ancient writ which lay for such as being demanded for villeins offered to prove themselves free; addressed to the sheriff, that he should take security from them for the proof of their freedom before the justices of assize, and that in the meantime they should be unmolested.—Fitz. N. B. 77.

Libertatibus allocandis, a writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed.—Reg. Brev. 262.

Libertatibus exigendis in itinere, an ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit of an attorney for the defence of another's liberty.—Reg. Brev. 19.

Liberticide, a destroyer of liberty.

Liberty, a franchise, being a royal privilege or a branch thereof, subsisting in the hands of a subject, as a liberty to hold pleas in a court of one's own.

The privileged districts, called liberties from being exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction, having separate commissions of the peace, and not being incorporated boroughs, might, by Order in Council, be united with the counties in which they were situate upon petition of the justices of the liberty or of the Courts, under the Liberties Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 105), of which statute, it is believed, but little advantage was taken. As to election of a 'people's magistrate,' in 1891, by the tenants and inhabitants of the liberty of Havering-atte-Bower, in Essex, see Law Journal for July 11, 1891.

By s. 48, sub-s. 1, of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1888, every liberty and franchise of a county forms for the purpose of that Act part of the county of which it forms part for the purposes of parliamentary elections.

Liberty of the Rules, a privilege to go out of the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons within certain limits and there reside. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

Liberum tenementum, a frank tenement or freehold. The plea of liberum tenementum, commonly pleaded by the defendant in an action of trespass, was the only case of usual occurrence in more modern practice, in which the allegation of a general freehold title in lieu of a precise allegation of title was sufficient. It was sustained by proof of any estate of freehold, whether in fee, in tail, or for life only, and whether in possession or expectant on determination of a term of years, but it did not apply to the case of a freehold estate in remainder or reversion, expectant on a particular estate of freehold, nor to copyhold tenure.—Stephen on Pleading, 7th ed. 257. Obsolete. See now PLEADING.

Liblac [venecium, Lat.], witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philtres.—Leg. Athel. 6.

Liblacum, bewitching any person; also a barbarous sacrifice.—Leg. Athel. 6.

Libra penna, a pound of money by weight.

It was usual in former days, not only to sell the money, but to weigh it; because many cities, lords, and bishops, having their mints, coined money, and often very bad money, too, for which reason, though the pound consisted of twenty shillings, they weighed it.—Encyc. Londin.

Libraries (Public). The Public Libraries Acts, 1855—1890, authorized the establishment, at the expense of the ratepayers, of free public libraries in municipal boroughs, Improvement Act districts, and parishes, in England, by the vote of a majority of two-thirds of the inhabitants, taking by voting papers, 'and not otherwise,' (Act of 1890, s. 2). These Acts were consolidated by the Public Libraries Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 53), amended in the following year by 56 & 57 Vict. c. 11, which allowed the Act to be adopted in urban districts by the urban authorities instead of by direct popular vote. In rural parishes the parish councils had this power transferred to them by the Local Government Act, 1894. Land may be taken compulsorily. Libraries under the Act are absolutely free, save that a charge may be made to non-residents for the use of a lending library. The Act of 1892 provided that the library rate was not to exceed one penny in the pound in any financial year, and might be limited to one halfpenny by the adopting authority. This provision has been repealed by s. 4 of the Public Libraries Act, 1919, which substitutes a right of the library authority to limit the rate to such sum in the pound as it specifies by annual resolution. This Act empowers county councils to adopt the Public Libraries Acts for the whole or any part of their county, and provides for the reference and delegation of library powers to education committees established under the Education Acts.

The Libraries Offences Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 53), penalizes various kinds of misbehaviour in libraries, and the Public Libraries Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 19), empowers library authorities to make byelaws in respect of such misbehaviour, and to exclude from the libraries persons disobeying the byelaw. By the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 26, the expenses incurred by a library authority under the Acts of 1892–1919, not being a County Council, is to be levied in the library district as an additional item of the general rate. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Libraries,' and the works of Chambers and Fovargue or Greenwood.

Librata terras, a portion of ground containing four ox-gangs, and every ox-gang fourteen acres.

This is the same with what in Scotland was called pound-land of old extent.

Libripens, a scalesman.—Civ. Law.

Licence [fr. licentia, Lat.], a permission given by one man to another to do some act which without such permission it would be unlawful for him to do. It is a personal right, and is not transferable, but dies with the man to whom it is given. It can as a rule be revoked by the licensor unless the licensee has paid money for it (Odgers on the Common Law, pp. 25, 574). As to the nature and effect of the licence granted to the purchaser of a ticket for a theatre or other similar entertainment, see Hurst v. Picture Theatres, 1915, 1 K. B. 1, and the authorities there referred to, and Allen & Sons v. King, 1916, 2 A. C. 54. It may be either written or verbal; when written, the paper containing the authority is often called a licence. A licence amounting to or coupled with an interest in an incorporeal hereditament must be under seal (see Wood v. Leadbitter, (1845) 13 M. & W. 838), or it may be revocable, but see Lowe v. Adams, 1901, 1 Ch. 598.

A licence is necessary before doing many acts, as to marry without publication of banns, or to carry on various trades, as that of an auctioneer, hawker, or pedlar.

As to licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors by retail, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

As to marriage licence, see MARRIAGE.

As to motor driving licence, see MOTOR CAR, and the Road Traffic Acts, 1930 to 1934.

As to music and dancing licences, see MUSIC AND DANCING.

A landlord cannot now exact a 'fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine' from his tenant as a condition of granting him a licence to assign or underlet (see Law of Property Act, 1925), s. 144, and by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19, covenants not to assign or underlet without licence or consent have become subject to the provisos (a) that the licence or consent is not to be unreasonably withheld, and (b) that if a lease is for more than forty years and is made for building, improvement, or alteration of buildings, with the exception of some public or similar buildings, no licence or consent is required for an assignment or underletting effected more than seven years before the end of the term, provided that notice in writing of the transaction is given to the lessor within six months after the transaction is effected: see Law of Property Act, 1925, replacing Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 3; Jenkins v. Price, 1907, 2 Ch. 229; 1908, 1 Ch. 10; Andrew v. Bridgman, 1907, 2 K. B. 494.

Licensed Victualler. The holder of the general publican's licence, under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), is the licensed victualler par excellence, but the term may be applied to any person selling any kind of intoxicating liquor under a licence from the justices of the peace. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Licensee, a person to whom a licence has been granted.

Licentia concordandi, that licence for which the king's silver was paid on passing a fine. See FINE.

Licentia loquendi, an imparlance. See IMPARLANCE.

Licentia surgendi, licence to arise, which was a liberty or space of time anciently given by the Court to a tenant to arise out of his bed, who was essoined de malo lecti in a real action; and it was also the writ thereupon.—Fleta, l. 6, c. x.

Licentia transiretandi, a writ or warrant credited to the keeper of the port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let such persons pass over sea as have obtained the royal licence thereto.—Reg. Brev. 193.

Licentiate, one who has licence to practise any art or faculty.

Licet [Lat.], it is lawful; although.

Licet sapius requisitus [Lat.] (although often requested).

Licitation [fr. linceo, Lat., to set a price for sale], the act of exposing for sale to the highest bidder.

Licking of Thumbs, a form by which bargains were complete. Obsolete.

Lidford Law, a sort of Jedburgh justice, whereby a person was first punished and then tried.

Lige [fr. lige, Fr.; ligio, Ital.], bound by some feudal tenure; a subject.

Lige Homage, an acknowledgment which included fealty and the services consequent upon it.—1 Br. & Had. Com. 442.

Lige-lord, a sovereign; superior lord.

Liegeman, he that oweth allegiance.

Lige poustie [legitima potestate], a state of health which gave a person lawful power in Scotland to dispose of his heritable property either mortis causa or otherwise. But the Scots Law of Deathbed has now been abolished by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 81, which enacts that no deed, instrument, or writing made by any person who shall die after the passing of that Act shall be liable to challenge or reduction ex capite lecti.

Lieger or Leger, a resident ambassador.

Lieges or Lige People. See LIEGE.

Lien [answering to the tacita hypotheca of the Civil Law], a right in one man to retain that which is in his possession belonging to another, until certain demands of the person in possession are satisfied. It is neither a jus in re, nor a jus ad rem—i.e., it is not a right of property in the thing itself, or right of action to the thing itself.

It is either particular, as a right to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing; or general, as a right to retain a thing not only for such charges or claims, but also for a general balance of accounts between the parties in respect to other dealings of the like nature.

General and particular liens may arise: (1) by an express contract; (2) by an implied contract, resulting from the usage of trade, or the manner of dealing between parties. General liens are not favoured in law, but some judicially recognized general liens are bankers', solicitors', factors', stockbrokers', warehouse-keepers' and insurance brokers'. See Halsb. L. E., title 'Lien.' Particular liens, on the other hand, are favoured by law and also arise by mere operation of law from the relation and acts of the parties, e.g., where the person claiming the lien was obliged by law to enter into the contract for service, e.g., common carriers, innkeepers, and a shipmaster's lien for freight.

The Civil Law derived its own liens, whether they were pledges or hypothecations, or simple privileges, from similar sources.

The following is an analysis of the mode in which the law on this subject has been treated.

(1) As to the manner and circumstances under which a lien may be acquired. To create a valid lien it is essential that the person through whom it is acquired should himself either have the absolute ownership of the property, or at least a right to vest it; for nemo plus juris ad alium transferre potest, quam ipse habet. There must also be an actual or constructive possession by the party asserting it, with the express or implied assent of the party against whom it is asserted. It must not be inconsistent with the express terms or the clear intent of the contract.

(2) The debts or claims to which a lien properly attaches. It attaches only to certain and liquidated demands, and not to those which sound only in damages, and can be ascertained only through the intervention of a jury, unless, indeed, a special contract exists. The debt or demand for which the lien is asserted must be due to the person claiming it in his own right, and not merely as agent. It must also, in the absence of a special agreement, be a debt or demand due from the person for whose benefit the party is acting, and not from a third person, although the goods may be claimed through him.

(3) How a lien may be waived or lost. It may be waived by an act or agreement between the parties, by which it is surrendered, or becomes inapplicable. It is said (see Hartley v. Hitchcock, (1816) Stark. 408; 18 R. R. 790) that a lien is lost by temporarily relinquishing possession, but see Great Eastern Railway v. Lord's Trustees, 1909, A. C. 109.

A lien on goods is not lost when the demand in respect of which it was acquired can no longer be enforced by an action, on account of the Statute of Limitations, for the statute does not put an end to the debt but only to the remedy by action.

(4) In what manner a lien may be enforced. There is but a mere right of retainer, which may be used as a defence to an action for the recovery of the property, or as a matter of title or special property, to reclaim the property, by action, if he have been unlawfully dispossessed of it. A lien does not import a right of sale. Sometimes a Court of Equity has decreed a sale as a part of its own system of remedial justice; and Courts of Admiralty have been constantly in the habit of decreeing a sale to satisfy maritime liens—such as bottomry-bonds, seamen's wages, repairs of foreign ships, salvage, and other claims of a kindred nature—(see MARITIME LIEN), and exceptions occur under statute, e.g., the Innkeepers Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 38), the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20). The owner has a perfect right to dispose of the property, subject to the lien, and the person to whom he conveys it will have a perfect title to it upon discharging the lien. Consult Smith's Merc. Law; Coote on Mortgages, 9th ed., pp. 1375 et seq. and 1396 et seq.; Atkinson on Sol. Lien.

(5) By s. 41 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), the unpaid seller of goods in possession of them may, subject to the provisions of that Act, retain possession of them until payment or tender of the price: (a) where the goods have been sold without any stipulation as to credit; (b) where the goods have been sold on credit, but the term of credit has expired; (c) where the buyer has become 'insolvent'—i.e., by s. 62 (3) of the Act if he has ceased to pay his debts or cannot pay them, whether he has committed an act of bankruptcy or not.

Equitable liens are not necessarily possessory, they are charges arising by implication of equity on the property in the hands of any one who holds it with notice subject to any formalities which may be required by law such as registration (see LAND CHARGES; NOTICE). Such charges may be enforced by sale under order of the Court, and in cases where the lien is not possessory, may be defeated like other charges under the Statute of Limitations, from which possessory liens are exempt. Instances of equitable liens are vendor's lien (q.v.); partner's lien on partnership assets; trustee's lien for costs, charges and expenses; and other instances, where equity allows a lien. As to maritime lien, see the Kong Magnus, 1891, P. 223, and that title.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 56 (1) (b), causes for the sale and distribution of the proceeds of any property, subject to lien, are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

In the Scottish law, the doctrine of lien is known by the name of retention, and that of set-off by the name of compensation.

Lien of a Covenant. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenantees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several.

Lieu [Fr.], place, room; in lieu, instead of.

Lieu conus, a castle, manor, or other notorious place, well known, and generally taken notice of by those who dwell about it.—2 Lil. Abr. 641.

Lieutenancy, Commission of. See COMMISSION OF ARRAY.

Lieutenant [fr. lieu, Fr., a place, and tenant, holding], a deputy; locum tenens; one who acts by vicarious authority; a naval and military rank.

Life Annuity, an annual payment during the continuance of any given life or lives. See ANNUITY and RENT CHARGE; LAND CHARGE; SETTLED LAND.

Life Assurance, a transaction whereby a sum of money is secured to be paid upon the death of the person whose life is assured, or upon the failure of one out of two or more joint lives. See INSURANCE.

Life-estate, an estate for (1) one's own life, or (2) the life of another—pur autre vie. See SETTLED LAND.

Life-peerage. Letters-patent, conferring the dignity of baron for life only, do not enable the grantee to sit and vote in the House of Lords, not even with the usual writ of summons to the House.—Resolution of the Committee for Privileges, February 22, 1856. But see LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY.

Life-rent, a rent received for a term of life. See SETTLED LAND.

Ligan [fr. lier, Fr., to tie], a wreck consisting of goods sunk in the sea, but tied to a cork or buoy, in order that they may be found again.—5 Rep. 106. See DROWNS OF ADMIRALTY.

Ligeance, the true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign; also the dominion and territory of a liege-lord. See ALLEGIANCE.

Ligeas, a liege.

Light. No right to have the access of the sun's rays to one's windows free from any obstruction exists at Common Law (see DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA) but by virtue of the Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71), uninterrupted enjoyment of light for twenty years—commonly called 'ancient lights'—constitutes in every case, an absolute and indefeasible right to it, unless the enjoyment took place under some deed or written consent or agreement (Hyman v. Van den Bergh, 1908, 1 Ch. 167). See PRESCRIPTION.

The Prescription Act has not altered the previous law as to ancient lights (Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, 1904, A. C. 179). And the right is to uninterrupted access of such light only as is ordinarily required for ordinary purposes and not to light peculiarly appropriate to the particular purpose for which the light has been used (ibid., overruling Warren v. Brown, 1900, 2 Q. B. 722), and see also Price v. Hildich, 1930, 1 Ch. 500.

If two tenements belong to a common landlord, the right to light can be acquired by one tenement not only against the other tenement, but also against the landlord (Morgan v. Fear, 1907, A. C. 425), and see Foster v. Lyons & Co., 1927, 1 Ch. 219. Consult Goddard or Gale on Easements.

Lighthouse, a building, from which lights are shown to guide ships at sea. The power of erecting and maintaining them is a branch of the royal prerogative. By the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clause, etc. Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), lighthouses are not to be erected without the sanction of Trinity House. The management of lighthouses is now regulated by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), Part, XI., ss. 634–675, as amended by the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 44), which creates a General Lighthouse Fund in substitution for the Mercantile Marine Fund, and, subject to the rights of persons having authority over local lighthouses, is vested in the following bodies:—

(1) As to lighthouses in England, Wales, Jersey, Guernsey, Sark, and Alderney, and the adjacent seas and islands, and in Gibraltar, in the Trinity House.

(2) In Scotland and the adjacent seas and islands, and in the Isle of Man, in the Commissioners of Northern Lighthouses.

(3) In Ireland and the adjacent seas and islands, in the Dublin Corporation. See now the Irish Free State (Agreement) Act, 1922 (12 Geo. 5, c. 4), s. 1, Sched., Art. 4 and Annex.

The Act of 1898 provides that light dues are to be levied with respect to the voyages made by ships, or by way of periodical payment, and no longer with respect to the lights which a ship passes, or from which it derives benefit, provides a scale of light dues and rules for levying them, and enacts that the expenses of Colonial lights are to be paid out of the General Lighthouse Fund. See FALSE LIGHTS.

Lighting and Watching Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 90), superseding 2 Geo. 4, c. 27. An Act which may be adopted in any parish by the votes of a majority of two-thirds of the ratepayers, and which, if adopted, regulates the lighting of the parish 'by gas, oil, or otherwise' (s. 45), and the appointment (s. 39), employment, and dismissal of watchmen or constables therein. The Act may be abandoned in three years after adoption (s. 15).

The Act was repealed as to the metropolis by the Sanitary Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 90), s. 35, and is superseded by the Public Health Act in districts where that Act is in force (see Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 163).

In a rural parish the parish meeting has exclusive power of adoption by virtue of s. 7 (1) (a) of the Local Government Acts, 1894 and 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 307 and 308, Sched. II. By the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 3 (1), the rate is to be levied by the rural authority in each special area as a 'special' rate.

Light Railway. Light railways, on which engines and carriages of eight tons weight or less may be brought upon the rails by any one pair of wheels, and the speed of trains is not to exceed twenty-five miles an hour, could and still can be authorized by the Board of Trade under s. 27 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119).

These powers have been little, if at all, exercised; but the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), established a Light Railway Commission for the purpose of authorizing light railways, with special aid from the Treasury in certain circumstances and cases. By the Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), the powers of the Light Railway Commissioners were continued for five years and several amendments made in the Act of 1896. See also Part V. of the Railways Act, 1921.

Lights on Vehicles. The Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 37), provides for the lighting of vehicles of every description (except railway locomotives, carriages and trucks, tramcars, trolley vehicles), but including machines and implements of any kind, whether drawn by animal or propelled mechanically. Briefly, the Act deals as follows :—

Sect. 1. Obligatory lights to be carried by vehicles at night.

Sect. 2. Restrictions on the number and nature of lamps to be carried.

Sect. 3. Conditions regulating the use of lamps on vehicles.

Sect. 4. Restrictions on movement of lamps.

Sect. 5. Special provisions as to bicycles and tricycles.

Sect. 6. Horse-drawn vehicles.

Sect. 7. Vehicles carrying overhanging or projecting loads.

Sect. 8. Special provisions as to vehicles towing and being towed.

Sect. 9. Regulations as to reflectors.

Penalties, repeals, provisions as to regulations, etc.

As to bicycles, see the Road Traffic Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 19.

Ligius, a person bound to another by a solemn tie or engagement; now used to express the relation of a subject to his sovereign.

Lignagium, a right of cutting fuel in woods; also a tribute or payment due for the same.—Jac. Law Dict.

Lignamina, timber fit for building.—Du Cange.

Ligula, a copy or transcript of a court-roll or deed.

Liguritor, a flatterer; perhaps a glutton.

Limitation, restriction or circumspection; defining an estate or property; a certain time allowed by a statute for litigation. See next title.

Limitation of Actions and Prosecutions.

By various statutes, of which the first was 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, the Limitation Act, 1623, and the principal succeeding ones, the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), the Civil Procedure Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27) (see Read v. Price, 1909, 2 K. B. 724), and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, certain periods are fixed within which, upon the principle Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium, particular actions must be brought or proceedings taken.

In the case of simple contract the remedy on the contract is barred, leaving the creditor free to enforce his claims by other means which may be still available, such as enforcing a lien, subsequent acknowledgment by the debtor or appropriation of payments, but not by way of set-off (9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 3). In regard to land, the right to it is destroyed after the statutory period and neither re-entry nor acknowledgment after the lapse of the statutory period will revive it.

No verbal acknowledgment of a debt is sufficient to prevent the operation of the statutes (Benest v. Pison, (1829) Knapp's Rep. 60). By Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828, s. 1, in actions of debt, or on the case grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract whereby to take any case out of the operation of 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, unless such acknowledgment or promise be contained in some writing, to be signed by the party to be chargeable thereby, or by his agent duly authorized (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 13). By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, where there are two or more co-contractors, or co-debtors, by simple contract or specialty, none of them shall lose the benefit of the limitation, by reason only of payment of any principal or interest by any of the others. The same principle is not applicable to an acknowledgment by one of several persons jointly liable. It appears that the acknowledgment of any one binds them all (Roddam v. Morley, 1 De G. & J., and Read v. Price, 1909, 1 K. B. 577).

By the Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 3, the period of limitation for actions of debt by deed or upon recognizance is twenty years after the cause of action has accrued, except in the case of mortgage debts which are now barred after twelve years, whether by covenant or collateral bond, by the R. P. Act, 1874, s. 8.

By the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), no land or rent is to be recovered but within twelve years after the right of action accrued, and under s. 2 of the same Act in the case of claimants entitled to particular interests (in remainder, reversion or other future estate or interest) the right to recover land etc., is limited to six years from the time when the estate shall have vested in possession or twelve years from the date when the right first accrued to the person whose interest was determined, whichever period is the longer. By s. 3, persons who, at the time their right to recover land, etc., first accrues, are under the disability of infancy, coverture, idiocy, lunacy, or unsoundness of mind, are allowed six years from the termination of their disability, and their representatives the same time from their death, but coverture is no longer a disability (Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 1, 5 and 12).

An allowance to the plaintiff for 'absence beyond the seas' which formerly obtained is excluded by s. 4 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, as to real property, and see ss. 10 to 14 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), as to personal actions under the statutes there referred to and other matters, etc. 'Beyond the seas' is defined in s. 12 (ibid.), extending 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 19, as 'no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland nor the Islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney and Sark, nor any islands adjacent to them shall be deemed to be beyond the seas within the meaning of 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16.'

As to real property, there are four general cases when the possession is not adverse, viz.—1st, when both parties claim under the same title; 2ndly, when the possession of the one is consistent with the title of the other; 3rdly, when the claimant or his successor has never, in contemplation of law, been out of possession; and 4thly, when the occupier has acknowledged the plaintiff's title.

A person dispossessing persons entitled to possession of settled land did not before 1926 obtain a title free from the claims of remaindermen or the reversioner under the settlement unless each of the remaindermen attaining vested possession in succession had become entitled in possession for at least six years (Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 2), but as against a tenant-in-tail in possession, the statutory period is twelve years, even if he dies in the interim (Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, s. 21, as amended by the Act of 1874).

As a rule a title by possession for the statutory period of land against trustees will be good against all persons claiming as cestui que trustent under their trust (see Williams v. Papworth, 1900, A. C. 563), but this does not apply in regard to any person affected with notice of the trust either as a voluntary grantee from the trustee of the land or as a grantee for value with notice.

Trespassers acquire an inchoate transmissible right upon entry of land or perception of profits. Successive trespassers together completing the statutory period of limitation acquire a good title, but the ouster must be continuous. If there is a discontinuance, i.e., interim during which no one enters or is paid the rent, the rightful owner regains his cause of action until a statutory limitation is completed against him from the date of the fresh trespass. A trespasser acquires no right of which the rightful owner was not dispossessed by the trespasser, for instance; a trespasser occupying land held under a lease acquires no rights against the reversioner, whatever the length of the term may be, even though the rent has not been paid to the reversioner for the statutory period (see Walter v. Lorden, 1902, 2 K. B. 304), but if a stranger obtains any rent reserved exceeding 20s. per annum from the lessee and no rent is paid afterwards to the person rightfully entitled, the statutory period accrues from the date when the rent was received by the stranger and not upon determination of the lease (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 9).

A trespasser's possessory title may be forced on a purchaser's if the vendor can show forty years' undisturbed possession (Sands v. Thompson, (1883) 22 Ch. D. 614). The period may, possibly, have been reduced to thirty in most cases under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 44.

A title under the Statutes of Limitation can be acquired to land although it has been registered under the Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 75, if the claimant satisfies the registrar and obtains registration in his own name for 'absolute' 'good leasehold,' or 'possessory' titles according to the case. The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 12, expressly saves the operation of the statutes and general law affecting the limitation of actions.

In equity, the rule has been, that, although the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, and other Acts do not mention suits in equity, yet that courts of equity in giving effect to equitable claims, and affording equitable relief, will observe the principles of these enactments, in cases where the legal and equitable titles to demands correspond, and differ only in the court where the right happens to be enforced (Stackhouse v. Barnston, (1805) 10 Ves. 466, 467). The Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), expressly enacts that no suit in equity shall be brought after the time in which the plaintiff, if entitled at law, might have brought an action (s. 24). But as to an action for assignment of dower, see Williams v. Thomas, 1909, 1 Ch. 713.

Trustees are empowered to plead statutes of limitation by the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, if an action or other proceeding is brought to recover money or property to which no existing Statute of Limitation applies. The statutory period in such case is six years (sub-s. (1) (b) of that section), but this protection does not extend to cases of retention by the trustee of the property or any fraud or fraudulent breach of trust. It is also provided by s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, which section has not been repealed by the Judicature Act, 1925, that no claim of cestui que trust against trustee for any property held on any express trust, or in respect of any breach of such trust, should be held to be barred by any statute of limitations, but s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, being applicable, it will apply to express trustees (Re Swain, 1891, 3 Ch. 233; Toates v. Toates, 1926, 2 K. B. 30).

Proceedings against any person for any act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or public duty or authority, or any neglect or default in execution thereof, are limited to six months (Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61)), and many statutes provide for special periods of limitation. Under modern statutes, e.g., Housing Act, 1936, a time limit of six months is imposed for questioning the validity of statutory orders: see Re Somerset, 1894, 1 Ch. 231.

By the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, which did not come into operation until the 1st January, 1879, the period within which actions for the recovery of land may be brought was shortened, in the case of recovery of land or rent-charge, from twenty to twelve years.

No advantage can be taken of the statutes of limitation in an action unless an issue thereon be raised by the pleadings.—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 15. As to land, see Ord. XXI.

As to renewal of writs to save statutes of limitations, see RENEWAL OF WRITS.

At Common Law there is no period of limitation for prosecution of criminal offences generally, except where they are punishable on summary conviction, in which cases the period is six months, by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), and there are many other statutory limitations on prosecutions of indictable offences (see Archbold's Cr. Pl.), and there is no period of limitation for proceedings to claim a peerage before the Committee for Privileges of the House of Lords.

Treason (see that title) must be prosecuted within three years.

As to the limitation of the time during which a writ of summons remains in force, see SUMMONS, WRIT OF.

Consult Darby and Bosanquet or Banning on the Statutes of Limitation; and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Limitation of Actions.' See also Interim Report of the Law Revision Committee, 'Times,' 23rd December, 1936.

TABLE OF PRINCIPAL PERIODS OF LIMITATION.

The following is an alphabetical arrangement of the periods fixed by the principal Statutes of Limitation. It must, however, be remembered that many of the names of actions are no longer technical, though in substance the actions will still lie:—

PROCEEDING.	PERIOD.	STATUTE.
Assault, battery, wounding, or false imprisonment.	4 years . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
Assumpsit agreement or promise, action on.	6 years . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
Award, action of debt upon, where the submission was not by specialty.	6 years . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, ss. 3-7.
Award, etc., if submission by specialty.	20 years . . .	Ibid.

PROCEEDING.	PERIOD.	STATUTE.
Bill of Exchange, or Promissory Note, payable at a certain period after date.	Within 6 years after it falls due.	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
Bond or specialty . . . .	20 years . . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3.
Case (except for words actionable in themselves).	6 years . . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3 and 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 2. See Barnes v. Pooley , 153 L. T. 78.
Contract. See Assumpsit.
Copyright, action for infringement of.	3 years after the infringement.	Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), s. 10.
Covenant, action of . . . .	20 years . . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3.
Crown, suits by, relating to land .	60 years next before suit or claim.	9 Geo. 3, c. 16 ; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 62.
Crown quit rents or perpetual rents (in Ireland).	60 years since rent last received.	Crown Lands Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 9.
Debt (if not on specialty) . . .	6 years . . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
— on specialty. See Bond . . .	20 years . . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3.
Detinue . . . . .	6 years . . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
Distress for rent-charge . . .	12 years . . . .	Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 1.
— for other rents . . . .	6 years . . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 42.
Ejectment. See Real Property.
Intestate's personal estate. See Personal Estate.
Land, recovery of . . . .	12 years . . . .	Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 1.
Legacies . . . . .	12 years . . . .	Ibid. , s. 8.
Libel . . . . .	6 years . . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
Local Authority acting in pursuance of or in execution of a public duty under an Act of Parliament, action against.	6 months . . . .	Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61).
Mistake, equitable relief from .	6 years after its discovery.	In analogy to 21 Jac. 1, c. 16.
Mortgage, money secured by, recovery of.	12 years.	Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 8.
Mortgage, redemption of . . .	12 years from mortgagee taking possession.	Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 7.
Penal actions . . . . .	2 years when forfeiture goes to Crown ; 1 year when it goes to Crown and prosecutor ; and, in default, then 2 years by Crown, 2 years by party grieved.	31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5, and 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3.

PROCEEDING.	PERIOD.	STATUTE.
Penal actions against Corporate officers for acting without being qualified, etc.	3 calendar months .	Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 224.
Personal estate of intestate, suit to recover from legal personal representative.	20 years after accruing of right, the last accounting, payment, or acknowledgment in writing.	23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 13.
Promissory note. See Bill of Exchange.
Public Duty, action against person acting under, or acting in pursuance of any Act of Parliament, or neglecting to execute any such Act.	6 months. . .	Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61).
Real property, action to recover	12 years after right accrued ( vide supra ).	Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.
Rent, under lease by deed . . .	20 years . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3.
— under written or oral lease . .	6 years . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 42.
Rent-charge, proceeding for, though secured by deed.	12 years . . .	3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3, as altered by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 1. See Shaw v. Crompton , 1910, 2 K. B. 370.
Replevin . . . . .	6 years . . . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.

Slander (unless special damage) .	2 years . . . . .	Ibid.
Tithe . . . . .	Its payment for 30 years next before must be proved.	2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100.
Tort, action of, surviving against the estate of a deceased person.	6 months before death and 6 months after representation taken out by his personal representatives.	Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), and see s. 1, ibid.
Trespass . . . . .	6 years . . . . .	21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.
Trespass (to the person), e.g., assault, battery, wounding, or false imprisonment. See Barnes v. Pooley , 51 T. L. R. 391, where an action for expenses incidental to the care of an injured child was held to be 'case' and not trespass to the person.	4 years . . . . .	Ibid.
Trover . . . . .	6 years . . . . .	Ibid.

Limitation of Estate, a modification or settlement of an estate determining how long it shall continue, or a qualification of a preceding estate.—1 Inst. 204, 234.

Limitation, Words of, those which operate by reference to, or in connection with, other words, and extend or modify an estate given by such other words, as 'heirs,' 'heirs of the body.' See 1 Smith's Real and Pers. Prop., 4th ed. 63-65, 160. As to deeds executed after December 31, 1881, see Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 51; Re Ethel, 1901, 1 Ch. 945; and as to deeds executed after 1925, Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 60 and 130.

Limitation of Damages. See ACTIO PERSONALIS; LAW REFORM; LIMITED LIABILITY.

Limited Administration, a special and temporary administration of certain specific effects of a testator or intestate granted under varying circumstances. See 1 Wms. Exors.

Limited Executor, an executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter whereon, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute, i.e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time.—1 Wms. Exors.

Limited Liability. At Common Law every person is liable, upon his contracts, up to the whole amount of his estate, and every partner is so liable upon all the contracts of the partnership. So extensive a liability being apt to prevent persons from engaging in business as partners, the statutes authorizing the construction of railways, etc., have always limited the liability of each shareholder to the amount of the shares held by him. Similar limitations, extending in some cases to double the amount of shares held, have also long been found (though not universally) in the charters of incorporated banks and insurance companies.

Companies Acts.—Under the Companies Acts, limited liability means that the members are not liable beyond the unpaid-up part (if any) of the nominal amount of the shares in respect of which they are registered in the books of the company. When a share has been fully paid up, no further liability exists. As to shares which have not been fully paid up, see CONTRIBUTORY, and see also JOINT STOCK BANKS, COMPANY, PROSPECTUS, ESTOPPEL, or other titles on company matters. The statutes relating to companies have been consolidated by the Companies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23). Consult Palmer; Hemmant; Lindley on Company Law.

Shipowners, Canals, Docks, and Railways.—The liability of shipowners for loss or injury to goods or passengers carried in their ships is limited by s. 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (which section can be contracted out of: see Clarke v. Dunraven, Lord, 1897, A. C. 59), re-enacting s. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, and see the Pilotage Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 31), s. 15, repealing s. 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (exemptions under compulsory pilotage); that of dock and canal owners and harbour and conservancy authorities by the Merchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners and Others) Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 32); and that of common carriers (including railway companies) by the Carriers Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68), as amended by the Railways Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 55), as to goods of the value of 10*l.* or for railways, 25*l.*; and that of railway companies in respect of the carriage of certain animals, by s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854.

Air Navigation.—As to limitation of liability for certain damage caused by aircraft, see Air Navigation Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 44), s. 15, the limits of liability for various forms, descriptions of aircraft are set out in the several schedules: airships 25,000*l.*, balloons 500*l.*, gliders 2,000*l.*, and other aircraft according to weight, usually only half the limited amount to be payable in respect of loss of or damage to property.

Limited Owner. A tenant for life, in tail or by the courtesy, or other person not having a fee-simple in his absolute disposition. The legal estates of limited owners were reduced to equitable interests after 1925 by the Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 1 and 4. See SETTLED LAND.

Limited Owners Residences Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 56). This Act, as amended by the Limited Owners Residences Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 84), enables the tenant for life of a settled estate to charge the estate with the expense of building a mansion house to the extent of two years' rental of the estate; see Re Dunn, 1877, W. N. 39.

Limited Partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

Limogla, enamel.—Du Cange.

Linarium, a flax plat, where flax is grown.

—Du Cange.

Lincoln's Inn, one of the four Inns of Court. See INNS OF COURT.

Lindesfern, or Lindestarne, Holy Island, in Northumberland, which was formerly a bishop's see.—4 Inst. 288.

Line, succession of relations (see INHERITANCE); boundary; the twelfth part of an inch.

Lineage [fr. lignage, Fr.], race, progeny, family, ascending or descending.

Lineal Consanguinity, that relationship which subsists between persons descended in a right line, as grandfather, father, son, grandson.

Lineal Descent, the descent of an estate from ancestor to heir in a right line.

Lineal Warranty, where the heir derived, or might by possibility have derived, his title to the land warranted, either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty; as where a father or an elder son in the life of the father released to the disseisor of themselves, or of the grandfather, with warranty, this was lineal to the younger son.—Litt. s. 703. Abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), s. 14.

Liquidated Damages, the amount agreed upon by a party to a contract to be paid as compensation for the breach of it, and intended to be recovered, whether the actual damages sustained by the breach be more or less, in contradistinction to a penalty; which is only the maximum amount agreed to be paid, and is intended to be reducible in proportion to the actual damage sustained. See Kemble v. Farren, (1829) 6 Bing. 141; Lord Elphinstone v. Monkland Iron Co., (1886) 11 App. Cas. 332; Diessel v. Stevenson, 1906, 2 K. B. 345. See DAMAGES; PENALTY.

Liquidated Demand, where an action is brought for the recovery of a liquidated sum the writ of summons may be specially endorsed; as to which, see the title LEAVE TO DEFEND.

Liquidation. As to liquidation by arrangement with creditors, see the repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 125; but the procedure was not re-established by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The liquidation of joint stock companies is provided for by Part IV. of the Companies Act, 1929. See next title and WINDING-UP.

Liquidator. A person appointed to conduct the winding-up of a company under the Companies Act, 1929. Liquidators are of three kinds:—

(1) Appointed by the Court in a winding-up by the Court. Pending appointment the Official Receiver in Bankruptcy is to act as as Official Receiver and Liquidator in the winding-up (s. 185). By s. 186, in England, liquidators other than the Official Receiver must provide security to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade. His duties comprise the collection of the company's property, and this property or any part of it may vest in him on his application. He may bring or defend actions relating to that property in his own official name (s. 190). Powers which he may exercise subject to the sanction of the Court or a Committee of Inspection are set out in s. 191 (1); sub-s. (2) of that section gives a list of powers for which such sanction is not required. The duties of a liquidator are to collect, administer, and distribute the assets, having regard to the direction of creditors and contributories, and subject to the requirements of the Act. He must send in his accounts twice a year at least to the Board of Trade for the purposes of audit. As to settling the lists of contributories and the acceptance or rejection of creditors' proofs by the liquidator, subject to the control of the Court, see the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929, and ss. 183-197 of the Act.

(2) Liquidators of a company winding-up voluntarily are appointed by the company in general meeting to wind up its affairs and thereupon the powers of the directors shall cease except so far as the company in general meeting or the liquidator sanctions the continuance thereof (s. 232). The assets do not vest in the liquidator. On completion of the winding-up the liquidator must present his accounts to the company in general meeting and to a meeting of creditors and send the accounts to the Registrar of Companies with a return of the holding of the respective meetings.

(3) Liquidators in a winding-up subject to the supervision of the Court have the powers, with some exceptions (see ss. 259 and 260) of a liquidator in a voluntary winding-up. The excepted powers are only exercisable with the sanction of the Court or if the winding-up is a creditors' voluntary winding-up, the sanction of the Committee of Inspection (ibid.); see also, generally, ss. 183-197 of the Act, and WINDING-UP.

A liquidator appointed by the Court is an agent of the company and not personally liable for contracts within the scope of his duties, but if he is appointed to be receiver and manager by the Court he is not an agent of the company and is personally liable for contracts entered into by him as such (Stead, Hazel & Co. v. Cooper, 1933, 1 K. B. 870).

Liquor Licences. A duty is payable in respect of licences for the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors (see INTOXI- CATING LIQUORS). The Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910, very largely increased these duties, and for a publican's licence and a beerhouse licence a duty of half and a third of the annual value of the licensed premises is payable respectively.

Lis [Lat.], a suit, action, controversy, or dispute.

Lis mota (the dispute commenced). Declarations of deceased members of a family, in matters of pedigree, are inadmissible in evidence, if made after a controversy has arisen as to the facts on which the claim is founded (or, as it is called, post litem motam), which for that purpose is to be deemed the commencement of the lis mota.

Lis pendens (a pending suit). The pendency of another action between the same parties for the same cause of action might, under the former practice, have been pleaded in abatement, though not in bar; but the pendency of an action in an inferior or foreign court could not be so pleaded. Such matter may now be set up by way of defence, or the action may be stayed by the Court, under the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 41, replacing Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24 (5).

The actual pendency of a suit in equity was regarded as notice of the suit to all the world, though after a complete decision the public attention may be supposed to be drawn off to other matters, and therefore a person was allowed to be ignorant of a final decree of the Court made in a cause in which he was not concerned: see Price v. Price, (1887) 35 Ch. D. 297. But by the Judgments Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 11), s. 7, it was enacted that no lis pendens shall bind a purchaser or mortgagee without express notice thereof unless registered and re-registered as prescribed by the Act. The Judgment Act, 1839, was repealed by the Land Charges Act, 1925.

A pending action is defined in s. 2, Land Charges Act, 1925, as any action, information or proceeding pending in Court relating to land or any interest in or charge on land, and a petition in bankruptcy filed after the 31st December, 1925, may be registered in the register of pending actions. For registration of lis pendens and satisfaction thereof, see the Act and LAND CHARGES. The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to personal estate other than chattel interests in land (Wigram v. Buckley, 1894, 3 Ch. 483).

Lis pendens affecting registered land should be registered at the Land Registry under s. 59 of the Land Registration Act, 1925.

Lit de Justice. See BED OF JUSTICE.

Literæ Humaniores, Greek, Latin, general philology, logic, moral philosophy, metaphysics; the name of one of the principal courses of study in the University of Oxford.

Literal Contract, a written agreement subscribed by the contracting parties.—Civ. Law. See Colq. Rom. Civ. Law, 1623.

Literal Proof, written evidence.—Ibid.

Literary Property. See COPYRIGHT.

Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112), as amended, affords facilities for procuring and settling sites and buildings in trust for institutions established for the promotion of literature, science, or the fine arts, or for the diffusion of useful knowledge, and makes provisions for improving the legal conditions of such institutions. As to the proper purposes of these institutions, see Re Badger, 1905, 1 Ch. 568. As to their exemption from poor rates, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36.

Literate, one who qualifies himself for holy orders by presenting himself as a person accomplished in classical learning, etc., not as a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge, etc.

Literatura. Ad literaturam ponere means to put children to school. This liberty was anciently denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord's consent; the prohibition against the education of sons arose from the fear that a son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father.—Paroch. Antiq. 401.

Lithographs are included under 'engravings' for purposes of copyright; and photolithograph is included under 'photograph' (Copyright Act, 1911, s. 35 (1)). See COPYRIGHT.

Litigant, one engaged in a law-suit.

Litigation, judicial contest; law-suit.

Litigious Church, where two presentations to a church are offered to the bishop upon the same avoidance.—Jenk. Cent. 11.

Litis æstimatio, the measure of damages.

Litis contestatio, (1) in the Ecclesiastical Courts the issue of an action; (2) a submission to the decision of a judex.—Civ. Law.

Litispencee [fr. lis, Lat., strife, and pendeo, to hang], the time during which a law-suit is going on. Obsolete.

Little Goes, a species of lottery, declared unlawful.—42 Geo. 3, c. 119.

Littleton, a judge of the Common Pleas in the reign of Edward IV., who composed a book of tenures for the use of his son, to whom it is addressed. Sir Edward Coke's Commentary upon Littleton, 'Not the name of the author only, but of the law itself,' is one of the most renowned and authoritative works on English law in existence.

Liturgy [fr. λεειτουργία, Gk., a public service], the Book of Common Prayer used in the Established Church, as confirmed by the Act of Uniformity (14 Car. 2, c. 4). Consult Wheatley on the Book of Common Prayer.

The Prayer Book (Table of Lessons) Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 37), passed 'to amend the law relating to the Table of Lessons and Psalter contained in the Prayer-Book,' provides a new Table of Lessons, and the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 35), provides 'a shortened form of Morning and Evening Prayer.' An alternative Table of Lessons has been provided by the Revised Tables of Lessons Measure, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, No. 3). See ACT OF UNIFORMITY.

Livelode, maintenance, support.

Liverpool Court of Passage. See PASSAGE, COURT OF.

Livery [fr. livrer, Fr.], the act of giving possession, now superseded by the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 2. 'Livery of seisin simply means the delivery of the feudal possession'; Williams on Seisin, p. 99. Also, release from wardship; also the writ by which possession was obtained; also, simply delivery, as a horse is said to stand at livery where the livery stable keeper delivers him to the owner for use as required. In London, the collective body of liverymen. Also the privilege of a particular company or society. See SEISIN.

Livery-man, a member of some company in the City of London; also called a freeman.

Livery-office, an office appointed for the delivery of lands.

Lives, Estate for. A lease to A. during the life of another or the lives of others was a tenure of very long standing in England, chiefly in the west and north, or where the lease was granted by a corporation, and in Ireland. Now such a lease is either a lease for 90 years determinable by notice after any event determining the term under the original demise as provided by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 149, if the lease is at a rent or in consideration of a fine, or is a converted copyhold lease for life without right of perpetual renewal under Part V. of the L. P. Act, 1922. In all other cases it is an equitable interest and governed by the Settled Land Act, 1925. The tenant under the lease was called a tenant pur autre [or auter] vie, and the person during whose life the lease is to last, the cestui que vie. By 18 & 19 Car. 2, there is a prima facie presumption of death after seven years; and by the Cestui que Vie Act, 1707 (6 Anne, c. 72), an order may be made by the Chancery Division for the production of the cestui que vie on an application by the person interested: see Re Isaacs, (1838) 1 My. & C. 1; Re St. John's Hospital, (1868) 18 L. T. 12. The lease for lives, which was abolished on the Duchy of Cornwall estates by the Duchy of Cornwall Management Act, 1863, has now greatly and properly fallen into desuetude, though it has by no means disappeared. It was at one time very common in Inns of Court leases. See Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant; Selon on Judgments.

The Cestui que Vie Act applies generally to all cases where an estate is held during the lives of others, as well as to a lease for lives. See Mews's Digest, vol. vi., tit. 'Estate pur Autre Vie,' at p. 322. See AUTRE VIE.

Living. See BENEFICE.

L. J. Lord Justice of Appeal.

Lloyd's. In the second half of the seventeenth century a number of merchants, ship-owners, and insurance brokers were accustomed to meet in Lloyd's Coffee House in the City of London. From these meetings arose the present association of underwriters, which is famous throughout the world as a centre of marine insurance. Shipping intelligence of all kinds is collected by Lloyd's agents all over the world and forwarded to London. Signal stations have been established under the provisions of Lloyd's Signal Station Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 29). Derelict ships have to be reported to Lloyd's (Derelict Vessels (Report) Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 12)). 'Lloyd's List' thus forms a record of shipping news of great importance to the commercial community. Lloyd's Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. xxi.), incorporates and regulates Lloyd's. Besides marine insurance, almost any risk can be covered there, and by the Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), ss. 28 and 33, members of Lloyd's or any other association of underwriters must comply with the requirements of the 8th Schedule of the Act.

Lloyd's Bonds. Instruments under the seal of a railway company, admitting the indebtedness of the company to a specified amount to the obligee, with a covenant to pay him such amount with interest on a future day. So called from the name of the counsel who originally settled such a bond. All such 'loan notes' issued otherwise than under the authority of some statute are invalid, and by the Railway Regulation Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 85), s. 17, the railway company issuing them forfeits to the Crown a sum equal to the sum for which any note purports to be a security.

Lloyd's Register, the abbreviated title of 'Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping,' published annually by Lloyd's Registry. The register contains an alphabetical list of all British ships, and such foreign ships as are classed in the Register, classified according to type, materials, state of repair, etc., the classification being indicated by letters and numerals. Ships intended for classification are built under the inspection of Lloyd's surveyors or in accordance with rules published by the Registry.

Load-line, a line painted on the sides of a ship to show how far up the sides the water will rise when the ship is loaded. The Merchant Shipping Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 9), substituted a 'maximum load-line in salt water, to which it should be lawful to load a ship,' i.e., a compulsory load-line, for a load-line indicating a point beyond which the owner intended that it should not be loaded, as prescribed by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, i.e., an optional load-line; and this provision of the Act of 1890 was re-enacted by s. 437 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and see also s. 8 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906. Both these sections have now been repealed by the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 9), and ss. 43 to 46 now prescribe the law.

Under the M. S. Act, 1894, s. 442, submergence beyond the load-line by reason of weather was held to be an offence (Radcliffe v. Brickwell, 1927, 2 K. B. 273); see now s. 44 (4) of the Act of 1932; and UNSEAWORTHY SHIPS.

Loadmanage, the pay to a pilot for conducting a ship from one place to another.

Loan [lœn, Sax.], anything lent or given to another on condition of return or repayment. As to loan of money, see MONEY LENDERS ACT.

Loan Commissioners. See PUBLIC WORKS LOANS ACT, 1875.

Loan, gratuitous, a class of bailment called commodatum in the Roman Law, and denominated by Sir William Jones a loan for use (prêt à usage), to distinguish it from mutuum, a loan for consumption.

The borrower has the right to use the thing during the time and for the purpose agreed upon by the parties. The loan is to be considered as strictly personal, unless from other circumstances a different intention may fairly be presumed. The borrower must take proper care of the thing borrowed, use it according to the lender's intention, and restore it at the proper time, and in a proper condition.

The lender must suffer the borrower to use and enjoy the thing lent during the time of the loan, according to the original intention, without any molestation or impediment, under the peril of damages. He must reimburse the borrower the extraordinary expenses to which he has been put for the preservation of the thing lent. He is bound to give notice to the borrower of the defects of the thing lent; and if he do not, but conceal them, and an injury occurs to the borrower thereby, the lender is responsible. Where the thing has been lost by the borrower, and, after he has paid the value thereof, is restored to the lender, the latter must return either the price paid or the thing; for, by such payment of the loss, the property is effectively transferred to the borrower.

Mr. Justice Story thus concludes his observations on gratuitous loans. 'It has, however,' says he, 'furnished very little occasion for the interposition of judicial tribunals, for reasons equally honourable to the parties and to the liberal spirit of polished society. The generous confidence thus bestowed is rarely abused; and if a loss or injury unintentionally occurs, an indemnity is either promptly offered by the borrower, or compensation is promptly waived by the lender.' —Story's Bailments, c. iv.

Loan Societies, institutions established for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes, and receiving back payment for the same by instalments, with interest. They are exempt from the provisions of the Money Lenders Act, 1900.

By the Loan Societies Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 110) (continued by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 19, and made perpetual by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 56), forms of proceeding of a similar nature to those prescribed in the Acts regulating savings banks and friendly societies are requisite to enable loan societies to avail themselves of this Act, and see 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, and 59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, s. 2, as to certification of Rules by the Registrar of Friendly Societies.

These societies are entitled to issue debentures for money deposited with them (otherwise than by way of gift), and these as well as all other notes and instruments given in pursuance of the Act are exempted from stamp duty. They are also placed on the same footing with savings banks, in the event of the death of a claimant intestate who is entitled to less than 50*l.*, the production of a will or letters of administration not being requisite.

The amount which a society may advance is limited to 15*l.*; and no second loan can be granted until the first is repaid. The society is permitted to receive, by way of discount, at the time of the loan, interest under its enrolled rules, not exceeding 12*l.* per cent., and to receive the principal by such instalments as the rules specify, so that the first repayment shall not be sooner than the eleventh day from the time of the advance.

With respect to the recovery of loans, the Act has provided a form of note to be signed by the borrower and two sureties; and upon failure in payment, the person liable may be summoned before any justice of the peace, who may levy by distress and sale of the goods. The society (by its treasurer) may proceed against the person liable, in any county court having jurisdiction, and where the sum due happens to exceed the amount for which the Court has jurisdiction, may recover such part of the debt as that Court can give judgment for, in lieu of the whole.

An abstract of the accounts is to be made out yearly to the 31st December, and sent during January to the proper authority, to be laid before Parliament.

Local Actions, those referring to some particular locality, as actions for trespasses to land, in which the venue must have been laid in the county where the cause of action arose.

Real actions and the mixed action of ejectment were local: but personal actions were for the most part transitory, i.e., their cause of action might be supposed to take place anywhere, but when they were brought for anything in relation to realty, they were then local. See Mostyn v. Fabrigas, (1775) 1 Smith, L. C., and 2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

And see COUNTRY COURT (JURISDICTION), and VENUE.

Local Allegiance, such as is due from an alien or stranger born, as long as he continues within the sovereign's dominions and protection; it ceases the instant such stranger transfers himself from this kingdom to another. But if an alien, seeking the protection of the Crown, and having a family and effects here, should, during a war with his native country, go thither, and there adhere to our enemies for purposes of hostility, he may be dealt with as a traitor.—Fost. 115. See ALIEN.

Local and Personal Acts. See ACTS OF PARLIAMENT. Provisions in local and personal Acts giving double and treble costs, and allowing the general issue to be pleaded, and special matter to be given in evidence, are repealed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, ss. 1, 3. The same Act provides for uniformity of notice of action in such actions—one month in all cases—and equalizes the periods of limitation under such Acts. See LIMITATION, STATUTES OF. By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 9, re-enacting 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, every statute made after 1850 is to be taken to be a public one, and judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary be expressly declared.

Some Public and General Acts contain provisions for the alteration by Regulations, Statutory or Provisional Order, or otherwise, of local Acts in conformity with the general enactment, e.g., Land Drainage, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44); see s. 41; London Traffic Act, 1924; Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, ss. 66 and 68; Public Health Acts, etc.

Local Authority. The term is used in a great number of Acts affecting local administration, and means the persons or bodies who give effect to the particular Act in question. (Cf. s. 4, Public Health Act, 1875).

The Local Authorities (Admission of the Press to Meetings) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 43), defines (s. 2 (a)) a 'local authority' as meaning:—

2. (a) A council of a county, county borough, borough (including a metropolitan borough), urban district, rural district, or parish, and a joint committee or joint board of any two or more such councils to which any of the powers or duties of the appointing councils may have been transferred or delegated under the provisions of any Act of Parliament or Provisional Order; and a parish meeting under the provisions of the Local Government Act, 1894.

By the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), it is defined as meaning the council of a county, county borough, county district or rural parish; see the Act generally.

Local Board. A body of persons established by an order of the Local Government Board, upon a resolution of the owners and ratepayers of a rural district, for the purpose of administering the Public Health Act (which see) within such district, which was called a 'local government district' or urban sanitary district, the local board being called an 'urban sanitary authority.' They were elected by open voting of the owners and ratepayers, a property qualification being required for membership, each voter having from one to six votes, in proportion to the property occupied by him; but the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), by s. 23 (see now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 35 (3), 39, 40 (1), 57), abolished both the property qualification and the plural voting, and by s. 21 directed that 'urban sanitary authorities' (except the councils of municipal boroughs) should be called 'urban district councils.'

Local Courts, tribunals of a limited and special jurisdiction, as the several county courts throughout the country, the Court of Passage at Liverpool, and the Mayor's Court of London. See, further, BOROUGH COURTS; INFERIOR COURTS.

Local Government. That part of the government of the country which, by delegation from the Imperial Government, is conducted by bodies appointed or elected to conduct it within limited areas, as parishes, boroughs, local government districts, poor law unions, petty sessional districts, county boroughs, and counties. See these titles respectively, and COUNTY COUNCIL; DISTRICT COUNCIL; PARISH COUNCIL; and BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41). The Act established county councils throughout England and Wales, and has been amended and extended by many other Acts.

Transfer of Imperial Powers to County Councils.—The Local Government (Transfer of Powers) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 15), though permissive only, extended general, tentative, unused and almost unknown powers of decentralization which had previously been entrusted to the Local Government Board by the Local Government Act, 1888. The Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73). This Act established throughout England and Wales a parish meeting for every rural parish, a parish council for every rural parish having a population of 300 or upwards, and district councils. The Local Government Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 1 and 134, abolished guardians of the poor and other poor law authorities, and substituted county councils and county borough councils in their stead.

The Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), consolidates with amendments many of the enactments relating to the constitution and powers of local authorities in England and Wales. The Act as a whole does not apply to London, except certain provisions of Part III., Part X., Part XI. Schedule I. contains a list of administrative counties, county boroughs, and non-county boroughs. The Parts of the Act are as follows:—

Part I. Constitution and Elections.

Part II. General Provisions as to Members and Meetings of Local Authorities and Elections.

Part III. Committees and Joint Committees.

Part IV. Officers.

Part V. Offices and Buildings.

Part VI. Alteration of Areas.

Part VII. Acquisition of, and Dealings in, Land.

Part VIII. County Councils.

Part IX. Borrowing.

Part X. Accounts and Audit.

Part XI. Local Financial Returns.

Part XII. Bye-laws.

Part XIII. Promotion of, and Opposition to, Local or Personal Bills by Local Authorities.

Part XIV. Freemen.

Part XV. General Provisions.

There are also eleven schedules.

Local Government Board (now Ministry of Health). This Board was established by the Local Government Board Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 70), which concentrated in one department of the Government 'the supervision of the laws relating to the public health, the relief of the poor, and local government,' and transferred thereto all the powers of the Poor Law Board, all the powers of a Secretary of State as to registration of births, deaths, and marriages, public health, drainage, local government, etc. (as mentioned in scheduled Acts), and all powers of the Privy Council as to prevention of disease, and vaccination (as mentioned in scheduled Acts). The Ministry of Health Act, 1919, s. 11, transferred all the powers and duties of the Local Government Board to the Ministry of Health. All references in statutes to the Local Government Board must be read as referring to the Ministry of Health (s. 11, Sched. I.).

Local Government District. See LOCAL BOARD.

Local Government of Towns. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Local Improvements. By the Public Improvements Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 30), a majority of two-thirds of the rate-payers of any parish or district may, by 'adopting' that Act, rate their district in aid of certain public improvements (e.g., public walks, playgrounds, etc.) for general benefit within their district. Half the proposed expenditure must have been privately subscribed, and the rate must not exceed sixpence in the pound. The power of adopting and exercising the Act for a rural parish is vested in the parish council (if any) of that parish, by s. 7 of the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73).

Local Land Charges. Charges on land acquired at any time by any local authority, including county, borough or rural district councils under the Public Health Metropolis Management or Private Street Works Act, or under any similar statute (public, general or local or private) passed at any time, must be registered in the local land-charge registry (see Local Land Charges Rules, 1927, S. R. & O., 1927, 869/L, 33), as provided by the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 15, as amended by Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, or they will be void as against a purchaser for money or money's worth of a legal estate in the land affected. The following are included: town planning schemes and resolutions, and restrictions created after 1925 on user of land or buildings, imposed or enforceable by a local authority with some exceptions (see s. 15 (7) (b), ibid.), and this applies to local land charges affecting both registered and unregistered land. As to searches and official certificates of search, see ss. 16 and 17, L. C. Act, 1925; see also LAND CHARGES.

Local Taxation Licences. Licences to sell intoxicating liquors, etc., to keep dogs, guns, carriages, etc., and to trade as horse dealers, pawnbrokers, etc.; the proceeds of the duties are transferred to county councils for their county funds by s. 20 of the Local Government Act, 1888. A full list of the licences is given in Sched. I of the Act.

By s. 6 of the Finance Act, 1908, power is given to levy the duties on certain of these licences, namely, dealing in game, killing game, guns, dogs, armorial bearings, and (formerly) male servants.

Local Taxes, those assessments which were limited to certain districts, as poor rates, parochial taxes, county rates, etc. (7 & 8 Vict. c. 33). As to the recovery of local rates, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 82; as to recovery from owners, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 41, ss. 7, 8 and 12; 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 11.

Local Venue. See VENUE.

Locatarius, a deposittee.—Civ. Law.

Locatio, hire, a letting-out.

Locato-conductio, or Hiring, a bailment for reward or compensation. See HIRE.

Locatio Custodiæ, the receiving of goods on deposit for reward.—Civ. Law.

Locatio mercedum vehendarum, a contract for the carriage of goods for hire.—Ibid.

Locatio operis, or operis faciendi, the hiring of labour and services.—Civ. Law.

Locatio rei, the hiring of a thing.—Ibid.

Location, a contract for the temporary use of a chattel, or the service of a person, for an ascertained hire.

Locator, a letter of a thing or services for hire.—Civ. Law.

Locke's Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), the Solicitors Act, 1860, amending the law as to the admission, etc., of solicitors. Sects. 22 (in part) and 34, 35 have not been repealed by the Solicitors Act, 1932 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 37).

Locke-King's Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113), the Real Estates Charges Act, 1854 (amended by the Real Estate Charges Act, 1867 and 1877 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34)), whereby the heir or devisee of real estate was first precluded from claiming payment of a mortgage on such estate out of the personal assets of the ancestor or testator. In respect of deaths after 1925, both these Acts were repealed and reproduced and extended by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925; see s. 35.

Lock Hospital, a hospital for the treatment of venereal disease.

Lockman, an officer in the Isle of Man, to execute the orders of the governor, much like our under-sheriff. Also an old Scots term for the hangman; so called because one of his dues consisted in taking a small ladleful (Scotticé, lock) of meal out of every caskful exposed in the market.

Lock-up Houses, places for the temporary confinement of prisoners—5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 22 (counties); 11 & 12 Vict. c. 101 (borders of counties); and 31 Vict. c. 22 (counties and boroughs).

Lococession, the act of giving place.

Locomotives. I. On Highways.—Locomotives on highways are of two classes: (a) Light Locomotives; (b) Heavy Locomotives.

(a) Formerly the expression light locomotive and motor car meant the same apart from certain provisions as to registration. As to motor cars, see MOTOR CAR.

Now light locomotives as defined by the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), are mechanically propelled vehicles which are not constructed themselves to carry any load (other than water, fuel, equipment, tools, etc.), and the weight of which unladen does not exceed  $11\frac{1}{2}$  tons, but does exceed  $7\frac{1}{2}$  tons.

A person under 21 shall not drive a light locomotive (s. 9), two persons must be employed in driving or attending, and if driving a trailer one or more in addition (s. 17). The period of continuous driving by any one person is limited by (s. 19) to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  hours or amounting to not more than 11 in the aggregate in 24 hours, and the driver is to have at least 10 hours' rest in the 24 hours. The Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1931 (S. R. & O. 1931, No. 4), deal with the construction regulations.

As light locomotives are one of the classes of motor vehicles, all regulations, e.g., licensing, rate of speed, offences, duty as regards cases of accident, which refer to motor vehicles apply, so far as are applicable to light locomotives; see, generally, the Road Traffic Acts, 1930, 1931, 1934, etc. See Stone's Justices' Manual, and consult, generally, Mahaffy and Dodson's Law Relating to Motor Cars, and Pratt and Mackenzie's Law of Highways.

(b) Heavy Locomotives are one of the class of motor vehicles as defined by Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43); mechanically propelled vehicles which are not constructed themselves to carry any load (other than the following articles: water, fuel, accumulators and other equipment used for the purpose of propulsion, loose tools and loose equipment), and the weight of which unladen exceeds  $11\frac{1}{2}$  tons. A person under 21 may not drive (s. 9); as to rate of speed (Schedule I.) and regarding construction, overall width, etc., see Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations (S. R. & O. 1931, No. 4), Articles 31–38). Heavy vehicles, being one of the classes of motor vehicles, all regulations, e.g., licensing, rate of speed, offences, and duty regarding accidents, which refer to motor vehicles, apply so far as are applicable to heavy locomotives. See, generally, the Road Traffic Acts, 1930, 1931, 1934, etc. See Stone's Justices' Manual, and consult, generally, Pratt and Mackenzie's Law of Highways.

II. Railway Engines.—Locomotive engines on railways are regulated by ss. 114–116 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 114, as amended by s. 19 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, directing their construction on the principle of consuming their own smoke and inflicting a penalty on it appearing that they were so constructed but failed to consume by reason of default of the company owning them or its servants. As to fire caused by sparks from a locomotive, see Railway Fires Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 11); Martin v. G. E. Ry. Co., 1912, 2 K. B. 406. See, further, RAILWAY.

Loculus, a coffin, a purse.—Old Records.

Locum tenens [Lat.], a deputy.

Locus in quo (the place in which).—1 Salk. 24.

Locus partitus, a division made between two towns or counties, to make trial where the land or place in question lies.—Fleta, l. 4, c. xv.

Locus pœnitentiæ (a place or chance of repentance), a power of drawing back from a bargain before any act has been done to confirm it in law.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Locus regit actum (the place governs the act); that is, the act is governed by the law of the place where it is done.

Locus sigilli [Lat.], abbrev. L.S., the place of the seal, as designated by an O at the foot of a document requiring a seal.

Locus standi, the right of a party to appear and be heard on the question before any tribunal, frequently disputed in private bill legislation. Consult the works of Smethurst, or of Clifford and Stephens, on this subject.

Lode-mange, or Lode-merge, the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another. See LOADMANAGE.

Lodger, a tenant, with the right of exclusive possession, of a part of a house called lodgings, the landlord, by himself or an agent, retaining general dominion over the house itself.

Lodgings may be let in the same manner as lands and tenements; in general, however, they are let either by agreement in writing or verbally. An executory verbal agreement may be void by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 40; and see Edge v. Stafford, (1831) 1 C. & J. 391, as being a contract in relation to land, and a written agreement is often desirable to avoid dispute.

Lodgers in rooms which have been let as a separate dwelling to them, unfurnished, may be tenants of a dwelling-house for the purpose of the Rent Restrictions Acts, 1920, 1935, and if that dwelling or the house of which the rooms form part is not decontrolled, their tenancy is within those Acts (see INCREASE OF RENT). As to rent-books generally, in small houses, see Housing Act, 1936, s. 4, and Part IV. of that Act as to overcrowding (see that title).

Lodgings, other than those in common lodging houses, are regulated by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 90, repealed and replaced by the Public Health Act, 1936 (which came into operation on 1st October, 1937), ss. 235 et seq., and the Housing Acts, and in London by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 94. See LODGING HOUSES, COMMON.

The Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), passed for the protection of lodgers' goods, is repealed by the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 53), in as far as that Act applies (see DISTRESS). The case of Morton v. Palmer, (1881) 51 L. J. Q. B. 7, decides that a person may be a 'lodger' even though his landlord does not reside on the premises, so long as the landlord retains the dominion and control which the master of a house usually has.

As to the stealing by lodgers of chattels and fixtures let to be used by them, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 16.

Lodger-Franchise. This was first conferred upon the occupiers of lodgings in boroughs of 10l. yearly value, if let unfurnished, by the Representation of the People Act, 1867, and was afterwards extended to the occupiers of lodgings in counties by the Representation of the People Act, 1884. Lodger-franchise was abolished by the Representation of the People Act, 1918. See ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Lodging Houses, Common. The term is defined in the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 235, as 'meaning a house (other than a public assistance institution), provided for the purpose of accommodating by night poor persons, not being members of the same family, who resort thereto and are allowed to occupy one common room for the purpose of sleeping or eating, and include, where part only of a house is so used, the part so used.' As to the test of sleeping and having meals in a common room, see the judgment of Cozens-Hardy, L.J., in this case, and Langdon v. Broadbent, (1877) 37 L. T. 434. As to its use by persons of the poorer classes, see also L. C. C. v. Hankins, 1914, 1 K. B. 490. The Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 76 et seq., provided for their registration and inspection, and enacted that they might be kept only by registered keepers. These provisions were amplified and rendered more stringent by Part V. of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53). Both these enactments are repealed and replaced by Part IX. of the Public Health Act, 1936, coming into operation on the 1st October, 1937.

Lodging Houses for the Labouring Classes. See LABOURERS' DWELLINGS.

Logating, an unlawful game mentioned in 33 Hen. 8, c. 9.

Log-book. A book kept by the master of a ship in which he enters all the events of importance happening in and to his ship. See OFFICIAL LOG-BOOK.

Logia, a small house, lodge, or cottage.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 1, p. 400.

Logium, a lodge, hovel, or outhouse.

Logomachy, a contest of words.

Lollardy [fr. lullen, lollen, or lallen, Old Germ., to sing with a low voice; and hard, from the singing of funeral dirges, Mosh.], a vulgar term of reproach brought from Belgium and given to the early Protestants (the followers of Wycliffe) as far back as the reign of Edward III. The Lollards closely resembled the Puritans of Elizabeth's reign.—Stow's Annals, 425.

London, the metropolis of England. For a short account of early London, see 3 Hallam, Mid. Ages, p. 219.

The 'city' of London, which is not subject to the Municipal Corporations Act, contains only 671 acres and is divided into twenty-six wards, over each of which there is an alderman, and is governed by a lord mayor, who is chosen yearly. As to the customs of the city, see Pulling's Customs of London, pp. 5 et seq.

The customs of London as to the distribution of intestates' effects are abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94.

The administrative 'county' of London was established by the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 40, and consists of the city of London and the various metropolitan parishes in the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, which prior to that Act were subject to the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Board of Works, constituted by the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), the powers of which board are transferred to the London County Council, the number of councillors consisting of double the number of parliamentary members.

The general government of London was entrusted by the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, to the Metropolitan Board, the members of which were elected by the members of about 100 vestries representing parishes, and district boards representing combinations of parishes, which conducted its local government. The franchise and qualifications were, by the Local Government Act, 1894, assimilated to those obtaining in the case of the district councils created by that Act. The London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), substitutes twenty-eight boroughs for the vestries and district boards, each of which boroughs has a council consisting of a mayor, aldermen, and councillors, the total number of aldermen and councillors for each borough not exceeding seventy. To these councils are transferred many powers of the County Council, and they have also concurrent jurisdiction with the County Council as to making bye-laws, as to the regulation of water companies, as to procuring railway traffic facilities by Order of the Railway and Canal Commission, and other matters. See also the London County Council (General Powers) Acts.

The Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), does not apply to London except where expressly mentioned, namely, the provisions of Part III. relating to Joint Committees, Part X., Accounts and Audit, Part XI., Local Financial Returns and Schedule XI., Part V., Repeals.

The Public Health Act, 1875, and the Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 49) (see PUBLIC HEALTH), do not apply to London (except when expressly provided), which till 1891 was governed in sanitary matters by Nuisance Removal Acts, Metropolis Management Acts, and other Acts passed either before or after that Act. In 1891 these enactments were consolidated, with amendments, by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76)—a statute of 144 sections and four schedules, repealing more than thirty previous Acts or parts of Acts. The whole of this Act has been repealed by the Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 50); this Act has fourteen Parts and seven Schedules.

Part I. Local Administration.

Part II. Sewerage and Drainage.

Part III. General Sanitation and Cleanliness.

Part IV. Offensive Trades.

Part V. Smoke Consumption.

Part VI. Tenements and Lodging-houses.

Part VII. Public Baths and Wash-houses.

Part X. Hospitals, Medical Service, Ambulances and Mortuaries.

Part XI. Registration of Nursing Homes.

Part XII. Maternity and Child Welfare.

Part XIII. Child Life Protection.

Part XIV. Miscellaneous and General.

As to the control of Traffic in and near London, see The London Traffic Act, 1924, and London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 14), and the various Provisional Orders made thereunder; see also London Passenger Transport Board v. Sumner, 99 J. P. 387, as to validity of a bye-law.

London Building Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), a local and personal Act, consolidates the enactments relating to streets and buildings in London, of which the London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccciii.), was the most important. The Act has seventeen Parts.

I. Introductory.

II. Formation and Widening of Streets.

III. Lines of Building Frontage.

IV. Naming and Numbering of Streets.

V. Open Spaces about Buildings and Height of Buildings.

VI. Construction of Buildings.

VII. Special and Temporary Buildings and Wooden Structures.

IX. Rights of Building and Adjoining Owners.

X. Dangerous and Neglected Structures.

XI. Dangerous and Noxious Businesses.

XII. Dwelling-houses on Low-lying Land.

XIII. Sky Signs.

XIV. Superintending Architects and District Surveyors.

XV. Bye-laws.

XVI. Legal Proceedings.

XVII. Miscellaneous.

London Commissioners to Administer Oaths. In pursuance of s. 2 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78 (repealed by the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889), persons practising as solicitors, within ten miles from Lincoln's Inn Hall, at their respective places of business were from time to time appointed by the Lord Chancellor to administer oaths. See, further, COMMISSIONER FOR OATHS.

London Gazette. See GAZETTE.

London Police. See METROPOLITAN POLICE.

London, Port of. The administration is provided for by the Port of London (Consolidation) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. clxxiii.); s. 6 enacts:—

(1) There shall be a chairman and vice-chairman and other members of the Port Authority elected and appointed in manner provided by this Act for the purpose of administering, preserving and improving the Port of London and otherwise for the purposes of this Act, and the several persons who now constitute and shall, from time to time constitute the Port Authority, shall notwithstanding the repeal of enactments effected by this Act, continue and be a body corporate by the name of 'the Port of London Authority,' and by that name shall continue to have perpetual succession and a common seal having power to acquire and hold land for the purposes of this Act without licence in mortmain.

(2) The several persons who were respectively the chairman, vice-chairman and other members of the Port Authority immediately before the passing of this Act, and shall be and continue in office from and after the passing of this Act for the same period and on the same terms and conditions as if the Port of London Act, 1908, had not been partially repealed by this Act.

(3) Subject to the provisions of the section the chairman and vice-chairman shall be appointed by the Port Authority. The person to be appointed to either such office may but need not be an elected or appointed member.

(4) Subject to the provisions of this section the number of elected members shall be eighteen, of whom seventeen shall be elected by payers of rates (as defined in Part IV. of the Second Schedule to this Act), wharfingers and owners of river craft, and one shall be elected by wharfingers.

(5) Subject to the provisions of this section, the number of elected members shall be ten, appointed as follows :—

By the Admiralty . . . . .	1
By the Ministry of Transport . . . . .	2
By the London County Council (being members of the Council) . . . . .	2
By the London County Council (not being members of the Council) . . . . .	2
By the Corporation (being members of the Corporation) . . . . .	1
By the Corporation (not being members of the Corporation) . . . . .	1
By the Trinity House . . . . .	1

(6) With a view to providing for the representation of labour on the Port Authority, one of the members of the Port Authority appointed by the Minister of Transport shall be appointed by the Ministry after consultation with such organizations representative of labour as the Ministry think best qualified to advise them upon the matter, and one of the members of the Port Authority appointed by the London County Council shall be appointed by that Council after consultation with such organizations representative of labour as that Council think best qualified to advise them upon the matter.

(7) Subject to the provisions of this section the Port Authority may pay to the chairman, vice-chairman and chairman of any committee or to any of them, such salaries or salary as the Port Authority may determine.

(8) Subject to the provisions of this section, the provisions contained in the Second Schedule to this Act shall have effect with respect to the constitution and proceedings of the Port Authority and the election of and appointment of members.

The Act provides very fully for the financing and general management of the Port, and Schedule I. of the Act defines the limits of the Port, which extend landwards to Teddington and Twickenham, and seawards to Havengore Creek and the Isle of Sheppey. See also Port of London (Various Powers Act, 1932 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. xxxviii.)), which makes certain amendments.

London Sessions. Quarter Sessions for the County of London. See also CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

London Sittings. See GUILDHALL SITTINGS, and ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.

Long Vacation. By R. S. C. Ord. LXVIII., r. 4 (1), the Long Vacation shall commence on 1st of August and terminate on the day appointed by Order in Council for that purpose. By Order in Council dated 1st March, 1907, the Long Vacation is to commence in August and was to terminate on 11th October. For the year 1935 the Long Vacation terminated on 6th October (Long Vacation (1935) Order, 1935).

Loquela, an imparlance; a declaration.

Loquela sine die, a respite to an indefinite time.

Lord [fr. hlaford, laford, lord, Sax., hlaf, a loaf of bread, and ford, to give, because such great men kept extraordinary houses, and fed all the poor; for which reason they were called givers of bread], monarch, governor, master.

Lord Advocate. See ADVOCATE, LORD.

Lord Chamberlain. See CHAMBERLAIN.

Lord Chancellor. See CHANCELLOR.

Lord Chief Justice, etc. See CHIEF JUSTICE, etc.

Lord in Gross, he who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. Very lord, is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and very tenant, he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant.

Lord High Admiral. See ADMIRALTY.

Lord High Commissioner, the representative of the King at the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Lord High Steward. See HIGH STEWARD.

Lord Justice General, the highest judicial officer in Scotland. Head of the High Court of Justiciary. The office is united with that of the Lord President of the Court of Session.

Lord Justice Clerk, the second judicial officer in Scotland. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Lord Lieutenant, formerly the chief governor or viceroy of Ireland. See IRELAND.

Lord Lieutenant of a County, an officer of great distinction, appointed by the Crown for the managing of the standing militia of the county, and all military matters therein. Lords Lieutenant are supposed to have been introduced about the reign of Henry VIII., for they are mentioned as known officers in the 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 3, though they had not been long in use; for Camden speaks of them in the time of Queen Elizabeth as extraordinary magistrates, constituted only in times of difficulty and danger. They are generally of the principal nobility, and of the best interest in the county; they are to form the militia in case of a rebellion, etc., and march at the head of them, as the Crown shall direct. They have the power of presenting to the sovereign the names of deputy-lieutenants, who are to be selected from the best gentry in the county, and act in the absence of the Lord Lieutenant. Their jurisdiction and privileges in relation to the militia, yeomanry, and volunteers reverted to her Majesty by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 86, s. 6, and see Militia Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 49), as affected by the Territorial Army and Militia Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 37). Lords Lieutenants are appointed for life or quamdiu se bene gesserint.

Lord Lyon King-of-Arms, the principal Officer of Arms in Scotland. His duties are both ministerial and judicial, and include control of all arms, badges, and signs armorial, the execution of royal proclamations, the appointment and control of messengers-at-arms, the granting of certificates in connection with changes of name, etc. Under him are three heralds, and three Pursuivants.

Lord of a Manor, the grantee or owner of a manor. See COPYHOLD.

Lord Mayor's Court in London. An inferior (Cox v. Mayor of London, (1867) L. R. 2 H. L. 239) court of the king, held before the lord mayor and aldermen. Its practice and procedure were amended and its powers enlarged by the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act, 1857. In this court the recorder presided, or, in his absence, the common serjeant (s. 43), or the assistant judge appointed under the Borough Courts of Record Act, 1872. The Mayor's and City of London Court Act, 1920, amalgamated the City of London Court (see that title) (the jurisdiction of which was that of a county court) with the Mayor's Court, and by the County Court Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 186, now to be deemed a county court, subject to the Mayor's Court Act of 1920, and the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, with all its powers, rights and privileges preserved; and see Bowater & Sons Ltd. v. Davidson's Paper Sales, 1936, 1 K. B. 465. The conjoint court thus established has all the powers and jurisdiction of the two courts, and is presided over by the judges of the old Mayor's Court with an additional judge. For some purposes the provisions of the Act of 1857 still apply to 'original Mayor's Court actions': see Newman v. Klausner, 1922, 1 K. B. 228.

Lord Ordinary. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Lord President of the Court of Session. See SESSION, COURT OF. The office is united with that of Lord Justice General.

Lord President of the Council, the President of the Privy Council, the fifth great officer of State. He is appointed by the King in Council and, as a rule, is a member of the Cabinet.

Lord Privy Seal. An office with, at the present time, no definite duties, but to which Lord Salisbury attached a salary of 2,000*l*. It may confer Cabinet rank upon the holder. See PRIVY SEAL.

Lord and Vassal. In the feudal system the grantor of land, who retained the dominion or ultimate property, is called the lord, and the grantee, who had only the use or possession, is called the vassal or feudatory.

Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. See CINQUE PORTS.

Lords' Act (32 Geo. 2, c. 28), so called from having originated in the House of Lords, amended by 33 Geo. 3, c. 5, and made perpetual by 39 Geo. 3, c. 50, passed for the relief of debtors 'with respect to the imprisonment of their persons; and to oblige debtors continuing in execution in prison beyond a certain time, and for sums not exceeding what are mentioned in the Act, to make discovery of and deliver upon oath their estates for their creditors' benefit,' in great part repealed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and other Acts.

Lord's Day. See SUNDAY.

Lords, House of. See APPELLATE JURISDICTION ACT, 1876, and HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lords Justices of Appeal, the title of the ordinary judges of the Court of Appeal, by the Jud. Act, 1877, s. 4 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 6 (3)). As to the functions of the Lords Justices sitting as a Court of Appeal from a judge without a jury, see Powell v. Streatham Manor Nursing Home, 1935, A. C. 243; and from a judge with a jury, Mechanical and General Inventions Co. Ltd.

v. Austin Motor Co. Ltd., 1935, A. C. 346. Prior to the Jud. Acts there were two 'Lords Justices of Appeal, in Chancery,' to whom an appeal lay from a vice-chancellor by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83.

Lords Marchers, those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, who in times past had their laws and power of life and death, like petty kings. Abolished by 27 Hen. 8, c. 26, and 6 Edw. 6, c. 10. See MARCHES.

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, originally two persons having held high judicial office, or practised at the bar for not less than fifteen years, appointed, with a salary of 6,000*l.* a year, to aid the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the hearing of appeals (App. Jur. Act, 1876, s. 6). On the death or resignation of any two members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the Crown was empowered to appoint a third and fourth Lord of Appeal in Ordinary (ibid., s. 14), and may now appoint two more in addition to the four (App. Jur. Act, 1913, s. 1), and a further one in addition to the six (App. Jur. Act, 1929, s. 2). Any Lord of Appeal in Ordinary who at the date of his appointment would have been qualified to be appointed an ordinary judge of the Court of Appeal, or at that date was a judge of that Court, is an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 6 (2)). Lords of Appeal in Ordinary rank as barons for life and sit and vote in the House of Lords (Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1887, s. 2).

Lords of Erection. On the Reformation in Scotland, the king, as proprietor of benefices formerly held by abbots and priors, gave them out in temporal lordships to favourites, who were termed Lords of Erection.

Lords of Parliament, those who have seats in the House of Lords.

Lords of Regality, persons to whom rights of civil and criminal jurisdiction were given by the Crown.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Lords of Session, the judges of the Court of Session in Scotland. Otherwise known as Senators of the College of Justice.

Lords Spiritual, the archbishops and bishops who have seats in the House of Lords.

Lords Temporal, those lay peers who have seats in the House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lordship, dominion, manor, seignior, domain; also title of honour of a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titular appellation of the judges and some other persons in authority and office.

Loriners [fr. lorum, Lat., a rein], one of the London Livery Companies; the guild of bridle, bit and spur makers.

Lost Bill of Exchange, Cheque, or Promissory Note. The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 69, replacing the repealed 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 17, s. 3, enacts that if a bill of exchange, or cheque, or note, be lost before it is overdue, 'the person who was the holder of it may apply to the drawer to give him another bill (or cheque, or note) of the same tenor, giving security to the drawer, if required, to indemnify him against all persons whatever in case the bill (or cheque, or note) alleged to have been lost shall be found again'; and that 'if the drawer on request as aforesaid refuses to give such duplicate bill (or cheque, or note), he may be compelled to do so.' By s. 70 of the same Act, re-enacting 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 87, 'in any action or proceeding on' a bill (or cheque, or note), the Court may order that the loss of the instrument shall not be set up, provided an indemnity be given to the satisfaction of the Court against the claims of any other person upon the instrument in question.

Lost Document. The ordinary rule is that a document is proved by the production of the original, but on proof that a document has been destroyed, or cannot be found after a proper search made, it may be proved by the 'secondary evidence' of a copy or by oral evidence of its contents. See Powell on Evidence; and as to the case of a lost will, see Woodward v. Goulstone, (1886) 11 App. Cas. 469.

'Lost or not lost' are words used in marine insurance policies in order to prevent the policy being void if the ship is lost at the time of the insurance provided that this fact is unknown to the insurer.

Lot, a contribution or duty. See SCOT.

Lot or Loth, the thirteenth dish of lead in the mines of Derbyshire, which belonged to the Crown.

Lot Meads, common meadows which are divided yearly and distributed by lot among the owners, the share of each being called a dole. See Williams on Rights of Common. The owner of a dole may have a freehold in the soil, or he may only have vestura terra.

Lothervite or Leyervit, a privilege to make amends for lying with a bond-woman without licence. See LAIBWITTE.

Lots. Parcels of land under one ownership put up separately at one sale. By s. 45 (5) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, it is an implied condition of the sale that a purchaser of two or more lots held wholly or partly under the same title shall not have a right to more than one abstract of the common title, except at his own expense. As a rule the purchaser of the largest lot in value is entitled to the documents of title on completion where all the lots have been sold (see, e.g., General Conditions of Sale, 34 (2) (i.)).

As to the position of a bidder purchasing a wrong lot by his own mistake, see Van Praagh v. Everidge, 1903, 1 Ch. 434.

Lottery, a game of chance; a distribution of prizes by lot or chance (Taylor v. Smetten, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 207). By 10 & 11 Wm. 3, c. 17, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Games,' all lotteries were declared to be public nuisances, and all grants, patents, or licences for the same to be contrary to law; and the Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 119), imposes a penalty of 500*l.* on any person keeping any place for any lottery 'not authorized by Parliament'; for as lotteries were found to be a ready mode for raising money for the service of the state, they were from time to time sanctioned by Acts of Parliament passed expressly for this purpose (see 4 Geo. 4, c. 60), but by 6 Geo. 4, c. 60, they were abolished. As to what constitutes 'keeping' within the Act of 1802, see Martin v. Benjamin, 1907, 1 K. B. 64; but a body corporate cannot be convicted (s. 41) as rogues and vagabonds (Hawke v. Hulton, 1909, 2 K. B. 93).

A physical lot is not essential to a lottery (Barclay v. Pearson, 1893, 2 Ch. 154). In that case the defendant had realized more than 20,000*l.* in one week by a shilling 'missing word competition,' and one of the successful competitors suing him for his proportion of the prize, Stirling, J., declined to assist the plaintiff, and ordered the 20,000*l.* which had been brought into court to be paid out to the defendant, 'to defend himself by means of it against any legal claim, and to dispose of the surplus as he might deem in honour bound to apply it.' For lottery by sale of tea in packets with prizes, see Taylor v. Smetten, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 207; and see also Willis v. Young, 1907, 1 K. B. 448; Hall v. Cox, 1899, 1 Q. B. 198; Barillet v. Parker, 1912, 2 K. B. 497).

By the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), subject to the provisions of Part II., all lotteries are unlawful. Sect. 22 sets out offences in connection with lotteries, e.g., printing, distributing tickets, advertising, sending money out of Great Britain etc.; s. 23 exempts small lotteries incidental to certain entertainments; s. 24 exempts private lotteries; s. 25 deals with Art Unions, which are exempted; s. 26 deals with newspaper competitions which do not depend to a substantial degree upon the exercise of skill; s. 27 deals with the power of justices to issue a search warrant if satisfied upon oath that there is reasonable ground to believe that premises are being used for illegal lotteries. See the statutes collected in Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Games and Gaming.'

Loureuxdus, a ram, or bell-wether.

Love Day, the day on which any dispute was amicably settled between neighbours; or a day on which one neighbour helps another without hire.

Lowbote, a recompense for the death of a man killed in a tumult.

Low-water Mark, that part of the seashore to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest.

L.S. See LOCUS SIGILLI.

Lucid Interval. By a lucid interval is understood, in a legal sense, a temporary cessation of the insanity or a perfect restoration to reason. It differs entirely from a remission, in which there is a mere abatement of the symptoms. See per Lord Thurlow in Attorney-General v. Parnther, (1792) 3 Bro. C. C. 442; also Ray's Med. Jur. of Insan.; Beck's Med. Jur.; and Browne's Med. Jur. of Insan.

Lucri causâ [Lat.] (for the purpose of gain).

Lucrum, a small slip or parcel of land.

Luminare, a lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof land and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, etc.—Ken. Glos.

Lunatic. By the Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 20, the word 'lunatic,' except in the phrase 'criminal lunatic' and in relation to persons detained as lunatics outside England, shall cease to be used in relation to any person or of alleged to be of unsound mind, and the words 'person of unsound mind,' 'person,' 'patient of unsound mind,' or 'of unsound mind,' or such other expression as the context may require are to be substituted in any enactment or document thereunder. See PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND.

The general principle governing contracts entered into by insane persons is laid down in The Imperial Loan Co. v. Stone, 1892, 1 Q. B. 559. 'Where a person enters into a contract, and afterwards alleges that he was so insane at the time that he did not know what he was doing and proves the allegation, the contract is as binding on him in every respect, whether it is executory or executed, as if he had been sane when he made it, unless he can prove further that the party with whom he contracted knew him to be so insane as not to be capable of understanding what he was about." A person of unsound mind must pay for necessities sold and delivered to him (Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 2). As to deeds and wills executed by a person found of unsound mind by inquisition, see In re Walker, 1905, 1 Ch. 160. As to their liability for tortious acts, see Clerk and Lindsell, 7th ed. p. 45. As to the criminal responsibility of insane persons, see MACNAUGHTON'S CASE, RULES IN. A jury may return the special verdict that a prisoner is guilty of the offence charged but insane at the time he committed it (Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883, s. 2). A person found on arraignment to be insane by verdict of a jury may be detained during his Majesty's pleasure, as is also the case with a prisoner found guilty but insane. The Home Secretary may order insane prisoners to be removed from prison to asylums (Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884, s. 2). See Archbold's Crim. Pleading, etc.

As to Scotland, see the Lunacy (Scotland) Acts of 1857, 1862 and 1866, the Mental Deficiency and Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1913 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 32), ss. 4, 5 and 7, and Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 2.

Lundress, a sterling silver penny, which was only coined in London. Loundes's Essay on Coins, 17.

Lupanatrix, a bawd or strumpet.—3 Inst. 206.

Lupinum caput gerere, to be outlawed, and have one's head exposed like a wolf's, with a reward to him who should take it.

Lurgulary, casting any corrupt or poisonous thing into the water.

Luxury. See SUMPTUARY LAWS.

Lych Gate, the gate into a churchyard, with a roof or awning hung on posts over it to cover the body brought for burial, when it rests underneath.

Lyef-yeld, or Lef-silver, a small fine paid by a customary tenant to his lord, for leave to plough or sow.

Lying by. A person who, by his presence and silence at a transaction which affects his interests, may fairly be supposed to acquiesce in it, if he afterwards propose to disturb the arrangement, may be prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by. See LACHES.

Lying in Franchise, waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action.—3 Steph. Com.

Lying in Grant, or in Livery. See GRANT.

Lying-in Hospitals, charities which could not be established without a previous licence from the quarter sessions; legitimate children born in them are not to be chargeable to the parish of their births.—13 Geo. 3, c. 82. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101, and Midwives Act, 1927 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 13, abolishing the necessity for a licence; also Public Health Act, 1936, Part VI., ss. 181 et seq.

Lynches, or Lincees. The banks between the terraces formed where a common field is on a hillside by ploughing, so as to turn the sod downhill; also the terraces themselves. Norton on Interpretation of Deeds.

Lynch-law, the procedure whereby an offender is tried and executed by a self-appointed body of citizens acting generally in defiance of the law, alleging as an excuse either the slowness of the regular legal procedure, or the neglect of the duly constituted authorities to put it in force, or that no duly constituted authorities exist. Lynch-law has been often practised in the United States of America.

Lyndhurst's (Lord) Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 54) rendered marriages within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely. See MARRIAGE.

Lyon's Inn, an Inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

M.

M, the brand or stigma of a person convicted of manslaughter and admitted to the benefit of clergy. It was burned on the brawn of the left thumb. Abolished.

Maal, Mahl, Mehal, places, districts, departments; places or sources of revenue, particularly of a territorial nature; lands.—Indian.

Mace, a large staff, made of one of the precious metals, and highly ornamented. It is used as an emblem of authority, and carried before certain public functionaries by a mace-bearer.

Mace-Greif [fr. machecarius, Lat.], one who buys stolen goods, particularly food, knowing them to have been stolen.—Brit. c. xxix.

Mace-proof, secure against arrest.

Macer, a mace-bearer; officers of the High Court of Justiciary and Court of Session in Scotland, who carry the mace and perform the functions of usher in the several courts.

Machecollare, or Machecoulare, to make a warlike device over a gate, or other passage, like to a grate, through which scalding water or ponderous or offensive things may be cast upon the assailants.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Machinery. As to the riotous destruction of machinery, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 11, as amended. As to the fencing of machinery in factories, see FACTORY.

Macnaughton's Case, Rules in (4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 847). A discussion took place in the House of Lords upon the direction to the jury by Tindal, C.J., in the trial of Macnaughton, and as a result a series of questions were put to the judges. The answers of the majority constitute 'the rules in Macnaughton's case,' and have been accepted as laying down the law as to insanity with reference to criminal responsibility. See Archbold, Crim. Pleading, etc., 25th ed. pp. 15 et seq. The rules have been the subject of much discussion and criticism by political, medical, and legal writers (see, for example, Lord Birkenhead's letter to The Times, May 26th, 1924). The main rule which is laid down is, that in order to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the person accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know that he was doing what was wrong. The onus of proving insanity lies on the defence.

Mactator, a murderer.

Madras, Bishopric of, established by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 85; and see 5 & 6 Vict. c. 119.

Mæo-burgh, kindred, family.

Mæg-bot, compensation for homicide paid by the perpetrator to the kinsman or family of the slain.—Angl. Inst. Eng.

Mære [fr. mer, Sax.], famous, great, noted; as Elmere, all famous.—Gibbs. Camd.

Magie, witchcraft and sorcery. See WITCHCRAFT.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. Co. Litt. 78 b.—(The law favours a good rather than a bad construction.) Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against, the law, the former is adopted.

Thus a bond conditioned 'to assign all offices' will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable.

Magister, a master or ruler; a person who has attained to some eminent degree in science.

Magister ad facultates, an ecclesiastical officer who grants dispensations.

Magister navis (the master of a ship).

Magister societatis (the manager of a partnership).

Magistracy, the body of officers who administer the laws; the office of a magistrate.

Magistrate. (1) A man publicly vested with authority, a governor, an executor of the laws. (2) A paid justice of the peace. See STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE; METROPOLITAN POLICE. (3) An unpaid justice of the peace. See JUSTICES.

Magna assisa eligenda, Writ de. The first species of extraordinary trial by jury is that of the grand assize, which was instituted by Henry II., in parliament, by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of the barbarous and unchristian custom of duelling. The writ issued to the sheriff to return four knights, who were to elect and choose twelve others to be joined with them, and these, all together, formed the grand assize or great jury, which was to try the matter of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.—3 Bl. Com. 351.

Magna centum, the great hundred, or six score.

Magna Charta. This Great Charter is based substantially upon the Saxon Common Law, which flourished in this kingdom until the Norman invasion consolidated the system of feudality, still the great characteristic of the principles of real property. The barons assembled at St. Edmund's Bury, in Suffolk, in the latter part of the year 1214, and there solemnly swore upon the high altar to withdraw their allegiance from the Crown, and openly rebel, unless King John confirmed by a formal charter the ancient liberties of England; and they then engaged to demand this of the sovereign in the early part of the ensuing year, arming themselves in the meantime, so as to compel John, if necessary, to confirm those liberties which had been confirmed by the charters of his predecessors, and his own solemn but disregarded oath. As the first step the barons disclaimed all allegiance to him, were formally absolved from their oaths of fidelity, and chose for their general Robert Fitzwalter, with the title of Marshal of the Army of God and of the Holy Church. After the fortress of Bedford had surrendered to them, and they were in possession of the metropolis, by private agreement with the citizens, the king sent a message to them to desire that a place and time of meeting might be fixed for the purpose of his complying with their demands. Accordingly, the famous meadow called Runingmede, or Runemed (from the Saxon word run, signifying council), situated on the south-west bank of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor, in Surrey, was selected for the interview. The conferences between the king and the armed barons opened on Monday, the 15th of June, and closed on Friday, the 19th of June, 1215, being in the seventeenth year of his reign. After the adjustment of preliminaries, articles or heads of agreement were drawn up and sealed; these articles were then reduced to the form of a charter, to which the Great Seal of the realm was solemnly affixed, and the instrument was given by the king's hand as a confirmation of his own act, but it was not signed by him, as commonly supposed. This celebrated event in our history took place in a small island, still called Magna Charta Island, situated in the Thames, not far from Aukerwyke, in Buckinghamshire. Many originals of the great Charter were made, for the purpose of depositing one in every diocese. Two of these are extant in the British Museum, and it is said there are two others in existence, one in the cathedral at Salisbury, and the other in that at Lincoln.

Magna Charta was not firmly established as the common law of the realm and the inalienable right of the subject for nearly a century after the conferences at Runingmede, during which period the country was kept in a constant state of alarm and excitement by the struggles of the barons' war, but at length this constitutional barrier against regal encroachments was finally secured to the people by its solemn confirmation by Edward I. No fewer than thirty-two Acts of Parliament were obtained from 1267 to 1416, from the sovereigns of England, for the purpose of fixing the Great Charter as the broad basis of our legislation, and the material guarantee of the freedom of political opinion, and of vindicating the right of publicly discussing and scrutinizing the conduct and measures of the Government of the day.

The Great Charter, as set forth in the statutes at large, is expressed to be made in the ninth year of King Henry III. (that is, in 1225), and confirmed by King Edward I. in the 25th year of his reign (that is, in 1297). The original is written in the Latin language, which, although not of that pure classicality that will be appreciated by the scholar, is nevertheless simple, vigorous, and unmistakable. The original Latin is printed in the statute-book in one column, and an English translation of it in another.

This Great Charter is in fact a collection of statutes in thirty-seven chapters, which are for the most part declaratory of our ancient and cherished customs, supplying, however, many of the deficiencies of the Common Law. 'Codes are not made; they make themselves,' said Pourtales, and this is true also of Magna Charta, of which many of the chapters in substance and detail contain provisions which could not have originated, sua sponte, in the mind of any legislator, however gifted he may have been. The 1st chapter is a confirmation of liberties in these words:—'First, we have granted to God, and by this our present charter have confirmed for us and our heirs for ever, that the Church of England shall be free and shall have her whole rights and liberties inviolable. We have granted also and given to all the freemen of our realm, for us and our heirs for ever, these liberties, underwritten, to have and to hold to them and their heirs, of us and our heirs for ever.'

The 2nd chapter relates to the relief of the Crown's tenants of full age:—'If any of our earls or barons, or any other, which holdeth of us in chief by knight's service, die, and at the time of his death his heir be of full age, and oweth to us relief, he shall have his inheritance by the old relief; that is to say, the heir or heirs of an earl, for a whole earldom, by one hundred pounds; the heir or heirs of a baron, for a whole barony, by one hundred marks; the heir or heirs of a knight, for one whole knight's fee, one hundred shillings at the most, and he that hath less shall give less, according to the old custom of the fees.'

The Great Charter only aimed at modifying the grievances of feudalism, which created the military tenure of knight's service. It was reserved for the vigorous administration of Cromwell to abolish this military tenure, which he did by intermitting the Court of Wards in 1645. So perfectly hopeless was the renewal of this oppressive system at the restoration of the second Charles, that the provision annihilating these feudal tenures, contained in the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, simply embodied this wholesome law of the Commonwealth and rendered it perpetual.

The statute of Charles II. did away with the effect of the four next chapters of the Great Charter. It will be only necessary, therefore, to mention their subjects:—Chapter three related to the wardship of an infant heir of an earl, baron, or knight; chapter four prohibited the guardian from wasting the lands of his ward, and from destroying his tenants, a plain indication of the wretched condition of the serfs in those days; chapter five compelled such guardians to keep in repair such lands; and chapter six, that such heirs should be married without disparagements—that is, should not be compelled to contract an improper or unequal marriage.

The 7th chapter concerns widows, and enacts that:—‘A widow, after the death of her husband, incontinent, and without any difficulty, shall have her marriage, and her inheritance, and shall give nothing for her dower, her marriage, or her inheritance, which her husband and she held the day of the death of her husband, and she shall tarry in the chief house of her husband by forty days after the death of her husband, within which days her dower shall be assigned her if it were not assigned her before, or that if the house be a castle, and if she depart from the castle, then a competent house shall be forthwith provided for her, in the which she may honestly dwell, until her dower be to her assigned, as it is aforesaid, and she shall have in the meantime her reasonable estovers of the common; and for her dower shall be assigned unto her the third part of all the lands of her husband which were his during coverture, except she were endowed of less at the church door. No widow shall be distrained to marry while she chooses to live single; nevertheless, she shall find surety that she shall not marry without our license and assent if she hold of us, nor without the assent of the lord, if she hold of another.’ See DOWER.

The 8th chapter relates to Crown debts:—‘We or our bailiffs shall not seize any land or rent for any debt, as long as the present goods and chattels of the debtor do suffice to pay the debt, and the debtor himself be ready to satisfy therefor. Neither shall the pledges of the debtor be distrained, as long as the principal debtor is sufficient for the payment of the debt. And if the principal debtor fail in payment of the debt, having nothing wherewith to pay, or will not pay where he is able, the pledges shall answer for the debt. And if they will, they shall have the lands and rents of the debtor, until they be satisfied of the debt which they before paid for him, except that the debtor can show himself to be acquitted against the said sureties.’

This order of enforcing Crown debts from debtors and their sureties appears to be clear and satisfactory. It is the prerogative of the Crown to claim priority for taxes and penalties before all other creditors, and to recover them by a very prompt and efficacious process, because thesaurus regis est pacis vinculum et bellorum nervi (the public revenue is at once the security of peace and the sinews of war).

The 9th chapter perpetuates our right of self-government, the source and bulwark of our constitutional freedom. It enacts that:—‘The City of London shall have all the old liberties and customs which it hath been used to have. Moreover, we will and grant that all other cities, boroughs, towns, and the barons of the five ports, and all other ports, shall have all their liberties and free customs.’

The 10th chapter prohibits excessive distress for more service for a knight’s fee than was due, all which has been abolished.

The 11th chapter enacts that:—‘Common Pleas shall not follow our Court, but shall be holden in some place certain.’ See COMMON PLEAS; ROYAL COURTS.

The 12th chapter relates to assizes, and provides that:—‘Assizes of novel disseisin and of mortdauncestor shall not be taken but in the shires, and after this manner; if we be out of this realm, our chief justicers shall send our justices through every county once in the year, which, with the knights of the shires, shall take the said assizes in those counties; and those things that at the coming of our foresaid justicers, being sent to take those assizes in the counties, cannot be determined, shall be ended by them in some other place in their circuit; and those things which for difficulty of some articles cannot be determined by them, shall be referred to our justicers of the bench, and there shall be ended.’

Assizes or actions of novel disseisin and mortdauncestor have long been abolished, and more simple remedies established. A novel disseisin was so called to distinguish it from an ancient disseisin, and it arose in this way:—The judges in the olden time, when travelling was perilous and slow, went their circuits but once in seven years; all disseisins then or dispossessings of the lawful owners of lands which took place before the last circuits were ancient, but all disseisins since were novel. Mortancestor was an action brought against a person who had taken possession of property after the death of an ancestor, and before his heir-at-law had entered into their occupancy. This chapter of the Great Charter is interesting as showing that our circuits and the practice of reserving points of law arising on circuit, for the consideration of the Court, are a very old institution of our judicial system.

The 13th chapter relates to assizes of darrein presentment, a now abolished method of trying the right to present a priest to an ecclesiastical benefice.

The 14th chapter is directed against excessive fines, and provides that :—' A freeman shall not be amerced for a small fault, but after the manner of the fault, and for a great fault after the greatness thereof, saving to him his contentment ; and a merchant likewise, saving to him his merchandise ; and any other's villein than ours shall be likewise amerced, saving his wainage, if he fall into our mercy. And none of the said amerciaments shall be assessed but by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage. Earls and barons shall not be amerced but by their peers, and after the manner of their offence. No man of the church shall be amerced after the quantity of his spiritual benefice, but after his lay-tenement, and after the quantity of his offence.'

A man's contentment is that which is absolutely necessary for his support and maintenance, as his tools and instruments of trade ; and wainage is that which is necessary for the labourer and the farmer, for the cultivation of his land, as carts, and implements of husbandry.

The 15th and 16th chapters relate to the making of bridges and defending of riverbanks, a subject which now forms part of local law.

The 17th chapter enacts that :—' No sheriff, constable, escheator, coroner, nor any other our bailiffs, shall hold pleas of our Crown.'

Pleas of the Crown comprehend the criminal department of the law. It was ever the anxious care of our ancestors that a person accused of crime should be tried by a superior judge and a jury, and not by an inferior magistrate. It has, however, from time to time been necessary and expedient to give to justices and local magistrates jurisdiction to a limited extent in dealing with crimes and quasi criminal matters. This jurisdiction is of two kinds :—(1) Relating to indictable offences ; and (2) relating to offences punishable summarily. As to the latter jurisdiction, the proceedings and powers of the justices are regulated (except where otherwise provided by the particular statute) by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), and amending Acts. See JUSTICES.

The 18th chapter enacts that :—' If any that holdeth of us lay-fee do die, and our sheriff or bailiff do show our letters-patents of our summons for debt, which the dead man did owe to us, it shall be lawful to our sheriff or bailiff to attach and inroll all the goods and chattels of the dead, being found in the said lay-fee, to the value of the same debt, by the sight of lawful men, so that nothing thereof shall be taken away, until we be clearly paid off the debt, and the residue shall remain to the executor to perform the testament of the dead, and if nothing be owing unto us, all the chattels shall go to the use of the dead, saving to his wife and children their reasonable parts.' See REASONABLE PARTS.

Debts owing to the Crown take precedence of all other debts, and this appears to be perfectly fair, for it is only by the certain payment of taxes that the government of a country can be carried on. The old law which prohibited a man from willing away all his property from his wife and children has long since been abrogated, and a man can now by a valid will deprive his widow and children of any participation in the property which he may leave.

The subjects of the 19th, 20th, and 21st chapters, relating to purveyance for a castle, doing of castle ward, and taking of horses, carts, and woods for the service of the royal castles, have been rendered obsolete by the abolition of feudalism.

The 22nd chapter declares thus :—' We will not hold the lands of them that be convict of felony but one year and one day, and then those lands shall be delivered to the lords of the fee.'

The addition of the day to the year appears to have been intended to prevent any dispute about whether the year is to be calculated as inclusive or exclusive of its last day. By the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), escheat and forfeiture for treason or felony were abolished.

The 23rd chapter enacts that :—' All wears from henceforth shall be utterly put down by Thames and Medway, and through all England, but only by the sea-coasts.' It is obvious that wears in navigable rivers would be obstructive of free communication. See WEARS.

The 24th chapter relates to the writ called præcipe in capite, which has been abolished.

The 25th chapter directs that :—' One measure of wine shall be through our realm, and one measure of ale, and one measure of corn, that is to say, the quarter of London ; and one breadth of dyed cloth, russets, and habergeants, that is to say, two yards within the lists, and it shall be of weights as it is of measures.' See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The 26th, 27th, and 28th chapters, relating to the writ of inquisition of life and member, and the old feudal tenures and wager of law, have been superseded by their abolition.

The next chapter (29) is so often quoted that it is better to give it in the original, which is as follows :—

' Nullus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur aut disseisnatus de libero tenemento suo vel libertatibus vel liberis consuetudinibus suis, aut utlagetur aut exuletur aut aliquo modo destruat, nec super eum ibimus nec super eum mittemus nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum, vel per legem terræ. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus aut differemus rectum vel iusticiam.'

' No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or be disseised of his freehold, or liberties or free customs, or be outlawed or exiled, or any otherwise destroyed ; nor will we pass upon him, nor condemn him, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. To no man will we sell, to no man deny, to no man delay, justice or right.'

It is required by our law that the twelve jurors be unanimous in their verdict, the reason for which would appear on criminal trials to be out of compassion to the prisoner, by giving him the benefit of every doubt, in accordance with the benignant quality of mercy. The unanimity required in trials of a civil nature is said to have arisen from the now abolished punishment, to which every juror was liable for returning an improper verdict, and as each juror might have been subjected to a conviction, it was no doubt reasonable that every one should have a power of dissenting, and not be bound by the opinion of the others.

The 30th chapter evinces a liberal treatment of foreigners :—' All merchants if they were not openly prohibited before shall have their safe and sure conduct to depart out of England, to come into England, to tarry in and go through England, as well by land as by water, to buy and sell, without any manner of evil tolts [i.e., extortions], by the old and rightful customs, except in time of war. And if they be of a land making war against us, and be found in our realm at the beginning of the wars, they shall be attached without harm of body or goods, until it be known unto us, or our chief justice, how our merchants be intreated there in the land making war against us ; and if our merchants be well intreated there, theirs shall be likewise with us.' See ALIENS.

The 31st, 32nd, and 33rd chapters, relating to the royal escheat, the lord's services, and the patronage of abbeys, have been entirely superseded ; as also has the 34th chapter, which provided that no man should be taken or imprisoned upon the appeal of a woman for the death of any other than her husband.

The 35th chapter, relating to county courts, sheriffs' turns, and leets, has long since fallen into desuetude by reason of new laws upon these subjects, though the sheriff's county court still exists for the purpose of parliamentary elections, and the sheriff's turn was not expressly abolished until 1887 by the Sheriffs Act of that year, s. 18.

The 36th chapter enacts that :—' It shall not be lawful from henceforth to any to give his land to any religious house, and to take the same land again to hold of the same house. Nor shall it be lawful to any house of religion to take the lands of any, and to lease the same to him of whom it received them. If any from henceforth give his lands to any religious house, and thereupon be convict, the gift shall be utterly void, and the land shall accrue, to the lord of the fee.' See CHARITABLE USES and MORTMAIN.

The concluding chapter of Magna Charta sets forth that its establishment was bought from the Crown, like most of our great liberties, with a fifteenth of our movable property, in consideration of which the king grants 'for us and our heirs, that neither we nor our heirs shall attempt to do anything whereby the liberties contained in this charter may be infringed or broken. And if anything should be done to the contrary, it shall be held of no force or effect.' Consult 2 Hallam's Middle Ages, p. 326 ; McKechnie's Magna Charta.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sont appelés les deux grandes chartres. 2 Inst. 570.—(Magna Charta and the Charta of the Forest are called the two great charters.) 'The two famous charters of English liberties, magna carta and carta de foresta' (4 Bl. Com. 423).

Magna precaria, a great or general reaping-day.

Magnus portus, the town and port of Portsmouth.

Maha-gen, a banker or any great shop-keeper among the Hindoos.

Mahal [Indian, literally a place], any land or public fund producing a revenue to the government of Hindostan. Mahalaat is the plural.

Malden, an instrument formerly used in Scotland for beheading criminals. It consisted of a broad piece of iron about a foot square, very sharp in the lower part, and loaded above with lead. At the time of execution it was pulled up to the top of a frame about eight feet high, with a groove on each side for it to slide in. The prisoner's neck being fastened to a bar underneath, and the sign being given, the maiden was let loose, and the head severed from the body. The prototype of the guillotine.

Malden Rents, a noble paid by the tenants of some manors on their marriage. This was said to be given to the lord for his omitting the custom of mercheta, whereby he was to have the first night's lodgings with his tenant's wife; but it seems more probably to have been a fine for licence to marry a daughter.—Jac. Law Dict.

Malignagium [fr. malignem, Fr.], a brasier's shop, or perhaps a house.

Malhem. See MAYHEM.

Malhematus, maimed or wounded.

Mail [fr. malle, Fr., a trunk], a bag of letters carried by the post, or the vehicle which carries the letters. As to theft, embezzlement by Post Office officer, or receiving mail bag, see Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 12, 18, 33, and Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), ss. 50, 52, 55. Also, armour.

Malle, a kind of ancient money, or silver halfpence; a small rent.—Jac. Law Dict.

Mails and Duties, this phrase means rents, the word 'Mails' being an old coin, the word 'Duties' referring to the services as opposed to the money rents, which used to be exigible. Nowadays the term is seldom used except in 'Action of M. and D.', which is an action to enforce payment of rents: assignation of M. and D., commonly known as assignation of rents and prescription of M. and D. The years of prescription only begin to run when the tenant leaves, and the period is five years.

Maiming, depriving of any necessary part. See MAYHEM.

Mained, a false oath, perjury.

Maine-port, a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes.

Mainour, Manour, or Meinnour, a thing taken away which is found in the hand (in manu) of the thief who took it.

Mainovre, or Mainœuvre, a trespass committed by hand. See 7 Rich. 2, c. 4.

Mainpernable, that which may be held to bail. See Stat. Westm. I., 3 Edw. 1, c. 15.

Mainpernor [fr. main, Fr., hand, and preneur, taker]. See MAINPRIZE.

Mainprize [fr. main, Fr., and pris, taken]. The writ of mainprize, manucaptio, was a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take sureties for a prisoner's appearance, usually called mainpernors, and to set him at large.—3 Bl. Com. 128; Fitz. N. B. 250.

Main-rent, vassalage.

Mainsworn, forsworn.

Maintainers, persons who second or support a cause in which they are not interested, by assisting either party with money, or in any other manner. See next title.

Maintenance, an officious intermeddling in a suit which in no wise concerns one, by assisting either party with money or otherwise to prosecute or defend it; both actionable and indictable (see Bradlaugh v. Newdegate, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 1), and invalidates contracts involving it. By the Roman Law it was a species of crimen falsi to enter into any confederacy, or do any act to support another's law-suits, by money, witnesses, or patronage.—4 Bl. Com. 134.

It is either ruralis, in the country, as where one assists another in his pretensions to lands, by taking or holding the possession of them for him; or where one stirs up quarrels or suits in the country; or it is curialis, in a court of justice, where one officiously intermeddles in a suit depending in any court, which does not belong to him, and with which he has nothing to do.—2 Rol. Abr. 115. Maintaining suits in the spiritual courts is not within the statutes relating to maintenance.—Cro. Eliz. 549. A man may, however, maintain a suit in which he has any interest, actual or contingent; and also a suit of his near kinsman, servant, or poor neighbour, out of charity and compassion, with impunity.—Bac. Abr., tit. 'Maintenance.'

Further, any legitimate common interest will justify a person or persons jointly subscribing to pay the expenses of a suit, even when it is carried on by a third party, and a person will not be guilty of maintenance in indemnifying his customers from actions brought against them by a trade rival (British Cash, etc., Conveyors v. Lamson Store Service Co., 1908, 1 K. B. 1006). An action for maintenance does not lie without proof of special damage. The success of the maintained action is not a bar to the right of action for maintenance (Neville v. London Express Newspaper, 1919, A. C. 368).

This offence is punished by Common Law, and also by 1 Rich. 2, c. 4, by fine and imprisonment; and by 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, by a forfeiture of 10*l.* See CHAMPERTY.

As to maintenance of infants and persons until they attain a vested interest if they are entitled to the intermediate income or otherwise as provided under settlements created after 1925, see Trustee Act, 1925, s. 31, reproducing and extending the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 43, and Re Raine, 1929, 1 Ch. 716; see also the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 47 (1) (ii.), and Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 6; and as to maintenance in matrimonial cases, Judic. Act, 1925, ss. 187, 190 et seq.; for the law before 1926, consult Jarman or Godefray on Trusts, and Wolst. and Cherry, Conveyancing Statutes. As a rule, powers or trusts for the maintenance of children and accumulation of the residue of income were included in all carefully drafted settlements and wills.

Malsnada, a family.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 219.

Maison de Dieu. See MEASON-DUE.

Malsura, a house or farm.

Majestas is defined by Ulpian (Dig. 48, tit. 4, s. 1) to be 'crimen illud quod adversus populum Romanum vel adversus securitatem ejus committitur.' He then gives various instances of the crime of majestas, some of which pretty nearly correspond to treason in English law; but all the offences included under majestas comprehend more than our term treason. One of the offences included in majestas was the effecting, aiding in, or planning the death of a magistratus populi Romani, or of one who had imperium or potes-tas. Though the phrase 'crimen majestatis' was used, the complete expression was crimen læsæ majestatis.

Majesty, a title of sovereigns. It was first used among ourselves in the reign of Henry VIII.

Major regalia, the greater rights of the Crown, such as regard the royal character and authority.—2 Steph. Com.

Majority. 1. The full age of 21 years;

a minor comes of age in the eye of the law on the day preceding the anniversary of his birth. 2. The greater number. In a deliberative body, questions are ordinarily decided by a majority of those present at a meeting and voting, provided that the whole number present be not less than a certain quorum (see QUORUM) of the whole body. See, e.g., Local Government Act, 1933, s. 75, and Parts I. to V. of the Third Schedule thereto. See MEETING, and as to restrictions upon the powers of a company exercised by a majority in general meeting, see Re Hoare & Co. Ltd., 150 L. T. 374.

Majua, a petty dealer in Hindostan.

Majun, a banker or considerable trader in Hindostan.

Majus jus, a writ or law proceeding in some customary manors, in order to try a right to land.

Maker, the person who signs a promissory note; by making it he 'engages that he will pay it according to its tenour, and is precluded from denying to a holder in due course the existence of the payee and his then capacity to endorse.'—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 88.

Mal, a prefix, meaning bad, wrong, fraudulent; as mal-administration, mal-practice, malversation, etc.

Mala, a mail, or port-mail; a bag to carry letters, etc.

Malâ fide, in bad faith.

Mala fides, bad faith; the opposite to bona fides, good faith.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam. 6 Co. 39.—(Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed.) See CLERICAL ERROR.

Mala in se, acts which are wrong in themselves, whether prohibited by human laws or not, as distinguished from mala prohibita. Of this class are murder, robbery, perjury, planning or provoking riot, injury to persons, or destruction of property, etc. See CRIME, and 1 Steph. Com.; 1 Broom and Hadley's Com. 52.

Malandrinus, a thief or pirate.—Walsing. 338.

Mala praxis. If the health of an individual be injured by the unskilful or negligent conduct of a surgeon, or apothecary, or general practitioner, in assuming to heal a dislocated or fractured limb, or internal disorder, an action for compensation may be sustained (Seare v. Prentice, (1807) 8 East, 348).

Mala prohibita, wrongs which are prohibited by human laws, but are not necessarily mala in se, or wrongs in themselves, e.g., contraventions of the Shops Acts; breaches of positive law.—4 Steph. Com.

Malary, judicial, belonging to a judge or magistrate.—Roberts' Indian Gloss.

Malberge [mons placit, Lat.], a hill where the people assembled at a court, like our assizes, which by the Scots and Irish were called parley hills.—Du Cange.

Malconna, a treasury or storehouse in Hindustan.—Rob. Ind. Gloss.

Malecreditus, one of bad credit, who is not to be trusted.—Fleta, l. 1, c. xxxviii.

Maledicta expositio quæ corrumpit textum. 4 Co. 35.—(It is a bad exposition which corrupts the text.)

Malediction, a curse such as was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches or religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

Malefaction, a crime, an offence.

Malefactor, a contemptible or formidable wretch; 'one who commits a malum in se.'

Maleficium, waste; damage; injury.—Civ. Law.

Maleson, or Malison [fr. malum, Lat., evil; and sonus, a sound], a curse.—Bailey.

Malesworn, or Malsworn, forsworn.—Cowd.

Maletent, Maletoute, a toll for every sack of wool.—25 Edw. 1, c. 7.

Malfeasance, the commission of some evil or unlawful act.

Malice [fr. malitia, Lat.], a formed design of doing mischief to another, technically called malitia præcogitata, or malice prepense or aforethought. It is either express, as when one with a sedate and deliberate mind and formed design kills another, which formed design is evidenced by certain circumstances discovering such intentions, as lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do him some bodily harm; or implied, as where one wilfully poisons another; in such a deliberate act the law presumes malice, though no particular enmity can be proved. The nature of implied malice is also illustrated by the maxim, 'Culpa lata dolo æquiparatur'—when negligence reaches a certain point it is the same as intentional wrong.—Every one must be taken to intend that which is the natural consequence of his actions—if any one acts in exactly the same way as he would do if he bore express malice to another, he cannot be allowed to say he does not.—4 Steph. Com.

'Malice in common acceptance means ill-will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse': Bayley, J., in Bromage v. Prosser, (1825) 4 B. & C. at 255; and see McPherson v. Daniels, (1829) 10 B. & C. 272.

Ill-will or improper motive is often called actual or express malice, or malice in fact, to distinguish it from malice in law, which merely denotes absence of legal excuse. To amount to murder, a killing must be committed with 'malice aforethought.' 'Aforethought' does not necessarily imply premeditation, but it implies intention, which must necessarily precede the act intended. See Archbold, Crim. Pleading and Practice, sub tit. 'Homicide,' and MANSLAUGHTER.

In the law of defamation the defence that the occasion was privileged (i.e., one of qualified privilege) may be rebutted by establishing actual malice in the defendant, for he is not entitled to protection if he uses such an occasion for some indirect and wrong motive: see Clark v. Molyneux, (1877) 3 Q. B. D. 246. Similarly, proof of actual malice will defeat the defence of fair comment. See Odgers on Libel.

An act lawful in itself is not converted by malice into an actionable wrong (Allen v. Flood, 1898, A. C. 1).

Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), consolidating and amending the law as to arson (q.v.) and other damage to property. The Act has been amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 14; also (animals), 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27, and 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 17; (fishing waters), 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16; (trees and commons), 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86; (ancient monuments), 19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17, and other Acts.

Malicious Injuries to the Person. See Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), consolidating and amending the law as to murder, manslaughter, wounding, etc.

Malicious Prosecution, a prosecution, preferred maliciously, without reasonable or probable cause; the remedy is an action on the case, in which damages may be recovered. The allegation of want of probable cause must be substantively and expressly proved, and cannot be implied; but it is for the judge, not the jury, to determine upon it (Abrath v. North Eastern R. Co., (1886) 11 App. Cas. 247; Cox v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, 1905, A. C. 168). Animus injuriæ cannot be inferred from the mere fact that the prosecution has failed (Corea v. Peiris, 1909, A. C. 549). See Addison on Clerk and Lindell on Torts.

Malignare, to malign or slander; also to maim.

Malik, a proprietor.—Indian.

Malins' (Sir Richard) Act.—The Married Women's Reversionary Interest Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57), enabling married women to dispose of reversionary interests in personality; see now Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 167 and 169.

Malitia præcogitata, malice aforethought. See MALICE.

Malitia supplet ætatem. Dyer, 104 b.—(Malice supplies [the want of] age); as in the case of a child between 7 and 14 years of age, who can be convicted of a crime if, and if only, it be affirmatively shown that he had sufficient capacity to know that the act which he did was wrong (R. v. Owen, (1830) 4 C. & P. 236). But see now CHILDREN.

Mallum and Mallus. See METHEL.

Mal grato, in spite; unwillingly.

Malt mulna, a quern or malt mill.—Mat. Par.

Malt-shot, or Malt-scot, a certain payment for making malt.—Somner.

Malt-tax, abolished by the Inland Revenue Act, 1880 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 20), which substitutes a duty on beer.

Malta, an island in the Mediterranean, a Crown Colony governed by the Crown, by a Governor and a Legislature; see Malta Constitution Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 43), and Letters Patent, thereby validated, and the Malta (Letters Patent) Constitution Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 29).

Malum in se. See MALA IN SE.

Malum non præsumitur. 4 Co. 72.—(Evil is not presumed.)

Malum prohibitum. See MALA PROHIBITA.

Malum quo communis eo pejus. (The more common an evil is, the worse.)

Malus usus est abolendus. Litt. s. 212.—(An evil or invalid custom [or an abuse] ought to be abolished).—Broom's Max.

Malvelles [fr. malveillance, Fr.], ill-will; crimes and misdemeanours; malicious practices.

Malvelsa, a warlike engine to batter and beat down walls.—Mat. Par.

Malvelsin [fr. mauvais voisin, Fr.], an ill neighbour, a warlike engine so called.—Mat. Par.

Malvels procurers, such as were wont to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice.—Art. super Chart. c. x.

Malversation, misbehaviour in an office, employment, or commission, as breach of trust, extortion, etc.

Man, Isle of (Mona), in the Irish Sea, off the coast of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire, granted by Henry the Fourth and James the First to members of the Stanley family, whose successor in the female line, the Duke of Athol, sold it to the Crown for 70,000*l.*, being about ten years' purchase of the annual revenue, by the Isle of Man Purchase Act, 1765 (5 Geo. 3, c. 26).

The Isle of Man is not subject to British Acts of Parliament unless expressly named therein (as in the Customs Acts, for the purposes of which, by s. 277 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, it is deemed part of the United Kingdom), being legislated for by its own parliament, called the House of Keys, but an Isle of Man (Customs) Act is passed every year by the Imperial Parliament.

Mana, an old woman.—Jac. Law Dict.

Manacle [fr. manus, Lat.], chain for the hands; shackle.

Manager, a superintendent, a conductor, or director. As to the appointment of a manager of a business at the instance of a mortgagee, see Coote on Mortgages. As to managers appointed by debenture holders, see Companies Act, 1929, s. 86, and Part VI. of that Act relating to receivers and managers. As to special manager, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 10; Companies Act, 1929, s. 209.

Managium, a mansion-house or dwelling-place.

Manbote, a compensation or recompense for homicide, particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal, the amount of which was regulated by that of wer.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Manca, Mancus, or Mancusa, a square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence.

Manceps [Lat.], a farmer of the public revenues; one who sold an estate with a promise of keeping the purchaser harmless; one who bought an estate by outcry; one who undertook a piece of work and gave security for the performance.

Manche-present, a bribe; a present from the donor's own hand.

Manchester became a municipal borough in 1838 and a county borough by the Local Government Act, 1888. Its bishopric was established by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 108; as to the cathedral, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 69; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 114, s. 15. The 'Manchester

Parish Division Act, 1850,' is 13 & 14 Vict. c. 41.

Mancipate, to enslave ; to bind ; to tie.

Mancipatio. Every father, in the Roman law, had such an authority over his son, that before the son could be released from his subjection and made free he must be twice sold and bought, his natural father being in the first instance the vendor. The vendee was called pater fiduciarius. After this fictitious bargain, the pater fiduciarius sold him again to his natural father, who could then, but not till then, manumit or make him free. The imaginary sale was called mancipatio ; and the act of giving him liberty, or setting him free, was called emancipatio.

Also selling or alienating of certain lands by the balance or money paid by weight, and in the presence of five witnesses. This mode of alienation took place only among Roman citizens, and that only in respect to certain estates situated in Italy, which were called mancipia.—Encyc. Londin. Abolished by Justinian, when he obliterated the distinction between things mancipi and things nec mancipi. See Sand. Just. ; Maine's Ancient Law.

Manciple [fr. manceps, Lat.], a clerk of the kitchen, or caterer, especially in colleges.

Mandamus (we command). (1) A high prerogative writ of a most extensive remedial nature. In form it is a command issuing in the king's name from the King's Bench Division of the High Court only, and addressed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature requiring them to do something therein specified, which appertains to their office, and which the Court holds to be consonant to right and justice. It is used principally for public purposes, and to enforce performance of public duties. It enforces, however, some private rights when they are withheld by public officers.

It is a general rule that this writ is only to be issued where a party has no other specific remedy ; and he must apply to the Court without delay. The jurisdiction is altogether in the discretion of the Court. It can only be obtained from the King's Bench Division, and on motion, and not in an action ; (R. S. C., Ord. LIII., r. 4). For rules of procedure, see Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 49-69.

By the Justices Protection Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44), 'Jervis's Act,' s. 5, the Court may, in lieu of a mandamus, grant a rule ordering justices to do any act appertaining to their office, and the County Courts Act, 1888, s. 131 (see now County Courts Act, 1934, s. 114), makes a similar provision as to county court judges.

(2) Ordinary mandamus. Where a plaintiff in an ordinary action is personally interested in the fulfilment of some duty by the defendant he may in certain cases endorse his writ with a claim for a mandamus, either with or without a claim for other relief, and an order in such action has the same effect as a writ of mandamus formerly had ; see Ord. LIII., rr. 1-4.

An interlocutory mandamus may be granted by order of the Court in all cases in which it shall appear to the Court to be just or convenient that such order should be made (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (8)), (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 45 (1)).

Mandant, the principal in the contract of mandate.

Mandata licita strictam recipiunt interpretationem ; sed illicita latam et extensam. Bac. Max. Reg. 16.—(Lawful authority is to receive a strict interpretation ; unlawful authority, a wide and extended interpretation.) See per Byles, J., in Parkes v. Prescott, (1869) L. R. 4 Ex. 182.

Mandatary [fr. mandatarius, Lat.], he to whom a mandate, charge, or commandment is given ; also he that obtains a benefice by mandamus.

Mandate [fr. mandatum, Lat.], a judicial command, charge, commission.

Also, a bailment of goods, without reward, to be carried from place to place, or to have some act performed about them. The person employing is called in the Civil Law mandans or mandator, and the person employed mandatarius or mandatary. The distinction between a mandate and a deposit is that in the latter the principal object of the parties is the custody of the thing ; and the service and labour are merely accessorial. In the former, the labour and service are the principal objects of the parties, and the thing is merely accessorial. Three things are necessary to create a mandate : (1) that there should exist something which should be the subject of the contract, or some act or business to be done ; (2) that it should be done gratuitously ; (3) that the parties should voluntarily intend to enter into the contract. A mandatary incurs three obligations : (1) to do the act which is the object of the mandate, and with which he is charged ; (2) to bring to it all the care and diligence that it requires ; (3) to render an account of his doings to the mandator. A mandator contracts to reimburse a mandatory for all expenses and charges reasonably incurred in the execution of the mandate, and also to indemnify him for his liability on all contracts which arise incidentally in the proper discharge of his duty. The contract of mandate may be dissolved either by the renunciation of the mandatory at any time before he has entered upon its execution, or by his death; for, being founded in personal confidence, it is not presumed to pass to his representatives, unless there is some special stipulation to that effect. But if the mandate be partly executed, there may in some cases arise a personal obligation on the part of the representatives to complete it. Story on Bailments, c. iii.

The granting of royal mandates to judges for interfering in private causes constituted a branch of the royal prerogative, which was given up by Edward I. And 1 W. & M. st. 2, c. 2, declares that the pretended power of suspending or dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal.

Mandated Territories. Countries and islands, the regulation of which has been entrusted by mandate of the League of Nations to governments who are willing and able to take over the responsibility of government and development of the country. Countries which are now governed under mandate are Palestine, parts of Togoland, Cameroons, and East Africa, by Great Britain; South West Africa, by the Union of South Africa; part of New Guinea, by the Commonwealth of Australia; Nauru Island and the Samoa Islands, by New Zealand; part of East Africa, by Belgium; the Caroline Islands, by Japan; and parts of Togoland, Cameroons, Syria and Lebanon, by France.—Halsb., L. E.

Mandati Dies, Maundy Thursday.

Mandati, Panes de, loaves of bread given to the poor upon Maundy Thursday.

Mandator, director. See MANDATE.

Mandatory, perceptive; directory.

Mandatory Injunction. An injunction requiring the performance of some Act, e.g., the removal of a building or obstruction; see R. S. C. Ord. L., r. 6, and notes in A. P.

Mandatum, a fee or retainer given by the Romans to the procuratores and advocati. Mandatum is also used in the sense of a command from a superior to an inferior. See also MANDATE.

Mandavi ballivo (I have commanded the bailiff). If a bailiff of a liberty have the execution and return of a writ, the sheriff may return that he commanded the bailiff to execute it; and if the bailiff have not made a return, the sheriff should return that fact accordingly (mandavi ballivo, qui nullum dedit responsum); or if he have made a return, the sheriff should return it.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Manentes [fr. maneo, Lat., to continue], tenants. Obsolete.

Manerium, a manor, which see.

Manerium dicitur a manendo, secundum excellentiam, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis. Co. Litt. 58.—(A manor is so called from 'manendo,' according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm.)

Mangonare, to buy in a market.—Leg. Etheld. c. 24.

Mangonellus, a warlike instrument for casting stones against the walls of a castle.

Mania, mental alienation.

Mania a potu, otherwise denominated delirium tremens, a disease induced from the intemperate use of spirituous liquors or certain other diffusible stimulants.

Manifesta probatione non indigent. 7 Co. 40.—(Things manifest do not require proof.)

Manifesto, or Manifest, a public declaration made by a prince, in writing, showing his intention to begin a war or other enterprise, with the motives that induce him to it, and the reasons on which he founds his rights and pretensions.—Encyc. Londin.

In commercial navigation, a document signed by the master, containing a general statement of the ship and cargo, i.e., the names of the places where the goods have been laden, and the places for which they are destined, the name and tonnage of the vessel, the name of the master, and the place to which the vessel belongs, a particular description of the packages on board, marks, numbers, etc., the goods contained in them, and the names of the shippers and consignees, as far as known. The manifest must be made out, dated, and signed by the captain, at places where the goods, or any part, are taken on board.

Manner, or Malnour [fr. the Fr. manier].

To be taken with the mainour is where a thief is taken with the stolen goods about him—as it were in his hands; that is, in flagrante delicto. In such a case he might be brought into court, arraigned and tried, without indictment.—4 Bl. Com. 308.

Manning, a day's work of a man.

Mannire, to cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there: it is different from bannier; for though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party and that is by the judge.

Mannus, a horse.

Manœuvres, Military. See MILITARY MANŒUVRES.

Manopus, goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. See MANU OPERA.

Manor [fr. manerium, Lat.; manoir, Fr., habitation, or manendo, of abiding there, because the lord usually resided there], an estate in fee-simple in a tract of land granted by the sovereign to a subject (usually of power and consequence) in consideration of certain services to be performed. The tenementales were granted out; the dominicales (whence the term demesne) were reserved to the lord; the barren lands which remained formed the 'wastes'; the whole fee was termed a lordship or barony; and the court appendant to the manor the court baron. Every manor (with some doubtful and unimportant exceptions) is of a date prior to the statute of Quia Emptores (18 Edw. 1, c. 1).

'A manor,' says Mr. Joshua Williams, 'was made by the owner of an estate in fee carving out other estates in fee to be held by other freeholders as his tenants. A manor consists of demesnes and services: of demesnes, that is, of lands of which the freeholder, now become lord of a manor, is seised in his demesne as of fee; of services, namely, of such yearly rent, called rent service, and other services as he reserved in the grant to his tenants of portions of land, which once were his, to be holden by them and their heirs of him and his heirs. Of the demesne, the lord was seised; of the lands held by free tenants by rent or other services, the tenants themselves were seised, each man in his own demesne as of his own fee. Two free tenants, at least, were necessary to constitute a manor; but there might be as many more as the lord could procure to become his men in the manner before mentioned.

'Copyholds, of which I shall speak hereafter, form no part whatever of the essence of a manor. The lord of a manor may have copyholders or may not; but I am not speaking of them at present. The rights and interests of copyholders are entirely apart from those of the freehold tenants of a manor.'—Williams on Seisin, p. 13. See Co. Litt. 58 a; Scriven on Copyholds, p. 1.

A Court Baron is an essential part of a manor, and this Court cannot be held without at least two freeholders as suitors. If there be not two suitors, the manor becomes a reputed manor and continues to have certain manorial rights and franchises (see Vol. and Ch. Conveyancing Statutes, p. 583). For the purposes of the Law of Property Acts, 1922, 1925, etc., 'manor' includes a lordship and reputed manor or lordship (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 205 (1) (ix.).

The land legislation of 1925 has not disturbed the property in fee simple or many valuable rights which are or may be incident to a manor, such as mines, minerals, lime, clay, stone, gravel pits or quarries, whether under the now enfranchised land or not, rights of entry, winning and search for the same; nor have franchises, royalties or privileges in respect of fairs, chase or warren, fisheries and hunting and shooting been affected subject to the enfranchised copyholder's right to disturb or remove soil for roads or building purposes, but Manorial Courts have been abolished, the lord's right to escheat has been transferred to the Crown or the Duchy of Lancaster or of Cornwall, rent and other services except Grand and Petty Serjeanty have been commuted and extinguished. See COPYHOLD and MANORIAL DOCUMENTS.

Manorial Documents, Court Rolls, surveys, maps, terriers, all documents and books relating to the boundaries, franchises, wastes, customs or courts of a manor but not deeds or evidence of title to the manor, are now placed under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls. They may remain in the possession or under the control of the lord of the manor but he shall not be entitled to destroy or wilfully damage them. The Master of the Rolls has power to direct the documents to be sent to the Public Record or local institutions undertaking to be responsible for the preservation and indexing of the documents and the Master of the Rolls may make rules for these purposes. See Law of Property Act, 1924, 2nd Sched., 2 (4).

Man-queller [fr. man and cwellan, Sax.], a murderer.

Manrent, a kind of bond between lord and vassal, by which protection was stipulated on the one hand, and fidelity with personal service on the other.—Rob. Scott. b. 1.

Mansa, or Mansum, a mansion or house.—Spelm.

Manse, a house or habitation, either with or without land. See next title.

Manse, or Mansum presbyteri, the dwelling-house of the clergyman.—Paroch. Antiq. 431. Sometimes called presbyterium.

Manser, a bastard.

Mansion [mansio, Lat., à manendo], the lord's house in a manor. Cf. the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor of London. See next title.

Mansion-house, a dwelling-house.—3 Inst. 64. See LIMITED OWNERS RESIDENCES ACT. The Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, gave (see SETTLED LAND) a tenant for life a power to sell settled land, but by s. 10 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, repealing and re-enacting, with amendments, s. 15 of that Act, the 'principal mansion-house' (unless it be usually occupied as a farmhouse, or its site with its park, etc., do not exceed twenty-five acres in extent) was not to be sold, exchanged, or leased by such tenant for life without the consent of the trustees of the settlement, or the order of the Chancery Division of the High Court. Now, by the Settled Land Act, 1925, under settlements made after 1925, the mansion and park may be sold without the consent of the trustees or leave of the Court unless the settlement otherwise provides. For discussion on the meaning of the term 'the principal mansion-house,' see Gilbey v. Rush, 1906, 1 Ch. 11.

Manslaughter, the unlawful killing of another without malice express or implied. It is either—

- (a) Voluntary, upon a sudden heat ; or,
- (b) Involuntary, upon the commission of some other unlawful act, or by culpable negligence.

Both are felony, and punished, at the discretion of the Court, by penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or by a fine.—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 5.

On the principle that any greater felony includes a less felony, a person indicted for murder may be convicted of manslaughter. See Steph. Dig., art. 272. See MURDER.

A high degree of negligence is required before a charge of manslaughter can be established—the breach of a statutory duty causing death is not necessarily manslaughter (Andrews v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 1937, A. C. 576). See CHANCE.

Mansum capitale, the manor-house or lord's court.—Paroch. Antiq. 150.

Mansura, the habitation of people in the country.—Domesday.

Mansus, a farm.—Selden's Hist. of Tithes, 62.

Mantea, a long robe or mantle.—Old Records.

Mantheoff [fr. mannus, Lat., a horse ; and theft, Sax., a thief], a horse-stealer.—Leg. Alb.

Manticulate, to pick pockets.—Bailey.

Man-trap, engines to catch trespassers, unlawful, unless set in a dwelling-house for defence between sunset and sunrise.—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 31.

Manualla beneficia, the daily distributions of meat and drink to the canons and other members of cathedral churches for their present subsistence.

Manualls obediencia, sworn obedience or submission upon oath.

Manucapto, a writ that lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, etc., who cannot be admitted to bail by the sheriff or others having power to let to mainprise.—Fitz. N. B. 249. See MAINPRIZE.

Manucaptor, one who stands bail for another.

Manufacture, anything made by art. As to a patent for a manufacture, see LETTERS-PATENT. As to the operation of the Factory Acts, see that title, and consult Notcutt on the Factory and Workshop Acts.

Manu forti (with strong hand).

Manumission, the act of giving freedom to slaves. Among the Romans it was performed in three several ways : 1st, when with his master's consent a slave had his name entered in the census or public register of the citizens ; 2nd, when the slave was led before the prætor, and that magistrate laid his wand (vindicta) on his head ; 3rd, when the master, by his will, gave his slave freedom. Among us, in the time of the Conqueror, villeins were manumitted by their master delivering them by the right hand to the viscount or sheriff in full court, showing them the door, giving them a lance and a sword, and proclaiming them free. Others were manumitted by charter. There was also an implied manumission, as when the lord made an obligation for payment of money to the bondman at a certain day, or sued him where he might enter without suit, and the like.—Jac. Law Dict.

Manung, or Monung, the district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Manu opera, stolen goods taken from a thief caught in the act. Manuopera, cattle or any implements used in husbandry.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 1, p. 977.

Manupastus, a domestic ; perhaps the same as lafeta.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Manupes, a foot of full and legal measure.
Manurable, admitting of tillage.

Manus, an oath, from the ceremony of laying the hand on the book; also, the person taking an oath, or compurgator.

Manus mediæ or infimæ homines, men of a mean condition, or of the lowest degree.

Manutenentia, the old writ of maintenance.—Reg. Brev. 182.

Manwryth, the value or price at which a man is estimated, according to his degree; apparently synonymous with wer-geld. It occurs only in the laws of Hlothære and Eadric.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Map. A graphic delineation of territory. See ORDNANCE SURVEY; PLAN.

Mara, a mere, lake, or great pond, that cannot be drawn dry.—Par. Antiq. 418; Dugd. Mon., tom. 1, p. 666.

Marcatus, the rent of a mark by the year anciently reserved in leases, etc.

Merchandises avariées [Fr.], damaged goods.

Marchers, or Lords Marchers, those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales and Scotland, who, in times past, had their laws and regal power, until they were abolished by 27 Hen. 8, c. 26.

Marches, the boundaries of countries and territories; the limits between England, Wales, and Scotland. Also, in Scotland, the boundaries between private properties, which are said to 'march' with one another.—Co. Litt. 106 b.

Marches, Court of, an abolished tribunal in Wales, where pleas of debt or damages, not above the value of 50*l.*, were tried and determined.—Cro. Car. 384.

Marchet, or Marchetta, a pecuniary fine, anciently paid by the tenant to his lord for the marriage of one of the tenant's daughters. This custom obtained, with some difference, throughout all England and Wales, as also in Scotland; and it still continues to obtain in some places. It is also denominated gwahr-merched, i.e., maid's-fee.—Co. Litt. 117 b, 140 a.

Marchioness [formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio], a dignity in a woman answerable to that of marquess in a man, conferred either by creation, or by marriage with a marquess.

Mare Clausum, the title of a celebrated work by Selden, written in answer to the treatise called Mare Liberum.

Mare Liberum, a famous treatise by Grotius, to show that all nations have an equal right to use the sea.

Mareschall, or Mareschal, a marshal.

Marettum [fr. marel, marais, Fr., a fen or marsh], marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers.—Co. Litt. 5.

Margarine. By the Food and Drugs Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), defined as any article of food, whether mixed with butter or not, which resembles butter and is not milk-blended butter.

Every packet of margarine sold must be clearly marked as such (s. 6). Factories and wholesale premises must be registered (s. 8). A register of consignments must be kept (s. 9). See, generally, Part II. of the Act.

Margarine-Cheese, any substance, whether compound or otherwise, which is prepared in imitation of cheese, and which contains fat not derived from milk. See, generally, Food and Drugs Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), Part II.

Marginal note, an abstract of a reported case, a summary of the facts, or brief statement of the principle decided, which is prefixed to the report of the case, usually in the earlier reports placed in the margin, and corresponding to the head-notes of later times and the present day; marginal notes are often conveniently appended to documents of any kind.

The marginal notes which appear in the statute-books as printed by the King's Printers have not the authority of the legislature, and cannot alter the interpretation of the text. See Claydon v. Green, (1868) L. R. 3 C. P. 5, per Willes, J.; Sutton v. Sutton, (1882) 22 Ch. D. 5, per Jessel, M.R. In the Revised Statutes they have been revised throughout to make them in accordance with the text; and in Chitty's Statutes of Practical Utility they have been much added to, abridged, or altered.

In some private Acts of Parliament the marginal notes may form part of the Act (Re Woking, etc., Act, 1911, [1914] 1 Ch. 300, per Phillimore, L.J.).

Marinariorum capitaneus, an admiral or warden of the ports.—Par. Antiq.

Marinarius, a mariner or seaman.—Par. Antiq.

Marine, a general name for the navy of a kingdom or state; as also the whole economy of naval affairs, or whatever respects the building, rigging, arming, equipping, navigating, and fighting of ships. It comprehends also the government of naval armaments, and the state of all the persons employed therein, whether civil or military. Also one of the marines. See MARINES.

Marine Insurance. See INSURANCE.

Marine Society, a charitable institution for the purpose of apprenticing boys to the naval service, etc., incorporated by 12 Geo. 3, c. 67.

Marine-store Dealers. See Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 533-540, re-enacting Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 480-483; by which any dealer in 'anchors, cables, sails, old junk, old iron, or other marine stores of any kind, must have his name, with the words "dealer in marine stores," painted on all his warehouses and places of deposit, must not purchase marine stores from any person apparently under sixteen, must enter in a book all such marine stores as he may become possessed of, and may not cut up cables, etc., without obtaining a "permit" from a justice of the peace, which permit must be advertised before the dealer proceeds to act thereon.' A person as so defined is, by the Children Act, 1933 (see CHILDREN), prohibited by s. 9 from purchasing 'old metal' from a person under 16. See also Public Health Amendment Act, 1907, s. 86. See METALS, DEALERS IN OLD.

Marines, Royal, a military force drilled as infantry, whose special province is to serve on board ships of war when in commission. The force was first established about the middle of the 18th century. When serving on board ship, their discipline is regulated by the Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109); and see 44 & 45 Vict. c. 38; when on shore, by an Act annually passed, called the Army (Annual) Act.

Marischal, an officer in Scotland, who, with the Lord High Constable, possessed a supreme itinerant jurisdiction in all crimes committed within a certain space of the Court, wherever it might happen to be.

Mariscus, a marshy or fenny ground.—Domesday; Co. Litt. 5 a.

Maritagio amisso per defaultam, an obsolete writ for the tenant in frank-marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

Maritagium, the portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. Also, the power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony.—Spelm. See 1 Reeves (Finslason's Edition), 171.

Maritagium est aut liberum aut servitio obligatum; liberum maritagium dicitur ubi donator vult quod terra sibi data quiescat sit et libera ab omni seculari servitio. Co. Litt. 21.—(A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called frank-marriage when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service.)

Maritaglium habere, for Maritare, to have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

Marital [fr. maritus, Lat.], pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.

Marital Rights. Rights of a husband. Where a woman, during a treaty for marriage, made a settlement of property without the concurrence of her intended husband, the husband after the marriage was entitled to have such settlement set aside as a 'fraud on his marital rights' (see Strathmore v. Bowes, (1789) 1 Ves. Jun. 22; 1 Wh. & T. L. C.); but the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), has virtually abolished this right of the husband, which was founded on the rule of the Common Law (abrogated by that statute) that the property of the wife became by marriage the property of the husband. The term is sometimes used as meaning conjugal rights (q.v.).

Maritima Angliæ, the profits and emoluments arising to the Crown from the sea, which anciently were collected by sheriffs; but they were afterwards granted to the Lord High Admiral.—Par. 8 Hen. 3, m. 4.

Maritime Courts. These were formerly the High Court of Admiralty and its court of appeal, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 16, the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty was transferred to and vested in the High Court of Justice; and all causes and matters pending in that court, or which would have been within its exclusive cognizance, were assigned to a division of the High Court, called the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (ibid., s. 34) (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (3)). The Admiralty jurisdiction of the High Court was extended by s. 5 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1920 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 22 (1) (a)) to cases relating to the use or hire of a ship or carriage of goods in a ship, provided that the owner or part owner of the ship is domiciled in England or Wales. The appeal from the Admiralty branch of that division lies to the Court of Appeal (ibid., s. 18 (5)) (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 26). Courts of Vice-Admiralty are established in his Majesty's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. See Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 27), and ss. 5 and 6 of the Statute of Westminster (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4), relating, inter alia, to s. 4 of the Act of 1890, as to continuation or rescission of the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty Courts in any Dominion; and consult Williams & Bruce's Admiralty Practice; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Admiralty.'

Maritime Law, the law relating to harbours, ships, and seamen. An important branch of the commercial law of maritime nations; divided into a variety of departments, such as those about harbours, property of ships, duties and rights of masters and seamen, contracts of affreightment, average salvage, etc. No system or code of maritime law has ever been issued by authority in Great Britain. The laws and practices that now obtain amongst us have been founded on the practice of merchants, the principles of the Civil Law, the laws of Oleron and Wisby, the works of jurists, the judicial decisions of our own and foreign countries, etc. Though still susceptible of amendment, our system corresponds more nearly than any other system of maritime law with those universally recognized principles of justice and general convenience on which merchants and navigators should act.

The decisions of Lord Mansfield did much to fix the principles and to improve and perfect the maritime law of England. It is also under great obligations to Lord Stowell. The decisions of the latter chiefly have reference to questions of neutrality, and of the conflicting pretensions of belligerents and neutrals; but the principles and doctrines which he unfolds throw a strong light on all branches of maritime law. It has, indeed, been alleged that his lordship favoured the claims of belligerents. But his judgments must be regarded, allowing for this bias, as among the noblest monuments of judicial wisdom.—McCull Comm. Dict.

Maritime Lien.—A maritime lien is a claim which attaches to the res, i.e., the ship, freight, or cargo. It may arise ex delicto, e.g., compensation for damage by collision, or ex contractu, for services rendered to the res; but it is strictly confined to services such as salvage, supply of necessities to the ship, and seamen's wages, and the courts show no tendency to extend the privilege (see The Ripon City, 1897, P. 226). Thus for ordinary work done upon a ship, such as repairs, there will be no maritime lien, but there may be a possessory lien so long as possession is retained (Ex parte Willoughby, (1881) 16 Ch. D. 604). The privilege when once it attaches will not be affected by any change in the possession of the res. See, further, The Henrich Björn, (1886) 11 App.

Cas. 270; Foong Tai & Co. v. Buchheister & Co., 1908, A. C. 458.

Mark [fr. marc, Welsh; mearc, Sax.; merche, Dut.; marque, Fr.], a token; an impression; a proof; an evidence; licence of reprisals; also, formerly, a coin of the value of 13s. 4d.

In commerce, a certain character struck or impressed on various kinds of commodities, either to show the place where they were made, and the person who made them, or to witness that they have been viewed and examined by the officers charged with the inspection of manufactures; or to show that the duties imposed thereon have been paid. It is also used to indicate the price of a commodity. If one use the mark of another to do him damage, an action on the case will lie, and an injunction may be obtained. See TRADE MARKS.

Those who are unable to write, sign a cross, for their mark, when they execute any document. See MARKSMAN.

Market [anciently written mercator, fr. mercatus, Lat.], a public time and place of buying and selling; also purchase and sale. It differs from the forum, or market of antiquity, which was a public market-place on one side only, the other sides being occupied by temples, theatres, etc.

A market can only be set up by virtue of a royal grant, or by long and immemorial usage, which presupposes a grant.

See FAIRS; and Public Health Act, 1875, s. 167, the Public Health Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 6), and the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 14); Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts, 1886 to 1926.

As to disturbance of market, see Goldsmid v. Great Eastern Railway Co., (1884) 9 App. Cas. 927; A.-G. v. Horner (No. 2), 1913, 2 Ch. 140. In City of London Fruit Corporation v. Lyons, Sons & Co. Ltd., 1936, Ch. 78, it was held that any member of the public has a right of access to a franchise market on payment of tolls and observance of bye-laws for the purpose of conducting sales, and that a sale by auction in the vicinity was not a disturbance. Consult Pease and Chitty on Markets and Fairs, and see MARKETS AND FAIRS AND COPYHOLDS.

Market Overt, an open or public market. Contracts of sale which transfer the property as against a real owner though not the seller are binding, if made according to the following rules:—(1) The sale must be in a place that is open, so that any one who passes may see it, and that is proper for the sale of such goods ; (2) it must be an actual sale for a valuable consideration ; (3) the buyer must not know that the seller has a wrongful possession of the goods sold ; (4) the sale must not be fraudulent between two to bar a third person of his right ; (5) there must be a sale and a contract by persons able to contract ; (6) the contract must be originally and wholly in the market overt ; (7) toll ought to be paid where required by statute ; (8) the sale ought not to be in the night, though, if the sale be made in the night, it may bind the parties.—The Case of Market Overt, 5 Rep. 83 ; and see Hargreave v. Spink, 1892, 1 Q. B. 25 ; and Ardath Tobacco Co. Ltd. v. Ocker, 1930, T. L. R. 177, distinguishing a sale to, from a sale by, the trader.

By s. 22 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, 'where goods are sold in market overt, according to the custom of the market, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith and without notice of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller,' but that section does not apply to the sale of horses (see that title), or to Scotland, and there is no corresponding law in Scotland.

By a special custom of the City of London, goods on sale to the public in shops to which the public have general access on the usual shopping days, between sunrise and sunset, are in market overt.

Although the true owner may lose his property by a sale in market overt, he still has his remedies, e.g., for conversion against the seller (Peer v. Humphrey, (1835) 2 Ad. & El. 495).

Market, Court of the Clerk of the. The court of the clerk of the market was incident to every fair and market in the kingdom, to punish misdemeanours therein ; as a court of piepoudre was to determine all disputes relating to private or civil property. The object of this jurisdiction was principally the recognizance of weights and measures, to try whether they were according to the true standard thereof, which standard was anciently committed to the custody of the bishop, who appointed some clerk under him to inspect abuses ; and hence this officer, though usually a layman, was called the clerk of the market.—4 Bl. Com. 275. His functions are now discharged by inspectors under the Weights and Measures Act. See WRIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Market Garden. A garden on which vegetables and fruit are grown for sale. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, which repealed the Market Gardens Compensation Act, 1895, has itself been repealed and replaced by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, which consolidated the law relating to Agricultural Holdings (see that title). Sect. 57 of this last Act defines a 'market garden' as meaning 'a holding cultivated wholly or mainly for the purpose of the trade or business of market gardening.' Market garden includes part of private premises so treated (Saunders-Jacob v. Yates, 1933, 2 K. B. 240). Schedule III. gives the special improvements for which a market gardener can claim compensation ; and see special provisions in ss. 48 and 49. See HOLDING.

Market Geld, the toll of a market.

Market Price. See VALUE.

Market Towns, those towns which are entitled to hold markets.—1 Steph. Com.

Marketable, such things as may be sold ; those for which a buyer may be found. See FAIRS.

Markets and Fairs. The right to hold a market or fair, i.e., to hold organized meetings of persons for the purpose of buying and selling, is derived from a royal grant either actual or to be presumed from long usage. Markets and fairs in large towns of modern growth are, however, frequently held under special Acts which incorporate the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 14), or under the Public Health Act, 1875. The following Acts regulate markets and fairs :—Metropolitan Fairs Act, 1868 ; Fairs Acts, 1871 and 1873 ; Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts, 1887 and 1891, and 1926. See Newcastle (Duke of) v. Worksop U. D. C., 1902, 2 Ch. 145 ; and consult Pease and Chitty on Markets and Fairs. See FAIRS AND MANOR.

Marketzeld. See MARKET GELD.

Markpenny, a penny anciently paid at the town of Maldon by those who had gutters laid or made out of their houses into the streets.—Jac. Law Dict.

Marksman, a person who cannot write, and therefore makes his mark X only in executing instruments, which mark is sufficient 'signature' of a will (In b. Clarke, (1858) 1 Sw. & Tr. 22) or of a writing which the Statute of Frauds requires to be signed (Baker v. Denning, (1838) 8 A. & E. 94).

Marlborough. See BLenheim.

Marlebridge, Statute of, 52 Hen. 3, A.D. 1267, enacted at Marlebridge, now Marlborough, and principally directed against unlawful and excessive distresses, as to which it is still in force.

Marque [fr. marc, Sax. ; signum, Lat.], a mark, a sign; reprisals. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Marquis, or Marquess [fr. marquis, Fr.; marchio, Lat.; margrave, Ger.], one of the second order of nobility, next in order to a duke. The first marquis was Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, whom Richard II. in the year 1386 made Marquis of Dublin.

A marquis is styled by the sovereign in Royal Commissions, etc., 'our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin.' His title is 'most honourable'; and his sons, by courtesy, are styled lords and his daughters ladies. The eldest son takes by courtesy the next lower title.

Marquisate, the seignior of a marquis.

Marriage. Marriage as understood in Christendom is the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman, to the exclusion of all others (Hyde v. Hyde, (1866) L. R. 1 P. & D. 130). Where a marriage in a foreign country complies with these requirements it is immaterial that under the local law dissolution can be obtained by mutual consent or at the will of either party with merely formal conditions of official registration, and it constitutes a valid marriage according to English law (Nachimson v. Nachimson, 1930, P. 217). Previous to 1753 the validity of marriage was regulated by ecclesiastical law, not touched by any statutory nullity but modified by the Common Law Courts, which sometimes interfered with the Ecclesiastical Courts by prohibition, sometimes themselves decided on the validity of a marriage, presuming a marriage in fact as opposed to lawful marriage. A religious ceremony by an ordained clergyman was essential to a lawful marriage, at all events for dower and heirship; but if in an irregular marriage the Ecclesiastical Court could discern a valid promise to marry, it would order the parties to solemnize marriage 'in facie ecclesiæ' (Baxter v. Buckley, (1752) 1 Lee, 42), and declare any subsequent intermediate marriage by either party invalid. But whether or not a mere contract 'per verba de præsentis' ever constituted by itself a valid marriage in England as regards dower, heirship, and bigamy, is so doubtful that in 1843 the House of Lords and the Court appealed from were equally divided on the point in Reg. v. Millis, (1844) 10 Cl. & F. 534, so that the rule semper præsumitur pro negante applied, and 'judgment was given for the defendant in error.' In 1753 Lord Hardwicke's Act (26 Geo. 2, c. 33), passed to prevent clandestine marriages, required, under pain of nullity, that banns should be published according to the rubric, or a license obtained, and in either case that the marriage should be solemnized in church; and as to minors, that the father, mother, or guardian shall previously consent to the marriage if by license (see Banns). The Act further abolished the suits in the Ecclesiastical Court to compel marriage 'in facie ecclesiæ,' which abolition made more common the action of breach of promise of marriage, which is of comparatively modern date. The strictness of Lord Hardwicke's Act led to marriages being annulled through misnomers in the banns by the fault of one party in putting them up. And the requiring of consent not infrequently worked great evil and injustice; e.g., a marriage was dissolved after twenty-two years' cohabitation and numerous issue by the husband proving that he was a minor at the time of his marriage, though he then swore he was 21. Afterwards 3 Geo. 4, c. 75, validated all such marriages by license without consent where the parties had subsequently lived together until the passing of the Act.

Present Law.—The general purport of the existing law is to require a public ceremony by a clergyman of the Church of England, or by a dissenting minister, or a Roman Catholic priest, in a building registered for marriages, and in the presence of the registrar, or by the registrar in his office, solemnized within the hours of 8 A.M. and 6 P.M. (Marriage (Extension of Hours) Act, 1934), and preceded by and within three months after banns, license, or certificate have been published or obtained.

Church of England marriages are regulated by the Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), which requires publication of banns on three successive Sundays before marriage in the church of the parish wherein the parties dwell, or in the churches of the parishes wherein each of them dwells, if they dwell in different parishes, but by the Marriage Measure, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, No. 3), banns may also be published in a church which is the usual place of worship of either party. In case of license, the Act of 1823 requires fifteen days' residence (Tuckniss v. Alexander, 32 L. J. Ch. 794). It is only if both parties have concurred in falsifying the names in the banns that the marriage can be annulled. As to licenses, neither misnomer, even by concurrence of both parties, nor fraud or perjury in obtaining the license, will affect the validity of the subsequent marriage (Bevan v. Macmahon, (1861) 30 L. J. P. & M. 61). As to consent of parents to the marriage of a minor, by license, one of the parties must swear before the surrogate that consent has been obtained. But if this is false, and one or both parties are minors, the marriage will still be good (R. v. Birmingham, (1828) 8 B. & C. 29), though the guilty party may be punished by being deprived of all property accruing through the marriage; but if the marriage of the minor is by banns the parents must openly dissent in church at time of publication, and if so publication will be void. The marriage must take place according to the rubric; if after banns, in one of the churches where the banns were published; if by license, then in the church specified in the license, in the presence of two witnesses. After the ceremony, the clergyman must enter the particulars of the marriage in the register according to the form laid down in the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 86), the entry to be signed by the clergyman, the parties, and the two witnesses. It may be noted that a clergyman cannot marry himself (Beamish v. Beamish, (1859-61) 9 H. L. C. 274).

Special licenses are granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury on special grounds, as a matter of discretion or to persons of high rank. No period of residence is necessary, and they may authorize marriage at any hour or in any place, whether consecrated or not (see Doe dem. Egremont v. Grazebrook, (1843) 4 Q. B. 406).

Marriage of Nonconformists.—The marriage of dissenters in general, according to their own rites, was first provided for by the Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85), amended by the Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119), all, whether Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, or others, being treated on the same footing, and is now mainly regulated by the Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 58). This Act dispenses with the presence of a registrar, formerly required in all cases except for Jews and Quakers, and allows the marriages to be solemnized in any building registered for religious worship, in the presence of an 'authorized person' certified as such by the trustees or other governing body of the building. Notice must be given by the parties to the superintendent registrar of particulars according to the form in Sched. A to 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, after which, in either two or twenty-one days, the registrar will issue a license or a certificate to marry (see Schedules B and C). The marriage can then, at any time within three months after, take place at the registered chapel specified in the license or certificate, without the presence of the registrar unless the parties require it, according to any ceremony. But in some part of it each of the parties must declare, 'I do solemnly declare, that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A. B., may not be joined in matrimony to C. D.,' and each say to the other, 'I call upon these persons here present to witness that I, A. B., do take thee, C. D., to be my lawful wedded wife (or husband).' After the ceremony the marriage must be entered in the register according to the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 86), above referred to. Marriage can also be solemnized, if the parties so prefer, by the registrar alone, after notice and certificate of license, at the registrar's office, according to the form of words quoted.

Statutory nullities are imposed by s. 22 of the Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), for church marriages, and s. 42 of the Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85), for dissenters' marriages, declaring the marriage null and void if the parties 'knowingly and wilfully intermarry in any other place than a church or chapel where banns may be lawfully published,' or 'in any other place than the church, chapel, registered building, or office specified in the notice and certificate,' or 'without due publication of banns or license from a person having authority to grant the same first obtained,' or 'without due notice to the superintendent registrar, or without certificate of notice duly issued, or without license . . . or without the presence of a registrar or superintendent registrar where the presence of the registrar or superintendent registrar is necessary under the Act, or knowingly and wilfully consent to or acquiesce in the solemnization of such marriage by any person not in holy orders.' As to marriage by a pretended clergyman, Sir William Scott, afterwards Lord Stowell, in Haweke v. Corri, (1820) 2 Hagg. Cons. at p. 288, says: 'It seems to be a generally accredited opinion that, if a marriage is had by the ministration of a person in the church, who is ostensibly in holy orders and is not known or suspected to be otherwise, such marriage shall be supported,' and the wording of the section quoted supports Lord Stowell's views; but see the Marriages Validation Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 28), validating marriages by G. F. W. Ellis, a sham parson who held a living. As to publication of banns or misnomers in surrogate's license, see above. In a notice to a registrar it would appear that accuracy is not essential (Holmes v. Simmons, (1868) L. R. 1 P. & D. 523). As to the interpretation of the words 'knowingly and wilfully' in the sections quoted, see the report of the Marriage Laws Commission, 1868, where it is further laid down that a marriage would be void 'if it were solemnized (however ignorantly) without any publication of banns at all, or any common or special license, or registrar's certificate or license; or if it were solemnized in a church or other place where no banns had been published; or (if the marriage was not by banns) which was manifestly unauthorized by the terms of the license or certificate as actually granted.' But the Courts are wont to presume in favour of marriage that all was done rightly; e.g., that the chapel was registered for marriages, and that the registrar was present at the ceremony. 'By the law of England . . . where a man and woman have long lived together as man and wife, and have been so treated by their friends and neighbours, there is a prima facie presumption that they really are and have been what they profess to be' (The Bredalbane Case, (1867) L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. p. 199, per Lord Cranworth). The presumption of marriage is indeed much stronger than the presumption in regard to other facts (De Thoren v. A.-G., (1876) 1 App. Cas. 686, per Lord Cairns, L.C.). Further, it has become a constitutional practice of the legislature to pass from time to time, as required, special validating Acts to confirm, ex abundanti cautela, marriages where some general defect of form or a slip might throw doubt on them; e.g., where the church or chapel in which the marriage took place was not consecrated, or registered or licensed for marriages. See 44 Geo. 3, c. 77, and other Acts in pari materia, collected in Appendix VII. to the Chronological Table of Statutes; also the Marriages Legalization Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 23), legalizing marriages theretofore performed in sixteen churches or places, one being 'the Parish Room of Cadney, in the parish of Cadney-cum-Howsham,' between 1st January, 1895, and 17th August, 1901, and the Provisional Order (Marriages) Act, 1905 (amended by the Marriage Validity (Provisional Orders) Act, 1924), by which a Secretary of State may make a Provisional Order, requiring confirmation by an Act, to remove invalidity or doubt 'in the case of marriages solemnized in England which appear to him to be invalid or of doubtful validity.'

Essentials of Contract.—The age for marriage had been fixed from the earliest times at 14 for males, 12 for females. But since the Age of Marriage Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 36), if either of the parties to an intended marriage is under the age of 16, the marriage is void. Each party must go through the ceremony, consenting as a free agent without fraud or duress (see Scott v. Sebright, (1886) 12 P. D. 20). They must be unmarried. If a husband or wife is absent for seven years without being heard of, the other party marrying again cannot be prosecuted or convicted for bigamy. But proof that the absent husband or wife was alive at the time of the second marriage will invalidate it. Persons who are divorced may marry again after the decree is made absolute. As to this, and as to how far the English law recognizes foreign divorces, see DIVORCE.

Lunacy existing at the time of marriage avoids the marriage. See Lord Durham's case, (1885) 10 P. D. 80, and 51 Geo. 3, c. 37.

Prohibited Degrees.—Down to 1835, marriages within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity (see 32 Hen. 8, s. 38, printed 1 Rev. Stat. N. S. 370, as referring to 28 Hen. 8, c. 7, s. 7, and 28 Hen. 8, c. 16, s. 2), i.e., the degrees as set out in the Book of Common Prayer, were merely voidable by suit in the Ecclesiastical Court during the life of the parties. Children resulting from such marriages were not illegitimate unless and until the marriage had been declared void by the Ecclesiastical Courts, which declaration made the marriage void ab initio. But the Marriage Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 54), while validating all previous marriages within the degrees of affinity, made all future marriages within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity null and void, thus invalidating marriage with a deceased wife's sister, although contracted in a country, e.g., Denmark, where such a marriage is valid.—Brook v. Brook, (1858) 3 Sm. & Gif. 481, aff. in 1861, 9 H. L. C. 193.

The law prohibiting marriage with a brother's widow or a deceased wife's sister remained long in force in England, in spite of many attempts to follow the example of every state in Europe, the U.S.A., and most, if not all, the British colonies, in abolishing the prohibition. In 1907 the Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act (7 Edw. 7, c. 47) became law. Marriage with a deceased wife's sister is not to be deemed void as a civil contract, whether it took place before or after the passing of the Act, unless annulled before 28th August, 1907, or unless either party to such a marriage shall have lawfully married another person before that date during the lifetime of the other party. In either of these cases the marriage is to be deemed to have become void on the day it was annulled or on the day that the subsequent marriage took place. As to the history of this Act, see the note thereto in Chitty's Statutes. The Deceased Brother's Widow's Marriage Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 24), and the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 31), amended and extended the Act of 1907 to cover marriages with as well as a deceased brother's widow as a niece on his deceased wife's side, the widow of his father's deceased brother, his deceased wife's father's sister, his deceased wife's mother's sister, and the widow of his own nephew. The Act of 1931 gives the short collective title of the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Acts, 1907-1931 to the three Acts. The Acts include within their provisions sisters and brothers of the half blood.

Impotence.—Impotence, as a reason for annulling marriage, must exist at the time of marriage, and be incurable; it makes the marriage only voidable by a suit by one of the parties during their joint lives (A. v. B., (1868) L. R. 1 P. & D. 559), and the suit cannot be brought by the impotent person.

Concealed Pregnancy by Another Man.—Concealment of pregnancy by another man was no ground of nullity (Moss v. Moss, 1897, P. 263). But the law is different in most other countries, e.g., in Cape Colony, by Roman Dutch law: see Horak v. Horak, (1861) 3 Searle, 389, and see now Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, and DIVORCE.

Marriages Abroad.—A mixed Ecclesiastical and Common Law, is in force for parties, one at least of which is a British subject outside England, except as altered by special colonial or Indian legislation, not merely prohibitory and negative, but creating a nullity by express words (Catterall v. Sweetman, (1845) 4 N. C. 222, and (1847) 5 N. C. 466); and it has been decided that, in places where it is difficult or impossible to procure an ordained parson—e.g., up country in India—the Common Law will recognize a contract 'per verba de presenti' as a lawful marriage (Maclean v. Cristall, (1849) 7 N. C. Supp. xvii.). On this depended the validity of marriages solemnized in ambassadors' chapels, or before a British consul, or within British lines, or on board a man-of-war, or a merchant vessel, which are now regulated by the Foreign Marriages Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 23), and see also the Naval Marriages Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 26), and generally, as to the Army and Navy, see 22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 31.

As to marriages on board merchantmen, the master is, by s. 240 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), required to enter certain particulars in the official log-book. As to colonial marriages, the Colonial Marriages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 64), gives the force of law, throughout the British dominions, to any Act for validating marriages contracted in any of his Majesty's possessions made by the legislatures of those possessions, provided both the parties are by the law of England competent to marry.

As to marriages between British subjects resident in the United Kingdom and British subjects resident in other parts of the King's dominions or in British Protectorates, see Marriage of British subjects (Facilities) Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 40), and 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 21). Consult Eversley and Craies, Marriage Laws of the British Empire.

Foreign Marriages.—As to British subjects married in foreign Christian countries according to the forms and laws of those countries, the Common Law in ascertaining their validity is guided by the lex loci contractus, and if they are valid according to the lex loci contractus, is wont to recognize them as valid in England, provided the parties, being incompetent to marry in England, have not married abroad to evade those restrictions. As to children, legitimated 'per subsequens matrimonium,' the English law did not, before the Legitimacy Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), recognize them as legitimate so as to inherit realty upon an intestacy (Birtwhistle v. Vardill, (1840) 7 Cl. & Fin. 895). As to persons legitimated on or after 15th December, 1926, see that Act, s. 8, though it is otherwise as to personalty (Re Goodman's Trusts, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 266), and they could take under a specific devise of real estate to 'children' (Gray v. Stamford, 1892, 3 Ch. 88). The law of England will not recognize non-Christian, Mormon, or polygamous marriages; see Re Bethell, (1887) 38 Ch. D. 220. As to marriages of British subjects with foreigners abroad, see the Marriage with Foreigners Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 40).

Marriages in Scotland.—These marriages are either 'regular,' i.e., celebrated by a minister of religion after due notice by the publication of banns, or after posting in a conspicuous place on the outer wall of the registrar's office a notice under the Marriage Notices (Scotland) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 43), or 'irregular' (see below). Any minister of any denomination may perform the marriage ceremony, which must take place before two witnesses after due proclamation of banns. One of the parties must have resided in Scotland for a minimum period of fifteen days.

Irregular Scots Marriages.—The capacity to contract valid irregular marriages in Scotland is recognized but restricted by Lord Brougham's Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 96), for preventing Gretna Green marriages, by which, 'after 1856, no irregular marriage contracted in Scotland by declaration, etc., shall be valid, unless one of the parties had at the date thereof his or her usual place of residence there, or had lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding such marriage.'

Irregular marriages can be contracted either per verba de presenti or per verba de futuro subsequente copula. In the former case nothing more is necessary than a present interchange of consent, in whatever manner given, to become henceforth husband and wife. Consummation is not required; the consent may be exchanged most secretly, the parties may never have lived together, but still the mutual intention, when proved, constitutes marriage. The so-called marriage by habit and repute, or by declaring themselves husband and wife before witnesses, is merely evidence of such intention—evidence which may be rebutted if it be proved that the real intention of the parties was contrary to their outward acts. See, e.g., the remarkable case where, in spite of an express public declaration before the woman's family by the man, 'Maggie, you are my wife, before heaven, so help me, O God!' it was held by the House of Lords that no real marriage was then intended by either of the parties (Stewart v. Robertson, (1875) L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 494).

The irregular marriage per verba de futuro subsequente copula—by promise, followed by cohabitation, to marry at a future time—differs from the irregular marriage per verba de presenti, in the essential particular that it does not amount to a lawful marriage without having been declared so to be by special legal process or 'declarator,' whereas the marriage per verba de presenti, if proved, amounts to a legal marriage without any such process. Moreover, the promise must either be proved by writing of the promisor, or by confession of it on oath. The result is that if the promise was not in writing the promise cannot be proved and the marriage declared after the death of the promisor. Such appears to be the better opinion (see per Lord Moncrieff in Burns v. Burns, cited in the Report of the Marriage Commission, 1868), but the question has not been judicially decided.

Irregular marriages require to be registered within twenty-one days by appearance before a sheriff and are not recognized unless this formality be complied with. Failure so to register a marriage may necessitate the raising of an Action of Declaration of Marriage in the Court of Session.

As to non-Christian marriage, see articles by Sir D. Fitzpatrick in Journal of Society of Comparative Legislation, August, 1900, and December, 1901.

Marriage Articles, the heads of an agreement for a marriage settlement. Generally speaking, expressions and limitations in these articles are allowed a more liberal meaning consistently with intention than formal conveyances and settlements, and as to words of limitation, see s. 130, Law of Property Act, 1925, and Norton on Deeds.

Marriage Brokage, a consideration paid for contriving a marriage, and illegal as contrary to public policy, so that money paid under it may be recovered back (Herman v. Charlesworth, 1905, 2 K. B. 123).

Marriage Officer, an officer who can celebrate marriage in foreign countries and British Possessions under the Foreign Marriages Act, 1892.

Marriage, Promise of, need not be in writing, although an 'agreement in consideration of marriage' must be, by s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. So it was decided, overruling an earlier decision to the contrary, about 200 years ago, and the question does not appear to have been raised since 1717. In early times the spiritual courts enforced specific performance of the promise, and this jurisdiction was not formally abolished until the reign of George II., by 26 Geo. 2, c. 33. In an action for the breach of the promise, the parties were excepted (amongst others) from the general abolition of admissibility of parties as witnesses under the Evidence Act, 1851, but this exception was removed by the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869, under which, however, the plaintiff may not 'recover a verdict' unless his or her testimony be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise. The mere non-answering of a letter is not, however, sufficient corroboration (Wiedman v Walpole, 1891, 2 Q. B. 534).

As to damages for breach of promise to marry sustained in regard to the estate of a deceased promisee, see Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 1 (2) (b) ).

A promise by an infant is voidable and cannot be enforced unless renewed by him after he attains his majority (Ditcham v. Worrall, (1880) 5 C. P. D. 410). A promise by a married man is not actionable, if the promisee knew he had a wife living at the time of the promise (Wilson v. Carnley, 1908, 1 K. B. 729). In the case of a promise made after a decree nisi for divorce and pending decree absolute, the House of Lords held that the promise was not void as against public policy (Fender v. Mildmay, (1937) 106 L. J. K. B. 641), and see ILLEGALITY. As to defence of illness, see Jefferson v. Paskell, 1916, 1 K. B. 57, and Gamble v. Sales, (1920) 36 T. L. R. 427.

Marriage Settlement, an arrangement made before marriage, and in consideration of it (the highest consideration known to the law), whereby real or personal property is settled for the benefit of the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage. There is an express saving for such a settlement in s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and see the Married Women's Property Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 1), invalidating a settlement made by a female infant unless confirmed after attaining 21, but without prejudice to settlements under the Infants Settlement Act, 1855 (see post, MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY).

Although the policy of the land legislation of 1924 was to assimilate the law of real property to that of personality as far as possible, marriage settlements of land (not being effected by way of trust for sale), and if providing for infant or for a succession of interests in land or charging land (but in this case subject to the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1926), are settlements within the meaning of s. 1 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, and must be effected by two instruments: (a) the vesting deed, and (b) the trust instrument; while settlements of land on trust for sale should also be effected by two deeds: (a) the conveyance on trust for sale, and (b) the trust instrument; see TRUST INSTRUMENT and VESTING DEED; SETTLED LAND.

Before 1926, marriage settlements were of different kinds, according as the property settled consisted of real or personal estate, and the distinction is still convenient. Speaking broadly, they still fall into three distinct classes, though of course with innumerable variations in details, the particular provisions to be inserted being a matter for discussion and arrangement between the parties and their legal advisers. (1) If it consists of real estate of considerable value which it is desired to preserve in the family, the property is frequently settled on the husband or the wife, according to the source of the property, for life, with remainder to the first and other sons in tail with remainder to the daughters in tail, the limitations formerly legal being now equitable, and the wife or husband and younger children being respectively provided for by a jointure or determinable life interest and portions charged on the estates. (2) If the property consists of real estate it is now more generally conveyed (see TRUST FOR SALE) to trustees upon trust to sell and hold the proceeds upon the trusts declared by a deed of even date, which declares the trusts of the proceeds in practically the same form as a settlement of personal estate. (3) If the property to be settled consists of personal estate, as stocks or shares, it is assigned to trustees upon trust for sale and to invest, pay the income to the husband and wife or vice versa, according to the source of the fortune, successively for life, and on the death of the survivor hold the capital in trust for the issue of the marriage as the parents or the survivor may appoint, and in default of appointment for the children equally. It is a well-settled rule that the costs of the settlement are paid by the husband though the property settled may be that of the wife: see Helps v. Clayton, (1864) 17 C. B. N. S. 553.

By the Infant Settlements Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43), a male of 20, or a female of 17, with the sanction of the Court may, subject to the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 27, make a binding settlement on marriage.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 19 (1), the Divorce Court is empowered, in cases where a marriage has been dissolved, or a sentence of judicial separation has been pronounced, on the ground of the wife's adultery, to order such settlement, as it shall think reasonable, to be made of any property to which the wife is entitled, for the benefit of the innocent party, and of the children of the marriage, or any of them; and any instrument executed by the order of the Court under this enactment shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding coverture at the time of execution. By Judicature Act, 1925, s. 192, the Court may, after a final decree of divorce or for nullity of marriage, inquire into any ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements, and make such orders as to the application of the property settled, for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their parents, as seem fit, and the Court may exercise the powers conferred notwithstanding that there are no children of the marriage. See DIVORCE; Browne and Watts on Divorce; Dixon on Divorce.

In Scotland, the legal rights of spouses and children may be defeated by an ante-nuptial contract of marriage but not by a post-nuptial contract.

Married Woman. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Married Women's Property. At Common Law, a woman, by marrying, transferred the ownership of all her property, real and personal, present and future, to her husband absolutely, so that he might sell, pay his debts out of, give away, or dispose by will of it as he pleased, with these exceptions and modifications:—

(1) Her freehold estate became his to manage and take the profits of during the joint lives only. After his death, leaving her surviving, it passed to her absolutely; after her death, leaving him surviving, provided that it was an estate in possession and issue who could inherit had been born during the marriage, it passed to him as 'tenant by the curtesy (q.v.) of England,' during his life, and after his death to her heir-at-law.

(2) Her leasehold estate, her personal estate in expectancy, and the debts owing to her and other 'choses in action,' became his absolutely if he did some act to appropriate or reduce them into possession during the marriage, or if he survived her. If he did not do such act, they passed to her absolutely if she survived him.

(3) Her personal clothing and ornaments suitable to her condition in life and if given by the husband passed to her absolutely at her husband's death if he died solvent. See PARAPHERNALIA.

The almost complete control which the Common Law gave to the husband was much modified by the doctrines and practice of equity in allowing property to be given to a married woman 'for her separate use,' i.e., to the exclusion of her husband, and in recognizing and giving effect to settlements made on her marriage by which some control at least over her property was secured to her, and also in certain cases by compelling the husband to give the wife her 'equity to a settlement' by making a somewhat similar settlement of a proportion (usually one-half) of property coming to him in right of his wife during the marriage.

But these protections of the wife's property not being deemed sufficient by the Legislature, the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93) (amended in 1874 by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), enacted (inter alia) that the earnings of a married woman, and also her deposits in a savings bank, should be deemed her separate property; that a married woman might procure investments in the funds or in shares or stock to be made to stand in her own name as her separate property; and that personalty to any amount coming to any woman married after the passing of the Act (9th August, 1870), as next of kin of an intestate, and personalty up to 200*l.* coming to her under any deed or will, should belong to her for her separate use.

A much greater step forward was taken by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), which repealed and consolidated with important amendments, the Acts of 1870 and 1874. Sect. 1 of this Act, as amended by the Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), in relation to contracts, and the Law of Property Act, 1925, provided that a married woman, whether married before or after the Act, (1) should be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing, by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole (including property which she may hold as a trustee or personal representative (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 170)) without the intervention of a trustee; (2) should be capable of contracting, so as to bind her separate property as if she were a feme sole; (3) should bind her separate property by her contracts, whether she be possessed of or entitled to separate property at the date of the contract or not; (4) should so bind her after-acquired, as well as her existing, property; and (5) should, if trading, whether separately from her husband or not, be subject to the laws of bankruptcy as if she were a feme sole.

Now a married woman shall be subject to the law relating to bankruptcy and to the enforcement of judgments and orders in all respects as if she were a feme sole (Law Reform (M. W. and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 1). except that she cannot be made bankrupt on any judgment or order upon a contract, debt or obligation incurred before the 2nd August, 1935, if she was not carrying on a trade or business before that date (s. 4 (1) (c), ibid.).

Sect. 2 applied only to women who married after the commencement of the Act (1st January, 1883), and enacted that every woman who married after that date should be entitled to have and to hold as her separate property, and to dispose of all real and personal property which should belong to her at the time of the marriage, or should be acquired by or devolve upon her after marriage, including any wages, earnings, money and property gained or acquired by her in any employment, trade, or occupation in which she was engaged, or which she carried on separately from her husband, or by the exercise of any literary, artistic, or scientific skill.

As to the postponement of the claims of a husband, and of a wife, in the event of bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 36; s. 3 of the M. W. P. Act, 1882, being repealed, so far as relates to England and Wales.

Sect. 5 provided that property acquired after the commencement of the Act (1st January, 1883) by a woman married before the commencement of the Act, was to be held and was disposable by her as a feme sole.

These sections (1 to 5) of the Act of 1882 have been repealed by the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 30). By s. 1 of this Act, subject as there provided, a married woman can (1) acquire, hold or dispose of any property as if she were a feme sole; (2) render herself or be rendered liable for any tort contract, debt, or obligation; (3) sue, and be sued in contract, tort or otherwise; and (4) be subject to bankruptcy, judgments and orders in all respects as if she were a feme sole; but see the saving clauses in s. 4, supra; and by s. 2, all property which immediately before the 2nd August, 1935, was her separate property or held for her separate use in equity belongs to her now as a feme sole, so does all property which belongs to a woman at the time of any marriage after the 1st August, 1935, or after that date is acquired by or devolves upon her except property which has been restricted from anticipation or alienation by statute before the 2nd August, 1935, or by any instrument executed before the 1st January, 1936, and apparently for that purpose an instrument is to be deemed to be executed before 1936 if the restraint was imposed in pursuance of a pre-existing obligation, and the date of the exercise of a special power providing the restriction is that of the instrument exercising the power and not that of the instrument creating the power, and the will of a testator dying after 1945 shall, notwithstanding the actual date thereof, be deemed to have been executed after the 1st January, 1936. Subject to these provisions, any restriction upon anticipation or alienation which could not have been attached to the enjoyment of property by a man is void if imposed by any instrument executed after 1935.

By ss. 6-9, stock, etc., standing in the name of a married woman or of a married woman and another was exempted from control by her husband, whose concurrence in the transfer of any such stock was dispensed with.

By s. 10, any investments by a wife of the moneys of her husband without his consent might be transferred to him by order of Court.

Sect. 19 provided (with a qualification for ante-nuptial debts and rights of creditors) that 'nothing in this Act contained should affect any settlement made or to be made, whether before or after marriage, respecting the property of any married woman,' or render inoperative 'any restriction against anticipation' [see ANTICIPATION] 'at present attached, or to be hereafter attached, to the enjoyment of any property or income by a woman under any settlement, agreement for a settlement, will, or other instrument.' Moreover, by s. 3 of the Act of 1893, s. 24 of the Wills Act, 1837, by which a will speaks from death, applied to the will of a married woman made during coverture, whether she was or was not possessed of or entitled to separate property at the time of making it, and the will did not require re-execution or republication after the death of her husband. Further amendment was made by the Married Women's Property Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 18), by which (s. 1) a married woman could without her husband dispose of trust estates, and (s. 3) could alone be protector of a settlement. Also, by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 14, a married woman having separate property is liable to maintain her parents, thus altering the law as laid down in Pontypool Guardians v. Buck, 1906, 2 K. B. 896.

A married woman cannot sue her husband for tort unless the action is for the protection and security of her separate property (Ralston v. Ralston, 1933, 2 K. B. 238).

A restraint or anticipation on her property if land brings it within the categories of 'settled land' (see Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 1), and by the Law of Property, s. 127, acknowledgments by woman married before 1883, of disposition of land or money to be laid out in land, are no longer required if the husband concurs in the deed. In regard to the torts by a married woman and the husband's liability, see HUSBAND AND WIFE. Consult Lush on Husband and Wife.

Marrow, author of a famous book, written in the reign of Henry VII., and said to be still in manuscript, on the office of a justice of the peace—a work which has been quoted by later writers, such as Fitzherbert and Lambard, with great commendation, and seems to have been followed by them on the subject. 4 Reeves, c. xxvii. p. 186.

Marshal, or Mareschal, primarily denotes an officer who has the care or command of horses.

An officer called a marshal attends each judge on the assizes (being paid by the Treasury two guineas a day during the continuance of the circuit). The office is now practically a sinecure, but formerly the marshal made abstracts of indictments, and received records for trials, etc. The judge appoints his marshal and pays his travelling and other expenses during the time he resides with him. See Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77; see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 226 (4).

Marshal (Earl). See CHIVALRY, COURT OF.

Marshal of the Queen's Bench, an officer who had the custody of the Queen's Bench Prison. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22 abolished this office, and substituted an officer called Keeper of the Queen's Prison.

Marshalling, the act of arranging or of putting into proper order.

The doctrine of marshalling assets and securities depends upon the principle that a person, having two funds out of which to satisfy his demands, shall not, by his election, prejudice a person who has only one such fund. If, therefore, one who has a claim upon two funds resorts to the only fund upon which another has a claim, the latter stands in his place for so much against the fund to which otherwise he could not have access: the object being that every claimant shall be satisfied as far as, by any arrangement consistent with the nature of the several claims, the property which they seek to affect can be applied in satisfaction of such claims.

In the administration of the estates of deceased persons, marshalling consists of arranging the assets so as to give effect to the priority of debts, as to legal assets on the one hand, and to the order of assets on the other. Now that all the assets are liable to be applied for the payment of any debt, marshalling assets in favour of creditors is no longer necessary, but it may sometimes be required between legatees when some of the legacies are charged on the realty and some are not; and when legacies charged and one not charged are given to the same person. These doctrines have not been affected by the vesting of real property in personal representatives (Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 2), except that by s. 34, ibid., some alteration in the order of administration of solvent estates is provided for. See ADMINISTRATION; Seton on Judgments; Aldrich v. Cooper, (1802) 8 Ves. 308; 1 W. & T. L. C., p. 36; 2 ibid., pp. 109 et seq.

The doctrine of marshalling in relation to mortgages results in the general rule that where an owner of several properties has mortgaged them to the same person and afterwards deals separately with the equity of redemption in one or more of the properties either by way of mortgage of otherwise, the person or persons interested in the equities so dealt with are entitled, as against the mortgagor, to require that the first mortgage shall be paid off in the first place out of the property not so dealt with, or if that mortgage is paid off out of the property in which they are so interested, to stand pro tanto in the place of the first mortgagee in regard to the property which has not been resorted to for satisfying his security: Coote on Mortgages.

Marshalsea, Court of the, originally held before the steward and marshal of the royal house, to administer justice between the sovereign's domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and their service become lost. It held pleas of all trespasses committed within the verge of the court (twelve miles round the sovereign's residence), where only one of the parties was in the royal service (in which case the inquest was taken by a jury of the country); and of all debts, contracts, and covenants where both of the contracting parties belonged to the royal household, and then the inquest was composed of men of the household only. But this court being ambulatory, Charles I. erected a new court of record, called the curia palatii, or Palace Court, to be held before the steward of the household and knight marshal, and the steward of the court or his deputy, with jurisdiction to hold plea of all manner of personal actions whatsoever which should arise between any parties within twelve miles of the royal palace at Whitehall, not including the city of London.

The court was held once a week for causes under 20*l.*, together with the ancient Court of Marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark, and a writ of error lay thence to the Court of King's Bench. Abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, s. 13.

Marshalsea Prison. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, amended by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7, this prison is consolidated with others, and denominated the Queen's Prison, which see. As to the Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin) Prison, see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 21, discontinuing the same.

Mart [contracted fr. market], a place of public traffic or sale.

Martial, Courts. See COURT-MARTIAL, and Simmonds or Finlason or Thring on Courts Martial.

Martial Law, in the proper sense of the term, means the suspension of ordinary law and the government of a country or parts of it by military tribunals. It must be clearly distinguished (1) from 'military law' (see that title), and (2) from that 'martial law' which forms part of the laws and usages of war. The term 'martial law' is also sometimes used as meaning the common law right of the Crown to repel force by force in the case of insurrection, invasion or riot, and to take such exceptional measures as may be necessary for the purpose of restoring peace and order: Manual of Military Law, pp. 3, 4. Martial law was prohibited by the Petition of Right Act of Charles the First, 3 Car. 1, c. 1, s. 7, but was specially authorized by the temporary 43 Geo. 3, c. 117, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 4, and the Restoration of Order in Ireland Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 31), in Ireland. It was proclaimed in Jamaica without authority by Governor

Eyre in 1865, but followed by a Jamaica Act of Indemnity, which was held good in Phillips v. Eyre, (1870) L. R. 6 Q. B. 1—Ex. Ch.; and see the Indemnity Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 48), relating to acts done in the War, commencing 4th August, 1914. Consult Dicey's Law of the Constitution.

Martinmas, the feast of St. Martin of Tours, on the 11th November; sometimes corrupted into martilmas or marlemas. It is the third of the four cross quarter-days of the year.

Martyria, a figure of rhetoric, by which the speaker brings his own experience in proof of what he advances.

Masagium, a message.

Masculine. Statutes passed prior to 1850 frequently declared that words in them which import the masculine gender shall be deemed to include females, unless there is something in the Act inconsistent therewith. In 1850, by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, this provision was made general so as to dispense with its repetition with each particular case in future, and in 1889 the Interpretation Act, 1889 (see that title), repealed and re-enacted the provision.

Massamore, or Massy More, massamora, an ancient name for a dungeon, derived from the Moorish language, perhaps as far back as the time of the Crusades.

Master [fr. meester, Dut.; maistre, Fr.; magister, Lat.], a director; a governor; a teacher; one who has servants; the head of a college; the captain of a ship; an officer of the Supreme Court; and see MASTERS.

Master and Servant, a relation whereby a person calls in the assistance of others, where his own skill and labour are not sufficient to carry out his own business or purpose. See LABOURERS.

Servants are of several descriptions:—1st. Servants in husbandry. These are very generally hired by the year, as from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, and this is an entire hiring for a year; and, unless otherwise stipulated, no wages are payable until the end of the year. Consult Burn's Justice, tit. 'Servants.'

2nd. Servants in particular trades. These (who are now more frequently termed 'workmen,' their masters being termed 'employers') are subject to the control of the magistrates under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), and by the Truck Acts (see that title) their wages must be paid in coin.

3rd. Apprentices. These are placed with the master to learn his trade, with a view hereafter of following it themselves. See APPRENTICE.

4th. Menial or domestic servants. If no terms be stipulated, it is considered a hiring with reference to the general understanding on the subject, that is, a continuing service until the expiration of a month's warning given by either party.

It is not compulsory in England for a master or mistress to give a discharged servant any character, and no action is sustainable for the refusal (Carroll v. Bird, (1800) 3 Esp. 201). But if a character be given, it must accord with the truth; for if a false good character be given, and the servant afterwards rob his new master, the person who gave such false character is liable to an action, and to compensate for the entire loss; and he is liable to punishment in certain cases of false character under the Servants' Characters Act, 1792 (32 Geo. 3, c. 56). And if a bad character be untruly and maliciously given, the party giving it will be liable to an action for defamation, though, until the untruth of the character given and express malice have been proved, the communication is presumed to have been privileged, and no action is sustainable.

A stranger who deprives a master of the services of his servant by enticing him away in breach of his contract of service, or by some other wrongful act, is liable for the damage thus occasioned to the master.

A master is liable civilly for torts committed by his servant in the course of or under colour of his employ, but not for any wilful misfeasance of the servant. To this general liability the Common Law, as laid down in Priestly v. Fowler, (1837) 3 M. & W. 1, made the important exception that the master was not liable to a servant for the tort of a 'fellow-servant,' a term to which a very comprehensive meaning has been given by the cases. This defence is termed the defence of 'common employment' (see that title). But the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, has much modified this exception, by depriving the master of the defence of common employment in the case of negligence by a fellow-servant who occupied a position of superintendence. The doctrine of common employment applies to claims based on the negligence of a fellow-servant in the provision or maintenance of plant and property used in the master's business (see Fanton v. Denville, 1932, 2 K. B. 309).

The Workmen's Compensation Acts provide a statutory compensation for workmen who meet with accidents in their employment. See WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

As to settlement of disputes between employers and workmen, see CONCILIATION.

Consult Manley Smith, or Macdonell, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Master and Servant,' on the law of master and servant generally.

Masters of the Bench. See BENCHERS.

Master of the Crown Office, the Crown coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the Court of King's Bench, who prosecuted at the relation of some private person or common informer, the Crown being the nominal prosecutor.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 20. He is now an officer of the Supreme Court. See CROWN OFFICE.

Master of the Faculties, an officer under the archbishop, who grants licences and dispensations, etc. The judge of the provincial Courts of Canterbury and York appointed under s. 7 of the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, became ex officio Master of the Faculties on the first vacancy occurring after the passing of that Act.

Master of the Horse, the third great officer of the royal household, being next to the Lord Steward and Lord Chamberlain. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

Master in Lunacy, an officer of the Lord Chancellor who executes commissions and conducts inquiries connected with persons of unsound mind and their estates, and carries out such other duties as are prescribed by the rules in lunacy and directions of the judge in lunacy (Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 111), and Lunacy Act, 1891, s. 27, conferring on the master the jurisdiction of a judge in lunacy as regards administration and management of estates subject to review by the judge. There were originally two masters, but now there is only one and an assistant master: Lunacy Act, 1922, and Administration of Justice (Misc. Prov.) Act, 1933, s. 8. The office of the master is now known as the Management and Administration Department (Patients' Estates Rules, 1934, r. 8). See also Lunacy Act, 1908, s. 1; Mental Deficiency Act, 1930, s. 5; The Mental Treatment Rules, 1930 (S. R. & O. 1930, No. 1083); and Patients' Estates Rules, 1934 (S. R. & O. 1934, No. 269/L2). Consult Mills and Poyser 'Lunacy Practice.'

Master of the Mint, an officer who receives bullion for coinage, and pays for it and superintends everything belonging to the Mint. He is usually called the Warden of the Mint.

It is provided by the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 Vict. c. 10), s. 14, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being shall be the Master of the Mint.

Master of the Ordnance, a great officer, to whose care all the royal ordnance and artillery were committed.—39 Eliz. c. 7. But see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 117.

Master of Reports and Entries. This Chancery official was not to be continued after the next vacancy occurring after the Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 134.

Master of the Rolls [magister rotulorum, Lat.], originally the chief of a body of officers called the Masters in Chancery, of whom there were eleven others, including the Accountant-General. The Master of the Rolls subsequently became a judge of the Court of Chancery, who ranked next to the Lord Chancellor, and had the keeping of the rolls and grants which passed the Great Seal, and the records of the Chancery. All orders and decrees by him made, except such as by the course of the Court, were appropriated to the Great Seal alone, were deemed to be valid, subject, nevertheless, to be discharged or altered by the Lord Chancellor, and were not enrolled till they were signed by the Lord Chancellor.—3 Geo. 2, c. 30.

This judge, by the Jud. Act, 1881, s. 2 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 6 (2)), now sits in the Court of Appeal only. Before that Act he was the second judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 31 (1)), and also an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4) (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 6 (2)). Before the Jud. Acts he was (alone among the judges) allowed to sit in the House of Commons. As to appointment, qualification, salary, pension, etc., see Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 6, 9, 11, 99 (4). He is a member of Rule Committee.

The Master of the Rolls enjoys other jurisdictions, e.g., over the admission of solicitors (Solicitors Act, 1933 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 15); the superintendence of public records under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94; and Judic. Act, 1925, ss. 19 and 34; and manorial documents. See MANOR.

Master of the Temple, the chief ecclesiastical functionary of the Temple Church. The appointment is in the gift of the Crown.

Masters Extraordinary in Chancery, officers of the High Court of Chancery who performed duties similar to those now performed by commissioners for oaths. Now abolished.

Masters in Chancery, or Masters in Ordinary in Chancery (so called to distinguish them from Masters Extraordinary (supra)), were officers of the High Court in Chancery whose duties varied at different periods, being both judicial and ministerial. Abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80. See MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

Masters of the Common Law Courts. There were five Masters on the plea side of each of the Courts of King's Bench and Exchequer, and also in the Common Pleas. They were appointed by 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 30, and their duties were to tax costs, compute damages, attend the judges in court, etc. These officers became, under the Judicature Act, officers of the Supreme Court, and were attached to the Division of the High Court representing the Court to which they formerly belonged (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77; Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LX., r. 1). Under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 68, and the General Rules of Michaelmas Term, 1867, the Masters transacted a considerable portion of the business at Judges' Chambers; and they now have similar powers (R. S. C., Ord. LIV., r. 12).

Masters of the Supreme Court, in the King's Bench Division, officials, seven in number, deriving their title from the Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 106, 122, Sched. III., Part I.), and filling the places of the Masters of the Common Law Courts, the King's Coroner and Attorney, the Master of the Crown Office, the two Record and Writ Clerks, and the three Associates. Their jurisdiction is mainly to hear summonses for directions (see DIRECTIONS, SUMMONS FOR), to supervise pleadings, and decide as to discovery. There are also Masters in the Chancery Division who have succeeded to the position and powers of the Chief Clerks of the Chancery judges, the title of 'Master of the Supreme Court' having been substituted for that of 'Chief Clerk' in 1897. Under the present system there are three sets of Chancery Chambers, each with four Masters and attached to two judges. The duties of the Masters are to hear summonses for directions, take accounts and answer inquiries pursuant to directions in judgments and orders, etc.; see Ord. LV., rr. 15 et seq. There is a third class of Masters who carry out the taxation of costs.

Masura, a decayed house; a wall; the ruins of a building; a certain quantity of lands, about four oxgangs.—Old Records.

Matches. See WHITE PHOSPHORUS.

Mate, the deputy of the master in a merchant ship. There are sometimes one, sometimes two, three, or four.

Matelotage [fr. matelot, Fr.], the hire of a ship or boat.—Cole.

Materfamilias, the mother or mistress of a family.—Civ. Law.

Maternity Benefit. See NATIONAL INSURANCE.

Matertera, a maternal aunt; the sister of one's mother.

Matertera Magna, a great maternal aunt.

Math, a mowing.

Matricide. 1. Slaughter of a mother.

2. One who has slain his mother.

Matriculate, to enter a university.

Matrimonial Causes, suits for the redress of injuries respecting the rights of marriage. They were formerly a branch of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, but were transferred to the jurisdiction of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes (now a branch of the High Court of Justice) by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85.

'Matrimonial cause' now means any action for divorce, nullity of marriage, judicial separation, jactitation of marriage or restitution of conjugal rights (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 225).

See CONJUGAL RIGHTS; DIVORCE; NULLITY; ADULTERY; MARRIAGE; JUDICIAL SEPARATION; HUSBAND AND WIFE; and ASSIZES; and consult Browne and Latley on Divorce.

Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857–1923; 1925 and 1937. See Short Titles Act, 1896, and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, for these collective titles; see the Acts, and consult Browne and Watts or Dixon on Divorce.

Matrimonium, the inheritance descending to a man ex parte matris (from his mother).

Matrimony, marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife. See titles MARRIAGE and HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Matrina, a godmother.

Matrix Ecclesias, the mother church, i.e., the cathedral, so called in relation to the parochial churches within the same diocese, or a parochial church in relation to chapels depending on it.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 19.

Matron, a married woman; a mother of a family; a female superintendent, as the matron of a school, hospital or a prison.

Matrons, Jury of. See JURY-WOMEN.

Maturity, the time when a bill of exchange or promissory note becomes due.

Maundy Thursday [fr. maund, Sax., an alms-basket, or dies mandati, Lat., the day of the command], the day preceding Good Friday, on which princes give alms.

Maxim [fr. maximum, Lat.], an axiom; a general principle; a leading truth so called, says Coke, quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur.—1 Inst. 11.

Modern opinion, however, does not rate maxims so highly, and Lord Esher, M.R., in Yarmouth v. France, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. at p. 653, in connection with Volenti non fit injuria, went so far as to say that they are almost invariably misleading, and for the most part so large and general in their language that they always include something which really is not intended to be included in them. Similarly, the late Mr. Justice Stephen (Hist. Crim. Law, 94) wrote:—'They are rather minims than maxims, for they give not a particularly great, but a particularly small, amount of information. As often as not the exceptions and qualifications are more important than the so-called rules'—which, while they mostly serve as good indexes to the law, are mostly bad abstracts of it. A contrary view, however, is given in a lecture by Mr. H. F. Manisty, K.C., on 'The Use of Legal Maxims,' delivered in Gray's Inn Hall to the Solicitors' Managing Clerks' Association in January, 1905: see Law Times Newsp. for January 14, 1905. Consult Broom's Legal Maxims; Mew's Digest, tit. 'Maxims,' and see full collections in Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, and in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, tit. 'Maxim' (where about 1500 are collected, including duplicates). Bacon collected 800, but published 25 only. His Introduction to them begins with the celebrated 'I hold every man to be a debtor to his own profession.'

Mayhem, the deprivation of a member proper for defence in fight, as an arm, leg, finger, eye, or a fore-tooth; yet not a jaw-tooth, or an ear, or a nose, because they have been supposed to be of no use in fighting. One circumstance peculiar to an action for mayhem was that the Court might, on view of the wound, increase the damages awarded by the jury.—3 Salk. 115. See Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), ss. 18, 29.

Mayhemavit (he has maimed).

Mayor [according to some, anciently written meyr, fr. the British miret, to keep, or fr. the Old English maier, power, not from the Latin major, although maire is the more probable derivation through the lingual corruption of 'major'] the annual chief magistrate of a municipal borough, elected by the councillors under s. 15 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), 'from among the aldermen or councillors, or persons qualified to be such,' on the 9th November of every year (ibid., s. 61). Sects. 15 and 61 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, have been repealed (except as to London) by the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), see ss. 18–20 of that Act. He receives little salary, if any. His principal duties are to act as returning officer at municipal elections, and in certain cases at parliamentary elections, as chairman of the meetings of the council, and as a justice of the peace for the borough.

Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses, the name of a municipal corporation of a borough to which the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), applies; see s. 8 of that Act (replaced, except as to London) by the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 17 (by which 'citizens' is substituted for 'burgesses' in the case of a city), re-enacting part of s. 6 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835.

Mayor's Court, London. See LORD MAYOR'S COURT.

Mayoralty, the office of a mayor.

Maypole, custom to erect and dance round.

Mead, or Meadow [fr. mæde, Sax.], ground somewhat watery, not ploughed, but covered with grass and flowers.

Meals. As to the provisions of meals for children attending elementary schools, see Education Act, 1921, ss. 82–85. In factories, etc., see FACTORIES.

Meal-rent, a rent formerly paid in meal.—Jac. Law Dict.

Mean, or Mesne [fr. medius, Lat.], a middle between two extremes, whether applied to persons, things, or time. See MESNE.

Mease [fr. messuagium, Lat.], a messuage or dwelling-house.—Fitz. N. B. 2; also half of a thousand.

Meason-due [corruption of maison de Dieu, Fr.], a house of God; a monastery; religious house, almshouse or hospital. See 39 Eliz. c. 5.

Measure [fr. mensura, Lat.], that by which anything is measured; the rule by which anything is adjusted or proportioned. See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES and DISTANCE. Section 13 (1) of the Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), enacts that the denomination of a length measure must be stamped upon it, s. 28 of the Act of 1878 having already prescribed the stamping upon a measure of capacity. The 25th chapter of Magna Charta prescribes one measure of wine, ale, and corn 'through our realm.'

Also an enactment of the National Assembly of the Church of England (q.v.).

Measure of damage, the test which determines the amount of damages to be given. The general rule in English law is that in contract the measure of damage is the actual loss to the plaintiff, and in tort the compensation to the plaintiff for the loss or damage which it may be supposed he has suffered directly as a natural consequence of the act complained of. The exception is those cases where vindictive or exemplary damages can be given, e.g., libel, slander, violence, malice, cruelty, or breach of promise of marriage. The actual loss cannot always be recovered, as the whole or a portion of the loss may be too remote to be the natural and probable consequence of that which constitutes the cause of action, and this will most frequently occur in actions of tort. Though unable to prove actual loss, a plaintiff may sometimes be entitled to nominal damages, e.g., breach of an agreement to lend money. In actions of contract, the market-price of the subject-matter at the date the contract is broken will as a rule give the measure of damage. The leading case upon the subject is Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854) 9 Exch. 341. Profits upon an expected re-sale cannot, in English law, be recovered, though this would appear to be at variance with the law in Scotland as laid down in Dunlop v. Higgins, (1848) 1 H. L. C. 381, unless such re-sale, or sub-contract, was in the contemplation of the parties at the time of making the first contract.

Damages for breach of contract for sale of land are regulated as a rule on the following principles. In an open contract or in the absence of the usual conditions, upon breach by the purchaser the vendor cannot recover the price by way of damages but he may recover his loss, if any, upon a re-sale and his expenses, giving credit for the deposit, if any. Upon breaches by the vendor, if the breach complained of is that he has failed to show title on an open contract, the purchaser cannot recover his loss upon the contract, but only his expenses. If, however, the breach has been caused by failure to make good a title which he has expressly undertaken to sell or if he has not perfected his title where he could have done so reasonably, or has committed a breach of trust by selling or where he has been prevented from completing by his own default, the purchaser may recover the amount of his loss and any other damages which he may have suffered by the breach.

For the measure and limitation of damages under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 1, see Rose v. Ford, 1936, 1 K. B. 90; DAMAGES; ACTIO PERSONALIS and LAW REFORM; DEATH. See Smith's L. C., notes to Hadley v. Bazendale, and Maine on Damages.

Measurer, or Meter, an officer in the City of London who measured woollen cloths, coals, etc. See ALNAGER.

Measuring Money, a duty which some persons exacted, by letters-patent, for every piece of cloth made, besides alnage. It is abolished.

Meat, retail dealers in: see Retail Meat Dealers' Shops (Sunday Closing) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 30), which provides for the compulsory closing of retail meat traders' shops and stalls on Sunday, with exemption in respect to Jewish retail dealers in meat, who may keep open on Sunday under license, on giving notice to the local authority and displaying notices as provided by the Act, but he must not keep open on Saturday. As to inspection and destruction of unsound meat, see Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), s. 180, and see UNSOUND FOOD.

Mederia, a house or place where metheglin or mead was made.—Old Records.

Medfee, a reward; a bribe; that which is given to boot.—Scots term.

Mediæ et infimæ manus homines, men of a middle and base condition.—Blount.

Medianus homo, a man of middle fortune.

Mediate testimony, secondary evidence, which see.

Mediators of Questions, six persons authorized by statute, who, upon any question arising among merchants, relating to unmerchantable wool, or undue packing, etc., might, before the mayor and officers of the staple, upon their oath, certify and settle the same; to whose determination therein the parties concerned were to submit.—27 Edw. 3, st. 2, c. 24.

Medical Benefit. See NATIONAL INSURANCE.

Medical Council. See GENERAL COUNCIL.

Medical Jurisprudence. See FORENSIC MEDICINE.

Medical Practitioners. The term is applied to physicians and surgeons. By s. 32 of the Medical Act, 1858, only a registered medical practitioner can sue for his charges, and by s. 6 of the Medical Act, 1886, a fellow of a College of Physicians may be prohibited by bye-law of the College from suing; and such bye-law has been passed. It is an offence for any person falsely to pretend that he holds a medical or surgical qualification (s. 40, Act of 1858), but it is not an offence merely to practise surgery or medicine: see Whitwell v. Shakerly, (1932) 147 L. T. 157 (bonesetter, osteopathic physician and surgeon). The registration of medical men is controlled by the Medical Council. See GENERAL COUNCIL, and Medical Acts of 1858, 1859, 1860, 1876, 1886, and 1905. The College of Physicians, with other bodies, was empowered to grant qualifications of registration to women by the Medical Act, 1876 ('Russell Gurney's Act'). See also APOTHECARIES.

Medical Officer of Health. Under the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 106—112 each urban authority and each rural authority must appoint such an officer, and may make regulations as to his duties; and by s. 103, every county council may appoint such an officer; and see Public Health Act, 1936, s. 3, and 1st Sched. as to Port Health Districts; and HOUSING.

Medical Referee. Section 38 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84), provides for the appointment and remuneration of medical referees. See ASSESSORS.

Medical Treatment. Section 80 of the Education Act, 1921, imposes a duty on the local education authority of medical inspection of children attending a public elementary school and of attending to their health and physical condition. The cost of medical treatment may be recovered from the parent (s. 81).

Medical Witnesses may be ordered to attend at an inquest by the coroner under the Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), s. 21.

For some valuable hints as to the conduct of medical witnesses, consult Taylor's or Beck's Med. Jur., tit. 'Medical Evidence.'

Medicine, adulteration of. See ADULTERATION.

Medico-legal [medico-legalis, Lat.], relating to the law concerning medical questions.

Medietas linguae. See DE MEDIETATE LINGUÆ.

Medio acquietando, a judicial writ to restrain a lord for the acquitting of a meane lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him.—Reg. Jur. 129.

Meditatio fugæ. A debtor in meditatione fugæ (meditating flight) may, by the law of Scotland, be arrested by warrant obtained for that purpose. Scots Law. See ARREST ON MESNE PROCESS.

Medlefe, Medleta, Medletum [fr. mêler, Fr., to meddle], a sudden scolding at and beating one another.—Bract. 1, 3, c. xxxv.

Med-sceat, a bribe; hush-money.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Medsypp, a harvest supper or entertainment given to labourers at harvest-home.

Meeting, an assembly of persons whose consent is required for anything to decide, by a proper majority of votes, whether or not that thing shall be done; e.g., the meeting of the town council under s. 22 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), or Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 75.

By Common Law in the absence of other provisions a corporation is bound by the majority present at a regular corporate meeting and not only by an absolute majority of the corporation (this does not apply to companies): Perrott and Perrott Ltd. v. Stephenson, 1934, 1 Ch. 171; and see Kyd on Corporations, Vol. 1, p. 400; or of the parish or parish council: see PARISH COUNCIL; PARISH MEETING. Also a meeting of the shareholders of a company under ss. 66-80 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16). As to meetings of creditors, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 13, 79 and 95. A company formed under the Companies Act, 1929, and limited by shares must hold a general meeting ('statutory meeting') not earlier than one nor later than three months after the date upon which it may begin business (s. 112), and an 'annual general meeting' each year (s. 113). 'Extraordinary meetings' are meetings called upon requisition of holders of one-tenth of the capital-carrying votes (s. 114), to transact special business, which is previously notified to those concerned; an ordinary meeting may also be convened by members or by the Court (s. 115).

As to meetings by creditors and contributories, see WINDING-UP. A resolution at an adjourned meeting is dated by 'the date of passing'.

Meetings of seditious societies are restrained by the Seditious Meetings Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 19). In Thomas v. Sawkins, 1935, 2 K. B. 249, the right was upheld to enter private premises to attend a meeting to which the public were invited, in reasonable anticipation of misdemeanours or breach of the peace. And see also PUBLIC MEETING. Consult Crewe, Procedure at Pub. and Co. Meetings.

Megbote, a recompense for the murder of a relation.—Saxon word.

Meligne, or Maisnader, a family.

Melny, Melne, or Melnie, the royal household; a retinue.

Meldfeoh, the recompense due and given to him who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person, called the promoter's (i.e., informer's) fee.

Melleur serra prize pour le roy. Jenk. Cent. 192.—(The best shall be taken for the king.)

Mellor est conditio defendentis.—(The condition of the party in possession is the better one, i.e., where the right of the parties is equal.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Mellor est conditio possidentis, et rei quam actoris. 4 Inst. 180.—(The condition of the possessor is the better, and the condition of the defendant than that of the plaintiff.)

Mellor est conditio possidentis ubi neuter jus habet. Jenk. Cent. 118.—(The condition of the possessor is the better where neither of the two has a right.) See POSSESSION IS NINE POINTS OF THE LAW.

Mellor est justitia vere præveniens quam severè puniens. 3 Inst. Epil.—(Justice truly preventing is better than severely punishing.)

Mellorations, improvements.—Scots term. And see BETTERMENT.

Mellorem conditionem suam facere potest minor deteriorem nequaquam. Co. Litt. 337.—(A minor can make his own condition better, but by no means worse.) See INFANT.

Mellius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire. 3 Inst. 23.—(It is better to suffer every ill than to consent to ill.)

Mellius [or satius] est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos.—(It is better to go to the fountain head than to follow streamlets.) See COMPENDIA.

Mellius inquirendum, ad, a writ for a second inquiry, where partial dealing was suspected; and particularly of what lands or tenements a man died seised, on finding an office for the king.—Fitz. N. B. 255. For instance of a second inquiry before a coroner, see Reg. v. Carter (1876) 45 L. J. Q. B. 711; and for express legalization of such inquiry, see Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), s. 6.

Member of Parliament, abbreviated M.P. See HOUSE OF COMMONS. Lords spiritual and temporal are also a constituent part of Parliament. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

Members, places where anciently a custom house was kept, with officers or deputies in attendance. They were lawful places of exportation or importation.—Beaves. Lex Mer., 6th ed., vol. i. p. 246

Membrum, a slip or small piece of land.

Memorandum of Association. See ASSOCIATION, MEMORANDUM OF.

Memorandum in Error, was a document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact.—Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 158. See ERROR.

Memorial, that which contains the particulars of a deed, etc., and is the instrument registered, as in the case of an annuity, which must be registered.

Memory, Time of Legal. By Statute Westminster the First, 3 Edw. 1, A.D. 1276, the time of memory was limited to the beginning of the reign of Richard I., July 6, 1189: 2 Inst. 238, 239. But see the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71.

Menace, a threat. By the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 30, it is made felony to demand with menaces property, money, etc.; and see Termes de la Ley. But see MEIGNE; and MEINY.

Menagium, a family.—Wals., p. 66.

Mendlefe. See MEDLEFE.

Menials [fr. mœnia, Lat., walls], those servants who live within their master's walls.—Termes de la Ley.

Mens Rea, a guilty mind. See ACTUS NON FACIT REUM, NISI MENS SIT REA. Although prima facie and as a general rule there must be a mind at fault before there can be a crime, it is not an inflexible rule, and a statute may relate to such a subject-matter and may be so framed as to make an act criminal, whether there has been any intention to break the law or otherwise to do wrong or not. There is a large body of municipal law at the present day which is so conceived. Bye-laws are constantly made regulating the width of thoroughfares, the height of buildings, the thickness of walls and a variety of other matters necessary for the general welfare, health or commerce, and such bye-laws are enforced by the sanctions of penalties; the breach of them constitutes an offence and is a criminal matter, . . . and in such a case the substance of the enactment is that a man shall take care that the statutory direction is obeyed and that if he fails to do so he does so at his peril—WILLS, J.: R. v. Tolson, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 173. See also BRETT, J.: R. v. Prince, (1875) L. R. 2 C. C. R. 163; Monseil Bros. Ltd. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 1917, 2 K. B., and R. v. Wheate, 1921, 2 K. B. 119; Sivour v. Napolitano, 1931, 1 K. B. 636; Dobell v. Barber, 1931, 1 K. B. 219. As to what must be considered in deciding whether mens rea need be pursued, see Cambridge Law Journal, Vol. VI., No. 1, 1936, p. 1.

Mensa, patrimony, or goods, and necessary things for livelihood.—Jac. Law Dict.

Mensâ et thoro, Divorce à. Superseded by a judicial separation. See A MENSA ET THORO, and MARRIAGE.

Mensalla, parsonages or spiritual livings united to the tables of religious houses, and called mensal benefices amongst the canonists.—Blount.

Mensura domini regis, or Mensura regalls, the royal standard measure, which was kept in the Exchequer, according to which all measures were to be made. But see MEASURE.

Mental Deficiency Act. See IDIOT.

Mental Reservation, a silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise.

Mental Treatment Act, 1930. See PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND.

Mepris, neglect; contempt.

Mer, or Mere, a fenny place, or piece of water.

Mera noctis, midnight.

Merannum, timbers; wood for building.—Old Records.

Mercable [fr. mercor, Lat.], to be sold or bought.

Mercantile Agent. The Factors Act, 1839 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1, defines a mercantile agent as 'a mercantile agent having in the customary course of his business as such agent authority either to sell goods or to consign goods for the purpose of sale, or to buy goods or to raise money on the security of goods.' A mercantile agent has implied authority to pledge the goods entrusted to him (Weiner v. Harris, 1910, 1 K. B. 285). See also Weiner v. Gill, 1906, 2 K. B. 574; and Kempler v. Bravingtons Ltd., (1925) 133 L. T. 680.

Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97). Its principal enactments are: (1) that a writ of execution shall not effect a title bond fide acquired before seizure; (2) that in an action for breach of contract to deliver goods sold, a writ for the delivery of the goods may be obtained (these two sections are repealed by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and reproduced by ss. 26 and 52 of that Act); (3) that the consideration for a guarantee need not appear in writing; (4) that a guarantee to or for a firm ceases upon a change in the firm (this section is repealed by the Partnership Act, 1890, and reproduced by s. 18 of that Act); (5) that a surety who discharges a liability is to be entitled to an assignment of all securities held by the creditor; (6 and 7) that an acceptance of a bill of exchange must be in writing, and that 'inland bill of exchange' bears a certain definition—these two sections are repealed by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and reproduced by ss. 7 and 17 of that Act; (8) that as to repairs of ships, every port in the United Kingdom is to be deemed a home port; (9) that actions for merchants' accounts must be brought within six years; (10) that absence beyond seas is no disability availing the plaintiff within the Statute of Limitations; and (11) that part payment by one co-contractor is not to prevent the bar by the Statute of Limitations in favour of another co-contractor. See LIMITATIONS.

Mercantile Marine Fund, a fund consisting, under ss. 676-679 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, of the fees paid on survey and measurement of ships, money arising from unclaimed property of deceased seamen, fees received by receivers of wreck, light dues, etc., etc., and applicable to the payment of salaries of mercantile marine officers, etc., under the Act. The 'General Lighthouse Fund' is substituted for the Mercantile Marine Fund by the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 44).

Mercat [fr. mercatus, Lat.], market; trade.

Mercative, belonging to trade.

Mercature, the practice of buying and selling.

Mercenary [fr. mercedula, Lat., a small fee], one that hires.

Mercenarius, a hiring or servant.

Mercen-Lage, the Mercian Laws, which were observed in many of the Midland counties, and those bordering on the Principality of Wales, the retreat of the ancient Britons—one of the three principal systems of law prevailing in different districts about the beginning of the eleventh century.—1 Bl. Com. 65.

Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28). See TRADE DESCRIPTION.

Merchant [fr. marchand, Fr.], one who traffics to remote countries; also, any one dealing in the purchase and sale of goods. See Josselyn v. Parson, (1872) L. R. 7 Exch. 127.

Merchantable, marketable. 'Where goods are bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he be the manufacturer or not), there is an implied condition that the goods shall be of merchantable quality; provided that if the buyer examined the goods, there shall be no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed' (Sale of Goods Act, s. 14 (2); and see also s. 15, and Sumner, Permain & Co. v. Webb & Co., (C. A.) 1922, 1 K. B. 55).

Merchant Shipping. The Acts relating to Merchant Shipping have been twice consolidated: first, in 1854, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104; and, secondly, in 1894, by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), which contains 748 sections and 22 schedules, the 22nd Schedule containing 48 repealed enactments.

By s. 713 of the Act the Board of Trade exercises a general control over merchant shipping. Additions and amendments have been made to the Act of 1894 by various Acts, the most important of which are: the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1906, 1907, 1911, 1920, and 1921; the Merchant Shipping (Stevedores and Trimmers) Act, 1911; the Merchant Shipping (Seamen's Allotment) Act, 1911; the Marine Conventions Act, 1911; Merchant Shipping (Certificates) Act, 1914; Merchant Shipping (Salvage) Act, 1916; Merchant Shipping (Wireless Telegraphy) Act, 1919; Merchant Shipping Acts (Amendment) Act, 1923; Fees (Increase) Act, 1923; Merchant Shipping (International Labour Conventions) Act, 1925; Merchant Shipping (Line Throwing Appliance) Act, 1928; Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932. The law of pilotage is now contained in the Pilotage Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 31). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Shipping,' and consult Temperley or Maclachlan on M. S. Acts.

Merchants' Accounts. The period of limitation of action for the recovery of these is six years. See MERCANTILE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1856.

Merchants, Statute of, 13 Edw. 1, st. 3, repealed by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. See ACTON-BURNEL.

Merchet, a fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to the lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. See Kennel's Gloss., 'Mariagium.'

Merclament, an amerciament, penalty, or fine.

Merclmoniatuſ Angliæ, the impost of England upon merchandise.

Mercy, Recommendation to. It has for many years been common for a jury in finding a prisoner guilty, especially where the crime is murder, to accompany their verdict by a recommendation of the prisoner to the mercy of the Crown on certain named grounds. Such a recommendation has no legal effect whatever, but is usually attended to. Convicts, however, have been hanged in spite of it.

Merger [fr. mergo, Lat., to sink], an annihilation, by act of law, of a particular in an expectant estate consequent upon their union in the same person without an intervening estate in another person—thus accelerating into possession the expectant which swallows up the particular estate. It is the drowning of one estate in another, and differs from suspension, which is but a partial extinguishment for a time; while extinguishment, properly so termed, is the destruction of a collateral thing in the subject itself out of which it is derived. 'In order that there may be a merger, the two estates which are supposed to coalesce must be vested in the same person at the same time and in the same right' (Re Radcliffe, 1892, 1 Ch. p. 231, per Lindley, L.J.). An estate tail, however, is an exception to the rule; for a man may have in his own right both an estate tail and a reversion in fee; and the estate tail, though a less estate, will not merge in the fee.—2 Bl. Com. 177.

The doctrine of merger probably results from the maxim, Nemo potest esse dominus et tenens; or perhaps from the inconsistency, but for it, of one person owning two estates in fact, whilst one of them, in law, includes the time or duration of both. 'Perhaps,' remarks Preston (3 Conv. 22), 'the rule that nemo potest esse dominus et tenens does not clearly, and beyond all controversy, furnish a principle to which the learning can be exclusively referred; yet of all other rules none affords principles to which the cases on merger bear a nearer affinity.'

When the same person has a legal estate in the fee, and is also entitled to the trust or beneficial ownership of that estate, the trust will merge in the legal ownership, but, on the other hand, the legal estate can never be extinguished in the equitable ownership.

Merger is either absolute or qualified, for an estate as against one person may be extinguished, whilst as against another it may still have existence.

Before the passing of the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106) (repealed and reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 139), the doctrine worked great hardship in cases where the immediate reversion on a lease was a leasehold term; leaseholds, however long their term, being considered an inferior or less estate than a freehold, e.g., if the leasehold reversion became merged in an estate for life or other freehold estate, any sub-lease was terminated, the rent of the sub-lease and all remedies for it were lost. The Act of 1845, s. 9, declared that when the reversion on a lease became merged, the next estate was to be deemed the reversion, if the surrender or merger took place after the 1st October, 1845. See also SEVERANCE and APPORTIONMENT.

In order to effect a merger, the following circumstances must concur:—

(1) There must of necessity be two estates at least in the same property, or in the same part of the same property, which must vest in the same person.

Merger, however, will operate between three or more estates, as well as between two.

(2) The several estates must be immediately expectant upon each other; the more remote estate must be without any intervening vested estate or contingent remainder created in the same instant of time and by the same means which originated the other estate; and the determination or acquisition of an intermediate estate may be the cause of merger, as between estates kept distinct by means of such intermediate estate.

(3) The estate in reversion or remainder must be larger than the preceding estate, for there cannot be a merger as between equal estate of freehold.

Under s. 88 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, a foreclosure by a mortgagee will merge the mortgage term into and vest the fee simple in the mortgagee subject to any prior mortgage term, and a similar consequence, mutatis mutandis, follows upon foreclosure of a leasehold term (ibid., s. 89).

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 185, reproducing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (4), it is provided that there shall not, after the commencement of that Act, be any merger by operation of law only of any estate the beneficial interest in which would not be deemed to be merged or extinguished in equity. In equity merger is, and always has been, a question of the intention of the parties: Capital, etc., Bank v. Rhodes, 1903, 1 Ch. p. 652.

As to the merger of charges on property, the general rule is that if the benefit of the charge and the property subject to it vest in the same person, equity will treat the charge as kept alive or merged according to whether it be of advantage or of no advantage to the person in whom the two interests have vested that the charge should be kept alive (Manks v. Whiteley, 1911, 2 Ch. p. 458, sub-title, Whiteley v. Delaney, 1914, A. C. 132; and see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 185, reproducing Judic. Act, 1873, s. 25 (4); and also s. 116 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which enacts that, subject to the above rule in equity, a mortgage term when discharged by payment shall become a satisfied term and shall cease; and consult Coote on Mortgages, 8th ed. pp. 1455 et seq.

When an engagement has been made by simple contract, and then the same engagement is made by deed, the simple contract is merged and extinguished in the deed. If an action is brought and judgment recovered, the right of action is said to be merged in the judgment: see Aman v. Southern Railway Co., 1926, 1 K. B. 59.

The merger of a misdemeanour in a felony is abolished by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 12, by which a prisoner tried for misdemeanour is not entitled to be acquitted of it if the facts proved amount in law to a felony.

Meritorious Consideration, one founded upon some moral obligation.

Merits, Affidavit of. This instrument is necessary when a defendant seeks to set aside, for irregularity, a judgment signed or other proceeding. The term 'merits,' in an affidavit of this nature, is to be read in a technical sense, and is not to be understood to be confined to strictly moral and conscientious defences; and defences of the Statute of Frauds or Limitations, and of Bankruptcy and Infancy, are defences on the merits.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Mero Motu. See EX MERO MOTU.

Mers Eum, a lake; also a marsh or fenland.

Merse-ware, the ancient name for the inhabitants of Romney Marsh, Kent.

Mersey. As to collisions in the sea channels leading to the Mersey, see the Mersey Channels Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 21). The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board is the harbour authority for Liverpool and Birkenhead: see the Mersey Docks Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.); and Mersey Docks Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. xlix.); Local Acts. The Minister of Transport is Commissioner of the Conservancy (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 2.

Mertlage, a church calendar or rubric.

Merton, Statute of (20 Hen. 3, c. 4, A.D. 1235), the first Act of Parliament passed, so called because it was enacted at the Priory of Merton, in Surrey, about nine miles from London. Its principal unrevoked provisions (1) allow the inclosure or 'approvement' of commons by lords of manors, provided that the freeholders have sufficient pasture (subject to the consent of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (56 & 57 Vict. c. 57)); (2) declare the illegitimacy of children born before marriage (see LEGITIMACY). It was in connection with provision (2) that the barons declared against any alteration, notwithstanding the request of the bishops that the law should be altered. 'Omnes Comites et Barones,' runs the statute, 'und voce responderunt quod nolunt leges Angliæ mutare quæ usitate sunt et approbate.' See BASTARD; INCLOSURE.

Mescroyants, unbelievers.

Mese, a house and its appurtenances.

Mesnality, a manor held under a superior lord.

Mesnalty, the right of the mesne.

Mesne [fr. medius, Lat.], middle, intermediate.

Mesne Lord, a lord who holds of a superior lord, and of whom an inferior (tenant paravail) holds.

Mesne Process, all those writs which intervene in the progress of a suit or action between its beginning and end, as contradistinguished from primary and final process. Thus, the capias or mesne process was issued after a writ of summons, which was the primary process, and before a capias ad satisfaciendum, which was the final process, or process of execution. See IMPRISONMENT.

By the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 1, the power of arrest upon mesne process was relaxed, and confined to the case of a debtor about to quit England, and where the amount of the debt was 20*l.* or upwards; and by the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 6, it is enacted, that 'after the commencement of the Act a person shall not be arrested upon mesne process in any action.' Nevertheless, where a plaintiff has good cause of action against the defendant to the amount of 50*l.* or upwards, and the defendant is about to quit England, and the absence of the defendant from England will materially prejudice the plaintiff in the prosecution of his action, a judge may order the defendant to be arrested unless or until security be found.

Mesne Profits, Action of, an action of trespass brought to recover profits derived from land, whilst the possession of it has been improperly withheld: that is, the yearly value of the premises. 'Mesne profits are the rents and profits which a trespasser has, or might have, received or made during his occupation of the premises, and which therefore he must pay over to the true owner as compensation for the tort which he has committed. A claim for rent is therefore liquidated, while a claim for mesne profits is always unliquidated' (Odgers on Pleading).

The action should be brought in the name of the plaintiff, who has recovered judgment in the ejectment, and lies against any person found in possession of the premises after a recovery in ejectment.

The jury are not bound by the amount of the rent, but may give extra damages. But ground-rent paid by the defendant should be deducted from the damages. A plaintiff may recover in this action the costs of the action of ejectment.

As to the date from which mesne profits are assessable, see Elliott v. Boynton, 1924, 1 Ch. 236.

A claim for mesne profits in respect of the premises claimed may be joined with an action for the recovery of land (R. S. C. Ord. XVIII., r. 2). See EJECTMENT.

Mesne, Writ of, an ancient and abolished writ, which lay when the lord paramount distrained on the tenant paravail; the latter had a writ of mesne against the mesne lord.

Messarius [fr. messis, Lat.], a chief servant in husbandry; a bailiff.—Dugd. Mon., tom. ii. p. 832.

Messenger, one who carries an errand; a forerunner.

Messengers are certain officers employed under the direction of the Secretaries of State, and always ready to be sent with dispatches, foreign and domestic (now called King's Messengers). They were employed with the secretaries' warrants to arrest persons for treason, or other offences against the State, which did not so properly fall under the cognizance of the Common Law, and, perhaps, were not properly to be divulged in the ordinary course of justice.—2 Hawk. P. C., c. xvi., s. 9.

There are other officers distinguished by this appellation, as the messengers of the Lord Chancellor, Privy Council, and Exchequer, etc. Also, in bankruptcy, persons officially appointed who seize a bankrupt's property. The office of messenger of the Great Seal was abolished by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81.

Messengers-at-Arms are the king's officers who execute all writs passing from the Court of Session. In actions emanating from the Supreme Court in Scotland personal service on a defender can only be effected by a messenger-at-arms.

Messe Thane, one who said Mass; a priest.

Messina, harvest.

Messis sementem sequitur.—(Harvest follows the sower.) But see EMBLEMENTS.

Message [fr. messuagium, Low Lat., formed perhaps fr. message, by mistake of the n, in court hand, for u, they being written alike; or fr. maison, Fr.], a dwelling-house with its outbuildings and curtilage and some adjacent land assigned to the use thereof. See Co. Litt. 5 b, and Mr. Hargrave's note, as to what passes under the word 'messuage.' In Monks v. Dykes, (1839) 4 M. & W. 567, Parke, B., said that 'a messuage and a dwelling-house are substantially the same thing, and therefore if rooms be so occupied as to be in fact a dwelling-house, they may be described as a messuage.'

In Scotland the principal dwelling-house without a barony.—Bell's Dict.

Metachronism [fr. μετά, Gk., and χρονος, time], an error in computation of time.

Metage, measuring. The Corporation of London had formerly the right to dues for measuring merchandise, etc., especially grain.

Metals, Dealers in Old, defined as any person dealing in, buying, and selling old metal, scrap metal, broken metal, or partly manufactured metal goods, or defaced or old metal goods, and whether such person deals in such articles only, or together with second-hand goods or marine stores, and the term 'old metals' means the said articles. See Old Metal Dealers Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 110), relating to their trade requiring registration, and giving powers of visitation and search to the police; s. 13 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), by which any dealer in old metals who purchases any lead, copper, brass, tin, pewter, or German-silver in any quantity at one time less than 112 lb. in the case of lead, or than 56 lb. in the case of the other metals above mentioned, is guilty of an offence against the Act, and liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l*. See also Public Stores Act, 1875, ss. 9, 10, and 11, and Public Health Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 86, as to registration and keeping of books.

The Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 9, defines 'old metal' as including 'scrap metal, broken metal, or partly manufactured metal goods, and old or defaced metal goods,' and (on summary conviction not exceeding 5*l.*) imposes a fine upon a dealer in old metal, as defined by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (supra), who purchases 'old metal' from a person under 16 years of age.

Métayer System. Under this, the land is divided in small farms, among single families, the landlord generally supplying the stock which the agricultural system of the country is considered to require, and receiving, in lieu of rent and profit, a fixed proportion of the produce. This proportion, which is generally paid in kind, is usually (as is implied in the words métayer, mezzajuglio, and medietarius) one-half.—1 Mill's Pol. Econ. 296 and 363; and Smith's Wealth of Nat., bk. iii. c. ii.

Metecorn, a measure or portion of corn given by a lord to customary tenants as a reward and encouragement for labour.

Metegavel [meat-tax, Sax.], a tribute or rent paid in victuals.

Meter [fr. mete, Sax.], an instrument of measurement, as a coal-meter, a land-meter.

Metewand or Meteyard, a staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

Methel, speech, discourse; mathlian, to speak, to harangue.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Metric System, a system (adopted in every European country except our own and Russia) in numbering of coinage, weights, measures, etc., wherein the integer is divided into fractions of a tenth, hundredth, etc., and no others. Contracts are not invalid on the ground that the weights or measures expressed therein are of the metric system. See s. 21 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, which has taken the place of the repealed Metric Weights and Measures Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 117), which recited that 'for the promotion and extension of our internal as well as our foreign trade, it was expedient to legalize the use of the metric system of weights and measures.' The Act of 1878, however, not authorizing the physical use of metric weights and measures, such physical use is expressly authorized by the Weights and Measures (Metric System) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 46).

Metropolis. The principal city, being the seat of government, in any kingdom; the Cities of London and Westminster and the parishes adjacent thereto; the County of London. See LONDON.

Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), amended by subsequent Acts, of which the most important is that of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), and to a great extent repealed by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (now repealed), the Local Government Act, 1894, the London Government Act, 1899, and the Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 50). See LONDON, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Metropolis.'

Metropolitan. An archbishop, PRIMATE AND METROPOLITAN OF ALL ENGLAND, the Archbishop of Canterbury.—Halsb. L. E., tit. 'Ecol. Law.'

Metropolitan Board of Works, a board constituted in 1855 by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, and elected by vestries and district boards, who in their turn were elected by the ratepayers. The powers, duties, and liabilities of the board were transferred to the London County Council by s. 40, sub-s. 8, of the Local Government Act, 1888.

Metropolitan District. Places subject to the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Board of Works (succeeded under the Local Government Act, 1888, by the London County Council), enumerated in Schedules A, B, C, to the Metropolis Management Act, 1855.

Metropolitan Police. The area which is under the control of the Metropolitan Police is the County of London (but not the City), the County of Middlesex, Croydon, West Ham, and such places within 15 miles of Charing Cross as the King by Order in Council has included (Metropolitan Police Act, 1829, ss. 2 and 34 and Schedule, and Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, ss. 2 and 5).

The Metropolitan Police Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 33), gives power to appoint an additional assistant commissioner (s. 1), amends the age for compulsory retirement for senior officers (s. 2), makes amendments as to the constitution of the Police Federation (s. 3), gives power to appoint constables for a fixed period (s. 4).

The numerous Acts dealing with the Metropolitan Police are collected in Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Police (Metropolis)' and 'Police (London),' and also in an official Metropolitan Police Guide. See also the Police Regulations of 20th August, 1920, as amended by the Police Regulations of 24th March, 1922, 23rd March, 1923, and 19th March, 1924. As to the power of a Metropolitan Police Constable to make arrests, see Archbold's Crim. Pleading and Practice and Stone's Justices' Manual.

Metropolitan Police Magistrates. There are 25 salaried Metropolitan Police Magistrates (maximum 27) appointed by the Crown to execute the duties of justices of the peace within the Metropolitan Police District. The qualification for this office is having practised as a barrister for at least seven years. Any such magistrate can do alone any act which may be legally done by more than one justice of the peace. There is also special jurisdiction to settle disputes about wages for labour on the Thames, to deal with cases of oppressive distraint for small rents, to order delivery to the owner of goods unlawfully detained up to 15*l.* value, and to give possession of deserted premises to landlords (see Stone's Justices' Manual). The senior Metropolitan Magistrate is ex-officio a justice for Berkshire (Indictable Offences Act, 1848). The Metropolitan Police Courts are: Bow Street, Clerkenwell, Marylebone, Marlborough Street, Westminster, Old Street, Thames, Tower Bridge, Lambeth, Greenwich, Woolwich, North London, West London, South Western, West Ham, Willesden. See Metropolitan Police Act, 1829; Metropolitan Police Courts Acts, 1839 and 1840; Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1858, and numerous other Acts; see Chitty's Statutes. Any person aggrieved by the conviction of a court of summary jurisdiction in respect of any offence who did not plead guilty or admit the truth of the information may appeal to quarter sessions (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), s. 37; and Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 25. This does not affect the alternative appeal to the High Court by way of case stated on a point of law given by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857.

Metteshop or Mettenschep, an acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants for default in not doing their customary service in cutting the lord's corn.—Old Records.

Meubles meublant [Fr.], household furniture.

Mewar. See JODHPUR. An Indian State in Rajputana.

Moya, a mow or heap of corn.—Blount, Ten. 130.

Michael Angelo Taylor's Act (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Metropolis'), for better paving and regulating the streets of the Metropolis, partly superseded by the Metropolis Management Acts, and the Public Health (London) Acts, which repeal 'as from the coming into operation of any bye-law made for the like object,' s. 73 and other sections of M. A. Taylor's Act, but leaves unrepealed s. 73 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, which incorporates M. A. Taylor's Act, so far as in force and not inconsistent with the Act of 1862 and the Acts recited therein.

Michaelmas, the feast of the Archangel Michael, celebrated on the 29th of September, and one of the usual quarter-days.

Michaelmas Head Court, a meeting of the heritors of Scotland, at which the roll of freeholders used to be revised.—20 Geo. 2, c. 50. See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Michaelmas Sittings of the Supreme Court commence on the 12th October, and terminate on the 21st of December. By Order in Council (The Long Vacation) (1935) Order, 1935, the sittings were ordered to commence on October 7th. The day of commencement is that which is appointed by Order in Council (see R. S. C. Ord. LXIII., r. 1).

Michaelmas Term began on the 2nd and ended on the 25th of November in every year. The division of the legal year into terms is abolished so far as relates to the administration of justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 26).

Michel-gemote, the great meeting or ancient Parliament of the kingdom.—1 Bl. Com. 147.

Michel-synoth, the great council of the Saxons.—1 Bl. Com. 147.

Michey, theft, cheating.

Middle-man, an intermediary between wholesale merchants and retail dealers; a distributor from producer to consumer.

Middlesex, Bill of, a writ anciently resorted to by the Court of King's Bench, in order to enlarge its jurisdiction in civil causes, which was formerly confined to actions of trespass, or other injury alleged to have been committed vi et armis. But it might always hold pleas of any civil action other than actions real, provided the defendant was an officer of the Court, or in the custody of the marshal, or prison-keeper of the Court. In proceedings against prisoners or officers of the Court, the actions were said to be commenced by bill, in all other cases by original writ. See 3 Bl. Com. 285; App. xviii. Both are abolished by 2 Wm. 4, c. 39.

Middlesex Quarter Sessions. The area over which the Quarter Sessions for the County of Middlesex has jurisdiction is now much smaller than formerly, owing to the extension of the County of London, which has its own sessions (London Sessions). As a result, the Middlesex Sessions are no longer presided over by a paid judge and his assistant, but by an unpaid chairman and vice-chairman, as in other counties. Middlesex Sessions are held at the Guildhall, Westminster, and are not to be confused with London Sessions, which are presided over by a paid chairman and deputy-chairman, now held at the Sessions House.

Middlesex Registration of Deeds (7 Anne, c. 20, and 25 Geo. 2, c. 4); and see the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 8, as to non-registration of wills affecting realty in Middlesex; also the Land Registry (Middlesex Deeds) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 64), by which the Middlesex Registry was transferred to the Land Registry. The Middlesex Deeds Register is defined in the Land Registration Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 26), s. 2. This Act provides for the closing of the register as from the appointed day (1st January, 1937), on which registration under the L. R. Act, 1925, became compulsory on sale of land throughout the administrative county of Middlesex. See REGISTRATION.

Midsummer Day, the summer solstice, which is on the 24th day of June, and the feast of St. John the Baptist, a festival first mentioned by Maximus Tauricensis, A.D. 400. It is one of the four usual quarter-days for the paying of rent.

Midwife. A person following the profession of delivering women of children. The Medical Act, 1886, by s. 3 requires as a qualification for registration as a medical practitioner, and for the recovery of professional charges, the having passed a qualifying examination in 'medicine, surgery, and midwifery.' The Midwives Act, 1902, as amended by the Midwives Acts, 1918 to 1937, penalizes any woman, not certified under the Act, who styles herself a midwife, or who habitually attends women in childbirth for gain; constitutes a Central Midwives Board to regulate the issue of certificates; establishes a 'Midwives Roll'; provides for the local supervision of midwives by county or county borough councils, and otherwise aims at securing the better training of midwives and the regulation of their practice. For the Acts and the Rules of the Central Midwives Board under it, see Chitty's Statutes. The Ministry of Health Act, 1919, provides that the Ministry shall exercise all the powers under these Acts which were previously exercised by the Privy Council. The 1936 Act imposes on local authorities the duty of the provision, either through welfare councils, voluntary organizations or by itself, of domiciling service of midwives (s. 1); ss. 2 and 3 deal with terms of employment and fees payable to midwives; s. 5 deals with compensation payable when midwives cease or are required to cease practice; s. 6 prohibits an unqualified person acting as maternity nurse for gain. As to Scotland, see Midwives (Scotland) Act, 1915.

Mile, a measure of length containing 8 furlongs, or 1760 yards, or 5280 feet.

Mileage, travelling expenses which are allowed to witnesses, sheriffs, and bailiffs, according to certain scales of fees observed by the officers of the several courts. Formerly, borough coroners received 9d. a mile for every mile beyond two, by s. 171 and Sched. IV. of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

Miles [Lat.], generally, a soldier; particularly, a knight.

Milestone. The trustees of turnpike roads were, very early in the history of such roads (see 3 Geo. 4, c. 26, s. 119), under an obligation to set up and maintain milestones, but no such legal obligation is expressly imposed upon the managers of public highways, although the Highway Rate, etc., Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 27), repealed, except as to London and Scilly, by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90); by s. 6 constituted 'the expenses incurred by a highway authority in maintaining, replacing, or setting up milestones on any highway' a 'lawful charge upon the highway rate.' Milestones are included among road improvements for purposes of the Development and Roads Improvement Funds Act, 1909, by the Roads Improvement Act, 1925, s. 2.

Militare, to be knighted.

Military Asylum of Chelsea, for the reception of children of soldiers, now called the Duke of York's Royal Military School.—17 & 18 Vict. c. 61; 10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 16.

Military Courts, the Court of Chivalry and Courts martial. See CHIVALRY, COURT OF, and COURTS MARTIAL.

Military Feuds, the genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures. See TENURE.

Military Forces. See ARMY; MILITIA; and RESERVE FORCES.

Military Law, as distinguished from civil law, is the law relating to and administered by military courts, and is concerned with the trial and punishment of offences committed by officers, soldiers and other persons (e.g., sutlers and camp followers) who are from circumstances subjected for the time being to the same law as soldiers. But the term 'military law' is frequently used in a wider sense and as including not only the disciplinary but also the administrative law of the Army, as, for instance, the law of enlistment and billeting.—Manual of Military Law, p. 6. Consult Clode's Military Forces of the Crown.

Military Manœuvres may be executed within limits and during a period not exceeding three months by Order in Council authorized by the Military Manœuvres Acts, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 60) and 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 44).

Military Offences, those offences which are cognizable by the Courts military—as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc., as well as any civil crime with special provisions in the case of manslaughter, treason, felony or rape. Hals. L. E., tit. 'Royal Forces.'

Military Service Acts of 1916 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 104, and 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 15), introducing compulsory military service during the late war for men of 18 and under 41, were amended from time to time during the war, e.g., the age was extended to 51 in 1918, and are now repealed (S. L. R., 1927). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Army.'

Military Tenure, tenure in chivalry or knight service.

Military Testament. By s. 11 of the Wills Act, 1837, a soldier or sailor on active service may dispose of his personal estate as he might have done before that Act. The Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 58), extends this right to make wills without formalities to realty in the case of the above persons. As to seamen and marines, see also the Navy and Marines (Wills) Acts, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 72) and 1914. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

Militia, the national soldiery, as distinguished from the regular forces or standing army, being the inhabitants, or, as they have been sometimes called, the trained bands of a town or county, who are armed on a short notice for their own defence. As to its origin see Hall, Cons. Hist. iii. p. 259. The statutes on this subject make service compulsory upon all men between eighteen and thirty, who are to be selected by ballot (23 & 24 Vict. c. 120, s. 7), with exceptions for peers, clergymen, article clerks, officers on half-pay, apprentices, poor men having more than one child born in wedlock, and other persons (42 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 43); but by Acts dating from 10 Geo. 4, c. 10, the making of lists and the ballots and enrolments for the Militia were from time to time suspended.

Finally in 1865, by the Militia (Ballot Suspension) Act, 1865—a temporary Act, continued annually from time to time by successive Expiring Laws Continuance Acts—these statutes were suspended, subject to a power in the Crown to revive them by Order in Council.

Voluntary enlistment in the Militia, which was the practice long before the Suspension Act was passed, was regulated by the Militia Act, 1882, replacing the Militia (Voluntary Enlistment) Act, 1875, the schedule of which contains a long list of repealed Militia Acts. The Act of 1882, s. 12, and the Reserve Forces and Militia Act, 1898, reserve the Militia for service in the United Kingdom except as regards volunteers for service elsewhere.

The term Militia is now applied to that part of the Army Reserve which was formerly called the 'Special Reserve' (Territorial Army and Militia Act, 1921, s. 2; Reserve Forces Act, 1882, s. 12). This reserve force can be used in times of emergency and danger where required, but any member of this force can volunteer for service at other times than these. See also Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, s. 30.

Milk. As to the sale of unwholesome milk, see Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 116–119; and see, generally, Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928, under which sampling powers are given and power to analyse samples, etc. (ss. 13 et seq.); and Public Health Amendment Act, 1907, ss. 53 and 54. See, further, the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 66), as amended by the Milk and Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922, making provision for the sale of milk and the regulation of dairies. If the premises are unsuitable for the sale of milk, the sanitary authority may refuse to register or may remove from the register the names of dairymen (Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), s. 185). See also the Milk (Special Designations) Order, 1923, No. 601; Public Health (Dried Milk) Regulations, 1923, No. 1323; Public Health (Condensed Milk) Regulations, 1925, No. 509; Milk and Dairies Order, 1926, No. 821; Milk (Special Designations) Order, 1934, No. 1317. The Scotch Act is 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 46.

Milk for Meat, i.e., that the agister of cows should take their milk in exchange for their pasturage. See London and Yorkshire Bank v. Belton, (1885) 15 Q. B. D. 457, where it was held that under such an agreement the farmer is taking a 'fair price' for the grass within s. 45 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (s. 35 of the Act of 1923), by which live stock taken in to be fed 'at a fair price' are exempted from distress for rent.

Milk Marketing Board. A milk marketing scheme has been made under the powers given in the Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 42), s. 1, and was approved on 28th July, 1933, by the Milk Marketing Scheme (Approval) Order, S. R. & O. 1933, No. 789. See the Milk Act, 1934 (24 Geo. 5, c. 51), and the Milk (Extension of Temporary Provisions) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 9). See as to Milk Marketing Schemes and contracts by registered producers, Milk Marketing Board v. Williams, 1935, W. N. 82. As to ultra vires contributions towards the cost of operating the scheme, see Ferrier v. Scottish Milk Marketing Board, 1937, A. C. 126 (H. L. Sc.); and the Milk (Extension of Provisions) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 9).

Milleate or Mill-leat, a trench to convey water to or from a mill.—7 Jac. 1, c. 19.

Milled Money, money with regular marking on edge of coin; coined money.

Mill-holms, low meadows and other fields in the vicinity of mills, or watery places about mill-dams.

Minage, a toll or duty paid for selling corn by a measure called a mina.—Jac. Law Dict.

Minare, to dig mines.

Minator, a miner.—Old Records.

Minator carucæ, a ploughman.

Minatur innocentibus, qui pareit nocentibus. 4 Co. 45.—(He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.)

Mine [fr. mwyn or mwyr, Wel., fr. maen, a stone], an excavation or cavern in the earth; an excavation made for the purpose of getting coal or other minerals.

The inspection and regulation of mines other than coal mines is provided for by the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Acts, 1872 and 1875. As to the corresponding provisions in the case of coal mines, see COAL MINES.

Coal mines only were rateable under 43 Eliz. c. 2, but the Rating Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54), has made all mines rateable.

Neither mines under railways (see Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 77–85), nor under waterworks (see Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 17), ss. 18–27), pass to the respective companies, unless expressly purchased. See also Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts, 1923, 1925, and 1934; the Coal Mines Act, 1926 (c. 17), and the Mining Industry Act (c. 28). By the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908, as amended by 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 48, s. 1, work below ground in a mine is restricted to seven hours during any consecutive twenty-four hours. But see Coal Mines Act, 1930 (c. 34), s. 14; Coal Mines Act, 1931 (c. 27), s. 1; Coal Mines Act, 1932 (c. 29), s. 1. Consult MacSwiney on Mines and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Mines.'

Mineral Rights Duty. The Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7, c. 8), ss. 20 and 21, imposes a duty of 1s. in the £ on the rental value of minerals (see that title). This tax falls upon the proprietor or lessor and is for practical purposes an additional 'landlord's property tax' imposed upon minerals. These sections have been amended by 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 8, s. 11; 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 89, s. 43; 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 18, s. 64, and Sched. IV.

Minerals. This term may include all substances of commercial value which can be got from beneath the earth, either by mining or quarrying, except common clay (Glasgow v. Farie, (1888) 13 App. Cas. 657), or sandstone (N. B. Ry. v. Budhill Coal and Sandstone Co., 1910, A. C. 116); but china clay is a mineral (G. W. Ry. v. Carpalla China Clay Co., 1910, A. C. 83). See also Waring v. Foden, 1932, 1 Ch. 276.

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205 (1) (ix.), mines and minerals include any strata or seam of minerals or substances in or under any land and the powers of working and getting the same, but not an undivided share thereof.

Minime mutanda sunt quæ certam habent interpretationem. Co. Litt. 365.—(Things which have a certain interpretation are to be altered as little as possible.)

Miniment or Muniment, the evidences or writings whereby a man is enabled to defend the title of his estate. It includes all manner of evidences.

Minimum Subscription is the minimum cash to be raised by the issue of shares offered to the public for subscription. This must be stated in the prospectus and application sums therefor received before allotment of shares. The amount includes the minimum required, in the opinion of directors, for property to be bought by the proceeds of issue, preliminary expenses, if any, repayment of loans for those purposes and working capital; see Companies Act, 1929, s. 39 and 4th Sched.

Minimum Wage. The Trade Boards Act, 1909, established for the first time a minimum wage in certain trades. The Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, made provision for the settlement of minimum rates of wages for workmen employed underground in coal mines. The principle has been extended to many industries during the war and after, and to agriculture by the Corn Production Act, 1917 (repealed). See TRADE BOARDS.

Mining Lease means for the purposes of the Law of Property Act, 1925, a lease for mining purposes, that is, the searching for, winning, working, getting, making merchantable, carrying away, or disposing of mines and minerals, or purposes connected therewith, and includes a grant or licence for mining purposes (s. 205 (1) (xiv.), ibid.).

Minister, an agent; one who acts not by an inherent authority, but under another.

In politics, one to whom a sovereign entrusts the administration of government. In Great Britain, the word ministry is used as a collective noun for the heads of departments in the State forming the Government and responsible to Parliament.

In religion, a pastor of a church, chapel, or meeting-house, etc.

Minor, a person under twenty-one years of age. There is no legal distinction between a minor in this sense and an infant. See INFANT. Strictly speaking, in Scotland a minor is a person between the ages of pupilarity and majority—in males from fourteen to twenty-one years and females from twelve to twenty-one years. Minors must act with a curator if they have one, whereas pupils (under the age of pupilarity) act through their tutor. These are summary disabilities imposed by Common Law and Statute on minors.

Minority [fr. minor, Lat.], the state of being under age—i.e., twenty-one years. Also, the smaller number.

Mint [fr. moneta, Lat.; mynet, Sax., money, from mynetian, to coin], the place where money is coined. The Mint of Great Britain is situated near the Tower of London. By the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10) (repealing various Acts), the laws relating to the coinage and Mint are consolidated and amended. See COIN.

Also, a place of privilege in Southwark, near the king's prison, where persons formerly sheltered themselves from justice under the pretext that it was an ancient palace of the Crown. The privilege has long been abolished.

Mintage, that which is coined or stamped.

Mint-mark. The masters and workers of the Mint, in the indentures made with them, agree 'to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making'; after every trial of the pyx, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they are entitled to their quidus under the Great Seal, and to be thereupon discharged from all suits or actions; they then change the privy mark, so that the moneys from which they are not yet discharged may be distinguished from those for which they are; they use the new mark until another trial of the pyx. See Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), s. 12. See PYX.

Mint-master, one who manages the coinage. See MASTER OF THE MINT.

Minute, sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of a degree or hour.

Also, a memorandum, as of proceedings of a borough council, directed to be drawn up, entered, and signed, by the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), Schedule III., Part V., r. 3.

Minutes of a Company must be kept of all general meetings and meetings of the directors or managers in a book which is open to inspection by the members (Companies Act, 1929, ss. 120 and 121). The minutes are evidence, but neither conclusive nor exclusive (Re Fireproof Doors Ltd., 1916, 2 Ch. 142).

Mirror des Justices. This singular work has raised much doubt and difference of opinion concerning its antiquity. Some have pronounced it older than the Conquest, others have ascribed it to the time of Edward II.

This book, which bears the name of Andrew Horne, and is written with very little precision, treats of all branches of the law, whether civil or criminal. Besides this, it gives a cursory retrospect of some changes ordained by former kings; enumerates a list of abuses, as the author terms them, of the Common Law, proposing, at the same time, what he considers to be desirable corrections. He does the same with Magna Charta, the Statutes of Merton and Marlbridge, and some principal Acts in the reign of Edward I.—2 Reeves, c. xii. 358.

Misa, a compact, a firm peace.

Misadventure, Excusable Homicide by, also termed homicide per infortunium; it arises where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another, as where a person is at work with a hatchet, and the head of it flies off and kills a bystander, or is shooting at a mark and undesignedly kills a man, for the act is lawful, and the effect is merely accidental. So where a parent is moderately correcting a child, a master his apprentice or scholar, or an officer punishing a criminal, and happens to occasion his death, it is only misadventure, for the act of correction was lawful; but if he exceeds the bounds of moderation, either in the manner, the instrument, or the quantity of punishment, and death ensue, it is manslaughter at least, and in some cases, according to the circumstances, murder: immoderate correction being unlawful.—Fost. 275.

Misallege, to cite falsely as a proof or argument.

Misappropriation by Servants Act, 1836 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 103), provides that servants taking their masters' corn, etc., without authority, for giving the same to their masters' horses, etc., shall not be guilty of felony, but be liable to imprisonment.

Miscarriage, a failure of justice. See 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4. See also ABORTION.

Mischief. This word is often used as signifying the object or purpose of a statute.

Mischievous Animals. As to the liability of their owners the law recognizes two classes of animals (q.v.): (1) Animals naturally dangerous to man, such as a lion, tiger, or elephant, as to which the law is that the owner keeps it at his peril; he must prevent it from doing injury, and it is immaterial whether he knows the particular animal in question to be dangerous or not; (2) Animals generally of a harmless description either by nature or cultivation, as dogs, horses or oxen, as to which the rule is that the owner is not liable unless he knows that the particular animal was likely to do mischief; see Filburn v. People's Palace, etc., Co., (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 258; Manton v. Brocklebank, 1923, 2 K. B. 212. As to dangerous dogs, see Dog.

Miscognizant, ignorant of, unacquainted with.

Miscontinuance, cessation, intermission.

Misdemeanour, a crime less than felony, as perjury, obtaining money by false pretences, endeavouring to conceal a birth, and fraudulently obtaining property on credit and not having paid for it within four months of bankruptcy, which are misdemeanours by statute; and any attempt to commit a felony or misdemeanour, whether the crime attempted be so by statute or Common Law (Arch. Cr. Pl., 2); any disobedience of a statute (Reg. v. Hall, 1891, 1 Q. B. 747); any incitement of another to commit a felony where no such felony is actually committed (Reg. v. Gregory, (1867) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 77); sale of provisions unfit for food (R. v. Dixon, (1814) 3 M. & S. 11); public nuisances (see NUISANCE); and very many other offences, which are misdemeanours at Common Law. 'In the present state of our law we can only define a misdemeanour by saying that every indictable offence which is neither treason nor felony is a misdemeanour' (Odgers on the Common Law, p. 130).

Similarly to statutory misdemeanours, to which no express punishment is attached, Common Law misdemeanours are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both with or without hard labour.

Any greater felony includes a less felony, so that, e.g., on an indictment for murder there may be a conviction of manslaughter; but no felony includes a misdemeanour, so that at Common Law no person on an indictment for felony could be convicted of a misdemeanour; but various statutory enactments—e.g., the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 9, by which a person indicted for any felony may be found not guilty of the felony, but guilty of the attempt to commit it—have abrogated the Common Law rule. Consult Archbold's Crim. Plead.

Misdescription of Fabrics. The Fabrics (Misdescription) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 17), prohibits the sale of any textile fabric with a misleading description as to its inflammability. The Act applies to Scotland.

Misdirection, an error in law made by a judge in charging a jury. See R. S. C. Ord. XXXIX., and NEW TRIAL.

Mise [Fr., mise, mise en gage, stake-money], disbursement, costs; also a tax or tallage, etc.; also, the issue in a writ of right. It is sometimes corruptly used for mease or mees—i.e., a message.

Miselli, leprous persons.

Mise-money, money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc.—Blount.

Miserable depositum, an involuntary deposit under pressing necessity.—Civ. Law.

Miserere (have mercy). The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy, whence it is also called the Psalm of Mercy.—Jac. Law Dict.

Misericordia, an arbitrary amerciamment or punishment imposed on any person for an offence. It is thus called, according to Fitzherbert, because it ought to be but small and less than that required by Magna Charta.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Also, a discharge of all manner of amerciamments, which a person might incur in the forest. See CAPIAS PRO FINE. See 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed. 527.

Misericordia communis, a fine set on a whole county or hundred.

Misericordia domini regis est, quâ quis per juramentum legalium hominum de vicineto eatenus amercandus est, ne aliquid de suo honorabili contenemento amittat. Co. Litt.—(The mercy of our lord the king is that by which every one is to be amerced by a jury of good men from his immediate neighbourhood, lest he should lose any part of his own honourable tenement.)

Misevenire, to fail or succeed ill.

Misfeasance, a misdeed or trespass; also, the improper performance of some lawful act. As to the distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, see McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, 1912, 1 K. B. 118, and cases there referred to; Guilfoyle v. Port of London Authority, 1932, 1 K. B. 336; and Coleshill v. Manchester Corporation, 1928, 1 K. B. 776. As to misfeasance proceedings in the course of a winding-up against directors, promoters, managers or others, see Companies Act, 1929, s. 276.

Misfortune. See CHANGE.

Misjoinder of Parties. See PARTIES.

Misnomer, a wrong name. Nil facit error nominis cum de corpore vel persona constat. 11 Rep. 21.—(A mistake in the name does not matter when there is no mistake in the body or person.)

Misnomers in civil proceedings are curable under R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXVIII., and misnomers in criminal pleadings by 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 19.

As to misnomer of a juror, see Reg. v. Mellor, (1858) Dears. & B. 468.

Mispleading. See JEOFFAILS.

Misprision [fr. mépris, Fr.], neglect, negligence, or oversight.

All such high offences as are under the degree of capital, but nearly bordering thereon, are misprisions; and it is said that a misprision is contained in every treason and felony whatsoever, and that, if the Crown so please, the offender may be proceeded against for the misprision only. And upon the same principle, while the Court of Star Chamber existed, it was held that the sovereign might remit a prosecution for treason, and cause the delinquent to be censured in that Court, merely for a high misdemeanour; as in the case of Roger, Earl of Rutland, in 43 Eliz., concerned in Essex's rebellion. Every great misdemeanour, according to Coke, which has no certain term appointed by the law, is sometimes called a misprision.

Misprisions are divided in the text-books into two kinds:—

(1) Negative, the concealment of what ought to be revealed; such is misprision of treason, the bare knowledge and concealment of treason without any degree of assent, for any assent makes the party a principal; as the concealment, construed to be aiding and abetting, did at the Common Law; but it was enacted by st. 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 10, that a bare concealment of treason shall be only held a misprision. There must be two witnesses to support the case.—7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 3; 1 Hale, P. C. 374; 4 Steph. Com.

Besides the last-described offence, the mere concealment of a felony is criminal, and is called misprision of felony; but if there be an assent, this makes the person assenting either a principal or accessory. Theftbote, and concealing treasure-trove, are each of them species of negative misprision.—4 Steph. Com.

(2) Positive, otherwise denominated contempt of high misdemeanours, such as the maladministration of such high officers as are in public trust and employment, usually punishable by parliamentary impeachment; also, embezzlement of the public money, punishable by fine and imprisonment; also, such contempts of the executive magistrate as demonstrate themselves by some arrogant and undutiful behaviour towards the sovereign and government. And to endeavour to dissuade a witness from giving evidence, to disclose an examination before the Privy Council, or to advise a prisoner to stand mute (all of which are impediments to justice), are high misprisions and contempts, punishable by fine and imprisonment. See 4 Bl. Com. 119 et seq.

Misprisions of clerks are mistakes made by clerks, etc., in writing or keeping records.

Misrecital, a wrong recital. If it be in the beginning of a deed, which goes not to the end of a deed, it shall not hurt, but if it go to the end of a sentence, so that the deed is limited by it, it is vicious.—Cart. 149.

Misrepresentation, i.e., suggestio falsi, in a matter of substance essentially material to the subject, whether by acts or by words, by manœuvres, or by positive assertions or material concealment (suppressio veri) whereby a person is misled and damnified.

In equity it is immaterial whether the misrepresentor knew the matter to be false, or asserted it, without knowing if it were true or false; for the affirmance of that which is not known to be true is as unjustifiable as the assertion of that which is known to be false, since it is equally a means of deception. But equity would not relieve, if the misrepresentation were of a trifling or immaterial thing, or if the other party did not trust to it, or was not misled by it, or if it were vague and inconclusive in its own nature, or if it were upon a matter of opinion or fact equally open to the inquiries of both parties, and in regard to which neither could be presumed to have confided in the other, for vigilantibus non dormientibus æquitas subvenit. Equity cannot indemnify a person from the consequence of indolence and folly, or of careless indifference and neglect of easily accessible means of information. At Common Law, see more fully under the title DECEIT.

If the representation amounts to a warranty (g.v.), its untruth is actionable because the person making it has entered into a contract or warranty and not on the ground merely of mis-statement. Such representations may be collateral or not part of the principal contract and upon letting premises may not be required to be put into writing under the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40, reproducing s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (see De Laessle v. Guilford, 1901, 2 K. B. 215). See also Smith's L. C., notes to Chandelor v. Lopus.

Innocent misrepresentation is where a person makes a representation which he reasonably and honestly believes to be true, but which is in fact false. Innocent misrepresentation, if it induced a contract, provides a defence to an action on the ground of breach of contract, and will enable the deceived party to get the contract rescinded by the Court if the parties can be put back again in their original position; but see Jones & Co. v. Waring & Gillow Ltd., 1926, A. C. 670. See Leake on Contracts.

Misrepresentation of Solvency, etc. By s. 6 of the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14) (Lord Tenterden's Act), no action lies in respect of any representation of the credit, trade, dealings, etc., of another, to obtain credit for that other, unless it be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith. See Hirst v. West Riding Banking Co., 1901, 2 K. B. 560.

As to misrepresentation in a prospectus by non-disclosure and the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 84, see R. v. Bishirian, 52 T. L. R. 361. See REPRESENTATION.

Missa, the mass.

Missæ presbyter, a priest in orders.

Missal, the mass-book.

Misstalcus, a messenger.—Old Records.

Missura, the ceremonies used in the Romish Church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

Mistake, misconception, error.

Money paid under a mistake of a material fact, as where a person discounts a forged bill, is recoverable (though a banker paying the forged cheque of a customer cannot charge the customer with the loss), and see Jones & Co. v. Waring & Gillow Ltd., 1926, A. C. 670; but money paid under a mistake of law is ordinarily not recoverable (Holt v. Markham, 1923, 1 K. B. 504), though there is an exception in the case where an officer of a court or a trustee in bankruptcy has received the money (Ex p. Simmonds, (1885) 16 Q. B. D. 308).

It is a common condition of the sale of land that any error or misdescription shall not vitiate the sale, and may or may not be made the subject of compensation, and this condition applies whether an error complained of was discovered before or after completion of the purchase (Palmer v. Johnson, (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 351); but where the misdescription is so serious as to go to the root of the contract, the condition will not assist the vendor (Flight v. Booth, 1 Bing. N. C. 370).

Contracts may be rectified so as to carry out the intentions of the contracting parties where they have been drawn up, by reason of a mutual mistake, to an effect militating against the intentions of both (Beale v. Kyte, 1907, 1 Ch. 564); and in some cases a contract may be cancelled on the ground of one of the parties having entered into it by mistake. The rectification, or setting aside, or cancellation of written instruments is part of the business assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56, replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

In criminal cases a mistake of fact may be an excuse, as when a man, intending to do a lawful act, does that which is unlawful (cf. proviso, s. 28 (1), Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43)), and acting upon an honest and reasonable belief in the existence of facts, which, if true, would make his act lawful.

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 14 (1) (b), failure to make a claim within the period specified is not a bar to proceedings if occasioned by mistake. The mistake contemplated is a mistake of fact which 'arises from the belief that facts exist when they do not. An expectation which is not fulfilled is not a mistake' (Griffiths v. Atkinson, 5 B. W. C. C. 345, 348).

Mistery, or Mystery [fr. métier, Fr.], a trade or calling.

Mistress, the proper style of the wife of an esquire or a gentleman.

Mistrial, an erroneous trial.

Misuser, abuse of any liberty or benefit which works a forfeiture of it.

Mitigation, abatement of anything penal, harsh, or painful. An address in mitigation is a speech made by the defendant or his counsel to the judge, after verdict or plea of guilty, and which may be followed by a speech in aggravation from the prosecuting counsel.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 110, justices were prohibited from mitigating minimum penalties in pursuance of any power of mitigating penalties conferred on such justices by any local or private Act of Parliament; but this Act is repealed, as to England, by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which gives an almost unlimited power of mitigating such penalties as may be imposed by justices. See also the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 17).

Mittendo manuscriptum pedis finis, an abolished judicial writ addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the Exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before justices in eyre, into the Common Pleas.—Reg. Brev. 14.

Mitter le droit (to pass a right).—Co. Litt. 273 a. See RELEASE.

Mitter l'estate (to pass an estate). See RELEASE.

Mittimus (we send), a writ for removing and transferring records from one court to another. Also a precept or command in writing, directed to the gaoler or keeper of some prison for the receiving and safe keeping of an offender charged with any crime, until he be delivered by due course of law.

Mittre à large (to set or put at liberty).

Mixed Actions. Suits at Common Law partaking of the nature of real and personal actions, by which some real property was demanded, and also personal damages for a wrong sustained, were so called. They substantially partook, however, of the character of real actions, and were often so called, but they are now abolished, except the action of ejectment.—3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. Correctly speaking, however, ejectment is in its form a species of the personal action of trespass. Steph. Plead. app. vii. See now ACTION.

Those in Roman Law, in which some specific thing was demanded, and where also some personal obligations were claimed to be performed.—Hallifax on Roman Law, 85.

Mixed Arbitral Tribunal. Tribunals which may be established under treaties of peace with various countries, e.g., Versailles (Germany), see S. R. & O., 1920 (No. 264); Austria, S. R. & O., 1920 (No. 1347); Hungary, S. R. & O., 1921 (No. 1285). A tribunal sat in London to adjudicate on certain losses and debts in respect of which claims were made under the Treaty of Versailles on the governments of ex-enemy countries.

Mixed Contract, one in which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, and requires of the latter something of less value than what he has given; as a legacy charged with something of less value than the legacy itself.—Civ. Law.

Mixed Government, a form of government, combining monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy, like that of the British Empire.

Mixed Larceny, otherwise called compound or complicated larceny, that which is combined with circumstances of aggravation, as violence to the person, or taking from a house. See LARCENY.

Mixed Laws, those which concern both persons and property.

Mixed Property, a compound of realty and personality.

Mixed Questions [questions mixtes, Fr.], those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws.

Mixed Questions of Law and Fact, cases in which a jury are to find the particular facts, and the Court is to decide upon the legal quality of those facts by the aid of established rules of law, independently of any general inference or conclusion to be drawn by a jury. All technical expressions, such as asportation, conversion, acceptance, etc., are, in their application, partly matters of law, partly matters of fact. See 6 East, 3; 1 T. R. 167; and Taylor's Evid., s. 24.

Mixed Subjects of Property, such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended nevertheless with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblements, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such are animals feræ naturæ, charters and deeds, court rolls and other evidences of the title to land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armour, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms.

Mixed Tithes, tithes of wool, milk, pigs, etc., consisting of natural products, but nurtured and preserved in part by the care of man. See Com. Dig., tit. 'Dismes' (F. 2), and post, TITHES.

Mobilia sequuntur personam. (Movables follow the person.) See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Mobles [fr. meubles, Fr. and mobilia, Lat.], movable goods; furniture. Obsolete word.

Mockadoes, a kind of cloth made in England, mentioned in 23 Eliz. c. 9.

Mocurrery, lands to let on a lease.—Indian.

Model, a representation or copy of a thing. In the Copyright Act, 1911, 'work of sculpture' includes casts and models; see s. 35 of the Act. See COPYRIGHT.

Moderata misericordia, a writ founded on Magna Charta, which lay for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offence; it was addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the parties.—New Nat. B. 167; Fitz. N. B. 76.

Moderator, a president or chairman.

Modiato, a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine.—Dugd. Mon. t. ii. p. 194.

Modification, the term usually applied to the decree of the Teind Court, awarding a suitable stipend to the minister of a parish.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Modius, a measure, usually a bushel.

Modius terræ vel agri, a quantity of ground containing in length and breadth 100 feet.—Dugd. Mon. t. iii. p. 200.

Modo et formâ (in manner and form), a phrase formerly used in pleading. It was the nature of a traverse to deny the matter of fact in the adverse pleading in the manner and form in which it was alleged, and, therefore, to put the opposite party to prove it to be true in manner and form as well as in general effect. The plea of non est factum, and the replication de injuriâ (now abolished), were the only negative traverses not pleaded modo et formâ. These words were in no case strictly essential, so as to render their omission a cause of demurrer. See now PLEADING.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem.—(Persons may contract themselves out of their legal obligations.)

Modus decimandi, a particular manner of tithing arising from immemorial usage, differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase; being sometimes a pecuniary compensation, as twopence per acre for the tithe of land; sometimes a compensation in work and labour, as that the parson should only have the twelfth cock of hay, and not the tenth, in consideration of the owner's making it for him; sometimes in lieu of a large quantity of crude or imperfect tithe a less quantity when arrived to greater maturity, as a couple of fowls in lieu of tithe eggs and the like. Any means, in short, whereby the general law of tithing was altered and a new method of taking tithes was introduced, was called a modus decimandi, or special manner of tithing.—2 Bl. Com. 29. A too large modus was called a 'rank' modus, and the Tithe Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100), required evidence of usage for thirty years.

Modus de non decimando non valet.—(An agreement not to take tithes avails not.)

Modus levandi fines. See FINES.

Moerda, the secret killing of another; murder.—Teutonic word. 4 Bl. Com. 194.

Mofussil, separated, particularized; the subordinate divisions of a district, in contradistinction to Sadder or Sudder, which implies the chief seat of government.—Indian.

Mofussil dewanny adawlut, provincial court of justice.—Ibid.

Mohatra, a fraudulent contract to screen usury.

Moldore, a gold coin of Portugal.

Molety [fr. medietas, Lat. through moitié, Fr.], half.

Molendinum, a mill.—Old Records.

Molendum, grist; a certain quantity of corn sent to a mill to be ground.

Molestation. In questions arising out of trade disputes, molestation may be described as an act of intimidation, violence, shouting, hooting, etc., in contrast to peaceful persuasion; see R. v. Shepherd, (1869) 11 Cox. C. C. 325. In matrimonial law, an act of serious annoyance.

Also in Scots law, the name of an action (now in disuse, being superseded by declarator and interdict) competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Moltura, or Molta, the toll or multure paid for grinding corn at a mill.

Moltura libera, a free grinding or liberty of a mill without paying toll. Paroch. Antiq. 236.

Mollah, a doctor of laws.—Arabic.

Molliter manus imposit. An officer may lay hands upon another to turn him out of church (for instance), and prevent his disturbing the congregation; and if sued for this and the like battery, he may set forth the whole case and state that he laid hands upon him gently (molliter manus imposit) for this purpose.—3 Steph. Com.

Molman, a man subject to do service.

Molmutlan, or Molmutin Laws, the laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, sixteenth King of the Britons, who reigned above four hundred years before the birth of Christ. These were the first published laws in Britain, and, together with those of Queen Mercia, were translated by Gildas into Latin.—Usher's Primord. 126.

Molneda, Mulneda, a mill-pond or pond.—Paroch. Antiq. 135.

Molta, Moltura. See MOLITURA.

Mona, the Isle of Anglesea; also the Isle of Man.

Monachus, a monk. As to liability of Roman Catholic monks to banishment, see JESUIT.

Monarchy [fr. μόναρχος, Gk.], a government in which the supreme power is vested in a single person. Where a monarch is invested with absolute power, the monarchy is termed despotic; where the supreme power is virtually in the laws, though the majesty of government and the administration are vested in a single person, it is a limited monarchy. It is hereditary, where the regal power descends immediately from the possessor to the next heir by blood, as in our country; or elective, as was formerly the case in Poland.

Monasteries Dissolution Acts (27 Hen. 8, c. 28; 31 Hen. 8, c. 13; 32 Hen. 8, cc. 7, 24); and consult Br. & Had. Com. i. 466, and ii. 68. As to existing law of banishment of members of Roman Catholic religious orders (not being nunneries), see ROMAN CATHOLICS.

Monasticon Anglicanum. A monumental work by Sir Wm. Dugdale, Kt., Garter Principal King-at-Arms, originally published in Latin. It contains a history of the abbeys and other monasteries, hospitals, friaries and cathedral and collegiate churches with their dependencies in England and Wales, and also of all such Scotch, Irish and French monasteries as were connected with religious houses in England. The best modern edition is that published in 1817–1830, under the editorship of Messrs. Caley, Ellis and Bandinel.

Monetarium, Monya, or Moneyage, called also focagium, a certain tribute formerly paid by tenants to their lord every third year, that he should not change the money which he had coined, when it was lawful for certain great men to coin money, but not of silver and gold, in their territories. Abrogated by 1 Hen. 1, c. 2.—Hale's Hist. 217.

Also a mintage, and the right of coining or minting money.

Monetandi jus comprehenditur in regalibus quæ nunquam à regis sceptro abdicantur. Dav. 18.—(The right of coining money is included in those rights of royalty which are never separated from the kingly sceptre.)

Money. 'Money as currency, and not as medals, seems to me to have been well defined by Mr. Walker in Money, Trade and Industry, as "that which passes freely from hand to hand throughout the community in final discharge of debts and full payment for commodities, being accepted equally without reference to the character or credit of the person who offers it and without the intention of the person who receives it to consume it or apply it to any other use than in turn to tender it to others in discharge of debts on payment for commodities." This was adopted by Darling, J., as a definition in Moss v. Hancock, 1899, 2 Q. B. 111 at p. 116.

In bequests: "Money in the strict sense" means, as I understand, "money actually in hand as cash or at a bank on drawing account . . ." (Warrington, L.J., in In re Taylor, 1923, 1 Ch. 99 at p. 108). "Money" is to be treated in the strict sense unless there be a context which shows something to the contrary (ibid.). In In re Emerson, 1929, 1 Ch. 128, a gift of 'the residue of money at the time of my death' was held to include the residuary personal estate. In In re Mellor, 1929, 1 Ch. 446, a gift of 'the remainder of any moneys' following an express direction to pay debts was held to carry both real and personal property. In In re Collings, 1933, Ch. 920, it was held that 'money' in its strict legal sense included money on deposit account at a bank. For an extreme case, see Re Hodgson, (1935) 52 T. L. R. 88, and notes thereon in Law Quarterly Review, January, 1936, vol. 52, p. 3.

Money-bill. 'A money-bill means a public bill which in the opinion of the Speaker of the House of Commons contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects, namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation; the imposition, for the payment of debt or other financial purposes, of charges on the Consolidated Fund, or on money provided by Parliament, or the variation or repeal of any such charges; supply; the appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money; the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or subordinate matters incidental to those subjects or any of them. In this subsection the expressions "taxation," "public money" and "loan" respectively do not include any taxation, money, or loan raised by local authorities or bodies for local purposes.' (Parliament Act, 1911, s. 1 (2).)

With respect to these bills, the House of Commons are so reasonably jealous of their privilege of imposing new taxes upon the subject, that they will not suffer the House of Lords to exert any other power but that of rejection: they will not pass a money-bill introduced in the House of Lords, nor permit the least alteration or amendment to be made by the House of Lords in the mode of taxing the people by bills of this nature. See 1 Bl. Com. 170, 184. This question was much discussed at the time the Finance Bill of 1909 was before Parliament. The House of Lords did not acquiesce in the above-mentioned limitation of their powers, and having rejected the Bill a General Election ensued, but when the House of Commons so elected presented the Bill without alteration, it was passed by the House of Lords and became the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. As to money-bills under the Parliament Act, 1911, see ACT OF PARLIAMENT. And as to the temporary collection of duties of customs and excise and income tax under the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913, see CUSTOMS.

Money-broker, a money changer; a scrivener or jobber; one who lends or raises money to or for others.

Money Counts. Simple contracts, express or implied, resulting in mere debts, are of so frequent occurrence as causes of action, that certain concise forms of counts were devised for suing upon them. These were, before the Judicature Acts, called the indebitatus, or common money counts, or money counts.

Money had and received. When a person receives money which in justice and equity belongs to another, as a rule a debt is created and the money can be recovered by an action for 'money had and received to the use of the plaintiff.' See Moses v. Macferlan, (1760) 2 Burr. 1005; Marriott v. Hampton, (1797) 7 T. R. 269; 2 Sm. L. C. (11th ed.) 421. But the action cannot now be extended beyond the principles illustrated in the decided cases; see Sinclair v. Brougham, 1914, A. C. p. 453, per Lord Sumner, where the true nature of the action is discussed. The cause of action arises when the money is received and not earlier (see Bowling v. Cox, 1926, A. C. 751, at p. 754).

Money Land. In equity, land articleed or devised to be sold, and turned into money, is considered as money, and money articleed or bequeathed to be invested in land, has, in equity, many of the qualities of real estate, and is descendible and devisable as such according to the rules of inheritance in other cases, and this upon the ground that equity regards substance and not form, and will further the intention of parties.

By s. 75 (5), Settled Land Act, 1925, replacing Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 26 (5), capital money arising under that Act while remaining uninvested or unapplied and investments hereof are for all purposes of disposition, transmission and devolution to be treated as land and shall be held for and go to the same persons successively in the same manner and for and on the same estates, interests and trusts as the land wherefrom the money arises would, if not disposed of, have been held and have gone under the settlement, and see s. 78 (ibid.), as to personal estate settled by reference to capital money or on trusts corresponding with the settlement of the land. These provisions do not relate to or affect money arising on a trust for sale.

Before 1926, money agreed or directed to be laid out in land, so fully became land as, 1stly, not to be personal assets; 2ndly, to be subject to the curtesy of the husband, and (under the Dower Act) the dower of the wife; 3rdly, to pass as land by will, if subject to the real use at the time the will was made; 4thly, not to pass as money by a general bequest to a legatee, but it would by a particular description, as so much money to be laid out in land, or by a bequest of all the testator's estate in law and equity. But equity would not consider money as land, unless the covenant or direction to lay it out in land be imperative. For the order of administration since 1925, see the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, putting real and personal estate on the same footing.

The Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), enacts (s. 71 not repealed except in regard to copyholds) that lands to be sold of any tenure where the money arising from the sale is subject to be invested in the purchase of lands to be settled, so that any person, if the lands were purchased, would have an estate-tail therein, and also money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands to be settled, so that any person, if the lands were purchased, would have an estate-tail therein, shall, for the purposes of the Act, be treated as the lands to be purchased, and be considered subject to the same estates as the lands to be purchased would have been actually subject to; and now, by s. 130, Law of Property Act, 1925, an equitable interest may be created in personalty as well as in real property.

Money-lender. The Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), by s. 6 defines the expression 'money-lender' therein as including every person whose business is that of money-lending, or who advertises or announces himself or holds himself out in any way as carrying on that business.

but not including a pawnbroker (see that title), a Friendly, Building, or Loan Society (see those titles) or a corporation empowered by statute to lend money, or any person bond fide carrying on the business of banking or insurance or bond fide carrying on any business not having for its primary object the lending of money, in the course of which and for the purposes whereof he lends money; or any body corporate for the time being exempted from registration under this Act by order of the Board of Trade made and published pursuant to regulations of the Board of Trade.

The Act, as amended by s. 10 of the Money-lenders Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 21), subjects money-lenders as above defined to the liability of having their contracts judicially varied.

Under s. 1, if a borrower is sued by a money-lender for the money lent, and there is evidence satisfying the Court in which the action is brought either that the interest or the sum charged for expenses is excessive, and that the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, or is 'otherwise such that a Court of Equity would give relief,' the Court may re-open the transaction and relieve the borrower, who may himself institute proceedings and obtain the same relief as if he had been defendant in an action for the loan. As to the grounds on which a Court of Equity would give relief, see Nevill v. Snelling, (1880) 15 Ch. D. 679. As to the jurisdiction of the county court, see Crossingham v. Park, 1928, 1 K. B. 330. By the Money-lenders Act, 1927, s. 17, protection is given to the rights of bond fide holders for value without notice under contracts with money-lenders.

Under the Act of 1927 a person in order to carry on a money-lending business must obtain a certificate from the petty sessional court (s. 2), and must take out annually a money-lender's excise licence (s. 1) in respect of any address at which he carries on business. This licence must be taken out in his true name but shall also show his authorized name and authorized address. He must not carry on his business in any other name or at any other address. Sect. 3 deals with the suspension and forfeiture of money-lenders' certificates for certain offences, including offences under this and other Acts. Sect. 5 restricts money-lenders' advertisements. Sub-s. (3) of this section which prohibits any person from acting as agent or canvasser for a money-lender has reference to canvassers acting with the money-lender's authority (see Verner-Jeffreys v. Pinto, 1929, 1 Ch. 401). Under s. 6 there must be a note or memorandum in writing of a money-lending contract and a copy must be sent to the borrower (see Eldridge and Morris v. Taylor, 1931, 2 K. B. 416 at p. 418). By s. 2 (3) of the Act, a money-lender must not carry on business under any name which implies that he carries on banking business, and s. 4 (3) prescribes penalties for a money-lender who issues a document implying that he carries on banking business.

Money-lending companies are required to comply with s. 145 of the Companies Act, 1929, relating to the publication of names and other particulars of and concerning the directors. See the Acts of 1900 and 1927 and their history, together with the Inland Revenue and Board of Trade Regulations, and notes, in Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Money-Lenders.' Consult Stone and Meson on Moneylenders.

Monger [fr. mangian, Sax., to trade], a dealer or seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity, to express a seller of such commodity. Also, a little fishing vessel.—13 Eliz. c. 11.

Mongers, or Moneyers, ministers of the Mint; also bankers.

Moniment, a memorial, superscription, or record.

Monition, a summons or citation ; a direction by an ecclesiastical judge to a defendant to abstain from practices contrary to ecclesiastical law ; see Dale's case, (1881) 6 Q. B. D. 376 ; 7 App. Cas. 240.

Monitory Letters, communications of warning and admonition sent from an ecclesiastical judge, upon information of scandal and abuses within the cognizance of his court.

Monmouth, county of, made one of the counties of England by 27 Hen. 8, c. 26. Many Acts provided that it is to be considered as part of Wales for the purposes of the Act, e.g., National Insurance Act, 1911, s. 79 ; Welsh Church Act, 1914 ; Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1919.

In the appointment, in Wales and Monmouthshire, of inspectors of coal mines, by the Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 97 ; of factories, by s. 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 ; and of quarries, by s. 2 (3) of the Quarries Act, 1894, persons having a knowledge of the Welsh language are to be preferred.

Monocracy, a government by one person.

Monogamy [fr. μόνος, Gk., single, and γάμος, marriage], marriage of one husband to one wife.

Monomachy [fr. μόνος, Gk., and μάχη, a fight], a duel ; a single combat.

It was anciently allowed by law, for the trial or proof of crimes. It was even permitted in pecuniary causes, but it is now forbidden both by the civil and canon laws.

Monomania, insanity upon a particular subject.

Monopoly [fr. μόνος, Gk., single, and πωλέω, to sell], the exclusive privilege of selling any commodity. A licence or privilege allowed by the Crown, for the sole buying, selling, making, working, and using of anything whatsoever, whereby the subject is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before.

Such grants were common before the Stuarts, and were very oppressive and injurious during the reign of Elizabeth. The grievance became so insupportable that, notwithstanding the power of granting monopolies was a valuable part of the prerogative, they were abolished in 1623 by the Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. 1, c. 3, which declared all monopolies void, with an exception for 'letters-patent' for fourteen years for the sole working or making of any new manufactures within the realm, to the true and first inventors thereof, provided they be not contrary to law nor mischievous to the State. See LETTERS-PATENT.

Monster. An animal which has not the shape of mankind, but, in any part, evidently bears the resemblance of the brute creation, has no inheritable blood, and cannot be heir to any land, although it be brought forth in marriage ; but, though it have deformity in any part of its body, yet, if it have human shape, it may be an heir.—Co. Litt. 7 b ; 2 Bl. Com. 246.

Monstrans de droit (manifestation or plea of right), one of the two Common Law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the Crown of either real or personal property.—3 Bl. Com. 256. It was preferred either on the Common Law side of the Court of Chancery, or in the Exchequer, and will now come before any division of the High Court.

Where the Crown is in possession under a title, the facts of which are already set forth upon record, a party aggrieved may proceed in monstrans de droit, i.e., may make, in opposition to such recorded title, a claim of right, grounded upon certain facts relied upon by him, without denying those relied upon by the Crown, and the praying judgment of the Crown whether, upon those facts, the Crown or the subject has the right. If the right be determined against the Crown, the judgment is that of ouster le main or amoveas manus, by which judgment the Crown is instantly out of possession, and it therefore needs no actual execution. Chit. Prerog. of the Crown, 345.

Monstrans de faits ou records (showing of deeds or records).

Upon an action brought upon an obligation, after the plaintiff had declared he ought to have shown his obligation, and so also of records. Monstrans de faits differed from oyer de faits in that he who pleaded the deed or record, or declared upon it, ought to have shown it, and the defendant might demand oyer of the same.

Monstraverunt, a writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne who held lands by free charter, when they were distrained to do unto their lords other services and customs than they or their ancestors used to do. Abolished.

Monstrum, a box in which relics are kept ; also, a muster of soldiers.

Month [fr. monath, Sax., moon, which was formerly written mone, as month was written moneth]. The period in which that planet moneth, i.e., completeth its orbit.

It is either—(1) Lunar, the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon returns to the same point, being twenty-eight days.

(2) Solar, that period in which the sun passes through one of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

(3) Calendar, by which we reckon time, consisting unequally of thirty or thirty-one days, except February, which consists of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty nine days. The calendar month is also called usual, natural, civil, political.

In an Act of Parliament, passed after 1850, the word 'month,' which was formerly taken to mean a lunar month, unless calendar month was specified, means calendar month; unless words be added pointing to lunar months (Interpretation Act, 1889 (s. 3), repealing and re-enacting 13 Vict. c. 21). By the Common Law and in equity it is but twenty-eight days; see 2 Bl. Com. 141. In ecclesiastical matters it means a calendar month. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIV., r. 1, where the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding is limited by months, not expressed to be lunar months, such time is to be computed by calendar months.

By the rule of the commercial world a month is deemed to be a calendar month; and this rule is applied to bills of exchange and promissory notes by s. 14, sub-s. 4, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61); but in legal documents which came into operation before 1926, the primary meaning of month is lunar month, and there is no general exception making it mean calendar month in commercial documents; it can only bear that meaning where, according to the ordinary rules of construction of documents, a secondary meaning can be admitted; see Bruner v. Moore, 1904, 1 Ch. 305, and P. Phipps & Co. v. Rogers, 1925, 1 K. B. 14.

Sect. 61 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, enacts that in all deeds, contracts, wills, orders and other instruments executed, made or coming into operation after 1925, 'month' means calendar month unless the context otherwise requires.

As to how a calendar month is to be computed, see Radcliffe v. Bartholomew, 1892, 1 Q. B. 161.

Monuments. See ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

Monya. See MONETAGIUM.

Mooktar, an agent or attorney.—Indian.

Mooktarnama, a written authority constituting an agent; a power of attorney.—Ibid.

Moor, an officer in the Isle of Man, who summons the Courts for the several sheadings. The officer is similar to our bailiff of a hundred.

Moot [fr. gmot, emot, Sax., meeting together], to plead a mock cause; to state and argue a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the Inns of Court at appointed times, and has of late years been revived in Gray's Inn.

Moot-case, or Moot-point, a point or case unsettled and disputable, such as properly affords a topic of disputation.

Moot-hall, or Moot-house, council-chamber, hall of judgment, town-hall.

Moot-hills, hills of meeting, on which our British ancestors held their great courts.

Moot-man, one of those who used to argue the reader's cases in the Inns of Court. See MOOT-CASE.

Mop. See STATUTE-FAIR.

Mora. Delay. Mere delay has no legal result where express or implied promptness could not have been exacted, but the onus of proof increases on those responsible as the delay itself increases.

Mora, a moor, marsh land, a heath, fen land, barren and unprofitable ground.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Mora mussa, a watery or boggy moor; a morass.—Dugd. Mon., tom. i. p. 306.

Mora reprobatur in lege. Jenk. Cent. 51.—(Delay is disapproved in law.)

Moral Actions, defined by Rutherford to be those only in which men have knowledge to guide them and a will to choose for themselves.—Inst. Nat. Law, lib. 1, c. i.

Moral Consideration. A mere moral consideration will not support a promise by parol. See CONSIDERATION.

Moral Imbeciles, 'persons who from an early age display some permanent mental defect coupled with strong vicious or criminal propensities on which punishment has had little or no deterrent effect'; see Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 1 (d). They constitute one of the four classes of 'defectives' dealt with by the Act.

Moratur in lege, he demurs; because the party does not proceed in pleading, but rests or abides upon the judgment of the Court on a certain point, as to the legal sufficiency of his opponent's pleading. The Court deliberates and determines thereupon. See DEMURRE.

Moravians, otherwise called Herrnhutters or United Brethren. A sect of Christians exempted from military service in America by 22 Geo. 2, c. 30, and allowed by that Act and by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 49, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 77 (since superseded by the more general Oaths Act, 1888), to give evidence on affirmation instead of oath.

More or less (sive plus sive minus). These words in a contract, which rests in feri, will only excuse a very small deficiency in the quantity of an estate; for if there be a considerable deficiency, the purchaser will be entitled to an abatement; see Cross v. Eglin, (1831) 2 B. & Ad. 106. The words are in constant use in describing the parcels in a conveyance, but the cases do not seem to define their precise effect.

Morganatic Marriage. The lawful and inseparable conjunction of a man of noble or illustrious birth with a woman of inferior station, upon condition that neither the wife nor her children shall partake of the titles, arms, or dignity of the husband, or succeed to his inheritance, but be contented with a certain allowed rank assigned to them by the morganatic contract. But since these restrictions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed; the union was indissoluble; the children legitimate. This connection was very usual in Europe; but there is not proof that the concubines of Charlemagne and the early kings of France were wives of this description, nor is there occasion to resort to that supposition in defence of their conduct, since the state of concubinage itself was little inferior to this in the public estimation; see Croke's Introd. to Horner v. Liddiard, pp. 115-117, A.D. 1800.

Morganganl, or Morgangiva [fr. morgen, Sax., the morning, and gifan, gift], a gift on the morning after the wedding; dowry; the husband's gifts to his wife on the day after the wedding.—Du Cange.

Morina, murrain; also the wool of sick sheep, and those dead with the murrain.—Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, par. 6.

Morling, or Morling, wool from the skin of dead sheep.—3 Jac. 1, c. 18.

Mormonism, a social system prevailing in Utah, a territory of North America, within the dominion of the United States, whereby plurality of wives is recognized. These marriages are not recognized by English law; see Hyde v. Hyde, (1866) L. R. 1 P. & D. 130. Nor are they legal according to the law of the United States.

Morosus, marshy. See MORA.

Morsellum, or Morsellus terræ, a small parcel or bit of land.—Drugd. Mon. 282.

Mort d'Ancestor. See ASSISE OF MORT D'ANCESTOR.

Mortality. See BILLS OF MORTALITY.

Mortgage [fr. mort, Fr., dead, and gage, pledge], a dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

A mortgage is the creation of an interest in property, defeasible (i.e., annullable) upon performing the condition of paying a given sum of money, with interest thereon, at a certain time. This conditional assurance is resorted to when a debt has been incurred, or a loan of money or credit effected, in order to secure either the repayment of the one or the liquidation of the other. The debtor, or borrower, is then the mortgagor, who has charged or transferred his property in favour of or to the creditor or lender, who thus becomes the mortgagee. If the mortgagor pay the debt or loan and interest within the time mentioned in a clause technically called the proviso for redemption, he will be entitled to have his property again free from the mortgagee's claim; but should he not comply with such proviso, the legal estate becomes perfected in the mortgagee, i.e., indefeasible, and so lost at the Common Law to the mortgagor. Until the mortgage has been foreclosed, or unless the property has been sold under powers to satisfy the debt, it is redeemable in a Court of Equity upon payment of the debt or loan, with interest and expenses, at any period within twelve (formerly twenty) years after the last recognition of the mortgage security by the mortgagee; and this because equity deems the non-compliance with the proviso for redemption a penalty, against which it always relieves when practicable.

Seeing that in by far the greater number of loan transactions the mortgagor never performs the condition in the proviso for redemption, they have been denominated mortgages, as the pledge is then dead or lost (mortuum vadum) to the mortgagor at law. A mortgage differs from a vifgage (vivum vadum), so called because neither loan nor property is lost, for the creditor enters into possession of the estate, and receives its proceeds in satisfaction of his debt, with interest, upon which the debtor becomes entitled to his own again. A Welsh mortgage is one in which the creditor receives the proceeds of his security in satisfaction of the interest of his debt, the principal remaining due and the estate never becoming forfeited, but redeemable at any time; and the creditor not being entitled to sue at law in the absence of a covenant or bond, or to foreclose in equity. When property is conveyed to a mortgagee and his heirs until out of its rents the loan and interest shall have been received, this is in the nature of a Welsh mortgage, and has been compared to a tenancy by elegit.

In order to protect a necessitous mortgagor from the exacting grasp of an inexorable mortgagee, equity will not suffer any compact whatever to infringe the right of redeeming a mortgage in its courts. The right or equity of redemption, then, is the chief and inseparable incident of a mortgage—an incident unextinguishable, save by a foreclosure decree, a sale by the mortgagee under a power, express or implied, in that behalf, a legislative provision, or unreasonable delay. See CLOG ON EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. A provision rendering a mortgage irredeemable for a short term, such as five or seven years, is, however, allowed (Biggs v. Hoddinott, 1898, 2 Ch. p. 311), and see Davis v. Symons, 1934, Ch. 442 (covenant not to redeem for twenty years not allowed; redemption allowed in six months).

Every kind of property may be mortgaged except the salaries and emoluments of public functionaries; full pay and half-pay of naval and military men; retiring allowance of a person liable to serve again, or of a servant of the East Indian Company; commissions in the Army; and church livings with cure of souls, and other statutory prohibitions.

While an increase in the rate of interest upon default of regular payment is a penalty, and is not admissible, the reservation of a higher rate, with an abatement for punctual payment, may be made.

The Real Estate Charges Acts, 1854 and 1877 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34), together with the Act of 1867 (see infra), commonly called Locke King's Acts, provided that the heir or devisee of real estate should not claim payment of mortgages out of personal assets; and the Real Estate Charges Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 69), provides that in construing wills a general direction to pay debts out of personalty shall not include mortgage debts, unless an intention to that effect be expressed or implied. These Acts were repealed and reproduced in an amended form, to give effect to the assimilation of real and personal property by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 35. This provision now relates to any property, whether real or personal, including estates-tails.

A mortgagor in possession or receipt of the rents and profits of any land, as to which the mortgagee has given no notice of intention to enter into possession or receipt of the rents and profits, may sue for such possession, or such rents and profits, or to prevent or recover damage for any wrong thereto, in his own name only.—Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (5) (now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 4, and repeated by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 98); but see Turner v. Walsh, 1909, 2 K. B. 484.

The Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), by ss. 15–17, reproduced with the amendments of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, s. 12, by the Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 95, 96, gives a mortgagor power to require the mortgagee to transfer the mortgage debt instead of reconveying; power to inspect title deeds, and power to pay off one mortgage, where there are mortgages to the same person of different properties, without paying off the others, unless the power is excluded by the terms of the mortgage (s. 93, ibid.). See CONSOLIDATION.

The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 99, reproduces and extends the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 18, and the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 3, which conferred on mortgagors and mortgagees in possession extensive powers of leasing, but powers of leasing were commonly provided for before the Act by express terms in the mortgage deed. These sections are not retrospective. Before this Act, in the absence of a power of leasing, a valid lease could only be granted with the concurrence of both mortgagor and mortgagee; see Keach v. Hall, (1745) 1 Doug. 21; 2 Sm. L. C. In West Bromwich Building Society v. Bullock, 80 S. J. 654, it was held that the mortgagor remains liable on his covenant (unless discharged) after transfer of the mortgage.

Sections 19–24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the C. A., 1911, ss. 4 and 5, now reproduced with slight amendments by ss. 101, 103 to 109 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, conferred on mortgagees powers of sale, insurance, and to appoint a receiver.

Section 102 enables a mortgagee of an undivided share in land to exercise such powers of sale, etc., as a mortgagee of a share in the land possessed before 1925, and for the effect of the powers of a mortgagee upon sale or foreclosure, over the fee simple or term remaining in the mortgagor and against subsequent incumbrancers, see ss. 88 and 89.

A mortgagee, however, cannot sell the mortgagor's beneficial interest apart from the legal title (Hunter v. Hunter, 1936, A. C. 202).

The Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 117, 118, 119 and 120, and 4th Sched., repeating with modifications the Act of 1881 (ss. 26-29), amended by the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 15, provides forms of Charge by Way of Legal Mortgage (see s. 87), and Statutory Charge by Way of Legal Mortgage (see ss. 87 and 117 and 119 as to implied covenants) and respective transfers and other forms, including respective forms of Receipt on discharge of any mortgage. This receipt by s. 115 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, operates as a surrender, reconveyance or transfer of the mortgaged property subject to prior incumbrances (if any). The provisions of s. 115 should be strictly attended to, especially sub-ss. (1) and (2), ibid. The vesting effect of a receipt in this form (without other reconveyance) applies to any class of property. The receipt need not be by deed and should be endorsed or attached to the mortgage.

The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 97, together with the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10, has also introduced very considerable alterations in the substantive law of mortgage. By ss. 85 and 86 of the L. P. Act, 1925, all mortgages of a fee simple existing on the 1st January, 1925, were converted into terms of 3,000 years from that day, the reversion in fee remaining in the mortgagor. Mortgages of a legal term were converted into mortgages less a few days, leaving the leasehold reversion in the mortgagor, the term of each subsequent then existing mortgage in either case being for a day longer than the term of the prior incumbrance. In the same manner mortgages after 1925 can only be effected by the creation of a term of years, leaving the freehold or leasehold reversion, as the case may be, in the mortgagor. Such mortgages carry the right to possess the documents of title subject to claims of prior mortgages, and may be effected by a charge by way of legal mortgage (see s. 87 and the 5th Schedule of the Act). Mortgages made after 1925 have one peculiarity: though creating a legal estate, the title is not perfected until the mortgage has been registered under s. 10, Class C, of the Land Charges Act, 1925, in the Land Registry or in the Yorkshire Registry, unless the mortgage is accompanied by a deposit of the documents of title. The absence of documents affects any purchaser (including a registered mortgagee) with notice of a prior title. Mortgages without the deeds obtain priority not necessarily by order of the date of creation but according to date of registration (s. 97, Law of Property Act, 1925). First and any subsequent mortgages which are not accompanied by the title deeds and not registered are void as against a purchaser for value if registration is not effected before completion of the purchase. Legal mortgages made before 1925 do not lose priority and bind the purchaser if he is affected with notice. Such mortgages may and should be registered unless the mortgagee holds the deeds, and in that case the precaution may be useful. Mortgages and charges registered under s. 79 of the Companies Act, 1929, are not affected by these provisions; but in regard to registered land, see REGISTRATION.

For restrictions upon powers to call in or enforce mortgages created before 2nd July, 1919, see Rent etc. Restriction Acts, 1920, ss. 7 and 12, and 1933, s. 9; and for permitted increase of interest, s. 4 of the 1920 Act.

All causes for redemption or foreclosure of mortgages are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court: Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34.

As to the power of trustees to invest in mortgages of land, see Trustee Act, 1925, ss. 1, 8, 9 and 10. Upon appointment of new trustees, the land mortgaged must be expressly conveyed or transferred to them. See s. 40 (4), ibid., and EQUITABLE MORTGAGE; NOTICE; LAND CHARGES.

Mortgagee, he that takes a mortgage as security for a loan. See preceding title.

Mortgagor, he that gives a mortgage as security for a loan.

Morth [Sax.], murder, answering exactly to the French assassinat or meurtre de guetapens.

Morthlaga, a murderer.

Morthlage, murder.

Mortification, a term of Scottish law, synonymous with the English 'mortmain.'

Mortis causâ donatio. See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

Mortmain [fr. mort, Fr., dead, and main, hand], such a state of possession of land as makes it inalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand—in a hand that cannot shift away the property. It takes place upon alienation to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal.—2 Bl. Com. 268.

By several old statutes, alienation of lands and tenements in mortmain, i.e., to religious and other corporations, which were supposed to hold them in a dead or unserviceable hand, were prohibited under pain of forfeiture to the lord, the fruits of whose feudal seignior (the great hinge of government in those days) were thus impaired. But either with or without the consent of the immediate lords (for this is doubtful), this forfeiture might be dispensed with by a licence in mortmain from the Crown, which licence was made sufficient without any such consent by 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 37, repealed and re-enacted by the consolidating Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), which provides that 'land'—which term, by s. 10, includes tenements and hereditaments corporeal and incorporeal of whatsoever tenure, and any estate and interest in land (e.g., a mortgage)—shall not be assured to or for the benefit of, or acquired by or on behalf of, any corporation in mortmain otherwise than under licence from the Crown, or of a statute for the time being in force.

The licence of the sovereign, therefore, is necessary by law in all cases, except in the very numerous cases where, as by the Companies Act, 1929, s. 14, the necessity is dispensed with by the statute, or charter constituting the corporation. In some cases a new restriction is imposed, e.g., Trade Unions may, by the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 7, hold only one acre of land, and Societies to promote Art, Science, Religion or like purposes not involving the acquisition of gain registered under the Companies Act, 1929, may not, by s. 14 of that Act, hold more than two acres without the licence of the Board of Trade.

The so-called 'Mortmain Act' is 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. It provided that no land, or money to be laid out in land, might be given for any charitable use except by deed executed twelve months before the death of the donor, and enrolled within six months after execution. This Act, as amended, is repealed and re-enacted with amendment by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), but that Act has been extensively amended by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), in the manner pointed out under the title CHARITABLE USES AND TRUSTS. In regard to assurances of land or personalty or enactments declaring a charitable use executed after 1925, alterations and enrolment under s. 4, sub-ss. (6) and (9) of the Charitable Uses Act, 1888, are no longer required, and the assurance or instrument must be sent to the offices of the Charity Commissioners within six months after execution or permitted extension to be recorded. This does not apply to registered land, or to assurances or instruments which are to be sent to the Board of Education (s. 29, Settled Land Act, 1925); the same section provides that all land vested in trustees for charitable, ecclesiastical or public trusts or purposes is settled land for the purposes of the Act.

The 'Statute of Mortmain,' or 'De Viris Religiosis,' is 7 Edw. 1. Its object was to aid in enforcing the provisions of the great charter on the subject of alienation to religious societies, and to carry that restriction somewhat further.—2 Reeves, 154. This Act also is repealed by the Act of 1888. See, further, CHARITABLE USES AND TRUSTS.

Mortuary, a burial place. Also, a kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift claimed by and due to the minister in very many parishes on the death of his parishioners. Like lay heriots, they were originally only voluntary bequests to the church, being intended as a kind of expiation and amends to the clergy for personal tithes and other duties not paid by the deceased in his lifetime. It was usual in ancient times to bring the mortuary to church along with the corpse when it was brought to be buried, and thence it was sometimes called a corpse-present. In the laws of Canute it was called soul-scot or symbolum animæ. See 2 Bl. Com. 425.

Mortuaries are limited in amount by the still unrepealed 23 Hen. 8, c. 6, thus: None where deceased died worth less than 10 marks; 3s. 4d. where he died worth from 10 marks to 30l.; 6s. 8d. where from 30l. to 40l.; and 10s. where exceeding 40l.; but the same Act forbids mortuaries for married women or children, and prescribes that mortuaries for travellers be paid 'where they had their most habitation.' See also MUTA CANUM.

Mortuaries could be compounded for by parochial agreement under s. 9 of the Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62).

Also, a place for the reception of the bodies of persons who have died of infectious disease, etc., to which such bodies may, in certain cases, be removed by order of a justice of the peace. See Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 198; and Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), ss. 234–239.

Mortuum vadium, a dead pledge or mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

Mote, a meeting, an assembly. Used in composition as burgmote, folkmote, etc. See GEMOT.

Mote-bell, the bell which was used by the Saxons to summon people to the Court.

Moteer, a customary service or payment at the Mote or Court of the lord, from which some were exempted by charter or privilege.

Mother-church [primaria ecclesia, Lat.]. See MATRIX ECCLESIA.

Mothering, a custom of visiting parents on Mid-Lent Sunday.—Jac. Law Dict.

Motibills, one that may be removed or displaced ; also, a vagrant.—Fleta, l. 5, c. vi.

Motion, an occasional application to a court in the progress of a cause, e.g., a motion for an injunction or the appointment of a receiver pending the trial of the action ; or summarily and wholly unconnected with plenary proceedings, as a motion to rectify the register of a company.

As to notice of motion and procedure generally, see R. S. C., Ord. LII.

Motion for Judgment. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XL., it is provided that, except where by the Act or rules of Court it is otherwise provided, the judgment of the Court shall be obtained by motion for judgment.

Motive, a state of mind ; an incentive ; an object. Relevant evidence of intention.

Motor Car. Formerly motor car meant the same as light locomotive except for certain provisions as to registration. But the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 2 (1) (e), defines motor cars as mechanically propelled vehicles (not being vehicles classified under this section as motor cycles or invalid carriages), which are constructed themselves to carry a load or passengers and the weight of which unladen :

(i.) in the case of vehicles which are—

- (1) constructed solely for the carriage of passengers and their effects ; and
- (2) adapted not to carry more than seven passengers and their effects ; and
- (3) fitted with tyres of the prescribed type ; does not exceed 3 tons.

(ii.) in any other case does not exceed 2½ tons.

A heavy motor car is a mechanically propelled vehicle (not being classified under the section as motor cars), which is constructed to carry a load or passengers, and the weight of which unladen exceeds 2½ tons.

A person under seventeen may not drive a motor car, or under twenty-one a heavy motor car, and in order to obtain a driving licence he must be physically fit (i.e., not suffer from certain physical diseases or disabilities which might cause him to be a source of danger) ; also he must pass a test in actual driving ; but a person who has had a driving licence previously to the commencement of the Act need not pass a driving test (s. 5), and Motor Vehicles (Driving Licences) Regulation, 1930 (No. 938). Users of motor vehicles must be insured against third-party risks (s. 35), and Motor Vehicles (Third-party Risks) Regulations, 1930 (No. 1097). As to dimensions, overall length, construction, etc., see Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1931 (No. 4). As to rate of speed, offences, reckless and dangerous driving and also careless driving, see, generally, the Road Traffic Acts, 1930–1936, and the various Regulations and Orders. There is an excise duty on all cars driven, rated on the horse-power (Finance Acts, 1920 and 1931). There are also Customs duties on all foreign motor cars.

Motor Cycle. Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 2 (1) (f) : mechanically propelled vehicles (not classified as invalid carriages) with less than four wheels and the weight unladen does not exceed 8 cwt. A driving licence can be obtained at sixteen, but a driving test must be passed and also insurance against third-party risks must be taken out ; for offences, etc., see, generally, the Act.

Motor Spirit is defined by s. 84 of the Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910, as :—

Any inflammable hydrocarbon (including any mixture of hydrocarbons and any liquid containing hydrocarbon), which is capable of being used for providing reasonably efficient motive power for a motor car.

Motor Tractor. Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 2 (1) (c) : mechanically propelled vehicles which are not constructed to carry any load (other than tools for equipment, etc.), and the weight of which unladen does not exceed 7½ tons. See, generally, the Act.

Motu proprio, the commencing words of a certain kind of Papal Rescript.

Moult, a mow of corn or hay.—Paroch. Antiq. 401.

Movables, goods, furniture, personality.

Mulct, a fine of money or a penalty.

Muller, (1) a woman ; (2) a virgin ; (3) a wife ; (4) a legitimate child.—1 Inst. 243.

Mulleratus, a legitimate son.—Glanc.

Muller puisné. When a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eigné and the younger son is mulier puisné. See 2 Bl. Com. 248.

Multery, lawful issue, because begotten e muliere (of a wife), and not ex concubina.—Co. Litt. 352.

Mullones tœni, cocks or ricks of hay.

Mulmutin Laws. See MOLMUTIAN LAWS.

Mulneda, a place to build a water-mill.—Dugd. Mon. tom. ii. 284.

Multa, or Multura, Episcopi, a fine anciently given to the king by the bishops, that they might have power to make their wills; and that they might have the probate of other men's wills, and the granting of administrations.—2 Inst. 291.

Multifariousness. This, in a bill in equity, was the improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them. For the former practice, see Story's Eq. Plead. 224; 1 Dan. Ch. Prac. 5th ed., and 2 Wms. Saund. 295, c. See now JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

Multipartite [fr. multus, Lat., many, and pars, a part], divided into several parts.

Multiplepoinding, a proceeding in Scotch law, of the same nature as our Interpleader.

Multiplicity. A bill in equity might have been objectionable for an undue dividing or splitting up of a single cause of suit, and thus multiplying subjects of litigation. Equity discourages unreasonable litigation. It would not, therefore, permit a bill to be brought for a part of a matter only where the whole was the proper subject of one suit. See Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24 (7) (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 43); and as to inferior courts, see ss. 89–91 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 201, 202, 203).

Multitude, an assembly of ten or more persons.—Co. Litt. 257.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocini. 11 Co. 75.—(The multitude of those who err gives no excuse to error.)

Multitudo Imperitorum perdit curiam. 2 Inst. 219.—(A multitude of ignorant persons destroys a court.)

Multo, a wether sheep.—Old Records.

Muito fortiori. See A FORTIORI.

Multure [fr. moulture, Fr.; fr. molo, Lat., to grind], a grist or grinding; the corn ground; also the toll or fee due for grinding.

Mum, a species of fat ale brewed from wheat and bitter herbs; mentioned in revenue Acts.

Mumming. Antic diversions of the Christmas holidays, suppressed in Queen Anne's time. See 3 Hen. 8, c. 9.

Mund, peace, whence mundbryc, a breach of the peace.—Leg. H. I., c. 37.

Mundbyrd, Mundeburde, a receiving into favour and protection.

Munera, portions of lands distributed to tenants and revocable at the lord's will, under our early feudal system.

Municipal [fr. municipalis, Lat., of munus, office, and capio, I take, or hold], belonging to a corporation.

Municipal Corporation. A body of persons in a town having the powers of acting as one person, of holding and transmitting property, and of regulating the government of the town. Such corporations existed in the chief towns of England (as of other countries) from very early times, deriving their authority from 'incorporating' charters granted by the Crown.

The Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), passed after local inquiries by Royal Commissioners, completely reorganized the constitution of these corporations, and abrogated all charters so far, but so far only, as inconsistent with it. This Act applied to 178 corporations named in the schedules thereto, and to 68 other corporations subsequently receiving a charter, a town to which it applied being styled a 'borough.'

The Act of 1835 was amended by a series of statutes passed from time to time, and consolidated by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), which, in turn (except for London), has been largely repealed and replaced with amendments by the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 307.

In general, the places to which the Acts apply are to a great extent under the control of a municipal corporation, consisting of the 'mayor, aldermen, and burgesses,' and acting through a 'council' elected by the burgesses, i.e., persons entitled to vote under the Representation of the People Acts, 1918 to 1929.

The voters are all resident householders who have occupied and paid rates for twelve months prior to any July, and have also been enrolled as burgesses.

The councillors are elected by the burgesses on every 1st of November. Their term of office is three years, and one-third of their number goes out of office every year. If the election be contested the poll is taken by ballot, under the Ballot Act, 1872. The aldermen, in number one-third of the number of councillors (and not necessarily burgesses), are elected by the council. They remain in office six years, one-half of their number going out of office every third year.

The mayor is elected for one year by the council from among the aldermen or councillors, or persons qualified to be such. He may, and in some towns does, receive a moderate salary. The aldermen and councillors serve gratuitously.

The council thus constituted manages the corporate property, having as officers a 'town clerk,' a 'treasurer,' and such other officers as the council think necessary. It has the control of the borough police, and as a local authority for the purposes of rating (Rating and Valuation Act, 1925); good rule and government (Local Government Act, 1933) (Public Health Acts, 1875–1936) (Housing Act, 1936), and functions conferred by other public and local Acts with powers to make bye-laws in pursuance of statutory duties, authorities and discretions, and by virtue of the charter (if any) of its constitution, including powers for raising, borrowing or advancing money as provided by statute for any of these purposes.

In most of the larger boroughs there is a separate commission of the peace, excluding the jurisdiction of the county justices, and a separate Court of Quarter Sessions, presided over by a 'recorder,' having the same jurisdiction in the borough as the justices in County Quarter Sessions have for the county. A separate commission and a separate Court of Quarter Sessions may also be granted by the Crown on petition of the Council to such boroughs as do not possess them. Where there is a separate Court of Quarter Sessions there is also a borough coroner, appointed by the council.

A considerable number of small 'unreformed corporations,' in which there were a mayor and other corporation officers, were either abolished or brought under the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 18), and the Local Government Act, 1888. See COUNTRY COUNCIL.

Municipal Law, that which pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law and the law of nations.

Muniment, support, defence, record; deed or writing upon which claims and rights are founded and depend; evidences, charters.

Muniment-house, or Muniment-rooms, a house or room of strength, in cathedrals, collegiate churches, castles, colleges, public buildings, etc., purposely made for keeping deeds, charters, writings, etc. 3 Inst. 170.

Munitions of War. As to keeping secret patents for their invention, see s. 30 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32), and Patent Rules, 1932, rr. 106–108. As to supplying such to foreign states at peace with this country, for the purpose of hostilities between themselves, see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 90. As to the establishment of a Ministry of Munitions during the Great War, see 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 51. It was abolished by 11 Geo. 5, c. 8. Cf. CONTRABAND.

Murage [fr. murus, Lat., a wall], money paid to keep walls in repair.

Muratio, a town or borough surrounded with walls.—Jac. Law Dict.

Murder [fr. morthor, morthen, Sax.; murdum, Low Lat.]. It is thus defined by Coke (3 Inst. 47): 'When a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, with malice aforethought, either express or implied'; see 4 Bl. Com. 195. Consult Russell on Crimes; Arch. Cr. Pl.; Steph. Dig.

(1) The person committing the offence must be conscious of doing wrong, and able to discern between good and evil. See IDIOT; LUNATIC; DRUNKENNESS and MACNAUGHTON'S CASE.

(2) Death must result within a year and a day after the cause of death administered: see R. v. Dyson, 1908, 2 K. B. 454.

(3) The person killed must be a reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace.

(4) The killing must be with malice aforethought, express or implied, and malice is implied from the perpetration of any felony, however absent from the mind of the perpetrator any intention to kill may be.

Capital Punishment.—'Every person convicted of murder shall suffer death as a felon.'—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 1. See SENTENCE OF DEATH. The execution, formerly public, has taken place in prison since 1868. See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. On the principle that every greater felony includes a less, a person indicted for murder may be (and very frequently is) convicted of manslaughter. The Infanticide Act, 1922, provides that a woman who wilfully causes the death of her newly-born child shall be guilty of the felony of infanticide if at the time she had not fully recovered from the effect of giving birth to the child, and by reason thereof the balance of her mind was then disturbed, although but for the Act she would have been guilty of murder. By the Infant Life (Preservation) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 34), s. 2 (2), where upon the trial of any person for the murder or manslaughter of any child or for infanticide, the jury may, if of opinion that the person charged is not guilty of murder, 'manslaughter or infanticide, return a verdict of child destruction if satisfied that such offence has been committed. As to punishment for attempted murder, see R. v. White, 1910, 2 K. B. 124.

A murderer is absolutely disqualified from deriving any benefit under the will of his victim: see Re Hall, 1914, P. 1, and cases there referred to.

Murdrum, the secret killing of another, also the amercement to which the vill wherein it was committed, or, if that were too poor, the whole hundred, was liable.—4 Bl. Com. 195.

As to the rates of compensation for murder amongst the Anglo-Saxons, see 2 Hall. Mid. Ages, 133.

Muriatic Acid Gas. See ALKALI WORKS.

Murorum operatio, the service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle; their personal service was commuted into murage (q.v.).

Muthlach, murder.

Museum. A building or institution for the cultivation of science, favoured by the legislature in the Public Libraries Acts, in the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, s. 6, and in the Museums and Gymnasiums Act, 1891. Powers were transferred to the Board of Education by 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 21, and see the Public Libraries Acts, 1892 and 1919. By the latter Act, 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 93, museums were transferred to the library authority.

Mushrooms. To pick these growing in their natural state in a field is not 'wilfully or maliciously to commit damage to real or personal property' within s. 52 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (Gardner v. Mansbridge, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 217).

Music. For the purposes of the Copyright Act, 1911, 'copyright' includes in the case of a musical work the right to make any record, perforated roll or other contrivance by means of which the work may be mechanically performed (s. 1 (2) (d)); see Performing Right Society Ltd. v. Hammond's Bradford Brewery Co. Ltd., 1934, Ch. 121 (reproduction by radio receiving set and loud-speaker); and see also s. 19 of the Act, and as to posthumous works, s. 17. Copyright is now confined to such rights as are given by statute, the common law rights being abrogated (s. 31).

The Musical Summary Proceedings (Copyright) Act, 1902, and the Musical Copyright Act, 1906, amended by the Copyright Act, 1911, give additional protection to the owners of musical copyright against unauthorized sales, a defect in the Act of 1902 having been discovered in Ex parte Francis, 1903, 1 K. B. 275; the Act of 1906 empowers constables to arrest, without warrant, sellers of music notified to the chief officer of police by the owners as copyright.

Music and Dancing Licences.—The grant of these in London and Westminster and within twenty miles thereof, including the administrative county of Middlesex (Music and Dancing Licences (Middlesex) Act, 1894), is regulated by the Public Entertainment Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 36), which enacted that any house kept for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, without a licence from justices, is to be deemed a disorderly house; see Home Counties (Music and Dancing) Licensing Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 31); and by s. 3 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which transferred the licensing powers from justices to the London County Council. For Sunday entertainments, see Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 51).

Various local Acts in large towns (see Geary on the Law of Public Entertainments) regulate music-halls, etc., somewhat similarly; and the Local Government Act, 1888, substitutes the county council for the justices as the licensing authority.

Under the 'adoptive' Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, Part III., if and where adopted, a house or garden, whether licensed for the sale of liquor or not, may not be kept for public 'dancing, singing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind,' without a licence from the justices having power to grant licences for the sale of intoxicating liquor.

Musieian, London. The Metropolitan Police Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 55, 'Bass's Act' (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Polices (Metropolis)'), repealing and strengthening the provisions of s. 57 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, enacts that any householder within the metropolitan police district, personally, or by his servant, or by any police constable, may require any street musician or street singer to depart from the neighbourhood of the house of such householder, on account of the illness, or on account of the interruption of the ordinary occupations or pursuits of any inmate of such house, or for other reasonable or sufficient cause;

And every person who shall sound or play upon any musical instrument or shall sing in any thoroughfare or public place near any such house after being so required to depart, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than forty shillings, or, in the discretion of the magistrate before whom he shall be convicted, may be imprisoned for any time not more than three days.

[or in default of payment for not more than one month : Reg. v. Hopkins, 1893, 1 Q. B. 621], and it shall be lawful for any constable belonging to the metropolitan police force to take into custody without warrant any person who shall offend as aforesaid : provided always, he shall be given into custody by the person making the charge : provided also, that the person making a charge for an offence against this Act shall accompany the constable who shall take into custody any person offending as aforesaid to the nearest police station-house, and there sign the charge sheet kept for such purpose.

Mussa, a moss or marsh ground ; or a place where sedges grow ; a place overrun with moss.

Muster-book, a book in which the forces are registered.—Termes de la Ley.

Muster-master, one who superintended the muster to prevent frauds.—35 Eliz. c. 4.

Muta canum [Fr. meute], a mew or kennel of hounds, one of the mortuaries to which the Crown was entitled at a bishop's decease.—2 Bl. Com. 426.

Mutation, a French death duty. “Droits de mutation par décès,” which is a duty payable on transmission of property on death : Re Scott, 1914, 1 Ch. 848.

Mutatis mutandis. With the necessary changes in points of detail.

Mute of Malice, used of one who abstains from pleading to an indictment when he is able to do so. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

Mutilation, deprivation of a limb or any essential part. See MAYHEM.

Mutiny Act, a statute annually passed from 1689 to 1879, ‘to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters.’ See ARMY.

Mutseddey, Mutseddee, intent upon ; also writer, accountant, or secretary.—Indian.

Mutual Debts, money due on both sides between two persons.—See SET-OFF ; and as to mutual credits, debts, or other mutual dealings between a debtor afterwards becoming bankrupt and a person proving a debt against him, see s. 31 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and Eberle's Hotel Co. v. Jonas, (1887) 18 Q. B. D. 459.

Mutual Promises, concurrent considerations, which will support each other, unless one or the other be void ; in which case, there being no consideration on the one side, no contract can arise. But if the promise on one side be only voidable, as in consideration of money given or of a promise by an infant, it is sufficient.

Mutual promises, however, to be obligatory, must be made simultaneously. If they be made at different times on the same day they will not be a good consideration for each other because of the want of reciprocity of obligation at the moment the contract is made.—Story on Contracts.

Mutual Testaments, wills made by two persons who leave their effects reciprocally to the survivor. Either will may be revoked by notice during the joint lives, but the survivor cannot revoke his or her will if the benefit of the other will has been taken : see Stone v. Hoskins, 1905, P. 194 ; In the Estate of Heys, 1914, P. 192.

Mutuality, reciprocation ; the state of things in which one person being bound to perform some duty or service or act for another, that other on his side is bound to do something for the former.

A memorandum under the 4th section of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (Statute of Frauds, s. 17), or the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 40 (Statute of Frauds, s. 4), does not require mutual signatures to bind the party signing, but if it can be shown that the signature of one party was dependent on the other party signing, the claim on the contract would fail, in the absence of both signatures, because the condition has not been fulfilled.—Halsbury L. E., Hailsham Ed., vol. 7, p. 124.

As to the want of mutuality as a defence to an action for specific performance, see Fry on Specific Performance.

Mutation, the act of borrowing.

Mutuo, to borrow.

Mutus, silent, not having anything to say. Standing mute is when a person, being arraigned, either cannot speak, or refuses to answer or plead. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

To advise a prisoner to stand mute is a contempt of Court. See MISPRISON.

Mutus et surdus (dumb and deaf).

Mutuum, a loan whereby the absolute property in the thing lent passes to the borrower, it being for consumption, and he being bound to restore, not the same thing, but other things of the same kind. Thus, if corn, wine, money, or any other thing which is not intended to be returned, but only an equivalent in kind, is lost or destroyed by accident, it is the loss of the borrower ; for it is his property, and he must restore the equivalent in kind ; the maxim ejus est periculum cujus est dominium applying to such cases.

In a mutuum the property passes immediately from the mutant or lender to the mutuary or borrower, and the identical thing lent cannot be recovered or redemanded.—Jones on Bailm. 64.

Mynster-ham (ecclesie mansio, Lat.), monastic habitation; perhaps the part of a monastery set apart for purposes of hospitality or as a sanctuary for criminals.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Mystery [fr. mestier, Fr.], an art, trade, or occupation.

N.

Naam [fr. nam, Sax., to take], the attaching or taking of movable goods and chattels, called vis or mort, according as the chattels were living or dead.—Termes de la Ley.

Nabob, Nawab, originally the governor of a province under the Mogul government of Hindostan, 'whence it became a mere title of any man of high rank, upon whom it was conferred without any office being attached to it' (Wilson's Indian Glossary).—Indian.

Naib, a deputy.—Ibid.

Nail, a measure of two inches and a quarter.

Nam, distress; seizure.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Namation, the act of distraining or taking a distress.

Name [fr. nomen, Lat.; nom, Fr.; or namo, Goth.; nama, Sax.; naem, Dut.], the discriminative appellation of an individual.

Proper names are either Christian names, as being given at baptism, or surnames, from the father.—4 Rep. 170.

A Christian name may be altered at confirmation with consent of the bishop, and the bishop is directed by a constitution of 1281 to change 'wanton names' at confirmation. See Blunt's Church Law, 2nd ed. at p. 60, where two post-Reformation instances are given of a bishop changing a Christian name at confirmation, and it is said to be 'believed that cases still occur where this is done.'

Marriage confers a name upon a woman, which is not lost by her divorce, and she can acquire another only by obtaining it by repute obliterating her name by marriage; see Fendall v. Goldsmid, (1877) 2 P. D. 263. As to retainer of a title, see Cowley v. Cowley, 1901, A. C. 450.

Any one may take on himself whatever surname or as many surnames as he pleases, without an Act of Parliament or royal licence. But a man cannot have two names of baptism as he may have divers surnames (Co. Litt. 3 a). The assumption by a stranger of a name, the patronymic of a family, is no ground of action (Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, (1869) L. R. 2 C. P. 430). Names may be changed by Act of Parliament, by Royal Licence, or deed poll: see S. R. & O., 1922, Nos. 210, 211, and notes, A. P., to R. S. C., Ord. LXI., r. 9. See Falconer on Surnames. The change of name by aliens is prohibited, subject to the provisions of the Aliens Restriction (Amendment) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 92), s. 7. The addition of ' & Co.' was held to be a change of name in Evans v. Piauneau, 1927, 2 K. B. 374. See BUSINESS NAMES; and Registration of Business Names Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 38), and S. R. & O., 1916, No. 186, and 1926, No. 521; also COMPANY; DIRECTORS.

Name and Arms Clause, a clause enjoining persons on whom property or estates are settled, either by deed or will, to take and use the name and arms of the settlor. As to the framing and effect of such a clause, see Dav. Prec., vol. iii. Pt. I. p. 351; Co. Litt. 327 a, and Mr. Butler's note thereto; and Re Watson, 1930, 2 Ch. 344. For formalities required, see Halsb. L. E., title 'Name.'

Namium, a distress.—2 Inst. 140.

Namium vetitum, an unjust taking of the cattle of another and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them.—3 Bl. Com. 149. See REPLEVIN.

Nantes, Edict of, for the security of Protestants, made by Henry IV. of France, and revoked by Louis XIV., October 2, 1685.

Narr. [abbrev. of narratio, Lat.], a declaration in an action.—Jac. Law Dict.

Narratio, a count, a declaration.

Narrator, a pleader, or reporter.

Narrow Seas, those running between two coasts not far apart. The term is sometimes applied to the English Channel.

The Firth of Forth is also 'narrow waters' as far as collision regulations are concerned (Screw Collier Co. v. Kerr, 1910, A. C. 165).

Natal, as to the union of the colonies of Natal, the Cape of Good Hope, the Transvaal, and the Orange River Colony, see the South Africa Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 9). The Union was established May 30th, 1910 (S. R. & O., 1909 (No. 1460)). See also DOMINIONS.

Natale, the state and condition of a man.

Nathwyte. See LAIRWRITE.

Nation, a people distinguished from another people, generally by their language, or government; an assembly of men of free condition, as distinguished from a family of slaves.

National Assembly of the Church of England. 'The assembly constituted in accordance with the constitution set forth in the appendix to the address presented to His Majesty by the Convocations of Canterbury and York on the 10th day of May, 1919, and laid before Parliament' (Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act, 1919). The Church Assembly consists of the House of Bishops (i.e., members of the Upper Houses of the two Convocations), the House of Clergy (i.e., members of the two Lower Houses), and the House of Laity, which consists of representatives from the two Provinces of Canterbury and York elected in accordance with the Rules contained in the Schedule to the Representation of the Laity Measure, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, No. 2). Measures passed by the Assembly are examined by an Ecclesiastical Committee consisting of 15 members of the House of Lords appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and 15 members of the House of Commons appointed by the Speaker. This Committee reports to Parliament. On both Houses of Parliament resolving that the measure be presented to the King it has the force of an Act of Parliament as soon as the Royal Assent has been given.

National Debt, the money owing by Government to some of the public, the interest of which is paid out of the taxes raised by the whole of the public. It is regulated by the 'National Debt Act, 1870.' See FUNDS.

National Insurance. The National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), introduced by Mr. Lloyd George, established a wide system of compulsory state insurance covering both ill-health and unemployment, which is based upon premiums contributed in part by the employer, in part by the employee, and in part by the State. The Act consisted of three parts, the first dealing with National Health Insurance, the second with Unemployment Insurance, and the third contained miscellaneous provisions. This Act remained the basis of National Health Insurance, although the subject of very extensive amendment, until the National Health Insurance Act, 1924, consolidated the law. The law has been consolidated again by the National Health Insurance Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 32), amends and repeals the whole of the Acts passed in 1920, 1922, 1924 and 1928. The arrangement is as follows :—

Part I. Insured Persons and Contributions.

Part II. Benefits.

Part III. Approved Societies and Insurance Committees.

Part IV. Financial Provisions relating to Approved Societies and Insurance Committees.

Part V. Special Classes of Insured Persons.

Part VI. Central Finance.

Part VII. Central Administration.

Part VIII. Legal and Miscellaneous.

Parts IX., X., and XI. apply the Act to Scotland, Northern Ireland, and Wales.

Part XII. Interpretation, Surveys and Repeal.

Similarly, Part II. of the Act of 1911 was repealed, and replaced, after detailed amendment, and recently consolidated again by the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935 (see infra). It is impossible here to do more than give a bare outline of the two branches of National Insurance, and for the determination of any particular question reference should be made to the Acts themselves and the regulations made thereunder; see also Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Insurance,' and Comyns Carr or Watts on National Insurance; and for a general outline of National Health Insurance, see National Health Insurance Manual by Sir Kingsley Wood and T. S. Newman, and the Summary of the National Health Insurance Acts, published by H.M. Stationery Office.

1. NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE.

The general scheme is the provision of compulsory insurance of all persons of 16 years of age and upwards who are employed either as manual workers, or at a rate of remuneration not exceeding 250l. per annum gained otherwise than by manual labour. Two classes of persons come within the scheme: those who must be insured—Employed Contributors; and those who may take advantage of the provisions of the Act—Voluntary Contributors.

A. Employed Contributors. With the exception of persons specially 'excepted' and 'exempted,' as mentioned below, all persons of whatever nationality between 16 and 70 years of age, including married women, who are employed in the United Kingdom in any of the following employments are 'employed contributors' in respect of whom contributions must be paid. See Schedule I.

(a) Employment under a contract of service or apprenticeship.

- (b) Employment under a contract of service or apprenticeship as master or a member of the crew of any ship registered in the United Kingdom.
- (c) Employment as an 'outworker,' that is to say, a person to whom articles or materials are given to be made up or worked upon in his own home or on premises not under the control of the employer.
- (d) (generally) Employment as an officer or servant of a local or public authority.
- (e) Employment in plying for hire with a vehicle or vessel the use of which is obtained by a contract of bailment (e.g., a taxi-cab hired by a taxi-cab driver). The owner is considered to be the employer for the purpose of the Acts.
- (f) Employment by way of manual labour under a contract for the performance of such labour for the purposes of any trade or business.
- (g) Employment on a British owned or registered ship when the person employed is remunerated by a share in the profits or gross earnings of the vessel.
- (h) Service in H.M. Forces. The Acts contain special provisions governing these contributors.

The following are excepted from the operation of the Acts :

- (a) Persons remunerated, otherwise than for manual labour, at a rate of more than 250*l.* per annum in respect of a particular employment. What is manual labour is a question of fact : the real and substantial character of the employment must be considered.
- (b) Persons employed as apprentices, persons employed on agricultural holdings, persons employed by their parents, persons wholly maintained by their employer, if, in each case, employed without money payment.
- (c) Husband or wife employed by his or her spouse.
- (d) Persons casually employed, but not persons so employed for the purposes of the employer's trade or business, nor by a club for the purposes of a game or the like.
- (e) Every agent paid by commission or share in profits who is either so employed by more than one employer and is not mainly dependent on his earnings from any one of them, or is mainly dependent on his earnings from some other source.

- (f) Persons whose employment has been specified in a special order as being a subsidiary employment, i.e., an employment not usually a principal means of livelihood.
- (g) Persons in the employment of the Crown, local or public authorities, or in the employment of railway or statutory companies and entitled to benefits from a superannuation fund, if excepted by a certificate issued by the Minister of Health certifying that they are entitled to sickness and disablement benefits of at least equal value to those obtained under the Acts.
- (h) School teachers entitled to benefits under the School Teachers Superannuation Acts, and pupil and student-teachers in public elementary schools.
- (i) Outworkers not wholly or mainly dependent on earnings as such, if the wives of insured persons.
- (j) Crews of fishing vessels remunerated by shares in the profits, if in accordance with the custom of a port, if a special order has been made.

A person who would otherwise be an 'employed contributor' may, if he so desires, apply for a certificate of exemption if :

- (a) in receipt of an income of not less than 26*l.* a year, which is derived otherwise than by his personal exertions ; or
- (b) Ordinarily or mainly dependent for his livelihood upon some other person, or on earnings derived from an employment not within the Act ; or
- (c) Being an insured person, he has been employed for less than the prescribed period (formerly less than 13 weeks in the preceding two years).

B. Voluntary Contributors. Voluntary contributors are persons who may, if they wish, come under the Acts. Married women cannot become voluntary contributors. Such persons are :

- (a) Persons who have been employed within the meaning of the Acts and who have been insured as employed contributors for a minimum of 104 weeks, but have ceased to be employed contributors, and who have given due notice of their intention to become voluntary contributors.

- (b) Persons engaged in excepted employment who have received the permission of the Minister of Health to become voluntary contributors.
- (c) Persons who were voluntary contributors at the passing of the Act and who have continued to be insured since.

Contributions. The usual rate of contribution is 9d. and 8½d. per week for men and women respectively, of which 4d. is paid by the employer. These sums are collected by adhesive stamps, which must be affixed to special cards by the employer, who is responsible. The normal time for carrying out this duty is when the wages are paid. The stamps directly after being affixed must be cancelled by writing the date upon them in ink. There are special provisions relating to the amounts of the contributions in the case of low wage-earners, voluntary contributors, sailors, soldiers and airmen, outworkers, etc. An employer is liable to pay contributions in respect of exempted persons.

There is a 'free insurance period' of two years, when an insured person who is a member of an approved society ceases to be employed within the Act, or to pay contributions as a voluntary contributor. And there may in certain cases be an 'extended insurance period' of a year; and perhaps a 'further extended period.'

Benefits. The benefits are :

- (1) Medical Benefit, i.e., medical treatment and attendance and medicine.
- (2) Sickness Benefit, i.e., periodical payments during incapacity for work to a maximum of 26 weeks.
- (3) Disablement Benefit, i.e., a continuation of periodical payments after the sickness benefit has ceased. These payments are smaller than those made as sickness benefit.
- (4) Maternity Benefit, i.e., a payment of 2l. to a mother on her confinement. If both husband and wife are insured, this benefit is doubled.
- (5) Additional Benefits, i.e., further benefits which an approved society can give to its members as a result of a surplus balance. These benefits must be of a specified character and approved by the Minister of Health.

All these benefits are subject to various qualifications and conditions. The administration of the scheme is carried out through self-governing societies known as 'Approved Societies,' who administer the above benefits, except (1), which are administered by statutory bodies known as Insurance Committees. Those persons who do not join an approved society are called Deposit Contributors, and are not entitled to money benefits, but can draw out their past contributions in case of sickness. The Minister of Health, the Welsh Board of Health, the Scottish Board of Health, and the Ministry of Labour for Northern Ireland have wide statutory powers, and are in control of the administration as a whole.

2. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

As stated above, Part II. of the National Insurance Act, 1911, together with its amending Acts, was repealed by the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 30), and now the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935 (25 Geo. 5, c. 8), consolidates the Acts 1920-1934, and repeals all the Acts prior to 1934. It is arranged as follows :—

Part I. Insured Persons.

Part II. Contributions.

Part III. Benefit.

Part IV. Administration and Finance.

Part V. Arrangements and Schemes.

Part VI. Education and Powers of Education Authorities.

Part VII. Miscellaneous and General.

The Unemployment Insurance (Agriculture) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 13), includes employment in agriculture (hitherto excepted), among the insurable employments.

Owing to the prevalence of unemployment, due to economic conditions brought about by the Great War, this branch of the law has been and continues to be the subject of much amending legislation. Until the law takes a more permanent and enduring form, the only guide to the law existing at any given time will be the statutes then in force. It may, however, be added that the minimum age for entry into insurance (which is the age at which under the law his parents cease to be under an obligation to send him to school) is the school-leaving age, now 15 (Education Act, 1936), for all persons who are engaged in an employment of a manual character, other than certain employments specially excepted, such as, e.g., private domestic service, female nurses, teachers, agents paid by commission, employment otherwise than by manual labour at over 250l. a year, etc., come within the operation of the Acts. (See the principal Act, Schedule I., as amended by the Act of 1936.) The Acts contain somewhat similar provisions as to exceptions and exemptions, as do those dealing with National Health Insurance (see above). The object of the above-mentioned legislation is to impose compulsory insurance against unemployment upon all such employed persons as come within the Acts, so that when out of employment they may receive an 'unemployment benefit,' i.e., payment at a rate and for a period authorized by statute, if they have fulfilled certain specified conditions. The sums required for this purpose are obtained in part from the employer, in part from the workman, and in part are provided by the State, as in the case of Health Insurance. See WORKMEN (Unemployed).

Nationality, the quality which arises from being a member of a particular State. It arises through place of birth, parentage or naturalization, and implies allegiance.

National Trust. The National Trust for Places of Historic Interest formed under the National Trust Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. cxxxvi.), and see 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. clxxxiv., for the purpose of preserving such places.

Nations, Law of. See INTERNATIONAL LAW. The principal offences against the law of nations are: (1) Violations of safe conducts; (2) Infringements of the rights of ambassadors; and (3) Piracy. See the works of Grotius, Vattel and others.

Nativi conventionarii, villeins or bondmen by contract or agreement.—Leg. H. I. c. 76.

Nativi de stipite, villeins or bondmen by birth or stock.

Nativitas [fr. neifty], the servitude, bondage, or villinage of woman.—Leg. Wm. I.

Nativo habendo, a writ that lay to a sheriff from a lord who claimed inheritance in any villein, when his villein had absconded, for the apprehending and restoring him to such lord. It was in the nature of a writ of right to recover inheritance in a villein; upon which the lord pursued his plaint, and declared thereupon, and the villein made his defence, so that the question of freedom was tried and determined.—Fitz. N. B. 77.

Nativus, a servant born.—Spelm.

Natura Brevium. See FITZHERBERT.

Natural Affection, that love which one has for his kindred. It is held to be a good consideration for certain purposes. See CONSIDERATION.

Natural Allegiance, that perpetual attachment which is due from all natural-born subjects to their sovereign; local allegiance is temporary only, being due from an alien or stranger born for so long a time as he continues within the sovereign's dominions and protection.—Fost. 184.

Natural-born Subjects, those that are born within the dominions of the Crown of England and within the allegiance of the sovereign. See ALIEN.

Natural Child, the child in fact, the child of one's body. Some children are both the natural and legitimate offspring of a marriage, i.e., those duly born in wedlock. Some are the legitimate but not the natural offspring of a marriage, i.e., those who are born in wedlock, and never bastardized, although begotten in adultery and in fact the natural children of a stranger. See Shakespeare's King John, Act i., sc. 1.

Some are natural children only; i.e., bastards, born out of wedlock, and those born in wedlock, who are bastardized, and hence the word is popularly more often used as though it were simply equivalent to bastard. See LEGITIMATION; BASTARD and BASTARDIZE.

Natural Equity. See EQUITY.

Natural Infancy, a period of non-responsible life, which ends with the seventh year of a person's age.

Natural Obligations, duties which have a definite object, but are not necessarily subject to any legal obligation.

Natural Persons, such as we are, formed by the Deity, as distinguished from artificial persons or corporations, formed by human laws, for purposes of society and government.

Naturale est quilibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. Jenk. Cent. 66.—(It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound).

Naturalization, investing aliens with the privileges of native subjects. See ALIEN.

Nature, Law of, certain rules of conduct supposed to be so just that they are binding upon all mankind. See NATIONS, LAW OF; and consult Maine's Ancient Law.

Naufnage [fr. naufragium, Lat.], shipwreck.

Naulage [fr. navium, Lat.], the freight of passengers in a ship.—Johns.; Webster.

Nautæ [Lat.], sailors; carriers by water.

Navagium, a duty of certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship.—Dugd. Mon. tom. i. 922.

Naval Discipline Acts. See NAVY.

Naval Reserves. Originally volunteer forces, the Naval Coast Volunteers (16 & 17 Vict. c. 73); now the Royal Naval Reserve; see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 40, and succeeding Acts, and the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, which was formed under 3 Edw. 7, c. 6.

Navicularis [Lat.], a sea captain.

Navigation Acts, restricting the import or export of goods except in British bottoms, i.e., in ships the owners of which and the large proportion of the crews of which were British, were various enactments passed for the protection of British shipping and commerce as against foreign countries. The first 'Navigation Act' was passed during the Commonwealth, in 1651, to restrain the competition of the Dutch marine, and its restrictions were repeated in 1660 by 12 Car. 2, c. 18, sometimes styled the 'Charta Maritima,' but earlier Acts of the same nature (see, e.g., 5 Rich. 2, stat. 1, c. 3) had been passed in the reigns of Richard the Second, Henry the Seventh, and Elizabeth. All the Navigation Acts were repealed in 1849. See Pulling's Shipping Code.

Navy [fr. navis, Lat., a ship], an assemblage of ships, commonly ships of war; a fleet.

The discipline of the Navy was formerly regulated by certain express rules, articles, and orders, first enacted by the authority of Parliament soon after the Restoration, but it is now regulated by the Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), as amended by the Naval Discipline Acts, 1884, 1909, 1915 (2), 1917, and 1922. See Chit. Stat., tit. 'Navy.'

As to the self-governing Colonies, see the Naval Discipline (Dominion Naval Forces) Act, 1911.

Navy and Marines (Wills) Acts, 1865, 1897, and 1914, and Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

Navy Bills, bills drawn by officers of the Royal Navy for their pay, etc. It is a felony to forge them. See FORGERY.

Nazeranna, a sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office.—Indian.

Nazim, composer, arranger, adjuster. The first officer of a province, and minister of the department of criminal justice.—Indian.

Ne admittas (that you admit not), a prohibitory writ directed to the bishop at the request of the plaintiff or defendant, where a quære impedit is depending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk during the suit between them; it ought to be issued within six calendar months after the avoidance, before the bishop may present by lapse; for it is in vain to sue out this writ when the title to present has devolved upon the bishop.—Fitz. N. B. 37.

Near. In the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, used of railway stations not more than one mile distant from each other; and in the Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905, s. 1 (a), by which the Ministry of Health may make orders extending s. 1 to 'boroughs or districts adjoining or near to London,' used without any definition.

Neat, or Net, the weight of a pure commodity alone, without the container cask, bag, dross, packing, etc., opposed to 'gross' weight (Continental 'tare' opposed to 'brut'), also 'undiluted.' In accounts a sum of money after deduction of all stated outgoings or expenses, or other deductions.—Com. term.

Net rent. In houses to which the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions apply the rent on the 3rd August, 1914, less the rates (if any) payable by the landlord and included in that rent.

Neat Cattle, oxen or heifers.

Neat-land, land let out to the yeomanry.

Ne balla pas (he did not deliver).

Necation [fr. neco, Lat.], the act of killing.

Necessaries, a relative term, not strictly limited to such things as are absolutely requisite for support and subsistence, but to be construed liberally, and varying with the state and degree, the rank, fortune, and age of the person to whom they are supplied; Wharton v. Mackenzie, (1845) 5 Q. B. 606. It has often been held that an infant is bound to pay a reasonable price for such necessary things as relate to his maintenance and education—as food, lodging, apparel, medical attendance, schooling, and instruction—unless credit be given solely to the parent, which is presumed to be the fact if it appear that the infant was placed at school or is supported by him: see Co. Litt. 172 a; Ryder v. Wombwell, (1868) L. R. 4 Ex. 32; Barnes v. Toye, (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 410; Roberts v. Gray, 1913, 1 K. B. 520; and INFANT.

Where 'necessaries,' that is, 'goods suitable to the condition in life' of an infant, 'and to his actual requirements at the time of the sale and delivery,' 'are sold and delivered to an infant or to a person who, by reason of mental incapacity or drunkenness, is incompetent to contract, he must pay a reasonable price therefor.'—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 2.

While husband and wife live together, and goods supplied to the wife are necessities, both in quality and quantity, the law raises a presumption of assent on the part of the husband to the contract, and renders him liable upon it. Under the law of principal and agent, necessities are a question of fact in the particular circumstances of the case. The mandate may be revoked or limited, e.g., by express notice to persons supplying goods. See Lush, 'Husband and Wife.' See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

The master of a ship has an implied authority to bind the owner to pay for 'necessaries' for the ship ordered by the master at any port; and this term includes whatever the owner as a prudent man would have ordered himself if present; and the amount due may be recovered in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, or, if the sum does not exceed 150*l.*, in a county court having Admiralty jurisdiction.—Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 10); County Courts' Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3; Judicature Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49).

Under s. 4 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84), a partial dependant is one who is partially dependent on another for 'the ordinary necessities of life suitable for persons of his class and position.' Here, 'necessaries' has the same meaning as has been attached to it in other connections, e.g., in cases of infants' contracts (Kennedy v. Horden Collieries Ltd., 1925, 2 K. B. 438). It does not, however, include savings (Welsh Navigation Steam Coal Co. Ltd. v. Evans, 1927, A. C. 834).

Necessity, that which cannot be otherwise; and see ACT OF GOD; INEVITABLE ACCIDENT.

Necessity, Agent of. An agent of necessity may be constituted in two ways: (1) 'Extraordinary emergencies may arise, in which a person who is an agent, may, from the very necessities of the case, be justified in assuming extraordinary powers; . . . his acts, fairly done, under such circumstances, will be binding upon his principal' (Story on Agency, 9th ed. s. 141). (2) A stranger acting without any authority may become an agent under circumstances of positive necessity. The doctrine originated in marine adventure, but has been gradually extended: see Prager v. Blatspiel, 1924, 1 K. B. 566; see Guillian v. Twist, 1895, 2 Q. B. 84; Largan v. G. W. R. Co., 30 L. T. 173.

A wife deserted by her husband has authority by law, as an agent of necessity, to pledge his credit for necessities suitable to her station in life and for costs reasonably incurred in taking proceedings against him.

A wife defending a divorce suit is not an agent of necessity as regards her costs (Arnold and Weaver v. Amari, 1928, 1 K. B. 584).

Necessity, Homicide by, a species of justifiable homicide, because it arises from some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame. As, for instance, by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death who has forfeited his life to the laws of his country; but to kill a man in order to eat him, and so escape death by hunger, is murder; see Reg. v. Dudley, (1884) 14 Q. B. D. 273; and JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

Neck-verse, the Latin sentence miserere mei Deus, Psalm li. 1, because the reading of it was made a test by which to distinguish those who, in presumption of Law, were qualified, in point of learning, and admissible to benefit of clergy. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

Ne disturba pas, the general issue in quare impedit. It simply denied that the defendant obstructed the presentation, and was adapted to no other ground of defence. See now C. L. P. Act, 1860, ss. 26, 27, and PLEADING.

Ne dona pas, or non dedit, the general issue in a formedon, now abolished. It denied the gift in tail to have been made in manner and form as alleged, and was therefore the proper plea, if the tenant meant to dispute the fact of the gift, but did not apply to any other case.—5 East, 289.

Ne exeat regno, a writ to prevent a person from leaving the realm to the damage of a person to whom he is indebted until he has given security for the amount of the debt; since the Judicature Acts not to be issued except in cases coming within s. 6 of the Debtors Act, 1869: see Drover v. Beyer, (1879) 13 Ch. D. 242.

Negative. In general a negative cannot be proved or testified by witnesses.—2 Inst. 662. But this rule does not apply where one party charges another with a culpable omission or breach of duty; in such a case the person who makes the charge is bound to prove it, though it may involve a negative, for it is one of the first principles of justice not to presume that a person has acted illegally till the contrary is proved. Where the presumption of law is in favour of a defendant, then the plaintiff must disprove the defence, though he may have to prove a negative.

In summary proceedings any exception, etc., may be proved by the defendant, but need not be negated in the information.—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 39 (2).—1 Phil. Evid. c. vii., s. 4.

Negative Pregnant, a form of denial which does not sufficiently distinguish that which is denied from that which is admitted. As to its former effect in pleading, see Steph. Plead., 7th ed. 340.

Negligidare, to claim kindred.—Jac. Law Dict.

Negligence, acting carelessly, a question of law or fact or of mixed fact and law, depending entirely upon the nature of a duty, which the person charged with negligence has failed to comply with or perform in the particular circumstance of each case. A very convenient classification has been formulated corresponding to the degree of negligence entailing liability measured by the degree of care undertaken or required in each case, i.e., (1) ordinary, which is the want of ordinary diligence; (2) slight, the want of great diligence; and (3) gross, the want of slight diligence. A smaller degree of negligence will render a person liable for injury to infants than in the case of adults: see Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway, 1909, A. C. 229; and Glasgow Corporation v. Taylor, 1922, 1 A. C. 44. There is also a peculiar duty to take precaution in the case of dangerous articles: see Dominion Natural Gas Co. v. Collins, 1909, A. C. 640. This case should be distinguished from the principle in Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 3 H. L. 330 (Sm. L. C.), where the custodian of a dangerous thing (e.g., water stored by him, poisonous trees or fumes, sewage, vicious or untamed animals, electricity) is an absolute insurer against, and responsible for any damage done owing to the thing escaping, unless, possibly, the damage is due to the plaintiff's act or default, vis major, or the act of God, or under statutory sanction positively enjoining the act causing damage; even in this last-mentioned case the defendant would still be under a special duty to take precautions, as held in the Dominion case, ubi supra. So also an employer is liable for an accident arising out of dangerous work, even if he employs an independent contractor (Honeywill v. Stein Ltd. v. Larkin Brothers, etc., Ltd., 1934, 1 K. B. 191).

So in the civil law there are three degrees of negligence: (1) lata culpa, gross neglect;

(2) levis culpa, ordinary neglect; and (3) levissima culpa, slight neglect.—Halifax, C. L. 61.

The question of negligence may be one entirely of law, where the case falls within a general settled rule or principle of law; more often, of law and fact and sometimes of fact only where it is left to the jury to decide whether the defendant has shown a want of care which would have been expected in the ordinary course of events in the circumstances.

Burden of Proof.—The onus of proving negligence rests on the plaintiff; in some cases res ipsa loquitur, i.e., where the thing resulting from it speaks for itself, as in the case of a railway collision between trains owned by the same company (Carpue v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co., (1844) 5 Q. B. 747).

Master and Servant.—A master is responsible to the public, and also, under certain conditions, to his servant, for the negligence of his servant, although a fellow servant with others, acting in the execution of his master's business. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

A manufacturer is liable for negligence in the making or preparation of his wares for sale and use by the public, for whom they are intended: see, e.g., Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills Ltd., 79 S. J. 815.

Action by Representatives of Deceased Persons.—An action for pecuniary loss arising from negligence causing death passes to the representative or next of kin of the deceased, by the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) ('Lord Campbell's Act'), and the Fatal Accidents Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 95). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Executors,' and the Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 7). The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), amends the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846–1908, so as to include adopted and illegitimate children among dependants, and damages may be awarded in respect of funeral expenses. This Act has to a great extent revolutionized the application of the principle actio personalis moritur cum persona, to which the above-mentioned Acts have only been isolated exceptions. See ACTIO PERSONALIS and LAW REFORM. See CAMPBELL'S (LORD) ACTS.

These Acts apply as well for the benefit of the representatives of a deceased foreigner as for those of a British subject, at all events if the wrong-doer is not a foreigner (Davidson v. Hill, 1901, 2 K. B. 606).

Contributory Negligence of Plaintiff.—If the plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence, in other words, if with ordinary care he might have avoided the consequence of the defendant's negligence, he cannot recover (Butterfield v. Forester, (1809) 11 East, 60, and British Columbia Electric Railway v. Loach, 1916, 1 A. C. 719); and see VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA.

Consult Beven on Negligence and Smith's Leading Cases, sub tit. Coggs v. Bernard.

Negligent Escape, where a person escapes from the custody of the sheriff or other officer. See ESCAPE.

Negoce [fr. negotium, Lat.], business, trade, management of affairs.

Negotiable Instruments, those the right of action upon which is, by exception from the common rule, freely assignable from one to another, such as bills of exchange and promissory notes. Any person acquiring a negotiable instrument for value and in good faith can enforce the contract contained in it against the person liable on it, although the person from whom he has obtained it had no title. See also CHOSE.

Promissory notes were made negotiable by 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, and 7 Anne, c. 25, and placed in all respects upon the same footing with inland bills of exchange.

The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, contains the law as to negotiation of bills of exchange, promissory notes, and cheques. Section 31 declares that these instruments are negotiated when they are transferred from one person to another in such a manner as to constitute the transferee the holder of them, and s. 32 enumerates the conditions under which an indorsement may operate as a negotiation, as that the indorsement must be written on the bill itself, and be signed by the indorser, and must be an indorsement of the entire bill. A cheque or bill marked 'pay cash or order' is not within the Act and is not a negotiable instrument (North and South Insurance Co. v. National Provincial Bank Ltd., (1936), 105 L. J. K. B. 163). See BILL OF EXCHANGE and NOT NEGOTIABLE.

Negotiation, treaty of business, whether public or private.

Negotiorum gestor, a person who spontaneously, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, intermeddles with his property, as to do work on it, or to carry it to another place, etc.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract. But the Roman Law raised a quasi mandate, by implication, for the benefit of the owner in many of such cases. Nor is an implication of this sort wholly unknown to the Common Law, where there has been a subsequent ratification of the acts by the owner; and sometimes where unauthorized acts are done, positive presumptions are made by law for the benefit of particular parties. Thus, if a stranger enter upon a minor's lands and take the profits, the law will, in many cases, oblige him to account to the minor for the profits as his bailiff; for it will be presumed that he entered to take them in trust for the infant. See Wall v. Stanwick, (1887) 34 Ch. D. 763.

As the negotiorum gestor interferes without any actual mandate, there is good reason for requiring him to exert the requisite skill and knowledge to accomplish the object or business which he undertakes; to do everything which is incident to or dependent upon that object or business, and to finish whatever he has begun. Without such an obligation every person in the community would be at the mercy of ignorant and officious friends.—Story on Bailments.

Nelle, a woman born in villenage.—2 Bl. Com. 94.

Nelfty. See NATIVITAS.

Ne injuste vexes, a writ founded on Magna Charta that lay for a tenant distrained by his lord, for more services than he ought to perform; and it was a prohibition to the lord unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant; in a special use it was where the tenant had prejudiced himself by doing greater services, or paying more rent without constraint, than he needed; for, in that case, by reason of the lord's seisin, the tenant could not avoid it by avowry, but was driven to his writ for remedy.—Fitz. N. B. 10. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 35.

Ne luminibus officatur, a servitude restraining the owner of a house from obstructing the light of his neighbour.

Nembda [Teut.], a jury.—3 Bl. Com. 350.

Nemine contradicente, abbrev. nem. con. [Lat.], the phrase to signify the unanimous consent of the Members of the House of Commons to a vote or resolution; it is analogous to the term nemine dissente (nem. dis.) in the House of Peers.

Nemo agit in seipsum. Jenk. Cent. 40.—(No one impleads himself.)

Nemo aliquam partem recte intelligere potest antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit. Broom's Leg. Max.—(No one is able rightly to understand one part before he has again and again read through the whole.)

Nemo contra factum suum venire potest. 2 Inst. 66.—(No one can go against his own deed.) See ESTOPPEL.

Nemo dat qui non habet. Jenk. Cent. 250.—(He who hath not cannot give.)

Nemo dat quod non habet. (No one can give that which he has not. In other words, No one can give a better title than he has). Consult Broom's Leg. Max. In application of this maxim, it is enacted by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 21 (1), that 'where goods are sold by a person who is not the owner thereof, and who does not sell them with the authority or with the consent of the owner, the buyer acquires no better title to the goods than the seller had, unless the owner of the goods is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell.'

Nemo debet bis vexari, si constat curiæ quod sit pro una et eadem causâ. 5 Co. 61.—(No man ought to be twice put to trouble, if it appear to the Court that it is for one and the same cause.) In civil actions the general rule is, that the judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court. The exception to this rule is in the action of ejectment.—2 Selw. N. P. 763.

It is also well established in the criminal law, that when a man is indicted for an offence, and acquitted, he cannot afterwards be indicted for the same offence, provided the first indictment were such that he could have been lawfully convicted upon it by proof of the facts contained in the second indictment.—Arch. Cr. Plead. For a recent instance of the application of the maxim, see Rez. v. Simpson, 1914, 1 K. B. 66. See AUTREFOIS CONVICT.

But an abortive trial without a verdict, as if a jury be discharged for inability to agree, may be followed by a new trial, as was held by the Exchequer Chamber in Winsor v. Reg., (1866) L. R. 1 Q. B. 390, where the prisoner was hanged after a second trial for murder.

Nemo debet esse iudex in propriâ causâ. 12 Co. 113.—(No one should be judge in his own cause.) See Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., (1852) 3 H. L. C. 759, in which the judgment of Lord Chancellor Cottenham was set aside by the House of Lords on the ground of his having been a shareholder in the defendant company.

Nemo debet locupletari alienâ jacturâ.—(No one ought to be enriched by another's disaster.) Cited per Bovill, C.J., in Fletcher v. Alexander, (1868) L. R. 3 C. P. 381.

Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem. Broom's Leg. Max.—(No one maintains an action arising out of his own wrong.)

Nemo patriam in quâ natus est exuere nec ligeantiæ debitum ejurare possit. Co. Litt. 129.—(No man can disclaim the country in which he was born, nor abjure the bond of allegiance.) But see EXPATRIATION and ALIEN.

Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patriam. 2 Inst. 380.—(No one can verify by the country [i.e., by jury] against a record.)

Nemo potest esse simul actor et iudex. Broom's Leg. Max.—(No one can be at once suitor and judge.)

Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus. Gilb. Ten. 142.—(No one can be both tenant and lord.)

Nemo præsuntur alienam posteritatem suæ prætulisse. Wing 285.—(No one is presumed to prefer the posterity of another to his own.)

Nemo præsuntur malus.—(No one is presumed to be bad.)

Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum.—(No one is bound to betray himself.)

The Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), which by s. 5 makes parties admissible witnesses in actions, expressly saved criminal proceedings from its operation, but a series of particular enactments, e.g., the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 51, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 20, and the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, s. 9, and finally the general Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (see that title), make defendants competent, but not compellable, to give evidence.

Nephew [fr. nepos, Lat.], (1) the son of a brother or sister, or half-brother or half-sister; (2) in special cases, a great-nephew (Weeds v. Bristol, (1866) L. R. 2 Eq. 333), or nephew by marriage (Sherratt v. Mountford, (1873) L. R. 8 Ch. 928), and even an illegitimate nephew (In the goods of Ashton, 1892, P. 83).

Nepos, a grandson. Neptis, a granddaughter. See Whilock v. Whilock, (1924) 40 T. L. R. 566.

Ne recipiatur, a caveat by a defendant to prevent a plaintiff from trying his cause at certain sittings, where the cause was not entered in due time.—R. 43, H. T. 1853.

Ne releasa pas (he did not release).

Nether House of Parliament. The House of Commons was so called in the time of Henry VIII.

Net profits, clear profits after all deductions. See Watson v. Haggitt, 1928, A. C. 127.

Nets. A custom for fishermen to spread their nets to dry on the lands of a private owner at all times seasonable for fishing is good, as was held of two fishermen of Walmer in Kent in Mercer v. Denne, 1904, 2 Ch. 534.

Ne unques. Never.

Never Indebted, Plea of, a species of traverse which occurred in actions of debt on simple contract, and was resorted to when the defendant meant to deny in point of fact the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would by law be implied.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed. 153, 156. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 17, a defendant may not deny generally the facts alleged by the plaintiff. See, further, PLEADING.

New Assignment, a form of pleading which sometimes arose from the generality of the declaration, when, the complaint not having been set out with sufficient precision, it became necessary, from the evasiveness of the plea, to re-assign the cause of action with fresh particulars. It most frequently occurred in actions of trespass, as where two assaults had been committed, one of which was justifiable and the other indefensible; or in trespass quare clausum fregit, when the defendant claimed a right of way.

New assignment is now abolished, and it is provided that everything formerly alleged by way of new assignment is to be introduced by way of amendment of the statement of claim.—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXIII., r. 6 (annulled by R. S. C., July, 1902, r. 7). See Bullen and Leake's Pleadings, 9th ed., p. 574.

New Building. Under the Road Improvement Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 68), s. 11, new building 'includes any addition to an existing building.'

The question whether any building is a 'new building' is in general one of fact (see Ballard v. Horton's Estates Ltd., (1926) 24 L. G. R. 449). So also in the case of temporary buildings (q.v.) (Rodwell v. Wade, (1924) 23 L. G. R. 174; and Keeling v. Wirral Rural District Council, (1925) 23 L. G. R. 201).

Sect. 23 of the Public Health Act (Amendment) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), contained elaborate definitions of a 'new building,' but this section has been repealed as from the 1st October, 1937, by the Public Health Act, 1936, and of which the provisions relating to building and building bye-laws will be found in Part II. of the Act. 'New building' is not defined, but s. 62 provides for the application of bye-laws for the construction, materials, space for, lighting, ventilation, and dimensions of rooms for human habitation, also height of existing buildings, when altered, extended or changed. See also Factory Acts, London Building Acts and Local Acts.

New Forest, a royal forest in Hampshire, created by William the Conqueror. See 41 Geo. 3, c. 108; 48 Geo. 3, c. 72; 50 Geo. 3, c. 116; 51 Geo. 3, c. 94 (as to timber); 59 Geo. 3, c. 86 (as to common of pasture); 14 & 15 Vict. c. 76 (as to deer); 59 Geo. 3, c. 86, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 50 (as to leases); 17 & 18 Vict. c. 49 (as to settlement of claims); and 29 & 30 Vict. c. 63 (as to game).

Newgate, Delivery of. See CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT; also 25 Geo. 3, c. 18.

New Inn, an Inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

New Parishes Acts. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37 (called 'Peel's Act'), 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 94, passed in 1843, 1844, 1856, and 1869, for better providing for the spiritual care of populous parishes by the establishment of district churches therein. See Trower's New Parishes Acts.

News. Spreading false news to make discord between the sovereign and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, was punishable by Stat. West. I., 3 Edw. 1, c. 34; 2 Rich. 2, st. 1, c. 5; and 12 Rich. 2, c. 11; but all these three Acts have been repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 59). As to spreading false reports during the Great War, see Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914 (5 Geo. 5, c. 8), s. 1 (1) (c); and see SEDITION.

Newspapers, periodical publications containing intelligence of passing events. They have from time to time been the subject of enactments for their general regulation. The principal of these were 60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 9, and 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76. But these and other Acts were repealed by the Newspapers Printers and Reading Rooms Repeal Act, 1869, with the exception of certain sections re-enacted by that Act, amongst which the most important are 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, s. 29, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 12, s. 2, by which printers of newspapers must print their names and places of abode thereon, etc.

The Judicial Proceedings (Regulation of Reports) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 61), makes it an offence to print or publish in relation to judicial proceedings any indecent matter, or indecent medical, surgical, or physiological details calculated to injure public morals. The same Act makes it unlawful to print or publish in relation to matrimonial causes any particulars other than the names, addresses, and occupations of parties and witnesses; a concise statement of the charges, defences, counter-charges; submissions on points of law; the decision of the Court thereon; and the summing-up of the judge, finding of the jury, and judgment of the Court.

No prosecution under this Act may be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General.

Libel.—Under the Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), s. 2, the defendant in any action for a libel contained in a public newspaper may plead an apology and payment into court. The Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 60), as amended by the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), requires the consent of a judge at chambers to the prosecution of a newspaper for libel, allows the defence of justification to be gone into by justices, allows justices to summarily convict, and gives 'privilege' (see LIBEL) to newspaper reports of proceedings in a court or at public meetings.

The Act of 1881 also establishes a register of newspaper proprietors, open to public search, defining 'newspaper' in the Act as meaning any paper containing public news, intelligence, or occurrences, or any remarks or observations therein [an obvious misprint for 'thereon'] printed for sale, and published in England or Ireland periodically, or in parts or numbers at intervals not exceeding 26 days between the publication of any two such papers, parts, or numbers.

Consult Odgers on Libel.

New Style. The modern system of computing time was introduced into Great Britain in 1752 by the Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23), the 3rd of September of that year being reckoned as the 14th. See NEW YEAR'S DAY.

New Trial. If any defect of judgment happen from causes wholly extrinsic, i.e., arising from matters foreign to or dehors the record, the only remedy the party injured by it has (except formerly error coram nobis or vobis in some few cases) is by applying to the Court for a new trial, which is in substitution for a bill of exceptions. But the Court must be satisfied that there are strong probable grounds to suppose that the merits have not been fairly and fully discussed, and that the decision is not agreeable to the justice and truth of the case before they will grant a new trial.

The following is a summary of the cases in which a new trial may be granted. They are all subject to the rule that in an action of contract, unless some right independent of the damages be in question, the amount in dispute must be 20*l.* at least for the Court to interfere.

(1) Mistakes, etc., of a judge. If a judge misdirect a jury, even in a penal action, it is generally a good ground for a new trial. So if a judge improperly nonsuit a plaintiff. So if a judge should admit improper evidence, or reject evidence which ought to be admitted, by which means the result of the trial or inquiry has been different from what it otherwise would have been. It is expressly provided by the Rules of the Supreme Court, however, that a new trial 'shall not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or because the verdict of the jury was not taken upon a question which the judge at the trial was not asked to leave to them, unless in the opinion of the Court to which the application is made some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned by the trial of the action' (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXIX., r. 6).

(2) Default or misconduct of the officer of the Court. As where a cause is, by mistake, entered in a wrong list, and the cause is tried as undefended in the defendant's absence.

(3) Default or misconduct of the jury. If a juror has been sworn by a wrong surname, and it has been productive of some injustice. If a jury find a verdict 'against the weight of evidence,' but in this case, more than in any other, the Court will be very reluctant to grant the new trial. For excessive damages and for the smallness of the damages, if out of all proportion to the injury. For the misconduct of the jury, as if they had eaten or drunk at the expense of the party for whom they had afterwards found a verdict, or if they determine their verdict by lot, or if any of them had declared that the plaintiff should never have a verdict.

(4) Absence, etc., of counsel or solicitor. The instances are very rare in which the Court has granted a new trial on this ground.

(5) Default or misconduct of the opposite party. If a party, for whom a verdict is afterwards given, deliver to the jury, after they have left the box, evidence which had not been adduced in court, a new trial will be granted. So if he have laboured the jury, or used improper influence with them. So if he had misled or taken by surprise the opposite party. So where no notice of trial has been given: but if the defendant appear to defend, this irregularity is waived.

(6) Default or misconduct of witnesses. The general rule is, that a new trial will not be granted on the ground that evidence has not been given that might have been given at the trial, for the plaintiff ought, if unprepared with his evidence, either to make application to postpone the trial before the jury are sworn, or should withdraw his record and not take the chance of a verdict. The Court has granted a new trial where it appeared clearly that the plaintiff's case was a mere fiction supported by perjury, which the defendant could not at the time of the trial be prepared to answer.

(7) Discovery of new evidence after the trial. A new trial will seldom be granted where a verdict has been given against a party, or a plaintiff has been nonsuited for want of evidence which might have been produced at the trial, because it would tend to introduce perjury. But if new evidence have been discovered after the trial, the Court will grant a new trial (which has usually been upon payment of costs) if it be necessary, in order to do justice between the parties; but the discovery of witnesses who can contradict those produced on the former trial seems to be no ground for a new trial, nor will the Court grant a new trial to let a party into a defence of which he was apprised at the first trial.

(8) Where one of several issues, etc., has been wrongfully decided. A new trial may be ordered on any question in an action, whatever be the grounds for the new trial, without interfering with the finding or decision upon any other question (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXIX., r. 7).

(9) Where there has been a previous new trial. If the jury on the second trial find for the party against whom the former verdict was given, the Court, if the case be doubtful, or the second verdict do not accord with the justice of the case, may be induced to grant a third trial, but this is entirely in the discretion of the Court, even after two concurring verdicts.

(10) Where a party has been taken by surprise.

A new trial may be awarded for the same causes, after inquiry before the sheriff, as after a verdict.

As to time and manner of moving for a new trial, see Ord. XXXIX. The time for applying for a new trial runs from the verdict of the jury, and not from the giving of judgment (Greene v. Croome, 1908, 1 K. B. 277).

The motion must be made to the Court of Appeal. See Ord. XXXIX., r. 1 (trial without jury); Jud. Act, 1925, s. 30 (1) (replacing Jud. Act, 1890, s. 1). New trials in criminal cases are abolished by s. 20 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23). See CRIMINAL APPEAL ACT. As to new trial in County Court, see C. C. R., Ord. XXXI.; Brown v. Dean, 1910, A. C. 373.

New Year's Day, the 1st of January. The 25th of March was the civil and legal New Year's Day till the alteration of the style in 1752, when it was permanently fixed as the 1st January.

In Scotland the year was, by a proclamation which bears date 27th November, 1599, ordered thenceforth to commence in that kingdom on the 1st January instead of the 25th March. By the Bank Holidays Act, 1871 (34 Vict. c. 17), New Year's Day is made a bank holiday in Scotland, and bills, etc., becoming due on that day are payable on the following day. See HOLIDAY.

New Zealand, Bishopric of, constituted by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 88.

Nextl, among the Romans, persons free-born, who, for debt, were delivered bound to their creditors, and obliged to serve them until they could pay their debts.

Next Friend. At law, an infant having a guardian might sue by his guardian, as such, or by his next friend, though he must always have defended by his guardian. In equity he sued by next friend, and not by guardian, and defended by guardian ad litem. A married woman, before the Married Women's Property Act, could not sue either at law or in equity unless her husband were joined.

Infants may sue as plaintiffs by their next friends in the manner practised before the Jud. Acts in the Court of Chancery (as to which see Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed. p. 602), and may in like manner defend any action by their guardian appointed for that purpose by Ord. XVI., r. 16. The next friend of an infant is primâ facie liable for the costs, which are, however, reimbursed to him out of the infant's estate, provided he have acted properly; but the next friend of a feme covert did not incur the like responsibility.

A married woman had, by Ord. XVI., r. 8, of the Rules of 1875, the same right of suing by a next friend as an infant, but the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, sub-s. 2 (repealed, reproduced and extended by Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 1), by allowing a married woman to sue in all respects as if she were a feme sole, has rendered the 'next friend' in her case unnecessary. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XVI., r. 16. As to the capacity of a married woman to act as next friend or guardian ad litem, see A. P., 1937, notes to Order XVI., r. 16.

Persons of unsound mind sue by their committee or next friend, and defend by their committees or guardians appointed for that purpose (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XVI., r. 17).

Next of Kin. A person, or set of persons, standing nearest in blood relationship to another person. See DISTRIBUTION, STATUTES OF.

Next Presentation, the right to present to an ecclesiastical benefice on the occurrence of the next vacancy. The purchase of the next presentation of a vacant benefice is illegal and void; and a clerk could not purchase a next presentation, even if the church were full, with a view of presenting himself. The sale of next presentations is now abolished and the transfer of rights of patronage of a benefice strictly regulated by the Benefices Act, 1898, and the rules made thereunder, and further restricted by the Benefices Act, 1898 (Amendment) Measure, 1923 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, No. 1).

Nexum, the; a formal transfer of ownership of a thing, or obligation.—Civ. Law.

Nicole, an ancient name for Lincoln.

Niece [fr. neptis, Lat.], the daughter of a brother or sister; may, as nephew, mean great-niece, or niece by marriage. See NEPHEW.

Nief. See NEIFE.

Nient comprise (not contained), an exception taken to a petition, because the thing desired was not contained in the deed or proceeding upon which the petition was founded.—Jac. Law Dict.

Nient culpable (not guilty), a plea in criminal prosecutions; see 4 Bl. Com. 339.

Nient dedre (to disown nothing), to suffer judgment by not denying or opposing it, i.e., by default.

Nient le fait (not his deed).

Niger liber, the black book or register in the Exchequer; chartularies of abbeys, cathedrals, etc.

Niger Territories, now the Nigerian Protectorate, by O. C., S. R. & O., 1913, No. 1267, p. 232.

Night, the time of darkness between sunset and sunrise. Under the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 69), s. 12, the night begins one hour after sunset, and ends one hour before sunrise. Under the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 25 (see BURGLARY), and the Factory Act, 1901, s. 156, night is between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Night-House, the name sometimes given to a refreshment-house before the Licensing Act, 1872. See PUBLIC-HOUSE CLOSING ACT.

Night Magistrate, a constable of the night; the head of a watch-house.—Scots Term.

Night Walkers, vagrants, pilferers, disturbers of the peace. They may be arrested by the police, and committed to custody till the morning.—2 Hale, P. C. 90. Also a name for a common prostitute: see s. 54 (11) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Police (Metropolis).'

Nihil capiat per breve (that he take nothing by his writ). Where an issue, arising upon a declaration or temporary plea, is decided for the defendant, the judgment is, generally, that the plaintiff take nothing, etc., and that the defendant go thereof without day, etc., which is a judgment of nihil capiat, etc.

Nihil habet forum ex scenâ.—Bacon. (The Court has nothing to do with what is not before it.)

Nihil or nil habuit in tenementis (he [the landlord] had no interest in the tenements [demised]), a plea denying the lessor's title pleaded in an action of debt only, brought by a lessor against a lessee for years, or at will, without deed or occupation by the lessee, for if the lessee had become tenant he would have been estopped from denying his landlord's title.

Nihil in lege intolerabilis est eandem rem diverso jure censeri. 4 Rep. 93 a.—(Nothing is more intolerable in law than that the same thing should be judged by a different rule.)

Nihil præscribitur nisi quod possidetur. Lord Hale, De Jure Maris, 32.—(Nothing is prescribed except what is possessed.)

Nihil quod est contra rationem est illicitum. (Nothing is allowed which is contrary to reason.)

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. 2 Inst. 359.—(Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that a thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound.) See Broom's Leg. Max., referring especially to Ashford v. Thornton, (1819) 1 B. & Ald. 405, the absurd law of which (see BATTEL) had to be abolished by statute, 59 Geo. 3, c. 56.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quam voluntatem domini rem suam in alium transferre ratam habere. 1 Co. 100.—(Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as to regard the intention of the owner in transferring his own property to another.)

Nihilis, or Nichils, debts to the Crown which a sheriff, when making up his accounts for the Exchequer, said were nothing worth and illeivable, for the insufficiency of the parties from whom due. Sheriffs' accounts are now audited by such persons, etc., as the Treasury direct.—Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 22.

Nil debet (he owes nothing), the old form of the general issue in all actions of debt not founded on a specialty. This plea was not allowed after Reg. Gen. T. T. 1853, r. 11.

Nil dicit, Judgment by. See DEFAULT.

Nimla subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Wing. 26.—(Too much subtlety in law is disapproved.)

Nimmer, a thief; a pilferer.

Nisan, the Babylonish name for Abib, the first sacred and seventh civil month of the Jewish year.

Nisi. A decree, rule, or order of the Court is said to be made nisi when it is to take effect unless the party against whom it is made comes before the Court and gives reasons by a certain date why it should not take effect. See DECREE NISI; ABSOLUTE.

Nisi Prius, a Common Law phrase, which originated thus:

An action was formerly triable only in the court where it was brought. But it was provided by Magna Charta, in ease of the subject, that assizes of novel disseisin and mort-ancestor (which were the most common remedies of that day) should thenceforward instead of being tried at Westminster, in the superior court, be taken in their proper counties, and for this purpose justices were to be sent into every county once a year to take these assizes there.—1 Reeves, 246. These local trials being convenient, were applied to other actions: for by the statute of Nisi Prius, 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, t. 30, as the general course of proceedings, writs of venire for summoning juries to the superior courts are in the following terms:—Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram Justiciariis nostris apud Westm. in Octavis Sancti Michaelis Nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint duodecim, etc. Thus the trial was to be had at Westminster only in the event of its not previously taking place in the county before the justices appointed to take the assizes. This clause of nisi or nisi prius is not now retained in the venire, but it occurs in the record and the judgment roll. And it is enforced by a subsequent statute of 14 Edw. 3, c. 16, which authorizes a trial before the justices of assize, in lieu of the superior Court, and gives it the name of a trial at Nisi Prius.—2 Inst. 424.

Nisi Prius Record. This was an instrument in the nature of a commission to the judges at Nisi Prius for the trial of a cause, written on parchment and delivered to the officer of the court in which the cause was to be tried. Any variance between the record and the issue should have been objected to at the time of trial, but the judges had power to amend variances. See RECORD and TRIAL.

Nitro-Glycerine. See the Explosives Act, 1875, and EXPLOSIVES.

Nizam, an arranger; the superior officer of a province charged with the administration of criminal law.—Indian.

Niazmut, arrangement, government, the officer of the Nazam or Nizam.—Ibid.

Nizamut adawlut, the Chief Criminal Court of the British provinces in India.—Ibid.

N. L. See NON LIQUET.

Noble officium, the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Session in Scotland.

Nobility, a division of the people, comprehending dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons. These had anciently duties annexed to their respective honours; they are created either by writ, i.e., by royal summons to attend the house of peers, or by letters-patent, i.e., by royal grant of any dignity and degree of peerage.

Noble. See GEORGE-NOBLE.

Noceat, guilty; criminal.

Noctanter (by night), an abolished writ which issued out of Chancery, and returned to the King's Bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27.

Noctes and Noctem de firmâ, entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights.—Domesday.

Nodfyr, or Nedfri [fr. neb, Sax., necessary], necessary fire. See Spelman.

Noisy Nuisance. An action may lie for a noisy nuisance, as by ringing bells (Soltan v. De Held, (1851) 2 Sim. N. S. 133); user of stable (Ball v. Ray, (1873) L. R. 8 Ch. 467); or printing works (Poleus v. Rushmer, 1907,

A. C. 121); or hotel kitchen (Vanderpant v. Mayfair Hotel Co. Ltd., 1930, 1 Ch. 138). As to nuisance caused by rifle practice, see Hawley v. Steele, (1877) 6 Ch. D. 521. As to motor horns, etc., the Minister of Transport may prohibit noise and hooting (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43, s. 30; and 24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 9); and see MUSICIAN.

Noka, a half ingate, generally 7½ acres.

Nolens volens, whether willing or unwilling.

Nolle prosequi (to be unwilling to prosecute) was a proceeding in the nature of an undertaking by the plaintiff when he had misconceived the nature of the action, or the party to be sued, to forbear to proceed in a suit altogether, or as to some part of it, or as to some of the defendants. It differed from a non pros., which put a plaintiff out of court with respect to all the defendants. See now DISCONTINUANCE. The King by his Attorney-General may enter a nolle prosequi on an information or indictment: this does not operate as a bar to a new indictment. Consult Jac. Law Dict.; Robertson, 'Civil Proceedings.'

Nolunt leges Angliæ (in the original Anglie mutare). See MERTON, STATUTE OF.

Nomen collectivum, a singular noun of multitude.

Nomen generalissimum, a most universal term, as land.

Nomina Villarum, an account of the names of all the villages and the possessors thereof, in each county, drawn up by several sheriffs in 1315, and returned by them into the Exchequer, where it was preserved.

Nominal Damages. See DAMAGES.

Nominal Partner, one who has not any actual interest in the trade or business, or its profits; but by allowing his name to be used holds himself out to the world as apparently having an interest. See PARTNERSHIP; HOLDING OUT.

Nominate Contracts, those distinguished by particular names.—Civil Law.

Nominatim, by name; expressed one by one.

Nomination, the act of mentioning by name; especially the power of appointing, by virtue of some manor or otherwise, a clerk to a patron of a benefice, by him to be presented to the ordinary. A nominator must appoint his clerk within six months after avoidance; if he do not, and the patron presents his clerk before the bishop has taken any benefit of the lapse, he is obliged to admit such clerk.—Plowd. 529. Also (see Ballot Act, 1872; Municipal Cor- porations Act, 1882, s. 55; Representation of People (No. 2) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 35); and Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), Sched. II., Part I., para. 2 (1)) the written proposal of a candidate at a parliamentary or municipal election. As to the power of a member of a friendly society or an industrial or a provident society to dispose by 'nomination' of sums payable on his death, see Friendly Societies Act, 1896, s. 56; Friendly Societies Act, 1908, s. 5; Bennett v. Slater, 1899, 1 Q. B. 45; Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, ss. 25-27.

Nominativus pendens, a nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes [This deed, etc., down to whereas], though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, having regard to the predicate 'witnesseth' or 'now this deed witnesseth,' are of this kind.

Nomine pœnæ (under the description of a penalty), an additional rent payable by way of penalty in the event of certain acts prejudicial to the landlord being done by the tenant, as if he should plough up pasture.

The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 9), by s. 29 restricts penal rents to actual damage suffered, excepting, however, from this restriction penal rents for breaking up permanent pasture, grubbing underwoods, felling, etc., trees, or relating to the burning of heather. See Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

Nomocanon [fr. νόμος, Gk., law; and κανών, a rule]. 1. A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collation of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated.

2. A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without any regard to imperial constitutions. Such is the nomocanon by M. Cotelier.—Encyc. Londin.

Nomographer [fr. νόμος, Gk., law; and γράφω, to write], one who writes on the subject of laws.

Nomotheta [Gk.], a law-giver, or law commissioner.

Nomothetical, legislative.

Non-ability, inability; an exception against a person.—Fitz. N. B. 35, 65. See DISABILITY.

Non-acceptance, the refusal of acceptance.

Non-access. When a husband could not, in the course of nature, by reason of his absence, have been the father of his wife's child, the child is a bastard.

Access is presumed during wedlock; but this presumption may be encountered by proof of circumstances showing that sexual intercourse did not take place within such a time that the husband could be the father. As to what is such a time, see GESTATION. As to the admissibility of evidence by husband or wife of non-access, see ACCESS.

Non-act, a forbearance from action; the contrary to act.

Nonæ et decimæ, payments made to the church, by those who were tenants of church-farms. The first was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry, the second was claimed in right of the church.

Non-age, minority. See INFANT.

Nonagium, or Nonage, a ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretence of being distributed to pious uses.—Blount.

Non-appearance, the omission of timely and proper appearance; a failure of appearance. See APPEARANCE.

Non assumpsit (he did not promise), a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in the action of assumpsit or promises. This plea operated as a denial in point of fact of the existence of any express promise to the effect alleged in the declaration, or of the matters of fact from which the promise alleged would be implied by law: see Steph. Plead., 7th ed. 154, 160. See, too, as to the effect of the plea, Bullen and Leake's Prec. of Pleadings.

Non assumpsit infra sex annos (he did not promise within six years). This was the form of pleading the Statute of Limitations. See LIMITATION and PLEADING.

Non bis in idem (not twice tried for the same offence).

Non cepit (he took not). This was a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in the action of replevin. It applied to the case where the defendant had not, in fact, taken the cattle or goods, or where he did not take them or have them in the place mentioned in the declaration, the place being a material point in this action.

Non-claim, the omission or neglect of him that ought to challenge his right within a time limited, as within a year and a day; but now no continual or other claim preserves any right of making an entry or distress or of bringing an action.—3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 11.

Non compos mentis, said of a person who is not of sound memory and understanding. See IDIOT, MENTAL DEFECTIVE, and PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND.

Non concessit (he did not grant), a plea resorted to by a stranger to a deed, because estoppels do not hold with respect to strangers. This plea brought into issue the title of the grantor as well as the operation of the deed. See now PLEADING.

Nonconformist. See DISSENTERS.

Non constat. It does not appear; it is not proved (that the asserted or implied conclusion follows from the premises).

Non culpabilis, sometimes abbreviated Non cul. (not guilty).

Non damnificatus (not injured). This was a plea in an action of debt on an indemnity bond, or bond conditioned 'to keep the plaintiff harmless and indemnified,' etc. It was in the nature of a plea of performance; being used where the defendant meant to allege that the plaintiff had been kept harmless and indemnified, according to the tenor of the condition.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 300–301. See now PLEADING.

Non dat qui non habet. (He cannot give that which he has not.)

Non declinando, a custom or prescription to be discharged of all tithes, etc.

Non decipitur qui seipsum se decipit. (He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived.)

Non demisit (he demised not). 1. A plea resorted to where a plaintiff declared upon a demise without stating the indenture in an action of debt for rent. 2. A plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowrant did not demise.

Non detinet, a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in the action of detinue. This plea alleged that the defendant did not detain 'the said goods in the said declaration specified,' etc. It operated accordingly as a denial of the detention of the goods. But, under this plea, the defendant could not deny that they were the plaintiff's.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed. 154, 163.

Non-direction, omission on the part of a judge to enforce a necessary point of law upon a jury. See NEW TRIAL; and see Jud. Act, 1875, s. 22, which preserves the right of any party to have the issues for trial by jury left to the jury, with a proper and complete direction to the jury upon the law, and as to the evidence applicable to such issues. See Young v. Hoffman Manufacturing Co., (1907) 76 L. J. K. B. 993.

Nones, days in the Roman calendar, so called because they reckoned nine days from them to the Ides. The seventh day of March, May, July, and October, and the fifth day of all other months.—Kenn. Paroch. Antiq. 92.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. Co. Litt. 343.—(We cannot dispute against a man who denies first principles.)

Non est factum ('I never made the deed'). This was a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in debt on bond or other specialty, and also in covenant. It denied that the deed mentioned in the declaration was the defendant's deed; under this, the defendant might contend at the trial that the deed was never executed in point of fact; but he could not deny its validity in point of law. And see Howatson v. Webb, 1908, 1 Ch. 1, and ASSUMPSIT and PLEADING.

Non est inventus, a sheriff's return to a writ when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick.

Non-feasance, an offence of omission. The term is usually applied to a failure to perform a duty to the public. As to the liability to an action for damages for non-feasance as distinguished from mis-feasance, see Maguire v. Liverpool Corporation, 1905, 1 K. B. 767; McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, 1912, 1 K. B. 118; and Boynin v. Ancholme Drainage and Navigation Commissioners, 1921, 2 K. B. 213.

Non-feasance not amounting to gross negligence in gratuitous bailments or undertakings is not actionable, but mis-feasance in such cases imposes a liability; and see NEGLIGENCE.

Non implacitando aliquem de libero tenemento sine brevi, a writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold without the king's writ.—Reg. Brev. 171. Obsolete.

Non infregit conventionem, a plea which raised a substantial issue in an action for non-repair according to covenant, whether there was a want of repairs or not. See PLEADING.

Non intromittant Clause, a clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county. See R. v. Sainsbury, (1791) 4 T. R. 451.

Non intromittendo, quando breve præcipe in capite subdole impetratur, a writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one who, under colour of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called præcipe in capite, any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right.—Reg. Brev. 4. Obsolete.

Non-issuable Pleas, those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement. See PLEADING.

Non-joinder of Parties. See PARTIES and ABATEMENT.

Nonjuror, one who (conceiving the Stuart family unjustly deposed) refused to swear allegiance to those who succeeded them.

Non jus sed seisinam facit stipitem. Fleta, l. 6.—(Not right, but seisin, makes a stock.) But see INHERITANCE.

Non liquet (it does not appear clear), a verdict given by a jury when a matter was to be deferred to another day of trial.

The same phrase was used by the Romans; after hearing a cause, such of the judges as thought it not sufficiently clear to pronounce upon cast a ballot into the urn with the two letters N.L. for non liquet.

Non merchandizanda vietualla, an ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did.—Reg. Brev. 184. Obsolete.

Non molestando, a writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him.—Reg. Brev. 184.

Non obstante (notwithstanding), a licence from the Crown to do that which could not be lawfully done without it. Also, a clause frequent in statutes and letters-patent, importing a licence from the Crown to do a thing, which by Common Law might be done, but, being restrained by Act of Parliament, could not be done without such licence.—Plowd. 501.

But the doctrine of non obstante, which sets the prerogative above the law, was effectually demolished by the Bill of Rights at the Revolution of 1688, which enacts that no dispensation, by non obstante of or to any statute, or any part thereof, shall be allowed, but that the same shall be held void and of none effect, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute.

Non obstante veredicto, Judgment. Judgment, 'notwithstanding the verdict,' for a plaintiff in a case where a jury has found for the defendant in a manner substantially contrary to law. See JUDGMENT.

Non omittas, the clause 'that you omit not by reason of any liberty in your bailiwick,' which is usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs, which makes the liberty pro hac vice parcel of the sheriff's bailiwick, and the sheriff must enter and execute the writ within the liberty.

If a writ do not contain a non omittas clause, the sheriff directs his mandate either to the lord or the bailiff of the liberty, by whom the writ is executed and returned.

Non omnium quæ a majoribus constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. (A reason cannot be given for all things our forefathers were pleased to ordain.)

Non plevin, default in not replevying land in due time. See 9 Edw. 3, c. 2.

Non ponendis in assisis et juratis, a writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries.—Fitz. N. B. 165.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere. Broom's Leg. Max.—(A person in possession is not bound to prove that the possessions belong to him.)

Non procedendo ad assisam rege incon-sulto, a writ to stop the trial of a cause appertaining to one who is in the royal service, etc., until the sovereign's pleasure be further known.—Reg. Brev. 220.

Non pros., abbrev. for non prosequitur (he [the plaintiff] does not pursue [his action]). Where the plaintiff failed to take the proper step in his action in the proper time, the defendant entered what was called a non prosequitur, and signed final judgment against the plaintiff, who was said to be non pros.

Under R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXVII., when the plaintiff neglects to proceed, the course is for the defendant to apply for a dismissal of the action for want of prosecution.

Non-residentio pro clerico regis, a writ addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his non-residence; in which case he is to be discharged.—Reg. Brev. 58.

Non-resistance. See DIVINE RIGHT.

Non-sane Memory, a person labouring under mental alienation.

Non sequitur (it does not follow).

Non solvendo pecuniam ad quam clericus mulctatur pro non-residentia, a writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct imposed on a clerk of the sovereign for non-residence.—Reg. Brev. 59.

Nonsuit [non est prosecutus, Lat.]. The judge orders a nonsuit when the plaintiff fails to make out a legal cause of action or fails to support his pleadings by any evidence; whether the evidence which he gives can be considered any evidence at all of a cause of action is a question of law for the judge. By the former practice a plaintiff after a nonsuit might, on paying all costs, recommence his action; by the Rules of 1875 any judgment of nonsuit, unless the court or a judge should otherwise direct, had the same effect as judgment upon the merits for the defendant (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLI., r. 6); but this rule has been rescinded, and it is not reproduced. A plaintiff cannot now elect to be nonsuited, and if he offers no evidence it is the duty of the Court to direct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, and the usual consequences of such verdict will follow (Fox v. Star Newspaper Co., 1900, A. C. 19); but a judge cannot order a nonsuit on plaintiff's opening without the consent of his counsel; see Fletcher v. L. & N. W. R. Co., 1892, 1 Q. B. 122; and R. S. C. Ord. XXVI., r. 1. See TRIAL.

Non sum informatus, a formal answer made of course by an attorney, that he was not informed to say anything material in defence of his client; by which he was deemed to leave it undefended, and so judgment passed against his client. See WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

Non-summons, Wager of Law of, the mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time.—31 Eliz. c. 3, s. 2.

Non-tenuit was a plea in bar to replevin, to avowry for arrears of rent, that the plaintiff did not hold in manner and form, as the avowry alleged. See PLEADING.

Non-tenure, a plea in bar to a real action, by saying that he (the defendant) held not the land mentioned in the plaintiff's count or declaration, or at least some part thereof. It was either general, where one denied ever to have been tenant of the land in question, or special, where it was alleged he was not tenant on the day whereon the writ was sued out.—1 Mod. 181.

The distinction between real and personal actions has now practically ceased to exist. See ACTION.

Non-terminus, the vacation between term and term, formerly called the time or days of the King's peace. See now title TERMS.

Non-user. Non-user, or neglect, in public offices that concern the administration of justice, or the commonwealth, is of itself a direct and immediate cause of forfeiture; but non-user of a private office is no cause of forfeiture, unless some special damage is proved to be occasioned thereby.—2 Bl. Com. 153; and see LETTERS PATENT.

Non videntur qui errant consentire.—(They do not appear to consent who commit a mistake.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Nook of Land [nocata terra, Lat.], twelve acres and a half, sed qu.—Dugd. Warwick, p. 665.

Norfolk Groat,  $\frac{1}{4}$ d.

Normal [fr. norma, Lat., a rule or precept], opposed to exceptional; that state wherein any body most exactly comports in all its parts with the abstract idea thereof, and is most exactly fitted to perform its proper functions, is entitled normal.

Norman-French, the tongue in which several formal proceedings of state are still carried on. The language, having remained the same since the date of the Conquest, at which it was introduced into England, is very different from the French of this day, retaining all the peculiarities which at that time distinguished every province from the rest. A peculiar mode of pronunciation (considered authentic) is believed to have been handed down and preserved by the officials, who have, on particular occasions, to speak the tongue. Norman-French was the language of our legal procedure till the 36 Edw. 3.

Norroy [fr. nord and roy, Fr.], the title of the third of the three kings-at-arms, or provincial heralds. See HERALDS.

Northampton, Statutes made at, 2 Edw. 3, A.D. 1328, respecting pardons for felonies, conduct of assizes, etc.: in part repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863. See R. v. Meade, (1903) 19 T. L. R. 540.

North Britain, Scotland.

Northern Ireland, that part of Ireland other than the Irish Free State. By the Government of Ireland Act, 1926, s. 1, Northern Ireland consists of six counties: Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry, and Tyrone, including boroughs of Belfast and Londonderry, with (1) a representation of 13 members (including one from the Queen's University of Belfast) in the Parliament of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland (see IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT), and (2) a Parliament of Northern Ireland, consisting of the King, a Senate and a House of Commons. The supreme authority of the Imperial Parliament is preserved. The Royal Assent is given to Bills by the Governor of Northern Ireland. The Senate consists of 24 members, 22 elected by the House of Commons of Northern Ireland, and 2 (as ex-officio members), the Lord Mayor of Belfast and the Mayor of Londonderry. The House of Commons consists of 52 members. Certain legislative powers are reserved for the Imperial Parliament; see ss. 4 et seq. of the Act of 1920, relating (subject to the provisions of the Act), inter alia, to the succession or property of the Crown, making of peace or war, the armed forces of the Crown, treaties and relations with foreign States, or the Dominions, dignities and titles of honour, treason, aliens, naturalization or domicile, cables and wireless, aerial navigation, lighthouses, coinage, negotiable instruments, trade marks, designs and patent rights; also under s. 91, postal services. For financial provisions and generally, see the Act of 1920, and subsequent Acts of the United Kingdom, which do not exclude their application to Northern Ireland. See IRELAND.

Noscitur a sociis, a test of construction of a single word: where there is a string of words in an Act of Parliament, and the meaning of one of them is doubtful, that meaning is given to it which it shares with the other words. So, if the words 'horse, cow, or other animal' occur, 'animal' is held to apply to brutes only. See ETJUSDEM GENERIS.

Noscitur ex socio, qui non cognoscitur ex se. Moore, 817.—(He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate.)

Nosocomi, managers of pauper hospitals.—Civ. Law.

Notarial Act. (1) A written certification or authentication under the signature or official seal of a notary of any document or entry, or (2) any instrument, attestation or certificate by a notary in the execution of his office.

Notary, or Notary Public [fr. notaire, Fr., fr. notarius, Lat.], an officer who takes notes of anything which may concern the public; he attests deeds or writings to make them authentic in another country; but is principally employed in mercantile affairs, as to make protests of bills of exchange, etc. He cannot permit another to act in his name, and in London he must be free of the Scriveners' Company. See 25 Hen. 8, c. 27, ss. 3, 4; the Public Notaries Acts, 1801, 1833, and 1843 (41 Geo. 3, c. 79, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 70, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 90); and consult Brooke on the Office, etc., of a Notary, 6th ed., by Cranston. The Court of Faculties makes the appointment in accordance with the Public Notaries Acts, and the Master of that Court has inherent jurisdiction to strike a notary public off the roll (Re Champion, 1906, P. 86). As to its jurisdiction in the case of the Colonies, see Baillieu v. Victorian Society of Notaries, 1904, P. 180.

In Scotland a notary public must now be a qualified solicitor unless he was admitted a notary public prior to the year immediately following the passing of the Act of 1876 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 63), s. 24. His chief powers and duties are similar to those of a notary public in England. And see SCRIVENER.

Note a Bill, To. When a foreign bill has been dishonoured, it is usual for a notary public to present it again on the same day, and if it be not then paid, to make a minute, consisting of his initials, the day, month, and year, and reason, if assigned, of non-payment. The making of this minute is called 'noting the bill.' See NOTING, and Smith's Merc. Law; Byles on Bills.

Note of a Fine, a brief of a fine made by the chirographer before it was engrossed. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74.

Note of Allowance. This was a note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings allowing him to bring error. See C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 149. Error has now, however, been abolished (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1).

Proceedings in error in law were deemed a supersedeas of execution from the service of the copy of such note, together with the statement of the grounds of error intended to be argued.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 150.

Note of Hand, a promissory note. See PROMISSORY NOTE.

Notes, Judge's. A judge usually takes notes of the vivâ voce evidence given during the trial of an action, and these are in practice always referred to on appeal, although they cannot be obtained as a matter of right. In criminal trials the judge must, it seems, take such notes and furnish them, in cases of appeal, to the Court of Criminal Appeal (Court of Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, ss. 8 and 9 (a)); and Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, r. 14). At the trial or hearing of any action or matter in the county court in which there is a right of appeal, the judge, at the request of either party, shall make a note of any question of law raised, and of the facts in evidence relating thereto, and of his decision thereon, and of his decision of the action or matter. Any party to the action is entitled to a copy at his own expense (County Courts Act, 1888, ss. 120 and 121). See now County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), ss. 106, 108; and McGrah v. Cartwright, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 3, as to the duty of an appellant to supply copies for the use of the Court. See SHORT-HAND NOTES.

Not Guilty, a plea by way of traverse which occurred in actions of trespass, libel, or other tort, and amounted to a denial only of the breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant; this was called pleading the 'general issue.' See PLEADING.

The plea of not guilty, in criminal proceedings, is the proper form wherever a prisoner means either to deny or justify the charge in the indictment; the effect of which plea is, that on the one hand, it puts the prosecutor to the proof of every material fact alleged in the indictment or information, and on the other it entitles the defendant to avail himself of any defensive circumstances as amply as if he had pleaded them in a specific form.

Not Guilty by Statute. Very many Acts from time to time allowed defendants sued for doing things in pursuance of them to plead 'not guilty by statute' (or the general issue, as it was described in the statute). They are mostly repealed by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; but the defence is still provided for by R. S. C., Ord. XIX., r. 12, and Ord. XXI., r. 19. Consult Bullen & Leake, Prec. of Plead., 7th ed. pp. 749, 797. See also Aggs on Agricultural Holdings, 4th ed. p. 387.

Not Negotiable. These words are sometimes added as part of the crossing of a cheque, with the result that no one who takes the cheque can have or can give a better title than the person had from whom he took it: see Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 81; G. W. Ry. Co. v. London and County Bank, 1901, A. C. p. 422.

A warrant for interest on War Stock signed by the Chief Accountant of the Bank of England and crossed '& Co.' not negotiable, directing the bank's cashiers to pay a certain sum to the order of a certain person is a cheque within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and a 'warrant for payment of a dividend' within s. 95 of the same Act. A banker in good faith and without negligence receiving payment for a customer who has no title is entitled to the protection of s. 82 of the Act (Shingsby v. Westminster Bank Ltd., 1931, 1 K. B. 173; see also Importers Company Ltd. v. Westminster Bank Ltd., 1927, 2 K. B. 297; and R. E. Jones Ltd. v. Waring and Gillow Ltd., 1925, 2 K. B. 612; 1926, A. C. 670).

Notice, the making something known to a person of which he was or might be ignorant. Notice is either (1) statutory; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive or implied, which is no more than evidence of facts which raise such a strong presumption of notice that equity will not allow the presumption to be rebutted.

Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) where the facts of which actual evidence is supplied give rise to a further inquiry which a man exercising ordinary caution would make equity has added constructive notice of the facts, which that inquiry would have elicited; and (b) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of avoiding notice. See CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

A purchaser with notice may protect himself by purchasing the title of another bond fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice; for, otherwise, such bond fide purchaser would not enjoy the full benefit of his own unexceptionable title. If a person, who has notice (except in the case of a charity), sell to another, who has no notice, and is a bond fide purchaser for valuable consideration, the latter may protect his title, although it was affected with the equity arising from notice in the hands of the person from whom he derived it; for, otherwise, no man would be safe in any purchase, but would be liable to have his own title defeated by secret equities, of which he could have no possible means of making a discovery.—Le Neve v. Le Neve, (1747) Amb. 436; 2 W. & T. L. C. The decision of Lord Hardwicke in the great case of Le Neve v. Le Neve certainly went very far to nullify the Middlesex Registry Act of 1708, and the principle of it is not to be applied in the construction of a modern statute; see Re Monolithic Building Co., 1915, 1 Ch. 643, where the Court of Appeal held that s. 93 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and now ss. 79–83 and 87 of the Companies Act, 1929, avoided an unregistered mortgage as against a subsequent registered incumbrancer, even with express notice.

The principle on which this case was decided has become statutory under the Law of Property Act, 1925, and the Land Charges Act, 1925. See s. 199 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, sub tit. CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE, and see LAW OF PROPERTY ACT; (Curtain).

The doctrine of constructive trusts has also been narrowed down by the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 13, reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 112, which provides that a 10s. stamp on a transfer of mortgage does not by itself give notice of a trust; and see also s. 113 (ibid.), which absolves persons dealing in good faith with a mortgagee or with the mortgagor after discharge of the mortgage from any duty to inquire into the trusts of the mortgage money even if he has notice of the trust, and under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 28, a trustee or personal representative acting for one trust or estate is not in the absence of fraud affected by notice obtained through acting for another.

Subject to the foregoing limitations on the doctrine and effect of notice, a purchaser of a legal estate or equitable interest in land will be affected by every and any right, equity, or incumbrance of which he has actual or constructive notice. As to the length of title in which notice will be imputed, see Re Cousins, (1886) 31 C. D. 671, and the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 44.

By s. 198 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925, at the Land Registry or any local registry according to the statutory requirements constitutes notice of the instrument or matter registered, but this relates only to instruments and matters which must be registered. Purchasers of land are protected to some extent by s. 43 of the L. P. Act, 1925, but in Forsey v. Hollebone, 1927, 2 Ch. 379, it was held that relief could not be given to the purchaser (who had become affected with notice of a town planning resolution registered in a local land charges registry without disclosure by the vendor), as the registered incumbrance (if it was an incumbrance) was not such as to enable the purchaser to rescind. See LAND CHARGES.

Further, whether or not an instrument or matter has been registered, the absence of the documents of title to the property by itself constitutes notice in all cases in which the same are material, and so does the occupation of land or any title or claim of an occupier, though the notice does not necessarily mean notice of an adverse claim.

To sum up, purchasers for value are affected by notice, actual or constructive; Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205 (1) (xvii.) of (1) mortgages effected before 1926 (ibid.), 1st Sched., Parts VII. and VIII. (for transfers and mortgages, effected after 1925, see infra); (2) trusts, settlements and equities of every kind created or arising before 1926, unless shielded by the 'curtain' (see LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1925), or acquired after 1925, and if registrable, not registered; (3) restrictive covenants and equitable easements created before 1926; (4) estate contracts made before 1926, unless the benefit has been acquired after 1925 and not registered. On the other hand, purchasers for value will not be affected by notice of the following conveyances and transactions of which the legal title or effect has not been perfected by registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925, before completion of the purchase: (1) land charges in Class A of s. 10 of that Act created after 1888 or acquired after 1888, and not registered within the first year after conveyance; (2) land charges in Class B of the same section; (3) in Class C of s. 10, where the charge is created or transferred after 1925, including (i.) mortgages, not excepting first mortgages (not completed by possession of the title deeds) and required to be registered; (ii. and iii.) any equitable charge acquired after 1925 which is registrable under Class C (ii.) and (iii.) of s. 10, and under Class D, death duties on deaths after 1925, restrictive covenants made after 1925, and equitable easements arising after 1925. Further, purchasers for money or money's worth of a legal estate will not, but all other purchasers will, be affected (1) by notice of an unregistered estate contract within s. 10 (ibid.), including contracts to make a settlement of land made or acquired after 1925. The Land Charges Act, 1925, does not apply to registered land, with a few exceptions. See REGISTERED LAND AND LAND CHARGES, and ANNUITIES.

A purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of a prior equitable right, who obtains the legal estate at the time of his purchase, is entitled to priority in equity, as well as at law, according to the maxim:

'Where conflicting equities are equal, the law shall prevail.' Nor will equity prevent a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice, from protecting himself against a person claiming under a prior equitable title, by getting in the outstanding legal estate, because, as the equities of both are equal, the purchaser should not be deprived of the advantage of his superior activity or diligence. And where he has merely the best right to call for the legal estate, he is entitled to the protection of equity.—Bassett v. Nosworthy, Rep. temp. Finch, 102 (1673); 2 W. & T. L. C. The application of this doctrine has been profoundly modified by the Land Charges Act, 1925, the Land Registration Act, 1925, the Law of Property Act, 1925, and by the fact that not only the first but all subsequent legal mortgages of a legal estate are now legal estates, and tacking or getting in the legal estate by a subsequent mortgagee and squeezing out an intervening mortgagee has been abolished by s. 94 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, except in regard to further advances under the statutory conditions (see FURTHER ADVANCES; MORTGAGES).

Notice of a memorandum relating to restrictive covenants or easements endorsed on one of the title deeds which are not handed to a purchaser under a title common to other parties will affect purchasers of other parts of the land under the same title (s. 200, ibid.), but without prejudice to any obligation to register as land charges, restrictive covenants of freehold land, estate contracts and equitable easements, liberties or privileges created or registrable after 1925 (see s. 10 of the Land Charges Act, 1925). Notice of a previous assent or conveyance on the probate or grant of administration will constitute notice to subsequent purchasers under the same title (see Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 36). Further, by ss. 137 and 138 of the Law of Property Act, trustees who have received notices of equitable interests are obliged to produce them to any person interested in the equitable interest, at the cost of the latter.

In regard to priority of charges, s. 97 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, provides that every mortgage affecting legal estate in land after 1925, whether legal or equitable (not being a mortgage protected by deposit of documents relating to the legal estate affected), is to rank according to its date of registration as a land charge. Mortgages and charges of registered land or of land within the limits of a local deed registry do not come within this rule, and see also DEARLE v. HALL; LAND CHARGES; REGISTRATION OF LAND; PRIORITIES; MORTGAGE. See also PUBLIC NOTICE.

Notice in Lieu of Service. See SUMMONS.

Notice of Accident. The Notice of Accidents Act, 1906, requires annual returns and notices of accidents in mines and quarries to be given, and in the case of accidents in factories and workshops notice must be sent to the district inspector, and also in certain events to the certifying surgeon of the district. In the case of mines, however, provision for notice is now made by the Coal Mines Act, 1911, Part IV. See CERTIFYING SURGEON; COAL MINES. Notice of accident must be in writing when given under s. 4 of the Employers Liability Act, 1880 (Keen v.

Millwall Dock Co., (1882) 8 Q. B. D. 482; or under s. 2 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (see now Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 14) (Hughes v. Coed Talon Co., 1909, 1 K. B. 957); or under the Coal Mines Act, 1911; notice of road accident by motor vehicle, see Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 22. Notice of Accidents Act, 1894 (c. 28), provides for notice of and inquiry into accidents occurring in certain employments and industries.

Notice of Action. By numerous statutes—e.g., by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76—both public and private, it was enacted that no action should be brought against persons, acting in pursuance of these statutes, until the expiration of a certain time after notice in writing had been given to the defendant that such action would be brought; but by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61 (see PUBLIC AUTHORITIES), so much of any public general Act as enacts that, in any proceeding to which that Act applies (i.e., in any proceeding against any person for any act done in pursuance of any Act of Parliament, etc.), notice of action is to be given, is repealed.

Notice of Dishonour. The 49th section of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, contains fifteen rules as to notice of dishonour, of which the more important are these:—

The notice must be given by or on behalf of the holder or of an indorser himself liable (sub-s. 1).

The notice may be given in writing or by personal communication. If written it need not be signed, and an insufficient written notice may be supplemented by a verbal communication (sub-ss. 5, 7).

The notice may (sub-s. 12) be given as soon as the bill is dishonoured, and must be given within a reasonable time thereafter. In the absence of special circumstances notice is not deemed to have been given within a reasonable time, unless—

(a) When the person giving and the person to receive notice reside in the same place, the notice is given or sent off in time to reach the latter on the day after the dishonour of the bill.

(b) Where the person giving and the person to receive notice reside in different places, the notice is sent off on the day after the dishonour of the bill if there be a post at a convenient hour on that day, and if there be no such post on that day, then by the next post thereafter.

Notice of Motion. See MOTION.

Notice of Trial may be given by a plaintiff with the reply, if any, or at any time after the issues of fact are ready for trial (R. S. C., Ord. XXXVI., r. 11), or by a defendant, if not given by the plaintiff within six weeks after the close of the pleadings (r. 12). Ten days' notice of trial must be given, unless the party to whom it is given has consented to take short notice; in which case four days are sufficient (r. 14).

Notice of Writ, against defendant out of jurisdiction. See SUMMONS.

Notice to Admit. The parties to a suit may, by their solicitors, agree to admit at the trial documents and facts; and such agreement often saves trouble and expense, where there is no ground for disputing them.

'Either party may call on the other by notice to admit any document saving all just exceptions, and in case of refusal, or neglect to admit, the costs of proving the document shall be paid by the party neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless at the hearing or trial the judge shall certify that the refusal was reasonable; and no costs of proving any document are allowed unless notice be given, except where the omission to give the notice is a saving of expense' (R. S. C., Ord. XXXII., r. 2). This rule is frequently acted upon. There is another (r. 4), providing for a notice to admit facts first introduced in 1883, and not so much used.

Notice to Produce. If one party be in possession of any written instrument which would be evidence for the other if produced, a notice to produce it at the trial may be served either upon him, his solicitor, or agent. The notice must specify the instrument with a particularity sufficient to inform the opposite party what he is called upon to produce. It must be served a reasonable time before trial, so as to enable the party served to make an effectual search, and produce the same at the proper time.

It is optional with the party upon whom the notice has been served to produce the instrument required or not. If he do not, then, upon proving the service of the notice by affidavit, permission will be given to prove the contents of the instrument by a copy or other secondary evidence, in the same manner as if it had been lost.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Notice may also be given (under R. S. C., 1883, Ord. XXXI.) by any party to an action to any other party in whose pleadings or affidavits any document is referred to, to produce such document for inspection, and to permit copies to be taken thereof.

Notice to Quit. Where there is a tenancy from year to year subsisting, it can only be put an end to by notice to quit, which may be given by either party, and must be given one half-year previously to the expiration of the current year of tenancy, so as to expire at the same period of the year in which the tenant entered upon the premises. This rule is to be invariably followed in all cases, except where there is some special agreement between the parties to a different effect, or where a particular local custom intervenes, or where the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, applies, in which case. by s. 25 of that Act, a notice must be given to terminate the tenancy twelve months from the end of the then current year of the tenancy.

Where the term of a lease is to end on a precise day, there is no occasion for a notice to quit previously to bringing an action of ejectment, because both parties are equally apprised of the termination of the term. If a tenant continue in possession by consent after his lease has expired, or rent has been received, a notice must be given before he can be ejected; for where, by consent of both parties, a tenant continues in possession after the expiration of his term, the law implies a tacit renovation of the contract, and in such cases the tenant usually holds from year to year upon the former terms. No fresh notice, however, is necessary where a tenant, after having given or been given a notice, contumaciously or wilfully holds over, and becomes liable for double rent according to the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 18. Where a lessee holds under a void demise, no notice is necessary; but where a lease granted by a tenant for life under a limited power of leasing, which exceeded his power, was void, and not capable of being confirmed by the remainder-man, but the remainder-man received money as rent after the death of the tenant for life, it was held to be an admission of a tenancy from year to year, and that a notice to quit must be given before any ejectment could be brought. And though a lease be void by the Statute of Frauds as to the duration of the term, it is considered that the tenant holds under the terms of the lease in other respects, and therefore that the landlord can only put an end to the tenancy at the expiration of the year. In the case of a tenancy from year to year, so long as both parties please, if the tenant die his personal representatives have the same interest in the land which their testator or intestate had, and are, therefore, entitled to the same notice to quit; for such tenancy is a chattel interest, and whatever chattel the deceased had must vest in them as his legal representatives. Where the reversion has been conveyed by the lessor during the existence of the tenancy from year to year, the tenant is entitled to a notice to quit before he can be ejected by the grantee of the reversion.

No notice to quit is necessary where the tenant does an act which amounts to a disavowal of the title of the lessor; as where the tenant has attorned to some other person, or answered an application for rent by saying that his connection as tenant with the party applying has ceased.

A verbal notice to quit by a tenant under a parol lease is sufficient, but where a power is given to determine a lease on giving a notice in writing, it cannot be determined on giving a verbal notice. The notice should, however, in all cases be in writing, as being more susceptible of proof, and it may be attested by a witness, who, however, need not be called to prove it.—C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 26.

A notice to quit given by a mortgagor before default was held a good notice to determine the tenancy; and a notice given to a steward of a corporation is sufficient, without additional evidence that he had an authority under seal from the corporation for such purpose. A receiver appointed by the Court, with a general authority to let the lands to tenants from year to year, has authority to determine such tenancies by a regular notice to quit. A mere agent to receive rents has no implied authority to give a notice to quit, but an agent to receive rents and let has authority to determine a tenancy. An agent ought to have authority to give such notice at the time when it begins to operate; for a recognition subsequent to that date of the authority will not make the notice good (see Doe v. Mann v. Walters, (1830) 10 B. & C. 625). And a notice to quit by an agent of an agent is not sufficient without a recognition by the principal. A notice on an under-tenant, given by the original lessor, is not good.

Form of Notice.—The common form of notice by a landlord, in the case of a tenancy from year to year, which was held to be good in Hirst v. Horn, (1840) 6 M. & W. 393, is as follows:—

I hereby give you notice to quit and deliver up possession of the premises which you hold of me as tenant thereof on the day of next [or] at the expiration of the year of your tenancy which shall expire next after the end of one-half year from the service of this notice.

Dated this                      day of                      19                      A. B.

The notice should be clear and certain, neither ambiguous nor optional (Phipps v. Rogers, (1924) 40 T. L. R. 845).

Leaving a notice to quit at the tenant's house with a servant, without further proof of its having been explained to the servant, or that it came to the tenant's hands, is not sufficient.

If a landlord receive or distrain for rent due after the expiration of a notice to quit it is a waiver of that notice, and giving a second notice to quit generally amounts to waiver of a notice previously given. If a landlord have given a notice to quit, and the tenant holds over, the landlord cannot waive his notice and distrain for rent subsequently accruing. If, at the end of the year (where there has been a tenancy from year to year), the landlord accept another person as his tenant in substitution for the former tenant, without any surrender in writing, such acceptance and substitution is a surrender and dispenses with a notice to quit.

In order to determine a periodic tenancy (e.g., a tenancy from week to week or from quarter to quarter), a notice to quit must be one which expires at the end of a period (Queen's Club Gardens v. Bignell, 1924, 1 K. B. 117).

Under the Rent Restriction Acts the service and expiration of a formal notice to quit on a controlled tenant are as a rule a condition precedent to an action for recovery of the premises or ejectment in the county courts. Consult Foa or Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant.

Notice under the Land Registration Act, 1925. An entry on the register affecting the registered proprietor of the land and persons desiring title under him with notice of the estate claim or other matter comprised in the notice (see s. 48 of the Act). Leases exceeding 21 years, annuities or rent-charge, severance of mines or minerals, land charges, deposits of land certificates are, inter alia, subject-matter of notice on the register. Consult Fortescue-Brickdale and Stewart Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925.

Notice to Third Party, i.e., to a person not being a party to the writ of summons in an action. See THIRD PARTY.

Notification of Births. Notice must be sent by post within 36 hours of the birth to the district medical officer of health by the father or person in attendance on the mother. See Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1926; the Registration (Births, Stillbirths, Deaths and Marriages) Consolidated Regula- tions, 1927 and 1930; Registration of Births Regulations, 1929; and Public Health Act, 1936; and BIRTHS, MARRIAGES AND DEATHS.

Noting. The making of a memorandum or note on a bill of exchange by a notary which states that he has presented the bill for payment or acceptance, and that it has been dishonoured. It is usual, in cases of non-payment of bills of exchange, for London bankers, after six o'clock on the day upon which the bills fall due, to cause inland bills to be noted. The duty of a notary in protesting a bill consists in three parts: (1) demanding, (2) noting, (3) protesting. To preserve the recourse against the drawer or indorser of an inland bill it is not necessary to note or protest it. Noting is for business purposes generally taken as showing due presentment. The expenses of noting can be recovered as liquidated damages (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 57). See Chalmers, Bills of Exchange.

Although, in the case of inland bills of exchange, neither noting nor protesting is necessary, the case is widely different in the case of a dishonoured foreign bill, which should certainly be taken to a notary the day it is refused acceptance or payment, and it is his business to note, demand, and protest it; and notice of this must be sent the same day to the drawer and indorsers, with a copy of the bill, if the drawer and indorsers are abroad, but mere notice is sufficient if they are in England. A bill must be noted not later than the next succeeding day of business after the day of dishonour. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 51, and Bills of Exchange (Time of Noting) Act, 1917. See PROTEST.

Not proven, a verdict allowed to be given in criminal trials in Scotland. A prisoner in whose case it is pronounced cannot be tried again.

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet non præteritis. 2 Inst. 292.—(A new state of the law ought to affect the future, not the past.)

Nova customs, an imposition or duty. See ANTIQUA CUSTOMA.

Nova oblata. See OBLATA.

Nova Statuta, the statutes beginning with Edward III. See VETERA STATUTA.

Novæ Narrationes (new counts). The collection called Novæ Narrationes contains pleadings in actions during the reign of Edward III. It consists principally of declarations, as the title imports; but there are sometimes pleas and subsequent pleadings. The Articuli ad Novas Narrationes is usually subjoined to this little book, and is a small treatise on the method of pleading. It first treats of actions and courts, then goes through each particular writ, and the declaration upon it, accompanied with directions, and illustrated by precedents.—3 Reeves, c. xvi., 152.

Novale, land newly ploughed and converted into tillage, and which had not been tilled before within the memory of man; also fallow land.—Chambers.

Novatio non præsumitur.—(A novation is not presumed.)

Novation, the substitution, with the creditor's consent, of a new debtor for an old one. The cases on novation between a customer and a firm will be found discussed in Lindley on Partnership. Slight evidence is sufficient to show that a creditor who continues his dealings with incoming partners accepts the new firm as his debtors instead of the old firm (see Smith v. Patrick, 1901, A. C. 282). Even in the case of an amalgamation of companies there is nothing to prevent novation if established by sufficient evidence. Many such cases arose in the winding-up of the Albert Company and the European Company, which will be found collected in Buckley on Companies.

Novel disseisin (recent disseisin). See ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN.

Novellæ, those constitutions of the Civil Law which were made after the publication of the Theodosian code; but sometimes the Julian edition only is meant.

Novellæ, or Novellæ Constitutiones, form a part of the Corpus Juris. Most of them were published in Greek, and their Greek title is Ἀποκρίσεις Ἱουστινιανῶν Αὐγούστον Νεαπαλ Διάρχεις. Some of them were published in Latin, and some in both languages.

The first of these Novellæ of Justinian belongs to the year A.D. 535 (Nov. 1), and the latest to the year A.D. 565 (Nov. 137), but most of them were published between the years 535 and 539. These Constitutions were published after the completion of the second edition of the Code, for the purpose of supplying what was deficient in that work. Indeed, it appears that on the completion of his second edition of the new Code, the emperor designed to form many new constitutions which he might publish into a body by themselves, so as to render a third revision of the Code unnecessary, and that he contemplated giving to this body of law the name of Novellæ Constitutiones.—Just. in Cod. 'cordi nobis,' § 4.

It does not, however, appear that any official compilation of these new constitutions appeared in the lifetime of Justinian. The Greek text of the Novellæ, as we now have them, consists of 168 Novellæ, of which 159 belong to Justinian, and the rest to Justin the Second and to Tiberius; they are generally divided into chapters. There is a Latin epitome of these Novellæ, by Julian, a teacher of the law at Constantinople, which contains 125 Novellæ. The epitome was probably made in the time of Justinian, and the author was probably Antecessor, at Constantinople. There is also another collection of 134 Novellæ, in a Latin version made from the Greek text. This collection is generally called Liber Authenticorum; the compiler and the time of the compilation are unknown. This collection has been made independently of the Greek compilation. It is divided into nine collationes, and the collationes are divided into tituli. The most complete work on the history of the Novellæ is by Biener, Geschichte der Novellen. See also Beytrag zu Litterar-Geschichte des Novellen Auszugs von Julian; Von Haubold, Zeitschrift, etc., iv.; Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Novelty. The objection to a patent or design on the ground that it is not new or original is often termed an objection 'for want of novelty.' See Patents and Designs Act, 1907, ss. 1, 7, and 49, as amended by the Patents and Designs Act, 1932.

Noviter ad notitiam perventa (matters newly come to the knowledge of a party).

Novum iudicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum; quia iudicium est juris dictum et per iudicium jus est noviter revelatum quod diu fuit velatum. 10 Co. 42.—(A new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old; because adjudication is the utterance of the law, and by adjudication the law is newly revealed which was for a long time hidden.)

Novus homo, a pardoned criminal or discharged insolvent; a parvenu.

Noxa sequitur caput. Jus. Civ.—(Guilt follows the person.)

Noxal Action, an action for damage by irrational animals.—Sand. Just.

Noxious or Offensive Gas. Very comprehensively defined by s. 27 (1) of the Alkali, etc., Works Regulation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 14), which by s. 2 enjoins the owner of every alkali work to use the best practicable means for preventing the discharge of the gas into the atmosphere; and see Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 72 to 82.

Nuces colligere (to collect nuts).

This was formerly one of the works or services imposed by lords upon their inferior tenants.—Par. Antiq. 495.

Nudum Pactum (a naked agreement), an agreement made without any consideration, upon which therefore, unless it be made by deed, no action will lie.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa præter conventionem ; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Plow. 309. —(A naked contract is where there is no foundation for it except the agreement ; but where there is a ground, it becomes an obligation, and gives a right of action.) Similarly, Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. Dig. 2, 14, 7, s. 4.—(A naked promise does not beget an obligation) ; and ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. Noy's Max. 24.—(An action does not arise from a bare promise.)—See CONSIDERATION ; and Vanbergen v. St. Edmund's Properties Ltd., 1933, 2 K. B. 223.

Nuisance [fr. nuire, Fr., to hurt], something noxious or offensive. Any unauthorized act which, without direct physical interference, materially impairs the use and enjoyment by another of his property, or prejudicially affects his health, comfort, or convenience, is a nuisance.

Nuisance may be distinguished from negligence in that nuisance is an act or omission causing injury, the injury itself giving rise to an action for damages, while a person suffering from damage due to negligence must prove that the damage was caused by some want of care, according to its degree which was required in the particular circumstances of the case. Actions against persons or public undertakings for damage under statutory powers are generally founded on negligence. Where the actual method of exercising the power creating a nuisance is indicated by the statute negligence in the authorized method may be actionable. The onus appears to be on a defendant pleading that the nuisance was inevitable and compulsory by statute to show that the highest degree of care was used to prevent a nuisance when conforming with the statute (see Manchester Corporation v. Farnsworth, 1930, A. C. 171), but see Railway Fires Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 11), as to fires on agricultural land or to crops caused by sparks from an engine ; if the power is permissive only, due care must be exercised not to infringe the rights of other people ; while statutory powers which are without prejudice to such rights may give rise to an action for damages without any proof of negligence. See Hulab. L. E., title 'Nuisance.'

Nuisance is of two kinds : (1) public ;

(2) private. If a nuisance affects the property or the health, comfort, or convenience of the general public, or of all persons who happen to come within its operation, it is a public nuisance. If, however, it affects the health, comfort, or convenience of only one or two persons, it is a private—not a public—nuisance, and affords ground only for an action of tort. But that which is either in its nature or its consequences an injury or a damage to all persons who come within the sphere of its operation is a public nuisance, though it may be so in a greater degree to some than it is to others (Odgers on the Common Law, p. 230).

A public nuisance may give rise to proceedings of different kinds :—

(1) It may give ground for an indictment by a private individual, or a criminal information at the suit of the Attorney-General.

(2) It may give ground for a civil action, called an information, by the Attorney-General, either of his own motion or at the instance of some person aggrieved, called 'the relator,' who must obtain the sanction of the Attorney-General before writ.

(3) It may also give rise to an action at the suit of some private individual who is specially injured by it beyond the rest of the public, for a public nuisance may be a tort as well as a crime (Odgers on the Common Law, ubi sup.).

In the case of a private nuisance the usual remedy is an action in the Chancery Division for an injunction and damages. As to what acts will amount to a nuisance, see Walter v. Selfe, (1851) 4 De G. & S. 322 ; Sollau v. De Held, (1851) 2 Sim. N. S. 142. And see ABATEMENT.

'Any premises in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health,' 'any animal so kept,' 'any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance,' and other nuisances described in s. 91 of the Public Health Act, 1875, reproduced and extended by the Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 91–100—s. 101 (Smoke), s. 107 (Offensive Trades), s. 108 (Fried Fish), may be dealt with summarily under that Act by complaint before justices of the peace by a local authority, who are bound to inspect their district to detect nuisances, to serve notices requiring abatement, and to make complaint to justices on the notices not being complied with. As to the metropolis, see Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), Parts IV. and V. See NOISE ; SMOKE ; INJUNCTION.

The fact that a nuisance existed when the plaintiff first came is not a defence to an action for nuisance (Elliotson v. Feetham, (1835) 2 Bing. N. C. 134). And no prescriptive rights can be acquired for a nuisance.

Nuisances Removal Acts, repealed and replaced (except as to the Metropolis) by the Public Health Acts, 1875 and 1936, and repealed as to the Metropolis by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, now itself repealed and replaced with amendments by the Public Health (London) Act, 1936. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Nul prendra advantage de son tort demesne. 2 Inst. 713.—(No one shall take advantage of his own wrong.)

Nul tiel agard (no such award), a plea traversing an award. Under this plea a defendant could not object to the award in point of law.—1 Salk. 72.

Nul tiel Record, Issue of, a traverse that there is no such record. This was the proper form of issue whenever a question arose as to what had judicially taken place in a superior court of record; for the law presumes that, if it took place, there will remain a record of the proceeding.—3 B. & C. 449.

Nul Tort, Plea of, a traverse in a real action that no wrong was done; it was a species of the general issue.

Null and Void. These words when used in a statute or legal document indicate the exact contrary of the words 'full force and effect.'

Nulla bona (no goods), a return made by a sheriff to a fi. fa., etc., when there is no property to levy upon.

Nullity, want of force or efficacy; an error in litigation which is incurable, and thus differs from an irregularity, which is amendable.

Nullity of Marriage, a matrimonial suit instituted for the purpose of obtaining a decree, declaring that a supposed marriage is null and void. See MARRIAGE.

The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1873 (36 Vict. c. 31), extended to proceedings for nullity of marriage the provisions of the Matrimonial Causes Acts of 1860 and 1866, ss. 7 and 3 respectively, with reference to the intervention of the king's proctor, and see now Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, and DIVORCE. See INTERVENTION, and Browne and Latey, Divorce.

Nullus filius (the son of nobody, i.e., a natural child). See BASTARD.

Nullum simile est idem nisi quatuor pedibus currit. Similarity is not analogy unless it runs on all fours.

Nullum tempus aut iocum occurrit regi 2 Inst. 273; Jenk. Cent. 83.—(No time or place affects the king.) But see the Crown Suits Act, 1769 (9 Geo. 3, c. 16), commonly called the 'Nullum Tempus Act,' by which the right of the Crown to sue for land, etc., was limited to sixty years; and the Crown Suits Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 62), amending that Act; and s. 9 of the Crown Lands Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 28), placing a limitation of sixty years on the recovery of quit rents, etc., payable in Ireland; and see Carson's Real Property Statutes (Notes to the Real Property Limitation Acts, etc.).

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuriâ suâ propriâ. Co. Litt. 148 b.—(No one can obtain an advantage by his own wrong.) See Broom's Leg. Maxims, and the cases cited, e.g., Hooper v. Lane, (1857) 6 H. L. C. at p. 461, per Bramwell, B.; and Doe v. Banks, (1821) 4 B. & Ald. 401, in which it has been held that a lessee cannot take advantage of his own wrongful act, and a proviso for re-entry by the lessor thereupon, even though the proviso be that the term shall cease, or that the lease shall be utterly void for all purposes, only makes the lease voidable at the option of the lessor.

Nummata, the price of anything in money, as denariata is the price of a thing by computation of pence, and librata of pounds.

Nummata terræ, an acre of land.—Spelm.

Nun (monialis), a female bound by vows of celibacy, living in company with other nuns in a nunnery or convent. An obsolete Act of 1285 (13 Edw. 1, c. 6) (Statute of Westminster the Second) punishes the abduction of a nun, though consenting, from her convent by three years' imprisonment and fine. Nuns are excepted from Jury Service by 12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 11.

Nunc pro tunc, a proceeding taken now for then, i.e., the proper time when it should have been taken; for example, special leave granted at the hearing to cross-appeal against an order for a new trial (Toronto Railway v. King, 1908, A. C. 260). As to entering judgments and orders nunc pro tunc, see Ord. LII., r. 15.

Nuncio, a messenger, servant, etc., a spiritual envoy from the Pope.

Nuncupate, to declare publicly and solemnly.

Nuncupative Will, a verbal testament depending merely upon oral evidence, being declared by the testator in extremis before a sufficient number of witnesses and afterwards reduced to writing.—2 Bl. Com. 500.

The Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, restricted nuncupative wills, except when made by mariners at sea, and soldiers in actual service. Nuncupative wills are abolished by the Wills Act, 1837, s. 9, but with a proviso by s. 11 that any soldier being in actual military service, or any marine or seaman being at sea, may dispose of his personal estate, as he might have done before the making of this Act. A will made by a soldier under s. 11 accordingly requires no attestation, and s. 15, avoiding gifts to attesting witnesses, has no application to such a will (Re Limond, 1915, 2 Ch. 240). The Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918, slightly enlarges the class of persons to whom s. 11 applies (s. 2), and extends the right to make wills, without the formalities required by the Act of 1837, to real property in the case of persons within this class (s. 3). See the Navy and Marines (Wills) Acts, 1865, 1897, and 1914, as to the disposal of money and effects under the control of the Admiralty which belonged to certain classes of deceased members of the Royal Navy and Marines.

Nundination, traffic at fairs and markets; any buying and selling.

Nunquam indebitatus. See NEVER INDEBTED.

Nuper obit (he lately died), an abolished writ that lay for a sister and co-heir, deformed by her coparcener of lands or tenements, whereof their father, brother, or any other common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee simple.—Fitz. N. B. 197.

Nuptial, pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit. Co. Litt. 33.—(Not cohabitation but consent makes a marriage.)

Nurture, Guardianship of. See GUARDIAN

Nurus [Lat.], a daughter-in-law.

Nuzzer, a vow, an offering, a present made to a superior.—Indian.

evidence, but the old rule was, that all witnesses must take an oath of some kind. Very gradually, however, the legislature has relaxed this rule, and the privilege of affirming (see AFFIRMATION) instead of taking an oath has now been universally granted by the Oaths Act, 1888, by which—

Every person upon objection to being sworn, and stating, as the ground of such objection, either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation instead of taking an oath in all places and for all purposes where an oath is or shall be required by law, which affirmation shall be of the same force and effect as if he had taken the oath.

By s. 3 of the same Act, if an oath has been duly taken the fact that the person taking it had no religious belief does not affect its validity, and swearing with uplifted hand is authorized by the enactment of s. 5 that—

If any person to whom an oath is administered desires to swear with uplifted hand, in the form and manner in which an oath is usually administered in Scotland, he shall be permitted so to do, and an oath shall be administered to him in such form and manner without further question.

Swearing in this fashion has by the Oaths Act, 1909, been made the usual form of taking any oath, section 2 enacting that—

2.—(1) Any oath may be administered and taken in the form and manner following:—

The person taking the oath shall hold the New Testament, or, in the case of a Jew, the Old Testament, in his uplifted hand, and shall say or repeat after the officer administering the oath the words 'I swear by Almighty God that . . .', followed by the words of the oath prescribed by law.

(2) The officer shall (unless the person about to take the oath voluntarily objects thereto, or is physically incapable of so taking the oath) administer the oath in the form and manner aforesaid without question:

Provided that, in the case of a person who is neither a Christian nor a Jew, the oath shall be administered in any manner which is now lawful.

The Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, abolishes unnecessary and extra-judicial oaths, and empowers any justice of the peace, notary public, or other officer authorized to administer an oath to take voluntary declarations in the form specified in the Act. And any person wilfully making such declaration false in any material particular is guilty of a misdemeanour.

Promissory oaths are those required to be taken by persons on their appointment to certain offices, as the oath of allegiance, of which the present form is, 'I—, do

O.

Oath [fr. ath, Sax.], an appeal to God to witness the truth of a statement. It is called a corporal oath, where a witness, when he swears, places his right hand on the Holy Evangelists.

The Christian religion, though it prohibits swearing, excepts oaths required by legal authority (Art. Ch. of Engl. xxxix.). All who believe in a God, the avenger of falsehood, have always been admitted to give swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to His Majesty [King George VI.], his heirs and successors, according to law.'

These oaths have undergone much revision of late years by Parliament. By the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, a number of unnecessary oaths have been abolished, and declarations substituted. That Act also provides new forms of the Oath of Allegiance, Judicial Oath, and Official Oath to be taken by particular officers. The Promissory Oaths Act, 1871, expressly repeals a number of Acts already impliedly repealed.

The Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866 (29 Vict. c. 19), requires the oath of allegiance to be taken by members of Parliament before sitting or voting, and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, substitutes a new form of oath, but does not otherwise alter the Act of 1866. By the Act of 1866 a Quaker or other person, permitted by law to affirm, may make affirmation instead of oath, but an atheist, although permitted by law (see AFFIRMATION) to affirm in a court of justice, could not affirm under this Act (Clarke v. Bradlaugh, (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 38), and in Mr. Bradlaugh's case the House of Commons, when he was first elected, refused to allow him to make oath, so that he could not take his seat; but Mr. Bradlaugh, on being re-elected to a subsequent Parliament, made oath without objection.

The Oaths Act, 1888 (see ante), now allows an affirmation in all places and for all purposes.

The Interpretation Act, 1889, by s. 3 enacts that in every Act passed after 1850—

The expressions 'oath' and 'affidavit' shall, in the case of persons for the time being allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, include affirmation and declaration, and the expression 'swear' shall, in the like case, include affirm and declare.

In the Perjury Act, 1911, the word 'oath' includes 'affirmation' and 'declaration,' and the word 'swear' includes 'affirm' and 'declare'; see s. 15, and PERJURY.

The administering of unlawful oaths is an offence against the Government, and punishable by penal servitude. The following statutes relate to this offence: 37 Geo. 3, c. 123; 39 Geo. 3, c. 79; 52 Geo. 3, c. 104; 57 Geo. 3, c. 19; 1 Vict. c. 91.

As to 'Commissioners for Oaths,' see that title.

As to the oath to be taken by members of the Parliament of the Irish Free State, see the Irish Free State (Agreement) Act, 1922, Sched., art. 4.

Oath of Calumny. The oath administered in Scotland to pursuers in actions of Divorce and Nullity of Marriage on grounds of impotency.

Obedientia, an office, or the administration of it.—Canon Law.

Obedientia est legis essentia. 11 Co. 100.—(Obedience is the essence of law.)

Obedientiarus, a monastic officer.

Obit [a corruption of the Latin obiit, or obivit, he died], a funeral solemnity or office for the dead; the anniversary office.

The tenure of obit, or obituary, or chantry lands is taken away by 1 Edw. 6, c. 14, and 15 Car. 2, c. 9.

Obiter dictum, an opinion not necessary to a judgment. See DICTUM.

Objection to Evidence. If a document, or question to a witness, tendered by one party be objected to, all the counsel on the side objecting may be heard against the admissibility, and all on the other side may be heard in support; the senior counsel on the first side is heard in reply.

Objection to Indictment. On this being taken, the same course is followed as set out under the last title.

Objuratrices, scolds, or unquiet women, punished with the cucking-stool. See CASTIGATORY.

Oblata, gifts or offerings made to the king by any of his subjects. In the Exchequer it signified old debts, brought as it were together from precedent years, and put on the present sheriff's charge.—Jac. Law Dict.

Oblata terræ, half an acre, or, as some say, half a perch of land.—Spelm.

Oblations, offerings to God and the Church, fees payable to the clergy for marrying, burying, and by way of 'Easter offerings.' See Reg. v. Hall, (1866) L. R. 1 Q. B. 632. (Those things are called oblations which are offered to God and the Church by pious and faithful Christians, whether the things are movable or immovable.)—2 Inst. 389. Easter offerings are assessable to income tax (Cooper v. Blakiston, 1909, A. C. 104).

Baptismal fees were abolished by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 36.

Obligation, an act which binds a person to some performance; also a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for paying of money at a certain time, or for the performance of a covenant, etc.; also foreign government and other bonds and debentures.

Obligee, the person in whose favour an obligation or bond is entered into; a creditor.

Obligor, he who enters into an obligation or bond ; a debtor.

Obliqua oratio, the manner of reporting a speech in which ' he,' not ' I,' stands for the speaker in giving his words ; and hence the words ' you,' ' your,' never occur, and every sentence begins with the word that expressed or understood, but generally expressed in the first sentence only. It is opposed to the oratio directa, sometimes called a speech in the first person, in which the very words of the speaker are given.

Obreption, obtaining gift of escheat by false suggestion.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Obscene Publication Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 83). See INDECENT PRINTS.

Obsignatory, ratifying and confirming.

Obsolete, invalid by virtue of discontinuance, said of a law or practice which has ceased to be enforced or be in use by reason of change of manners and circumstances, as 'wager or battel' (see BATTEL, WAGER OF), the punishment of the stocks (see STOCKS), the provision of the Gaming Act of Henry VIII. (33 Hen. 8, c. 9) (Revised Statutes, 2nd ed., vol. i. p. 378, published in 1888 ; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Games and Gaming'), by which labourers and others are forbidden to play cards or other specified games 'out of Christmas,' but allowed to play them in Christmas in their masters' houses and in their masters' presence ; and that of 1285 in the Stat. Westm. Sec., 13 Edw. 1, c. 34, by which elopement with a nun from her convent, although the nun consent, is punishable by three years' imprisonment and fine. For further instances, see the Statute Law Revision Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 49) ; and see also STATUTE LAW REVISION. But however absurd and, in common language, obsolete an English statute may be, it does not become legally obsolete by mere non-user, though the fact of non-user may be extremely important when the question is whether there has been a repeal by implication. See The India (No. 2), (1864) 33 L. J. Adm. 193. In Scotland the law is otherwise : see Bell's Law Dict., tit. 'Desuetude,' and so in the Civil Law desuetude works invalidity.

As to the English Common Law, Wager of Battel survived till 1819 and required a statute, or was deemed to require one, for its abolition, and so did pressing to death for want of a plea, and the inquiry whether the prisoner fled for his crime in criminal cases (see the title PEINE FORTE ET DURE, and FLY FOR IT), but the view of Lord Coleridge, C.J., in Reg. v. Ramsay and Foote, (1883) 48 L. T. at p. 735, to the effect that 'law grows,' would, it is submitted, be judicially taken generally at the present day ; otherwise 'eavesdroppers' and 'scolds' (see those titles) would still be liable to indictment.

Obstetricante manu [by the hand of a midwife, Lat.], said of evidence of a child helped out by its nurse, etc.

Obstriction, obligation ; bond.

Obstructive Building. A building which by reason of its contact with or proximity to other buildings is dangerous or injurious to health (Housing Act, 1936, s. 54). For powers of local authorities in regard to obstructive buildings, see that Act, and Jackson v. Knutsford Urban D. C., 1914, 2 Ch. 686.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi. 4 Co. 38.—(A reasonable custom is to be obeyed as a law.)

Obtest, to call solemnly upon, to adjure ; to protest.

Obventions, offerings ; tithes and oblations.

Ocasio, a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity.

Occasionari, to be charged or loaded with payments or occasional penalties.

Occasiones, assaults. See ASSAULT.

Occultatio thesauri inventi fraudulosa. 3 Inst. 133.—(The concealment of discovered treasure is fraudulent.)

Occupancy, mere possession or use either by agreement or otherwise without other claim (if any) to the ownership or enjoyment of property, also taking possession of land to which no one else lays claim or without leave of the owner.

The right of occupancy has been confined by the laws of England within a very narrow compass, e.g., where a person was tenant pur autre vie, or had an estate granted to himself only (without mentioning his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation, during the life of the cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was holden ; in this case, he that entered first on the land was called the occupant or common occupant and might lawfully retain the possession so long as the cestui que vie lived, by right of occupancy (see Re Michell, Moore v. Moore, 1892, 2 Ch. 96). The title of common occupancy is now, in effect, abolished, for it is enacted by the Wills Act, 1837, s. 3, that an estate pur autre vie, of whatever tenure, and whether it be an incorporeal or corporeal hereditament, may in all cases be devised by will, and, by s. 6, that if no disposition by will be made of an estate pur autre vie of a freehold nature, it shall be chargeable in the hands of the heir or special occupant if it come to him by reason of special occupancy of an estate of inheritance pur autre vie (q.v.) as assets by descent (as in the case of freehold land, in fee-simple); and should there be no special occupant of any estate pur autre vie, it shall go to the executor or administrator of the party that had the estate by virtue of the grant; and in every case where it comes to the hands of such personal representative, shall be assets in his hands, to be applied and distributed in the same manner as personal estate.

This law was in force until 1926, s. 45 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, having abolished special occupancy among all other then existing rules of descent of legal estate in land. See AUTRE VIE.

A property in goods and chattels may be acquired by occupancy, for—

(1) It has been said that anybody authorized by the Crown may seize to his own use such goods as belong to an alien enemy.

(2) All persons may, on their own lands, or in the seas, generally exercise the right to pursue and take any fowl or insect of the air, any fish or inhabitant of the waters, and any beast or reptile of the field. The exceptions to this right are royal fish, such as whales, sturgeons, etc., animals of forest, chase, or free warren, fish belonging to a 'several' or 'free' fishery.

(3) Property arising from accession. See ACCESSION, PROPERTY BY.

(4) Property arising from confusion. See CONFUSION, PROPERTY BY.

As to title by occupancy of States to territory, see Hall, Int. Law, Ch. II., and generally, see 2 Bl. Com., pp. 258, 400, and POSSESSION.

Occupant, he who is in possession of a thing. See OCCUPANCY.

Occupatille, that which has been left by the right owner, and is now possessed by another.

Occupation, possession; act of taking possession; also, trade or mystery; and see OCCUPIER.

Occupative, possessed, used, employed.

Occupavit, a writ that lay for him who was ejected from his freehold in time of war, as the writ of novel disseisin lay for one disseised in time of peace.

Occupier, the person residing in or upon or having a right to reside in or upon any house, land, or place; formerly rateable to the poor rate under the Poor Relief Act, 1601, 43 Eliz. c. 2, and as 'inhabitant occupier' and entitled to the parliamentary franchise, under the Representation of the People Acts, 1867 and 1884, now a person liable to pay rates by reason of occupation of premises under the Rating and Valuation Acts, 1925, 1932, and see Representation of the People Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5. s. 641), s. 3.

Occupier's Liability Notice, the notice which the owner of land out of which tithe rent-charge issues is required, by sub-s. 6 of s. 2 of the Tithe Act, 1891, to give to the owner of the tithe rent-charge of the liability of the occupier of the land, under a contract made before the Act, to pay such tithe rent-charge to such owner of land. Unless this notice (which is styled an 'occupier's liability notice' by r. 3 of the Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Rules, 1891) is served as required by the Tithe Act, 1891, the landowner may not recover from the occupier any sum which he has paid for tithe rent-charge, without a certificate from the County Court 'that there was good and sufficient cause for the failure to give such notice, and that the occupier has not been prejudiced thereby.' For form of notice, see Thring's Tithe Act, 1891, at p. 58, and now, generally, the Tithe Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 43), s. 20 (3) (Transitional Provisions).

Ochlern, a name of dignity; a freeholder. —Skene. Obsolete.

Ochlocracy [fr. ὄχλος, Gk., a multitude, and κράτος, power or command], a form of government wherein the populace has the whole power and administration in its own hand; a democracy; mob-rule.

Octave, the eighth day after any feast, inclusive.

Octo Tales. See DECEM TALES.

Odhal, adodial, which see.

Odio et atq̃, a writ anciently called breve de bono et malo, addressed to the sheriff to inquire whether a man committed to prison upon suspicion of murder were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill-will; and if, upon the inquisition, it was found that he was not guilty, then there issued another writ to the sheriff to bail him.—Reg. Brev. 133. But the practice now is to issue a habeas corpus.

Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege præsumenda; et in facto quod in se habet et bonum et malum, magis de bono quam de malo præsumendum est. Co. Litt. 78.—(Odious and dishonest things are not to be presumed in law; and in an act which partakes both of good and bad, the presumption should be done in favour of what is good than what is bad.)

Æconomicus, an executor.

Æumenical. See ECUMENICAL.

Offence, crime; act of wickedness. It is used as a genus, comprehending every crime and misdemeanour, or as a species, signifying a crime not indictable, but punishable summarily, or by the forfeiture of a penalty.

There are certain acts which are heinous sins and odious in the public eye and are punishable in the Ecclesiastical Courts, but not being punishable at Common Law, and the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts being held to be pro salute animæ and not to entail any temporal injury, they cannot be classed with ordinary Common Law and statutory offences; and it is no slander to impute them unless special damage follows.

Other offences are divided into three classes, viz. :—

(1) Treasons; (2) Felonies; and (3) Misdemeanours. See several titles.

Consult Russell on Crimes; Archbold's or Roscoe's Criminal Evidence.

Offer of Shares to the Public. Shares and debentures of limited companies, when allotted or agreed to be allotted with a view to sale to the public, must when offered to the public comply with the provisions of s. 38 of the Companies Act, 1929; and see PROSPECTUS. Further, any offer in writing to any member of the public of any shares for purchase except as provided, i.e. (a) shares dealt in with permission of any recognized stock exchange in Great Britain; (b) shares allotted with a view to sale to the public; and (c) offers to persons doing regular business in the purchase or sale of shares, must comply with s. 356 of the same Act; s. 356 also absolutely prohibits 'share pushing,' i.e., any person going from house to house (not being an office used for business purposes) offering shares for subscription or purchase to the public or any member of the public.

Offerings, personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of a parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, churching of women, burials, etc.; or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, etc. — 2 & 3 Edw. 6, cc. 13, 20 (repealed by the Church Assembly Measure, 16 & 17 Geo. 5, No. 5), and 21. Voluntary Easter offerings received by an incumbent are profits accruing to him and are assessable for income tax (Cooper v. Blakiston, 1909. A. C. 104).

Offertorium, the offerings of the faithful, or the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of Communion.

Off-goling Crop. See AWAY-GOING CROPS.

Office, an employment, either judicial, municipal (see CORPORATE OFFICE), civil, military, or ecclesiastical.

As to obtaining offices by desert only, the repealed 12 Ric. 2, c. 2, enacted that—

The Chancellor, Treasurer, . . . the Justices of the one bench and the other, Barons of the Exchequer and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make justices of the peace, sheriffs, . . . or any other officer or minister of the King shall be firmly sworn that they shall not ordain, name, or make justice of peace, sheriff . . . nor other officer or minister of the King for any gift or brokerage, favour or affection: nor that none that pursueth by him or by other privily or openly to be in any manner of office shall be put in the same office or in any other; but that they make all such officers and ministers of the best and most lawful men, and sufficient to their estimation and knowledge.

Officia magistratus non debent esse venalia.
—(The offices of a magistrate ought not to be saleable.)

Lord Coke (Co. Litt. 234 a) speaks of the above statute as 'a law worthy to be written in letters of gold, but more worthy to be put in execution,' 'for certainly,' he adds, 'never shall justice be duly administered, but when the officers and ministers of justice be of such quality, and come to their places in such manner, as by this law is required.'

The Act remained on the Statute Book until its repeal by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871—the particularities of the Act of Richard the Second having been (it is presumed) conceived to have been superseded by the generalities of the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868.

The sale of offices is also prohibited by the Sale of Offices Acts of 1551 and 1809. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Offices,' and Sterry v. Clifton, (1850) 19 L. J. C. P. 237, where it was held that certain official clerkships of attorneys might be considered partnership property.

Any words, whether written or spoken, which disparage a man in the way of his office or calling are defamatory, and are actionable per se, i.e., without proof of special damage. See PUBLIC OFFICE.

Office-copy, a transcript of a proceeding filed in the proper office of a court under the seal of such office. As to when office-copies are receivable in evidence, see Taylor on Evidence; and as to official marking, etc., see R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXVI., r. 7.

Office found, the finding of a jury in an inquest of office of a fact which entitles the Crown to the possession of lands or tenements, goods, or chattels.—Jac. Law Dict. See INQUEST OF OFFICE, and FORFEITURE.

Office of a Judge: the prosecutor in an ecclesiastical criminal suit is called the promotor officii judicis. He is either necessarius when the prosecution is ex mero motu judicis, or voluntarius.—Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum.

Office of Profit. The holding of such an office under the Crown in general incapacitates the holder from sitting or voting in the House of Commons. An Act of 1707 (6 Anne, c. 41) (c. 7 in Statutes at Large) provides that no person who shall have any new office or place of profit whatsoever under the Crown created since 25th October, 1705, or certain other specified offices, shall be capable of being elected or sitting or voting as a member of the House of Commons in any Parliament. The acceptance by a member of any office of profit from the Crown, other than one of those specified, disqualifies him from continuing a member without re-election.

This very strict rule has many statutory exceptions which allow the holders of offices created since 1705 to seek re-election. Section 52 of the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), allowed Ministers to transfer from one office to another without re-election provided that the office is one of those mentioned in the schedule to the Act or added thereto by subsequent legislation. The Re-election of Ministers Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 2), as amended by the Re-election of Ministers (Amendment) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 19) (which also repeals s. 52 of the Act of 1867, supra), provides that where a member accepts an office of profit under the Crown, the holding of which does not disqualify him from being re-elected but only from continuing a member, he shall not be obliged to vacate his seat, and see House of Commons Disqualification (Declaration of Law) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 38). 'An office or place of profit under the Crown' is any office held direct from the Crown which nominally carries a salary; thus, e.g., the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds (q.v.) is such an office, although it carries no salary. This office, as also that of the steward of the manors of East Hendred, Northstead or Hempholme, is excluded from the operation of the Act of 1919. Many offices of profit are specially designated in various Acts as disqualifying their holders from sitting in the House of Commons—e.g., the Master of the Rolls, by Judicature Act, 1925, s. 12 (2), replacing the Judicature Act of 1875, s. 5.

Officer. See ARMY; NAVY. A contract between the Crown and any of its military or naval officers for services rendered or to be rendered is not enforceable in a Court of law (see Kynaston v. A.-G., 49 T. L. R. 300).

Officers of the Supreme Court. By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 77, the officers of the various courts, whose jurisdiction is by that Act transferred to the High Court of Justice, of the Court of Appeal, were attached to the Supreme Court; by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LX., r. 1, these officers were attached to the divisions which represented the courts of which they were formerly officers; and by the Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 78), they were transferred to the Central Office of the Supreme Court. See, now, Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 105, 221-232.

Offices of the Supreme Court. The offices of the Supreme Court are to be open every day except Sundays, Good Friday, Easter Eve, Monday and Tuesday in Easter Week. Whit Monday, the first Monday in August, Christmas-day and the next following working day, and all days appointed by proclamation to be observed as days of general fast, humiliation, or thanksgiving, the day appointed to be kept as the King's birthday, and such days as the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls and the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, shall direct.—R. S. C., Ord. LXIII., r. 6 (as amended)

As to the vacations in the offices of the Supreme Court, see VACATION.

Official, formal; authorised.

In the Civil Law, he is a minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate. In the Canon Law, he is the person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction; there is one in every diocese, called officialis principalis, i.e., chancellor; the rest, if there are more, are officiales foranei, i.e., commissaries. In our statutes he is the person whom the archdeacon appoints as his substitute. Wood's Inst. 30, 505.

Official Assignees, certain persons from the class of merchants or accountants who were appointed by the Lord Chancellor under the Bankruptcy Acts, 1849 and 1861, to act in bankruptcies; one of whom must have been an assignee of the bankrupt's estate and effects, together with the assignee or assignees chosen by the creditors. All the personal estate, the profits of the realty, and the proceeds of all such estates as were sold were received by such official assignees alone, and paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant in Bankruptcy. These officials ceased to exist under the system of bankruptcy introduced in 1869, but the 'Official Receivers' established by the Act of 1883 greatly resemble them.

Official Liquidators, officers appointed to conduct the proceedings and to assist the Court in winding up a joint-stock company. —Companies Act, 1862, s. 92. See now Companies Act, 1929, s. 185, replacing the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 149 et seq., where they are styled 'liquidators.'

Official Log-book, a log-book in a certain form, and containing certain specified entries required by ss. 239 and 240 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, re-enacting ss. 280—282 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, to be kept by all British merchant ships, except those exclusively engaged in the coasting trade. By s. 239 (6) the entries are admissible as evidence.

Official Managers, persons formerly appointed, under statutes now repealed, to superintend the winding-up of insolvent companies under the control of the Court of Chancery.

Official Oath. By the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), a form of 'official oath' is prescribed, to be taken by each of the officers named in the schedule annexed thereto, as soon as may be after his acceptance of office by the officer.

Official Receivers, officers appointed by the Board of Trade under s. 66 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to act as interim receivers and managers of bankrupts' estates, pending the appointment of trustees in bankruptcy: see now Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 70 et seq. The report of an official receiver is absolutely privileged (Bottomley v. Brougham, 1908, 1 K. B. 584; Burr v. Smith, 1909 2 K. B. 306). As to the official receiver becoming provisional liquidator on the making of a winding-up order, see Companies Act, 1929, s. 185, and LIQUIDATOR.

Official Referee. See REFERENCE.

Official Secrets. The Official Secrets Act, 1889, was the first Act aimed at the prevention of the disclosure of official secrets. This Act was repealed and re-enacted with amendments by the Official Secrets Act, 1911, which has been amended by the Official Secrets Act, 1920. It is made an offence to spy in a 'prohibited place,' or wrongfully to communicate codes, plans, models, documents, or information relating to such a place, or to munitions of war, or which are used in such a place. There are special provisions as to arrest, the harbouring of spies, and the issue of search warrants. A Secretary of State may require the production of any document relating to a telegram or cable or wireless message. Every person who carries on the business of receiving letters, postal packets, or telegrams for other persons must be registered with the police and keep a record of the letters, etc., passing through his hands, and must not give up a letter, etc., unless a receipt is signed, or written instructions for delivery are given, by the addressee.

Official Solicitor. The duties of this officer at the present time are nowhere very clearly defined: see Judicature Act, 1925, s. 129, replacing Official Solicitor Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 30). A petition or summons respecting any dealing with a dormant fund, i.e., a fund in Court which has not been dealt with for fifteen years, must be served on the Official Solicitor: R. S. C. Ord. XXII., r. 11; and he has placed upon him by the Court of Chancery Act, 1860 (20 & 23 Vict. c. 149), s. 2, the duty of visiting prisoners committed for contempt, and he may be assigned as solicitor to pauper litigants, and acts as guardian ad litem to persons under a disability. Subject to an order to the contrary, under Ord. LXIII., r. 13, his costs are taxed as between party and party (Eady v. Elsdon, 1901, 2 K. B. 460).

Official Trustees of Charitable Funds, officers of the Charity Commissioners appointed to hold stocks and securities belonging to charities: see Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, s. 51; Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, s. 18; Charitable Trusts Act, 1887, s. 4.

Official Trustee of Charity Lands, the secretary for the time being of the Charity Commissioners, who is constituted a corporation sole by that name for taking and holding charity lands: see Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, s. 49; Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, s. 15.

Official Use, an active use, which imposed some duty on the legal owner or feoffee to uses, as a conveyance to A. with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds amongst B., C., and D. To enable A. to perform this duty he kept the legal estate under the Statute of Uses.

Officiality, the Court or jurisdiction of which an official is head.

Officarius non facieendis vel amovendis, a writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has, until inquiry is made of his manners, etc.—Reg. Brev. 126.

Officina justitie, a department of the Common Law jurisdiction of Chancery, out of which original writs issued.

Officio, Ex. By virtue of his office; e.g., the Lord Chief Justice of England is a member of the Court of Appeal, ex officio.

Officio, Ex, Oath, an oath whereby a person might be obliged to make his answer to any matters alleged against him, and extending originally even to criminal charges. It was derived from the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts: see 3 Bl. Com. 447.

Officious Will, a testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family.—Sand. Just.

Officium nemini debet esse damnosum. (An office ought to be injurious to no one.)

Off Licence. A justices' licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor not to be consumed on the premises (Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 110).

Oil in Navigable Waters Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 39). An Act directed against the fouling of the territorial waters of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the waters of harbours therein, by the discharge of oil or spirit, especially crude fuel oil, petroleum, and petrol.

Old Age Pension. See PENSION.

Old Bailey. The popular name for the Central Criminal Court.

Old Bailey Sessions. These were superseded by the Central Criminal Court, which see.

Old Metal, Dealers In. See METAL.

Old Style. See NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Old Tenures, a treatise, so called to distinguish it from Littleton's book on the same subject, which gives an account of the various tenures by which land was holden, the nature of estates, and some other incidents to landed property in the reign of Edward III. It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littleton's famous work.—3 Reeves, 151.

Oleron, an island lying in the Bay of Aquitaine, at the mouth of the river Charente, formerly in the possession of England. The inhabitants of Oleron have been able mariners for seven or eight hundred years past. They are said to have drawn up the laws of the Navy still called the Laws of Oleron. According to some French writers these maritime laws were digested as the Règle des Jugemens d'Oleron, by direction of Queen Eleanor, wife of Henry II. as Duchess of Guienne, and enlarged and improved by her son Richard I. Selden (de Dom. Mar. c. xiv.) maintains that they were compiled and promulgated by Richard I. as King of England. Writers, as Mons. Boucher, of Paris, and the English Luders, consider the whole account fallacious. The former calls the story of our Richard I. and Queen Eleanor une chimère des plus invraisemblables.—Monthly Review, December, 1811; and see Nouveau Larousse, tom. vi. p. 488. The laws of Oleron were to a great extent the foundation of the maritime laws of most states of Europe.

Oligarchy, a form of government wherein the administration of affairs is lodged in the hands of a few persons.

Olympiad, a Grecian epoch: the space of four years.

Omittance, forbearance.

Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit. Co. Litt. 247.—(Drunkenness both kindles and uncovers every crime.) See DRUNKENNESS.

Omne majus continet in se minus. Jenk. Cent. 208.—(The greater contains or embraces the less; e.g., a person on an indictment for murder may be convicted of manslaughter.)

Omne quod solo inædificatur solo cedit. Dig. 47, 3, 1.—(Everything which is built upon the soil belongs to the soil.) Similarly, Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. (Whatever is planted in the soil belongs to the soil.) See FIXTURES.

Omnes licentiam habent his, quæ pro se introducta sunt, renunciare. Broom's Leg. Max.—(Every one has a right to renounce those things which have been granted for his own benefit.) Similarly, Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. 2 Inst. 183.—(Every person may decline to take advantage of a law made for his own benefit.) See WAIVER.

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatores.—(All things are presumed against a wrongdoer.) See Armory v. Delamirie, (1722) 1 Str. 504; 1 Smith L. C.; Broom's Leg. Max.

Omnia præsumuntur solemniter [or rite] esse acta. Co. Litt. 6.—(All things are presumed to have been done rightly.) Similarly, Omnia præsumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. Co. Litt. 232.—(All things are presumed to have been rightly and duly performed until it is proved to the contrary.)

Omnibus, a vehicle for all. By the Town Police Clauses Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 14), bye-laws may be made under the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (see that title), for regulation of omnibuses, which term is defined by s. 3, and includes, for the purposes of the Act, char-à-bancs, wagonettes, brakes, stage-coaches, and other carriages plying or standing for hire by or used to carry passengers at separate fares. See, generally, London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 14); Road Traffic Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 24 et seq.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. 2 Inst. 123.—(Every assent removes error.)

Omnis nova constitutio futuris temporibus formam imponere debet, non præteritis. 2 Inst. 95.—(Every new enactment should affect future, not past times.)

Omnis ratihabito retrotrahitur et mandato priori æquiparatur. Co. Litt. 207.—(Every consent given to what has been already done has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a previous request, provided that the interests of third parties have not been affected in the interim.) See Mann v. Walters, (1830) 10 B. & C. 626, and Broom's Leg. Max., and RATIFICATION.

Omnium, the aggregate of certain portions of different stocks in the public funds.—Com. term.

Ouncunne, accused.—Du Cange.

One Hundred Thousand Pounds Clause, a clause in the conveyance by the tenant-in-tail to the tenant to the præcipe, which provided that if the latter did not pay 100,000*l.* (or some other sum grossly in excess of the value of the land) on a specified date subsequent to the recovery, the estate of the tenant to the præcipe was to be avoided. See 1 Preston's Conveyancing, 109 and 110; and see RECOVERY.

Onerando pro ratâ portionis, a writ that lay for a joint-tenant, or tenant-in-common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land came to.—Reg. Brev. 182. See now for the implied powers conferred by s. 190, Law of Property Act, 1925.

Onerari non debet (he ought not to be burdened), a form of commencement of a pleading, substituted in some few cases for actionem non. But see 1 Saund. 290, n. b.

Onerous Cause, a good and legal consideration.—Scots term.

O. Nl. It was the course of the Exchequer, as soon as a sheriff or escheator entered into his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon his head O. Ni: which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties parvaile became debtors to the sheriff or escheator, and discharged against the king.—4 Inst. 116.

Onus episcopale, ancient customary payments from the clergy, to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, etc.

Onus importandi, the charge of importing merchandise, mentioned in 12 Car. 2, c. 28.

Onus probandi, the burden of proof. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

Open Contract, a complete contract of which the meaning admits the implications of law without special conditions, or except so far as such conditions may modify these implications, as a contract to sell land without mentioning the day for completion of the purchase, or without stipulations as to title or otherwise. See Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, ss. 1, 2; Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 3, reproduced with amendments by ss. 44 and 45, Law of Property Act, 1925. See CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND.

Open Court. Every court of justice is open to every subject of the King (Scott v. Scott, 1913, A. C. 417, at p. 440). By statute the place where justices summarily convict is an open court (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 12), but not so the place where they commit a prisoner for trial at assizes or sessions (Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 19). Whether a coroner's court is an open court is a matter of doubt if it is not a Court of Justice; it is submitted that it is not (see Jervis on Coroners, citing Garnett v. Ferrand, (1827) 6 B. & C. 611); the general rule is that all courts of justice are open to all so long as there is room. See Scott v. Scott, ubi supra, where the whole question of hearing cases in camera is discussed. See also R. v. Gov. of Leves Prison, 1917, 2 K. B. 254; and McPherson v. McPherson, 1936, A. C. 177.

See CAMERA; JUVENILE COURTS.

Opening Biddings. Before 1867, where estates were sold, under the decree of a Court of Equity, the Court considered itself to have a greater power over the contract than if the contract were made between party and party; and as the aim of the Court was to obtain as great a price as possible for the estate, it would open the biddings after the estate was sold, and put up the estate for sale again.

But the Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867, has, by s. 7, abolished this inconvenient practice (under which biddings were opened even more than once), with an exception for cases of fraud or improper management of a sale, in which, upon the application of any person interested in the land, 'the Court may either open the biddings, holding such bidder bound by his bidding, or discharge him from being the purchaser, and order the land to be resold'; see Delves v. Delves, (1875) L. R. 20 Eq. 77.

Opening the Case. On a trial before a jury the party who upholds the affirmative of the issue begins, in conformity with the Civil Law maxim: Et incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat; cum, per rerum naturam, factum negantis probatio nulla sit.—Cod. 4. See RIGHT TO BEGIN.

Opening the Pleadings, stating briefly at a trial before a jury the substance of the pleadings. This is done by the junior counsel for the plaintiff at the commencement of the trial.

Open Law [lex manifesta, Lat.], the making or waging of law.—Magna Charta, c. 21.

Open Policy, one in which the value of the ship or goods insured is to be ascertained in case of loss.

Open Space. By the Metropolitan Open Spaces Acts of 1877 and 1881, the Metropolitan Board of Works (succeeded by the London County Council, under s. 40, sub-s. 8, of the Local Government Act, 1888) had power to acquire and to hold for the use of the public any open spaces within the metropolis. These Acts were extended, with amendments, to urban sanitary districts, and, with the consent of the Local Government Board, to rural sanitary districts, by the Open Spaces Act of 1887; and the Open Spaces Act, 1890, empowered the trustees of land held upon trust for the purposes of public recreation to transfer it to the local authorities of their districts for those purposes. The Open Spaces Act, 1906, consolidates these four Acts (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Public Improvements'), and by s. 20 enacts that:—

In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

The expression 'open space' means any land, whether inclosed or not, on which there are no buildings or of which not more than one-twentieth part is covered with buildings, and the whole or the remainder of which is laid out as a garden or is used for purposes of recreation, or lies waste and unoccupied.

The above definition much enlarges that of 1881 as amended by the Act of 1887, and see Bermondsey Borough Council v. Mortimer, 1926, P. 87, as to the requirements for a faculty from the Consistory Court under this Act to convert a closed churchyard into an open space.

Square gardens in cities and boroughs are still protected by the Town Gardens Protection Act, 1863, within which statute it was held in 1868 that Leicester Square in London did not come (Tulk v. Metropolitan Board of Works, (1868) L. R. 3 Q. B. 682). See also London Squares Preservation Act, 1931 (c. xciii.), and for powers of the Minister of Health, other departments and local authorities, the Housing Acts, the Town and Country Planning Acts, and the Ribbon Development Act, 1935, and Public Works Facilities Act, 1930, s. 2; also Local Government Act, 1933, s. 174, providing that a compulsory order for the acquisition of an open space is provisional only and must be confirmed by Parliament; and as to open spaces held in undivided shares (transitional), see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 39, and 1st. Sched., Part V. (5); and Re Bradford City, 1928, Ch. 138, and Re Townshend, 1930, 2 Ch. 328.

Open Theft [open theof, Sax.], a theft that is manifest.—Reg. Hen. 1, c. 13.

Opendite, the time after corn is carried out of the fields.—Britt.

Operarii, such tenants under feudal tenures as held some little portions of land by the duty of performing bodily labour and servile works for their lord.

Operatio, one day's work performed by a tenant for his lord.

Operative Part. The operative part of a formal instrument consists of the words which carry out the principal object or objects of the instrument.

Operative Words. The words in the formal part of an instrument which carry out or effect the contention of the parties, e.g., 'grant' or 'bargain and sell' in a conveyance. See DEED.

Opetide, the ancient time of marriage, from Epiphany to Ash-Wednesday.

Opinion. A technical term applied to the judgment* of a Law Lord delivered in the House of Lords. Also the written advice given by counsel upon facts submitted to him. See DICTUM as to opinions expressed by judges which are not strictly relevant to the issue before them.

Opposer, an officer formerly belonging to the Green Wax in the Exchequer. Abolished.

Opposite, an old word for opponent.

Oppression, the trampling upon or bearing down a person, under pretence of law. See also Harris v. Harris Ltd., 1936, S. C. 183 (Court of Sess.).

Optima est lex quæ minimum relinquit

* Also termed a "Speech."

arbitrio iudicis, optimus iudex qui minimum sibi. The best law is that which leaves the least to the discretion of the judge, the best judge is he who leaves the least to himself (his own discretion).

Optimacy, nobility; men of the highest rank.

Optimus interpres rerum usus. 2 Inst. 282.—(Custom is the best interpreter of things.) See Broom's Leg. Max. Similarly, Optimus legum interpres consuetudo. 4 Inst. 75.—(Custom is the best interpreter of laws.) Optima est legis interpres consuetudo. Lofft, 237; Dig. 1, 3, 37.—(Custom is the best interpreter of the law.) These maxims support Savigny's Theory of the origin of law. Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretari ut leges legibus concordant. 8 Co. 169.—(The best mode of interpretation is so to interpret laws that they may accord with each other.) See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Option. 1. When a new suffragan bishop is consecrated by the archbishop of the province, by a customary prerogative, the archbishop claims the collation of the first vacant dignity or benefice in that see, at his own choice, i.e., option. Options are now disused. 2. The word is also used in commercial matters to express a right to effect a certain dealing or not in shares or goods at a stated price at a certain date, at the option of the person bargaining, who pays a premium for the right.

Option of Purchase in a Lease. A clause giving the lessee the option of purchasing the reversion for a fixed sum within a limited number of years, or at any time during the term, is sometimes inserted in leases. A clause giving an option of purchase at any time during a ninety-nine years' lease offends against the law of perpetuities (see that title) and cannot be specifically enforced (Woodall v. Clifton, 1905, 2 Ch. 257; Worthing Corporation v. Heather, 1906, 2 Ch. 532). For statement of opinion that the clause 'to be completely valid must be so expressed that the option must necessarily be exercised (if at all) within the limits of the time allowed by the rule against perpetuities,' so that probably not more than twenty-one years could be allowed in a lease independent of life, see article by Mr. T. Cyprian Williams in the Solicitors' Journal for July 9, 1898; and for cases on option of purchase generally, see Woodfall, L. & T.

Options to purchase a legal estate (including a lease), made or acquired after 1925, must be registered in the Land Registry under ss. 4 and 10 of the Land Charges Act, 1925, as ESTATE CONTRACTS (q.v.), or they will be void against a purchaser for value (with or without notice), for money or money's worth. They do not fall behind the curtain and must be abstracted as the person entitled may register at any time before completion of the purchase by the later claimant. A tenant for life may grant an option for purchase or to take a lease exercisable over any period not exceeding ten years (see Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 51). Attention should be given to the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 149 (3), which prohibits the granting of a lease as a rent or upon payment of a fine after 1925 to take effect more than twenty-one years from the date of the instrument purporting to create it except in regard to terms or interests under a settlement or under equitable powers for a mortgage indemnity, etc.; and see Law of Property Act, 1922, 15th Sched., par. 7 (2), avoiding any contract to renew a lease for more than sixty years from the expiration of the lease.

Optional Writ, a praecipe, so called because it was in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he had not done it.

Ora, a Saxon coin, valued at sixteen pence, and sometimes at twenty pence.—Domesday.

Oraculum, a decision by a Roman emperor.

Oral, delivered by the mouth; not written.

Oral Pleading, pleadings by word of mouth in presence of the judges. This was the original mode of pleading; it was, however, except in criminal cases, superseded by written pleadings in the reign of Edward III. See Odgers on Pleading.

Orando pro rege et regno, an ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting Parliament, to pray for peace and good government.

Orangemen, a party in Ireland who adhere to the views of William of Orange.

Oratio obliqua. See OBLIQUA ORATIO.

Orator, a petitioner; a plaintiff in a bill, or information, in Chancery was formerly so called.

Oratrix, or Oratress, a female petitioner; a female plaintiff in a bill in Chancery was formerly so called.

Orbation, privation of parents or children; poverty.

Orchards. See GARDENS.

Ordeal [fr. ordal, Sax., fr. or, great, and dele, judgment], an ancient manner of trial in criminal cases practised amongst our Saxon ancestors, who affected to believe that God would actively interpose to establish an earthly right. There were four sorts: (1) campfight, duellum, or combat; (2) fire ordeal; (3) hot water ordeal; (4) cold water ordeal. See Verstegan's Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 64; Turner's Ang.-Sax., vol. ii. 532; 2 Hallam's Mid. Ages, 466.

Ordesse, or Ordelle, a liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land.

Ordels, the right of administering oaths and adjudging trials by ordeal within a precinct or liberty.

Order, mandate, precept, command; also a class or rank.

General orders are promulgated by courts for the proper regulation of their own proceedings, as the Consolidated 'Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883,' which are divided into orders, and subdivided into rules, which are amended from time to time; and particular orders are made to enforce a payment of money, to enforce obedience to justice, and compel that which is right to be performed.

Order and Disposition of goods and chattels; when goods are in the order and disposition of a bankrupt, they go to his trustee, and have gone so since the time of James I. See BILL of SALE, and Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 38; REPUTED OWNER; HIRE-PURCHASE.

Order XIV. See LEAVE TO DEFEND.

Order in Council, an order made by the Sovereign 'by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council.' Such orders are now largely used for the purpose of completing the Administrative part of Acts of Parliament. The Government of the day is responsible for them, and they are usually issued in a complete form from the administrative department concerned, the authorization by the Privy Council being a mere formality. As pointed out by Lord Parker in The Zamora (1916, 2 A. C. at p. 90), neither the King in Council nor any branch of the Executive has power to prescribe or alter the law by Order in Council, save when expressly authorized by statute. See STATUTORY RULES.

Order of Course, an order made on an ex parte application, and to which a party is entitled as of right on his own statement and at his own risk (R. S. C. 1883, App. N., No. 195).

Order of Discharge, an order made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 26, by a court of bankruptcy, the effect of which is to discharge a bankrupt from all debts, claims, or demands provable under the bankruptcy, except Crown debts, debts incurred by fraud, and certain judgments (s. 28).

Order of Revivor, an order as of course for the continuance of an abated suit. It superseded the bill of revivor. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52, and Cons. Ord. 1860, XXXII., r. 1, and title ABATEMENT.

Ordering Witnesses out of Court. See WITNESSES.

Orders of the Clergy. See HOLY ORDERS.

Ordinance, law, rule, prescript. The precise distinction between an Ordinance and an Act of Parliament is a subject of controversy between learned authors: see Co. Litt. 159 b, and Mr. Hargreaves' note thereto.

The name generally given to laws made by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council or Court in Colonies where representative assemblies do not exist. See Halsb. L. E., sub tit. 'Dependencies,' etc.

Ordinance of the Forest. See ORDINATIO FORESTÆ.

Ordinance of Parliament, Act of Parliament during the Commonwealth.

Ordinandi lex, the law of procedure as distinguished from the substantial part of the law.

Ordinarius ita dicitur quia habet ordinariam jurisdictionem, in iure proprio, et non propter deputationem. Co. Litt. 96.—(The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one.)

Ordinary, a judge who has authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation or delegation.—Civ. Law. See NOTARY.

By the Common Law, one who has exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical.

Also, a bishop: and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions. Also, a commissary or official of a bishop or other ecclesiastical judge having judicial power; an archdeacon; officer of the royal household.

Ordinary of Assize and Sessions, a deputy of the bishop of the diocese, anciently appointed to give malefactors their neck-verses, and judge whether they read or not; also to perform divine service for them, and assist in preparing them for death. See NECK-VERSE.

Ordinary Conveyances, those deeds of transfer which are entered into between two or more persons, without an assurance in a superior court of justice. See DEED.

Ordinary of Newgate, the clergyman who is attendant upon condemned malefactors in that prison to prepare them for death; he records the behaviour of such persons. Formerly, it was the custom of the ordinary to publish a small pamphlet upon the execution of any remarkable criminal.

Ordinatio Forestæ, 33 Edw. 1, stat. 5; 34 Edw. 1, stat. 5, statutes made touching causes and matters of the forest.—2 Reeves, c. ix., 104, 106.

Ordinatio pro statu Hiberniæ, 17 Edw. 1.—2 Reeves, c. ix. 99.

Ordination, the conferring of holy orders. The first thing necessary on application for holy orders is the possession of a title—that is, a sort of assurance from a rector to the bishop that, provided the latter finds the person fit to be ordained, the former will take him for his curate, with a stated salary. The candidate is then examined by the bishop or his chaplain respecting both his faith and his erudition; and various certificates are necessary, particularly one signed by the clergyman of the parish in which he has resided during a given time. The candidate has to comply with the requirements of the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122) (see CLERICAL SUBSCRIPTION); and a clerk must have attained his twenty-third year before he can be ordained a deacon; and his twenty-fourth to receive priest's orders.—44 Geo. 3, c. 43; Canon 34.

In the Presbyterian and Congregational churches ordination means the act of establishing a licensed preacher over a congregation with pastoral charge and authority, or the act of conferring on a man the powers of a settled minister of the gospel, without the charge of a particular church, but with general powers whenever he may be called upon to officiate.

Ordinatione contra servientes, a writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master, contrary to the ordinance of statute 23 & 24 Edw. 3.—Reg. Brev. 189.

Ordines, a general chapter or other solemn convention of the religious of a particular order.

Ordines majores et minores. The holy orders of priest, deacon, and sub-deacon, any of which qualified for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure, were called ordines majores; and the inferior orders of chanters, psalmists, ostiary, reader, exorcist, and acolyte, were called ordines minores; persons ordained to the ordines minores had their prima tonsura different from the tonsura clericalis.—Cowel.

Ordinum fugitivi, those of the religious who deserted their houses, and, throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order in contempt of their oath and other obligations.—Par. Antiq. 388.

Ordinance Debentures, bills which were issued by the Board of Ordnance on the Treasurer of that office for the payment of stores, etc.

Ordnance Office, or Board of Ordnance, an office which was kept within the Tower of London, and which superintended and disposed of all the arms, instruments, and utensils of war, both by sea and land, in all the magazines, garrisons, and forts of Great Britain. It was divided into two distinct branches, the civil and the military, by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24; but by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 117, the powers, etc., of the Board were transferred to the Secretary of State for War.

Ordnance Survey. This 'survey of Great Britain and the Isle of Man' was first authorized in 1841 by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 30, an Act which expired in 1846, but was continued by successive Expiring Laws Continuance Acts until made permanent by 12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 50. The work is carried out under the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries Acts, 1889 to 1919.

For statutory determination of distance by ordnance map, see Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 231, and for definition of 'ordnance map, see Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 25. For the use of the Ordnance Survey Maps in the Land Registry, see Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 76, and Traiman, 'The Land Registry General Map.'

Ordo, that rule which monks were obliged to observe.

Ordo Albus, the white friars or Augustines. The Cistercians also wore white.

Ordo Niger, the black friars. The Cluniacs likewise wore black.

Ore tenuis (by word of mouth).

Ortgild [fr. orf, Sax., cattle, and gild, recompense], a delivery or restitution of cattle. But Lambard says it is a restitution made by the hundred or county for any wrong done by one who was in pledge, or rather a penalty for taking away cattle.—Lamb. Arch. 125.

Ortgild, without recompense; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain.—Spelm.

Origie. See ORWIGIE.

Original and Derivative Estates. An original is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent.—Presl. on Est. 125.

Original Bills in Equity. See BILL IN CHANCERY.

Original Charter is one by which the first grant of land is made. On the other hand, a charter by progress is one renewing the grant in favour of the heir or singular successor of the first or succeeding vassals.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Original Writ, or Original [breve originale, Lat.], was the beginning or foundation of a real action at Common Law. It is also applied to processes for some other purposes.

It was a mandatory letter issuing out of the Common Law, or ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery (see now CHANCERY), under the Great Seal, and in the sovereign's name, addressed to the sheriff of the county where the injury was committed, containing a summary statement of the cause of complaint, and requiring him to command the defendant to satisfy the claim, and, on his failure to comply, then to summon him to appear in one of the superior Courts of Common Law. In some cases it simply required the sheriff to enforce the appearance. Original writs differed from each other in their tenor, according to the nature of the plaintiff's complaint, and were conceived in fixed and certain forms. Many of these are of a remote antiquity; others are of later origin, and their history is as follows:—The ancient writs had provided for the most obvious kinds of wrong; but, in the progress of society, cases of injury arose new in their circumstances, so as not to be reached by any of the writs then known in practice; and it seems that either the clerks of the Chancery (who prepared the original writ) had no authority to devise new forms for such cases, or they were remiss in its exercise. Therefore, by the statute of West. 2, 13 Edw. 1, c. 24, it was provided, 'That as often as it shall happen in the Chancery that in one case a writ is found, and in a like case, falling under the same right, and requiring like remedy, no writ is to be found, the clerks of the Chancery shall agree in making a writ or adjourn the complaint till the next Parliament, and write the case in which they cannot agree, and refer them to the next Parliament,' etc.—Steph. on Plead. app. n. 2. See CASE.

The following original writs were issued, not ex debito justitiæ, but ex merâ gratiâ, and were sometimes denominated discretionary writs: De ventre inspiciendo; supplicavit; certiorari; prohibition; writs of error in criminal cases: ad quod damnum; scire facias, to repeal letters-patent, etc. See 1 Mad. Eq. b. 8.

As to the mode of commencing actions in the Supreme Court, see ACTION and SUMMONS.

Originalia, transcripts sent to the Remembrancer's Office in the Exchequer out of the Chancery, distinguished from recorda, which contain the judgments and pleadings in actions tried before the barons.

Originating Summons, a summons without writ, returnable in the chambers of a judge of the High Court. Summonses of this description are very frequently issued in the Chancery Division for the determination of particular questions arising in the administration of an estate or trust, without the administration of the whole estate or trust; for settling questions between vendors and purchasers (see VENDOR AND PURCHASER SUMMONS); for foreclosure or redemption of mortgages; for determining questions of construction of a written instrument, and for numerous other purposes; see R. S. C. 1883, Ords. LIV. LIVA., LIVB., LIVC., and LV. et seq. If the question raised is one requiring argument it is generally adjourned into Court; if it is a simple matter the judge will determine it in Chambers. The summons may be taken out by any person interested, and is served on the persons whose rights are sought to be affected. This procedure was first established in 1883 by the Rules of that year, and has been found to be of great practical utility.

Origine proptâ neminem posse voluntate suâ eximi manifestum est. Cod. 10, 38, 4.—(It is evident that no one is able, of his own pleasure, to do away with his proper origin.) For the application of this maxim, see Broom's Legal Maxims.

Ornamental Grounds. The Town Gardens Protection Act, 1863, provides for the protection of gardens and ornamental grounds in cities and boroughs. See GARDENS; OPEN SPACES.

Ornamental timber, cutting down, by the tenant for life is a species of equitable waste (q.v.) (Micklethwaite v. Micklethwaite, (1857) 1 De G. & J. 504).

Ornaments Rubric, that rubric of the Prayer Book which directs just before the Order for Morning Prayer that—Such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof, at all times of their Ministration shall be retained, and be in use, as were in this Church of England by the Authority of Parliament in the Second Year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth.

The meaning of this rubric has been declared by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to be that 'vestments' of ministers as celebrants cannot be worn, though prescribed by the First Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth, which had the authority of the First Act of Uniformity (2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1: see Clifton v. Ridsdale, (1877) 2 P. D. 276; but that judgment has been the subject of much controversy. See Whitehead's Church Law, tit. 'Vestments'; Talbot on Ritual; Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, tit. 'Vestments'; Lely on the Church of England Position, p. 148.

Ornest, the trial by battle, which does not seem to have been used in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the kingdoms of the North, where it was practised under the name of holmgang, from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Orphan, a fatherless child or minor, or one deprived of both father and mother.

The Lord Chancellor is the general guardian of all orphans and minors throughout the realm. See GUARDIANSHIP; WARD OF COURT.

By the Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 17), local county or borough councils may assist the emigration of poor orphans (see s. 68, ibid.).

The Widows, Orphans and Old Age Contributory Pensions Acts, 1925-1935, provide for pensions for orphans of persons insured under the National Health Insurance Acts. Under these Acts, 'orphan' means a child, both of whose parents are dead (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 70, s. 44).

In London the Lord Mayor and Aldermen have in their Court of Orphans the custody of the orphans of deceased freemen, and also the keeping of their land and goods; accordingly the executors and administrators of freemen leaving such orphans are to exhibit inventories of the estate of the deceased, and give security to the Chamberlain for the orphan's part or share. Consult Williams on Executors.

Orphanotrophi, managers of houses for orphans.—Civ. Law.

Ortell, the claws of a dog's foot.—Kitch.

Ortolagium, a garden plot or hortilage.

Orwige—sine wita, without war or feud, such security being provided by the laws, for homicides under certain circumstances, against the fæhth, or deadly feud, on the part of the family of the slain.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

W. L. L.

Osborne Estate. See Osborne Estate Acts, 1902 and 1914.

Ostensio, a tax anciently paid by merchants, etc., for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets.—Du Cange; Anc. Inst. Eng.

Ostium ecclesiæ, Dower ad. See AD OSTIUM ECCLESIAE.

Oswald's Law, the law by which was effected the ejection of married priests, and the introduction of monks into churches, by Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, about A.D. 964.

Oswald's Law Hundred, an ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from Bishop Oswald, who obtained it from King Edgar to be given to St. Mary's Church in Worcester. It was exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction, and comprehends 300 hides of land.—Camd. Brit.

Otter, a poaching device, the use of which for catching salmon, trout, or fresh-water fish is prohibited by the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16), s. 1.

Ourlop, the lierwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant when his daughter was debauched.

Oust, to dispossess.

Ouster, dispossession.

A wrong or injury that may be sustained in respect of hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, carrying with it the deprivation of possession; for thereby the wrongdoer gets into the actual occupation of the land or hereditament, and obliges him that has a right to seek his legal remedy in order to gain possession and damage for the injury sustained. Such dispossession may be either of the freehold or of chattels real.

Ouster of the freehold was effected by various methods: 1, abatement; 2, intrusion; 3, disseisin; 4, discontinuance; and 5, forcement.

Ouster of chattels real consists: 1st, of a motion of possession from estates held by statute, recognizance, or elegit, which happens by a species of disseisin or turning out of the legal proprietor before his estate is determined, by raising the sum for which it is given to him in pledge; and 2nd, of amotion of possession from an estate of years, which takes place by a like kind of disseisin, ejection, or turning out of the tenant from the occupation of the land during the continuance of his term.—3 Bl. Com. 167, 198.

For remedies for ouster, see EJECTMENT and FORCIBLE ENTRY.

For ouster, removal of members or officers of a corporation, see Halsb. L. E., sub tit. 'Corporation'; and upon forfeiture of a franchise for a market or fair (ibid.), sub tit. 'Markets and Fairs.'

Ousterlemain [amovere manum, Lat.], the delivery of the lands out of the guardian's hands, upon the heir attaining twenty-one, or the heiress sixteen years of age. Abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Also a livery of land out of the sovereign's hands on a judgment given for him that sued out a monstrans de droit.—Staunf. Prærog. c. 24.

Ouster le Mer, beyond the sea; a cause of excuse, if a person, being summoned, did not appear in court. See SEAS, BEYOND.

Outer House. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Outfangthef, a liberty in the ancient Common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court.—Du Cange.

Outgoing. 1. Payments which have to be made out of the gross returns of a property or business before its net proceeds can reach the owner, as a drainage rate on land, or the salaries of clerks in the management of a business.

2. A most comprehensive general expression in a lessee's covenant to pay taxes and other charges, which no prudent lessee should accept; as to the meaning of the word, see Stockdale v. Ascherberg, 1904, 1 K. B. 447; Greaves v. Whitmarsh, 1906, 2 K. B. 340; also Howe v. Botwood, 1913, 2 K. B. 387; and Henman v. Berliner, 1918, 2 K. B. 236, where the Court found ground for restricting the full meaning of the term. As to head landlord's indemnity, Dependable Upholstery Ltd. v. Brasted, 1932, 1 K. B. 291. Under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, s. 16 (making up a road, etc.), Louther v. Clifford, 1927, 1 K. B. 130 (yearly tenant).

Outhest, or Outhorn, a calling men out to the army by sound of horn.—Jac. Law Dict.

Outhouses, buildings belonging to and adjoining dwelling-houses.

Outland, land lying beyond the demesnes, and granted out to husbandmen and tenants.—Spelm.

Outlaw [fr. ulaghe, Sax.; ulagatus, Lat.], a person put out of the law, or deprived of its benefits (see next title).

Outlawry [fr. ulagaria, Lat.], the being put out of the law for contempt in wilfully avoiding the execution of the process of the King's Court.

Outlawry has long been obsolete in civil proceedings, and is formally abolished by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59), in civil proceedings. In criminal proceedings it is practically disused, but is formally kept alive by the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), which Act, while abolishing forfeiture for felony, expressly provides that nothing therein shall affect the law of forfeiture consequent on outlawry; and the procedure in and for reversal of outlawry is given in Rules 88–110 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906.

The maxim applicable to outlaws is, 'Let them be answerable to all, and none to them.' Utlagatus est quasi extra legem positus; caput gerit lupinum. 7 Co. 14.—(An outlaw is, as it were, placed outside the law; he bears the head of a wolf.) Accordingly, any person outlawed is civiliter mortuus. He can hold no property given or devised to him; and all the property which he held before is forfeited. He can neither sue on his contracts, nor has he any legal rights which can be enforced; while, at the same time, he is personally liable upon all causes of action. He can, however, bring actions in autre droit, as executor, administrator, etc., because in such actions he only represents persons capable of contracting, and under the protection of the law.—See Ex parte Franks, (1831) 7 Bing. at p. 767.

Out of Court, deprived of all right to have one's case so much as considered by the Court. A plaintiff in an action at Common Law must have declared within one year after the service of a writ of summons, otherwise he was out of Court, unless the Court had, by special order, enlarged the time for declaring.

Outparters, stealers of cattle; see 9 Hen. 5, st. 1, c. 7.

Outputers, such as set watches for the robbing of any manor-house. Perhaps the same as outparters.—Cowel.

Outriders, bailiffs-errant employed by sheriffs or their deputies to ride to the extremities of their counties or hundreds to summon men to the county or hundred Court.

Outstanding Term, a term in gross at law, which, in equity, may be made attendant upon the inheritance, either by express declaration or by implication. See the Satisfied Terms Act, 1845, extended by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 5, and 1st Sched., Part II., par. (1), to outstanding terms out of leaseholds and vesting the outstanding terms in the immediate reversion ; for the law before 1926, see Re Moore and Helm, 1912, 2 Ch. 105, and for conditions of sale, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 42 (3).

Outsucken Multures, quantities of corn paid by persons voluntarily grinding corn at any mill to which they are not thriled or bound by tenure. See INSUCKEN MULTURES.

Ovelty, a kind of equality of service in subordinate tenures.—Fitz. N. B. 36.

Overcrowding. By Part IV. of the Housing Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8), s. 58, it is provided that a dwelling-house shall (subject to the provisions of the Act) be deemed for the purposes of the Act to be overcrowded at any time when the number of persons sleeping in the house either

(a) is such that any two of those persons being 10 years old or more of opposite sexes and not living together as husband and wife sleep in the same room, or

(b) is in relation to the number and floor area of the rooms of which the house consists, in excess of the permitted number as defined in the 5th Sched. to the Act, i.e., in effect—

TABLE I

Rooms.	Persons.
(a) 1	2
(b) 2	3
(c) 3	5
(d) 4	7½
(e) 5	10

and

TABLE II (in the aggregate)

Square feet.	Persons.
110	2
90 to 110	1½
70 to 90	1
50 to 70	½
under 50	none

Children under 1 year old do not count ; from 1 to under 10 are reckoned as half.

After the appointed day overcrowding is made an offence on the part of the occupier as well as (subject to statutory provisions) the landlord. Local authorities are under a duty to cause inspections to be made for the purpose.

Licences to exceed the permitted numbers may be granted, and for other offences and provisions relating to overcrowding, see the Act, ss. 57 to 70.

Overcyled, or Overcylsed, proved guilty, or convicted.—Blount.

Overdue, past the time of payment.

By s. 36 (2), (3), and (4) of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 :—

(2) Where an overdue bill is negotiated, it can only be negotiated subject to any defect of title affecting it at its maturity, and thenceforward no person who takes it can acquire or give a better title than that which the person from whom he took it had.

(3) A bill payable on demand is deemed to be overdue within the meaning and for the purposes of this section, when it appears on the face of it to have been in circulation for an unreasonable length of time. What is an unreasonable length of time for this purpose is a question of fact.

(4) Except where an indorsement bears date after the maturity of the bill, every negotiation is prima facie deemed to have been effected before the bill was overdue.

Overherness, contumacy or contempt of Court.—Leg. Ethel. c. 25.

Over-riding Interests. See REGISTRATION OF TITLE TO LAND, and s. 70 of the Land Registration Act, 1925.

Overrule, to set aside the authority of a former decision.

Overseamessa, semble ; a forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor, see Jac. Law Dic.—3 Inst. 116.

Overseas Trade. See TRADE FACILITIES.

Overseers of the Poor (now abolished by Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), ss. 1, 64), formerly public officers created by the Poor Relief Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), to provide for the poor of every parish. There were two or more according to the extent of the parish. Churchwardens were, by Poor Law Amendment Act, 1866 (c. 113), s. 12 (repealed) (except in rural parishes, in which case their jurisdiction ceased by virtue of the Local Government Act, 1894), overseers of the poor, and they joined with the overseers in making poor rates ; but the churchwardens, having distinct business of their own, usually left the care of the poor to the overseers, though anciently they were the sole overseers of the poor.—Wood's Inst. 98. The overseers originally not only levied the poor rate, but also expended it. Their duties regarding rating were transferred to the rating authority by Overseers Order, 1927, No. 55.

Assistant overseers could be appointed with a salary, by 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7. See Burn's Justice, tit. 'Poor.' But now abolished by Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 1, and they were transferred to the employment of the rating authority by s. 48.

Oversewensse. See OVERHERNISSA.

Overman, an umpire.—Scots term.

Overt, open. The expression overt act means an act which shows the intention of the party doing it. It is used principally in connection with treason and conspiracy. A treasonable intention is not punishable unless it is manifested by an overt act. In the same way conspirators may make their criminal purpose clear by some overt act, such as an agreement to further their common design. Overt word means a word the meaning of which is clear and beyond doubt, and see MARKET OVERT.

Overture, an opening; a proposal.

Ovrag, or Ouvrages, day's work.

Ovres, acts, deeds, or works.—8 Rep. 131.

Owel, equal.

Owely, equality.—Co. Litt. 169.

Owlers, persons who carried wool, etc., to the seaside by night, in order that it might be shipped off contrary to law.—Jac. Law Dict.

Owling, the offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom. Abolished by 5 Geo. 4, c. 107.

Owner, for the purposes of the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 343, replacing s. 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and the London Building Acts (Amendment) Act (5 Edw. 7, c. cxix.), 'the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee, or who would so receive the same if the same were let at a rack-rent' (see that title), and Kensington Corporation v. Allen, 1926, 1 K. B. 576.

Owner (Estate Owner), defined by s. 205 (1) (ix.), Law of Property Act, 1925, as 'the owner of a legal estate, but an infant is not capable of being an estate owner.' Estate owners for the purposes of the land legislation of 1925 include an owner of full age (including a corporation) who is the person designated by the land legislation of 1925 as the person having the power to give a legal title to the whole of the estate (see LEGAL ESTATE) for the purposes of sale, mortgage, lease or otherwise. This includes the absolute beneficial owner, tenants for life, statutory owners (q.v.), trustees for sale, and personal representatives and mortgagees in exercise of their paramount powers. The legal title so disposed of is subject to all such equities, liabilities and charges and obligations (if any) attaching to the estate as may be binding on the transferee and the estate after it has been disposed of under the provisions of the Acts.

Oxford, a restitution anciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same.—Lamb. Arch. 125.

Oxgang, or Oxgate, fifteen acres of land. Corrupted, in the north, to osken.—Kelm. Domes. Illustr.

Oyer (to hear), the ancient word for assizes; oyer of a deed, i.e., the right of a defendant to have a deed read to him, is abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 55.

Oyer de Record, a petition made in court that the judges, for better proof's sake, will hear or look upon any record.

Oyer and Terminer, a commission directed to the judges and other gentlemen of the county to which it is issued, by virtue whereof they have power to hear and determine treasons, and all manner of felonies and trespasses. Terminer is sometimes written determiner.

When any sudden insurrection takes place, or any public outrage is committed which requires speedy reformation, or there is a press of business, then a special commission is immediately granted.

Oyer and Terminer, Courts of, and General Gaol Delivery. See ASSIZES.

Oyez (hear ye), the introduction to any proclamation or advertisement given by the public criers both in England and Scotland. It is pronounced oh! yes! See NORMAN-FRENCH.

Oysters. Stealing oysters from oyster beds properly marked out is felony and punishable as simple larceny, i.e., by penal servitude up to three years, or imprisonment up to three years, and, if a male under 16, with or without whipping. Dredging or netting for oysters in a bed is a misdemeanour punishable by imprisonment up to three months, with or without hard labour. See Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 26.

Oyster beds are protected by Part III. of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 45), and a close time for oysters is provided by the Sea Fisheries (Oyster, Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 42), being between 15th June and 4th August for 'deep sea oysters,' and between 14th May and 4th August for other oysters. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Fish (Sea)'.

Oysters are included in the term sea-fish; see Sea-Fishing Industry Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 45).

An action in rem will lie for damage caused by the negligent grounding of a ship on an oyster bed (The Swift, 1901, P. 168), and a claim will lie for damage caused by the discharge of a sewer causing contamination (Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., 1906, 1 K. B. 648).

P.

Paage [Old Fr., fr. paagium, Low Lat.], a toll for passage through another's land. Obsolete.

Pacare, to pay.

Pacatio, payment.—Mat. Par., A.D. 1248.

Pace, a measure of length containing two feet and a half. The geometrical pace is five feet long; the common pace is the length of a step, the geometrical is the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

Paceatur (let him be freed or discharged).

Pack of Wool, a horse load, which consists of 17 stone and 2 pounds, or 240 pounds weight.—Fleta, I. lib. 2, c. xii.

Package, Scavage, Ballage, and Portage, duties anciently charged in the port of London on the goods imported and exported by aliens, or by denizens being the sons of aliens.

The Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 66, authorized the Lords of the Treasury to purchase these duties from the city. This was done at an expense of about 140,000*l.*, and the duties were abolished.—McCull. Com. Dict.

Packed Parcels, the name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones (each bearing a different address) collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together. The charging by a railway company of a higher rate for 'packed' than other parcels has been determined frequently to be illegal; see G. W. Ry. Co. v. Sutton, (1869) L. R. 4 H. L. 226.

Packing. False packing of hay and straw in the metropolis is penal under the Hay and Straw Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 114), which inflicts a penalty of 10*l.* It only applies to the County of London. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Hay.'

Pact, or Pactio [fr. pacte, Fr.; pactum, Lat.], a contract, bargain, covenant.

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. 7 Co. 23.—(Private compacts cannot derogate from public right.)

Pacta quæ contra leges constitutionesque vel contra bonos mores sunt nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est.—(It is undoubted law that agreements have no force which are contrary to law or the constitutions, or to good morals.)

Pacta quæ turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Dig. 2, 14, 27, s. 4.—(Agreements founded on an immoral consideration are not to be observed.) See ILLEGAL CONTRACT.

Pactio aliquid licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur. Co. Litt. 166 a.—(By special agreement things are allowed which are not otherwise permitted.)

Pactum constitutæ pecuniæ, an agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or an agreement by which a person promises to pay a creditor.—Civ. Law.

Pactum de non petendo, an agreement made between a creditor and his debtor that the former will not demand from the latter the debt due. By this agreement the debtor is freed from his obligation.—Civ. Law. This is not unlike the covenant not to sue of our Common Law.

Pactum de quotâ litis, an agreement by which a creditor promised to pay a portion of a debt difficult to recover, to a person who undertook to recover it.—Civ. Law.

Padder, a robber, a foot highwayman or foot-pad.

Paddock [fr. panne, Sax., a park], a small inclosure for deer or other animals.

Pagoda, a temple; also a gold coin in the south of India valued at 8*s.*—Indian.

Pagus, a county.—Jac. Law Dict.

Pains and Penalties, Bills of, Acts of Parliament to condemn particular persons for treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties beyond or contrary to the Common Law, to serve a special purpose. They are in fact new laws, made pro re natâ. It is an incident of such bills that persons who are to be affected by them are entitled by custom to be heard at the Bar of the House in person or by counsel. But on a bill to disfranchise the borough of St. Albans, this claim was disallowed.

Paintings. Works of painting are included in 'artistic work' for the purposes of the Copyright Act, 1911 (s. 35). See COPYRIGHT.

Pairing-off, a practice which is said to have originated in the time of Cromwell, whereby two members of the House of Commons, or other deliberative assembly, of opposite opinions, agree to absent themselves from voting on a particular division or during a given period.

Pais, or Pays, the people out of whom a jury is taken; a corruption of pagus.

Pais, Conveyances in, ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country

—i.e., upon the land to be transferred.—Obs.

Pais, Estoppel in. See ESTOPPEL.

Pais, Trial by, a trial by the country—i.e., a jury.—3 Steph. Com.

Palace. A palace, which is a royal residence, is privileged from the execution of legal process within its precincts; but the privilege does not, it seems, extend to a royal palace, e.g., Hampton Court, which is not a royal residence: see A.-G. v. Dakin, (1869-70) L. R. 4 H. L. 338, where there was a remarkable difference of opinion amongst the judges; Combe v. De la Bere, (1881) 22 Ch. D. 316.

Palace Court. An inferior court of the sovereign at Westminster. Abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101. See MARSHALSEA, COURT OF.

Palace of Westminster, the official name for the buildings which contain the Houses of Parliament (28 Hen. 8, c. 12).

Palagium, a duty to lords of manors for exporting and importing vessels of wine at any of their ports.—Jac. Law Dict.

Palatine, possessing royal privileges. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Palfridus, a palfrey, a horse to travel on.

Paling-man, a merchant denizen, or one born within the English pale.

Pallo cooperire. It was anciently a custom where children were born out of wedlock and their parents afterwards intermarried, that the children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnized. It was in the nature of adoption. The children were legitimate by the Civil, but not by the Common Law.—Jac. Law Dict. See BASTARD.

Palmer's Act, the Central Criminal Court Act, 1856 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 16), enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court to be tried in that Court, in order to give him a trial free from local prejudice. So called from the poisoner William Palmer, of Rugeley, in Staffordshire, who was tried and convicted at the Central Criminal Court in 1856. See Trial of William Palmer, 1912, ed. by George H. Knott.

And see HINDE PALMER'S ACT.

Palimstry, the practice of telling the character, and assuming to foretell the future, by inspection of the hands. Pretending to tell fortunes or deceiving 'by palmistry or otherwise' renders the palmist liable to conviction as a rogue and vagabond. See R. v. Entwistle 1899, 1 Q. B. 846, and VAGRANT.

Pamphlet [fr. par un filet, Fr., by a thread], a small book, usually printed in the octavo form, and stitched.—The Act 10 Anne, c. 19, s. 113, as to the printers of pamphlets, was repealed by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 99. See now PRINTERS.

Pandectæ, or Digesta. In the last month of the year A.D. 530, Justinian, by a constitution addressed to Tribonian, empowered him to name a commission for the purpose of forming a code out of the writings of those jurists who had enjoyed the Jus respondendi, or, as it is expressed by the emperor, 'antiquorum prudentium quibus auctoritatem conscribendarum interpretandarumque legum sacratissimi principes præbuerunt.' The compilation, however, comprises extracts from some writers of the republican period.—Const. Deo Auctore. Ten years were allowed for the completion of the work. The instructions of the emperor were, to select what was useful, to omit what was antiquated or superfluous, to avoid unnecessary repetitions, to get rid of contradictions, and to make such other changes as should produce out of the mass of ancient juristical writings a useful and complete body of law (jus Antiquum);—the work was to be named Digesta, a Latin term indicating an arrangement of materials; or Pandectæ, a Greek word expressive of the comprehensiveness of the work. It was also declared that no commentaries should be written on this compilation, but permission was given to make paratila, or references to parallel passages, with a short statement of their contents (Const. Deo Auctore, s. 12). It was also declared that abbreviations (sigla) should not be used for forming the text of the Digest. The work was completed in three years (17 Cal. Jan. A.D. 533), as appears by a constitution, both in Greek and Latin, which confirmed the work, and gave to it legal authority.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

The number of writers from whose works extracts were made is thirty-nine.

Justinian's plan embraced two principal works, one of which was to be a selection from the jurists, and the other from the Constitutions. The first, the Pandects, was very appropriately intended to contain the foundation of the law; it was the first work since the date of the Twelve Tables, which in itself, and without supposing the existence of any other, might serve as a central point of the whole body of the law. It may be properly called a code, and the first complete code since the time of the Twelve Tables, though a large part of its contents is not law, but is dogmatic, or is taken up with the investigation of particular cases. Instead of the insufficient rules of Valentinian III., the excerpts in the Pandects are taken immediately from the writings of the jurists in great numbers, and arranged according to their matter. The code also has a more comprehensive plan than the earlier codes, since it comprises both rescripts and edicts. These two works, the Pandects and the Code, ought properly to be considered as the completion of Justinian's designs. The Institutiones cannot be viewed as a third work; independent of both, it serves as an introduction to them, or as a manual. Lastly, the Novellæ are single and subsequent additions or alterations, and it is merely an accidental circumstance that a third edition of the code was not made at the end of Justinian's reign, which would have comprised the Novellæ that had a permanent application.—Savigny, as quoted in Smith's Dict. of Antiq., voce 'Pandectæ.'

The Pandects are divided into fifty Books, each book containing several Titles, divided into Laws, and the Laws generally into several Parts or Paragraphs.

In order to prevent the circulation of incorrect editions, three Ultramontane and three Citramontane scholars were chosen every year in the University of Bologna, and termed PECIARI; they were excused from all other munera publica, and held their sessions once a week for the purpose of correcting imperfect copies in possession of circulating libraries; a fine of five soldi was imposed on all possessors of defective books, together with the expenses of correction, for which purpose every doctor or scholar was obliged to lend his own perfect copy, under pain of a fine of five lire; hence the term exempla correctæ et bene emendata. Books thus corrected were advertised by the bedel.—1 Colqu. R. C. L. 67-73.

Padoxator, a brewer.—Old Records.

Padoxatrix, a woman that brews and sells ale.

Panel [fr. panellum, Lat.; panneau, Fr., a square or panel]. 1. A little part, or rather a schedule or page, containing the names of such jurors as the sheriff returns to pass upon a trial; and empannelling a jury is nothing but the entering them into the sheriff's roll or book.—Jac. Law Dict.; Co. Litt. 158 b.

2. In Scots law, the accused person in a criminal trial after appearance in Court.

3. Panel of Arbitrators, the name given to the permanent Court or Tribunal established under the Hague Arbitration Convention.

The term is often applied to the list of such medical practitioners as have agreed to administer the Medical Benefit under the National Health Insurance Acts. Those entitled to be treated by such a medical practitioner are popularly called 'panel-patients,' and the word is used to denote a list of any authoritative persons or consultants where determination or advice is required by statute, e.g., arbitrators under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919; and Rules of 1925 under s. 84 of the Law of Property Act, S. R. & O., 1925, No. 1182/L. 36 (Restrictive Covenants); Housing and Town Planning Act, etc. See REFEREE.

Pannage [fr. pannagium, Low Lat.; panage, Fr.]. 1. Food that swine feed on in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, etc., which some have called pawnes. 2. The money taken by the agisters for the food of hogs fed with mast of the royal forests. See Williams on Rights of Common, p. 168; Manwood, ch. xii.

Pannagium est pastus porcorum, in nemoribus et in silvis, de glandibus, etc. 1 Bul. 7.—(A pannagium is a pasture of hogs, in woods and forests, upon acorns, and so forth.)

Pannel. See PANEL.

Pannellation, act of empannelling a jury.

Pannier-man, one who called the members in the Inns of Court to dinner, etc., and provided mustard, pepper, and vinegar for the hall; whence those who wait at table at the Inns are called 'panniers.'

Pannus, a garment made with skins.—Flota, lib. 2, c. xiv.

Pantomime, a dramatic performance in which gestures take the place of words. See Lee v. Simpson, (1847) 3 C. B. 871.

Papal Bull. 1. The seal affixed to certain documents issued by the Pope. 2. Such a document itself. The bringing of papal bulls into the United Kingdom was at one time treason; but see the Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59).

Paper. As to the paper on which proceedings in the Supreme Court must be printed, see PRINTING.

Paper Blockade. The state of a line of coast proclaimed to be under blockade in time of war, when the naval force on watch is not sufficient to repel a real attempt to enter. See BLOCKADE.

Paper Book, the issues in law, etc., upon special pleadings, formerly made up by the clerk of the papers, who was an officer for that purpose, but latterly by the plaintiff's attorney or agent. See Jac. Law Dict.; 3 Bl. Com. 317.

Any party who enters an action for trial must deliver to the officer of the Court two copies of the whole of the pleadings, one for the use of the judge at the trial (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVI., r. 30).

Paper-credit, credit given on the security of any written obligation purporting to represent property.

Paper-days. In each of the Common Law Courts certain days were appointed in each term, called Special Paper Days, because the Court on those days proposed to hear the cases entered in the Special Paper for argument. There were also fixed in the Queen's Bench, Crown Paper-days for disposing of business on the Crown side of the Court. On these days no motions were heard. Since the coming into force of the Judicature Acts, arrangements similar to those above mentioned continue to be made.

Paper Duty Repeal. This was effected by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 20.

Paper Money, bank notes, bills of exchange, and promissory notes. On the outbreak of the war with Germany in August, 1914, the Government issued Currency notes for 1l. and 10s. respectively to a considerable amount. The first issued were soon called in, others of better design and less easy to imitate being substituted. Currency notes were commonly called 'Treasury notes,' and were legal tender for the payment of any amount. See Currency and Bank Notes Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 14), and (the Amendment Act), c. 72. These Acts have been repealed (except penal and formal provisions) by the Currency and Bank Notes Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 13), which authorizes the Bank of England to issue Bank notes for 1l. and 10s., payable only at the head office in London but to be legal tender in Scotland and Northern Ireland for any amount, as the 1914 currency notes are to be deemed bank notes.

Paper Office (in the Palace of Whitehall), an ancient office where all the public writings, matters of state and council, proclamations, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the King's ministers abroad, and, generally, all the papers and dispatches that passed through the offices of the Secretaries of State, were deposited. Now merged in the Public Record Office.

Also an office or room in the Court of King's Bench where the records belonging to that Court are deposited; sometimes called Paper-mill.

Papist [fr. papa, Lat., a pope], one who, adhering to the communion of the Church of Rome, maintains the supreme ecclesiastical power of the Pope, as contradistinguished from English Protestants who in Statutes, Canons, and the 36th Article of Religion maintain the supreme ecclesiastical power of the sovereign. From the date of the Reformation Papists, either under that title or under the title of persons professing the Popish religion, or of Popish recusants convict, were subjected, by one statute after another, to various civil and religious disabilities, the removal of which began in 1788, and was to a great extent completed by the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act, 1829, which Act and other Acts, the earliest being an Act of 1791, speak of them as Roman Catholics. See ROMAN CATHOLICS, and consult Lilly and Wallis's Manual of the Law specially affecting Catholics (1893).

Par, state of equality; equal value. Par value, the face value of a security or share as contrasted with its market price or selling value. See EXCHANGE.

Paragium, the tenure between parceners, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service.—Domesday.

Parage, or Paragium, an equality of blood or dignity; but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between coheirs; more properly, however, an equality of condition among nobles, or persons holding by a noble tenure. Thus, when a fief is divided among brothers, the younger hold their part of the elder by parage, i.e., without any homage or service. Also the portion which a woman may obtain on her marriage.

Paragraph, a part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete. Modern deeds and wills are frequently drawn in paragraphs.

Paramount, superior; having the highest jurisdiction, as lord paramount, the supreme lord of the fee; the sovereign.

Paraphernalia [fr. παρά, Gk., beyond; and φερνῶν, dower], jewellery and ornaments which a husband has given to his wife before or during marriage. Whether these were meant to be absolute gifts or were merely paraphernalia for her adornment as a spouse is a question of fact (Tasker v. Tasker, 1895, P. 1). At law, before the Married

Women's Property Act (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), the husband, in his lifetime, might dispose of his wife's paraphernalia; excepting, indeed, her necessary apparel; and they were liable to the claims of the husband's creditors, with the like exception. But the wife was entitled to her paraphernalia against his representatives; for the husband could not, by will, dispose of them, or leave them to his representatives. Paraphernalia were deemed gifts sub modo only, i.e., for the purpose of being worn by the wife as ornaments of her person, and it is otherwise in the case of wearing apparel purchased by the wife with money supplied by the husband (Masson, Templier & Co. v. De Fries, 1909, 2 K. B. 831). But if the like articles were bestowed upon her by her father, or by a relative, or even by a stranger, before or after marriage, they would be deemed absolute gifts to her separate use; and then, if received with the husband's consent, he could not, nor could his creditors, dispose of them, any more than they could of any other property received and held to her separate use. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Parasceve, the sixth day of the last week in Lent, particularly called Good Friday. It is a dies non juridicus.

Parasitus, a domestic servant.—Blount.

Parasynoxis, a convective, or unlawful meeting.—Civ. Law.

Paratitla, an abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.—Civ. Law. See PANDECTÆ.

Paravall [fr. par, Fr., and avayler, to dismiss], the lowest tenant of a fee; or he who is immediate tenant to one who holds of another.

Parcel, the legal term for a part of land, defined for the purposes of a search under the Land Charges Act, 1925, by rule 16 of the Local Land Charges Rules, 1927, S. R. & O., 1927, No. 869 L. 33, as land or buildings in separate occupation or separately rated at the time of search (see the Rules).

Parcelle terræ (a parcel of land).

Parcel Makers, two officers in the Exchequer who formerly made the parcels of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charged them with everything they had levied for the sovereign's use within the time of their being in office, and delivered the same to the auditors, to make up their accounts therewith.—Prac. Erch.

Parcels, the technical term for the description of the property dealt with by a conveyance, mortgage, or other assurance. The description may be express and independent, or by reference to the recitals in the deed, or to the subsequent parts of the instrument, or to some other instrument (Dav. Prac. Conv., vol. i.). In modern practice a description of the property is often set out in a schedule to the deed coupled with a reference to a plan drawn on the deed. If a plan is used, great care should be taken (which it very often is not) to ensure that the plan is accurate. As to a purchaser's right to have the property conveyed to him by reference to a plan, see Re Sansom, 1910, 1 Ch. 741; Re Sparrow, 1910, 2 Ch. 60. See also REGISTRATION OF TITLE TO LAND.

Parcels, Bill of, an account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser.

Parcenary, the tenure of lands by parceners. See COPARCENERS.

Parchment, skins of sheep dressed for writing [fr. pergamena, Lat.], so called because invented at Pergamus, in Asia Minor, by King Eumenes, when paper, which was in use in Egypt only, was prohibited by Ptolemy to be transported into Asia. It is used for deeds; and was used for writs of summons previously to November 1, 1875. See Judicature Act, 1875, R. S. C. Ord. V., r. 10; Ord. LXVI., r. 3. As to repeal of provision in Coroners Act, 1887, which maintained the use of parchment in the case of inquisitions by coroners of murder and manslaughter till 1916, see Indictments Act, 1915, Sched. II. Indictments may be on durable paper (ibid., Sched. I.).

Parco fracto, a writ against him who violently broke a pound, and took away beasts lawfully impounded.—Reg. Brev. 166.

Pardon, forgiveness of a crime; remission of punishment.

The pardoning of criminals is the peculiar prerogative of the sovereign. See 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed. 466-477.

The sovereign may pardon all offences merely against the Crown and the public, excepting: (1) That to preserve the liberty of the subject, the committing any man to prison out of the realm is, by the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2, c. 2), made a præmunire (see that title), unpardonable even by the Crown; and (2) that the sovereign cannot pardon where private justice is principally concerned in the prosecution of offenders—non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuriæ et damno aliorum.

Neither at Common Law could the sovereign pardon an offence against a penal statute after information brought; for thereby the informer had acquired a private property in his part of the penalty. But the Remission of Penalties Act, 1859, enables the Crown to remit penalties for offences, although payable to parties other than the Crown; and a special power of a similar character, limited to offences against the Sunday Observance Act, 1781, is conferred by the Remission of Penalties Act, 1875. By the Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2), no pardon under the Great Seal of England is pleadable to an impeachment by the Commons in Parliament. But after the impeachment has been solemnly heard and determined, the prerogative of pardon may be extended to the person impeached.

A pardon may be conditional; see Criminal Justice Act, 1827, s. 13.

The effect of a pardon is to make the offender a new man (novus homo), to acquit him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to the offence pardoned, and not so much to restore his former as to give him new credit and capacity. Nevertheless the judgment remains formally unreversed, and therefore it was proposed by Sir F. Pollock, A.-G., that when the Crown pardons any adjudged guilty on the ground that the evidence rightly viewed does not warrant the judgment, the prisoner should assign and the Attorney-General should confess error on the record, whereby the judgment would be reversed, and a similar suggestion was made by the Committee appointed in 1904 by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas to inquire into the circumstances of the two convictions of offences (for which he had been doubly pardoned) of Mr. Adolf Beck, a remarkable case of mistaken identity. The Committee suggested quashing the conviction on motion by the Attorney-General and entering an acquittal as of record. In the Beck case the first of the two 'pardons' granted was in the following form:—

Edward R. & I.

Whereas Adolf Beck was at the Sessions of the Central Criminal Court commencing on the 24th day of February, 1896, convicted on certain charges of obtaining rings and other articles by false pretences with intent to defraud, and was sentenced to seven years penal servitude;

We in consideration of some circumstances humbly represented unto us, are Graciously pleased to extend our Grace and Mercy unto him, and to grant him our Free Pardon for the offences of which he stands convicted;

* Our Will and Pleasure, therefore, is that you do take due notice hereof.

And for so doing this shall be your warrant. Given at our Court at St. James's, the twenty-sixth day of July, 1904, in the fourth year of our Reign.

Signed A. Akers-Douglas.

To our Trusty and Well-Beloved

The Justices of the Central

Criminal Court, The Clerk of the said Court, and all others whom it may concern.

By His Majesty's Commons.

In modern times pardons have only been granted upon the advice of a Secretary of State. The Home Secretary in effect grants the pardon. As to consulting the Court of Criminal Appeal, see Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 19. See PREROGATIVE OF MERCY.

Pardoners, persons who carried about the Pope's indulgences, and sold them to any who would buy them.

Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis. Co. Litt. 80.—(Parent is a general name for every kind of relationship.)

Parens Patriæ, the sovereign, as parens patriæ, has a kind of guardianship over various classes of persons, who, from their legal disability, stand in need of protection, such as infants, idiots, and lunatics.

Parent includes, for the purpose of the Education Act, 1921 (s. 170 (12)), 'guardian and every person who is liable to maintain or has the actual custody of the child or young person'; and for the purpose of vaccination, the father and mother of a legitimate child, the mother of an illegitimate child, and any person having its custody.—Vaccination Act of 1867, s. 35, and of 1871, s. 4.

Parentela, or de parentelâ se tollere, signified a renunciation of one's kindred and family. This was, according to ancient custom, done in open court, before the judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a just cause. We read of it in the laws of Henry I. After such abjuration, the person was incapable of inheriting anything from any of his relations, etc.

Parenthesis, part of a sentence occurring in the middle thereof, and usually enclosed between marks like ( ), the omission of which part would not injure the grammatical construction of the rest of the sentence.

Parenticide [fr. parens, Lat., a father, and cædo, to kill], one who murders a parent.

Parents, in loco, a person undertaking the office and duty of a father to make provision for a child of another (Powys v. Mansfield, (1837) 3 My. & Cr. 359).

Parergon. 1. One work executed in the intervals of another; a subordinate task.

2. The title of a work on the Canons, in great repute, by Ayliffe.

Pares, a person's peers or equals; as the jury for trial of causes, who were originally the vassals or tenants of the lord, being the equals or peers of the parties litigant. Magna Charta (see that title) provides against the condemnation of a freeman nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum, vel per legem terræ.

Parlar, Parlah, an outcast or lowest caste (numbering some sixty millions) of the Hindoos.—Indian.

Parl passu [Lat.], with equal step, equally, without preference.

Parish [fr. parochia, Low Lat.; paroisse Fr., fr. παροικία Gk., habitation], the particular charge of a secular priest. Parochia est locus quo degit populus alicujus ecclesiæ. 5 Co.—(A parish is a place in which the people of a particular church reside.) It is that circuit of ground which is committed to the care of one parson or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein.—1 Bl. Com. 111. An extended definition of 'parish' for ecclesiastical purposes is given in para. 1 of the Schedule to the Representation of the Laity Measure, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, No. 2). As to the origin of parishes, see ibid.; 2 Hallam's Mid. Ages, c. vii, pt. 1, p. 144.

The Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 68 (4), defines a parish 'a place for which immediately before the 1st April, 1927, a separate poor rate was or could be made, or a separate overseer was or could be appointed.'

Parish Apprentices, persons who were bound out by the overseers of parishes, or by the guardians of the poor. The children of poor persons could be apprenticed out by the overseers, with consent of two justices, and by the guardians without such consent, till twenty-one years of age, to such persons as were thought fitting; who were no longer, however, compellable to take them.—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844, s. 13. This was repealed by the Poor Law Act, 1927, now repealed. For the present law, see Poor Law Act, 1930 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 59 to 66, also s. 69 (naval service for boys), and the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 393 (merchant service); and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Poor (Apprentices).'

Parish Boundaries, see 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 2; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, ss. 34–6; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, s. 28; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, ss. 39–45; and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 83, ss. 1, 9. See also 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 278; and as to the better arrangement of divided parishes, see 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61. In order to perpetuate the memory of parish boundaries it was anciently the custom for the parishioners to walk round or perambulate the parish generally during Rogation Week. This was called 'beating the bounds.' Although the fixing of parish boundaries by Act of Parliament and the more general use of maps has done away with this necessity, perambulations still take place in many parishes. As to alteration of parish boundaries, see Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 141.

Parish Clerk. This office is of extreme antiquity—next in dignity to the clergy, says Leland; but it is a temporal office (Lawrence v. Edwards, 1891, 2 Ch. 72). He is now appointed by the incumbent and the parochial church council jointly. The remuneration and terms depended on the custom of the particular parish and on the agreement made with him—58 Geo. 3, c. 45; 59 Geo. 3, c. 134; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104; 11 & 12 Geo. 5, No. 1. See note Key and Elph. Prec., 12th ed., vol. i, p. 118. The Company of Parish Clerks is the most ancient in the City of London; yet they stand at the bottom of the list, and have neither livery nor the privilege of making their members free of the City. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed. 700.

For the appointment of the clerk of the parish council under the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), see s. 114, ibid.

Parish Constables. See CONSTABLES, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 92, by which provision is made for their abolition.

Parish Council. Established by the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 1 (see now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 43–55), for every rural parish (i.e., every parish in a rural sanitary district) having a population of 300 or upwards, the county council having also power to group parishes under a common parish council, and being bound to establish a parish council if the parish meeting of a parish having a population of 100 or upwards so resolve, and having power to establish one with the consent of the parish meeting if the population be less than 100.

The parish council is elected from among the parochial electors, or persons who have resided for twelve months in the parish or within three miles of it. The number of councillors is fixed by each county council within the limits of five and fifteen members. The term of office, which was by the Act of 1894 one year, was altered to three years by the Parish Councillors (Tenure of Office) Act, 1899, by which the councillors go out of office on the 15th of April in every third year, after the 15th of April, 1901, and by the 1933 Act, likewise.

The main duty of parish councils is to manage parish property. They are bodies corporate, having power to hold land without any license in mortmain, and to acquire by agreement land for recreation grounds and other parish purposes, and to acquire land compulsorily for allotments. They may also utilize wells, cover ponds, acquire rights of way, and accept and hold any gifts of property, real or personal, for the benefit of the inhabitants of the parish or any part thereof; see the 1933 Act, Sched. III., Part IV.

The Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 25), transferred the duties of the parish council in Scotland to various other local bodies, and the parish council as such is now non-existent.

Parish Meeting. Established for every rural parish by the Local Government Act, 1894 (see now Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 43-55, 77, and Sched. III., Part VI.), and consisting of the registered parliamentary electors and county council electors of the parish, each having one vote and no more on any question, or in the case of an election for each of any number of persons not exceeding the number to be elected; bound to assemble annually, or if there be no parish council, at least twice a year. The proceedings must not begin earlier than 6 p.m. Every question is decided by a majority of those present at a meeting, and voting, the decision of the chairman being final unless a poll, which is taken by ballot, be demanded. On the question of the appointment of chairman for a year, or of the adoption of any 'adoptive Act' (see below) and other questions, any one elector may demand a poll. The chairman of the parish council, or any two parish councillors, or any six registered electors, may, by the 1933 Act, Sched. III., Part VI., para. 2, convene a parish meeting.

The main business of a parish meeting is to elect the parish council. But whether the parish has a parish council or not, the parish meeting had the exclusive power of adopting the Baths and Wash-houses Acts, the Public Libraries Act, and other 'adoptive Acts.' See that title; PUBLIC HEALTH.

If the population of a parish be below 300, the county council may by order establish a parish council for that parish.

The annual assembly of the parish meeting is on some day between 1st March and 1st April.

Parishes (New) Acts (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), and other Acts. See NEW PARISHES ACTS.

Parish Officers, churchwardens, formerly overseers, and constables.

Parish Priest, the parson; a minister who holds a parish as a benefice. If the predial tithes are unappropriated, he is called rector; if appropriated, vicar.

Parish Registers, of baptisms, marriages, and burials directed to be kept by Canon 70, and by the Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), repealed as to marriages by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 86). The Parochial Registers and Records Measure, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, No. 1), provides for the care and custody of parochial registers. See Hubback on Succession, p. 469.

Paritor [fr. apparitor, Lat.], a beadle; a summoner to the Courts of civil law.

Park [fr. parcus, Lat., fr. parco, to spare], a place of privilege for wild beasts of venery, and other wild beasts of the forest and chase; who are to have a firm place and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them without licence of the owner. A park differs from a forest, in that, as Compton observes, a subject may hold a park by prescription or royal grant. It differs from a chase because a park must be enclosed; if it lie open, it is a good cause of seizing it into the sovereign's hands, as a free chase may be if it lie enclosed. To a park three things are required—1st, a grant thereof; 2nd, enclosure by pale, wall, or hedge; 3rd, beasts of a park, such as buck, does, etc.; see Sir Charles Howard's case, (1626) Cro. Car. 59; Pease v. Courtney, 1904, 2 Ch. p. 509. The word 'park,' as used in the Settled Land Acts, is not confined to an ancient legal park, but includes an ordinary private park (Pease v. Courtney).

Royal Parks.—As to the management of the royal parks, see the Parks Regulation Act, 1872; London Parks and Works Act, 1887; and Parks Regulation (Amendment) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 36); also Housing, Town and Country Planning, and Restrictions on Ribbon Development Acts; Chit. Stat. tit. 'Crown,' and Bailey v. Williamson, (1872) L. R. 8 Q. B. 118.

Gifts for Parks.—By 34 Vict. c. 13, repealed and re-enacted by the Mortmain and Charitable Trusts Act, 1888, proceeding on the preamble that it is expedient to facilitate gifts of land for the purpose of forming public parks, schools, and museums, it is provided that all gifts and assurances of land, up to a limited acreage, and whether made by deed, or by will or codicil, for such purposes, and all bequests of personal estate to be applied in or towards the purchase of land for such purposes, shall be valid, notwithstanding the Statutes of Mortmain; and see OPEN SPACES.

Park-bote (to be quit of inclosing a park or any part thereof).—4 Inst. 308.

Parker, a park-keeper.

Parkhurst Prison, established in the Isle of Wight for the confinement and correction of young offenders, male or female; now used for male prisoners under sentence of penal servitude.

Parliament, the Imperial. Formerly the Legislature of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, now, by the Royal and Parliamentary Titles Act, 1927 (17 Geo. 5, c. 4), s. 2, styled the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, (Southern Ireland or the Irish Free State having gotten the status of a 'Dominion,' see IRELAND), consisting of the King, and the three estates of the Realm, i.e., the lords spiritual and temporal (called the House of Lords or Upper House of Parliament), and the persons elected by the people (called the House of Commons, or Lower, or Nether House of Parliament). Under the Government of Ireland Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 67), s. 19 (a), and Sched. 5, Part II., as amended by 13 Geo. 5, sess. 2, c. 2, s. 1, 13 members are returned to the House of Commons in the Imperial Parliament by Northern Ireland, and the Irish Free State is excluded. Until the reign of Henry the Fourth both Houses sat together. See 4 Inst. p. 5.

The word is generally considered to be derived from the French parler, to speak. 'It was first applied,' says Blackstone, 'to general assemblies of the state, under Louis VII., in France, about the middle of the twelfth century.' The earliest mention of it in the statutes is in the preamble to the Statute of Westminster 1st, A.D. 1272.

See titles HOUSE OF COMMONS; HOUSE OF LORDS; ACT OF PARLIAMENT; May's Parliamentary Practice; Rogers on Elections; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Parliament.'

Parliament of Northern Ireland. See NORTHERN IRELAND.

Parliament Act. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Parliamentary Agents, persons professionally employed in the promotion of or opposition to private Bills, and otherwise in relation to private business in Parliament.

A solicitor may act as a parliamentary agent. As to agents entitled to practise before Election Committees, see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, s. 57.

Parliamentary Committee, a committee of members of the House of Peers, or of the House of Commons, appointed by either House for the purpose of making inquiries, by the examination of witnesses or otherwise, into matters which could not be conveniently inquired into by the whole House. Not only any Bill, but any subject that is brought under the consideration of either House, may, if the House thinks proper, be referred to a committee; and when the inquiry is ended, the committee, through their chairman, make a report to the House of the result. All private Bills, such as Bills for railways, canals, roads, or other undertakings, in which the public are concerned, are referred to committees of each House before they are sanctioned by that House. Their reports are not absolutely binding upon the House, but the House seldom reverses their decision.

As to the power of such committees to administer oaths to witnesses, see the Parliamentary Witnesses Oaths Act, 1871.

As to the powers of a Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Commons in respect of resolutions varying or renewing taxation, see Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 3, c. 5).

Parliamentary Committees are of four kinds: (1) of the whole House; (2) standing or sessional; (3) select; and (4) joint, i.e., composed of equal numbers of members of each House. Consult May's Parliamentary Practice.

Parliamentary Grants for Education. See EDUCATION.

Parliament House. The buildings comprising the courts, etc., of the Court of Session in Edinburgh.

Parlamentum indoctum (the unlearned Parliament). The Parliament of 6 Hen. 4, which assembled in 1404, into which no lawyer was admitted as a knight of the shire, through the insertion of a prohibition to that effect in the writ of summons framed by Lord Chancellor Beaufort.

Paroche, Parochia, a parish.

Parochial Assessment Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96), whereby poor-rates were made on the net annual value of the rateable property, is now repealed and the net annual rateable value is defined for the purposes of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, in s. 22 of the Act.

Parochial Chapels, places of public worship in which the rites of sacrament and sepulture are performed. See CHAPEL.

Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5 (No. 1)), a measure passed by the National Assembly of the Church of England to amend the law relating to parochial organization of the Church of England. It lays down that the primary duty of Parochial Church Councils is to co-operate with incumbents in the initiation, conduct, and development of church work, both within the parish and outside. Certain powers, duties, and liabilities of the vestry and of the churchwardens are transferred to the Parochial Church Council.

Parochial Electors, the persons entitled to vote at an election of parish councillors shall be the persons entitled to vote by the Representation of the People Acts: see Local Government Act, 1933, s. 53, i.e., the local government electors whose names are on the register of electors: see the R. P. Acts of 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 64), s. 4 (3), and 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 1.

Parochian, a parishioner.

Parol, or Parole [fr. parole, Fr.], by word of mouth; but the expression is also made use of to denote writings not under seal.

The pleadings in an action were, when they were given vivâ voce in court, frequently termed the parol.

Parol Agreements, such as are either by word of mouth or are committed to writing, but are not under seal. The Common Law draws only one great distinction, viz., between instruments under seal and instruments not under seal. See Leake or Chitty on Contracts.

Parol Arrest. Any justice of the peace may, by word of mouth, authorize any one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence.

Parol Demurrer, abolished by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 10.

Parol Evidence, testimony by the mouth of a witness. It is a general rule that oral evidence cannot be substituted for a written instrument, where the latter is required by law, or to give effect to a written instrument, defective in any particular essential to its validity; nor contradict, alter, or vary a written instrument, required by law, or agreed upon by the parties, as the authentic memorial of the facts which it recites. But parol evidence is admissible to defeat a written instrument on the ground of fraud, mistake, etc., or to apply it to its proper subject, or, in some instances, as ancillary to such application to explain the meaning of doubtful terms, or to rebut presumptions arising extrinsically. In these cases the parol evidence does not usurp the place of written evidence, but either shows that the instrument ought not to be allowed to operate at all, or is essential in order to give to the instrument its legal effect.

The general rule with regard to the admission of parol evidence to explain the meaning of, or to add to, vary, or alter the express terms of a deed, is, that it shall not be admitted (Henderson v. Arthur, 1907, 1 K. B. 10), except: (1) where, although the deed is clearly enough expressed, some ambiguity arises from extrinsic circumstances; (2) where the language of a charter or deed has become obscure from antiquity; (3) where the grant is uncertain owing to a want of acquaintance with the grantor's estate; (4) where it is important to show a consideration or a different consideration consistent with, and not repugnant to, that stated in the deed itself; (5) where it becomes necessary to show a different time of delivery from that at which the deed purports to have been made; (6) where it is sought to prove a customary right not expressed in the deed, but not inconsistent with any of its stipulations; or, lastly, where fraud or illegality in the formation of the deed is relied on to avoid it. If a clause in a deed be so ambiguously or defectively expressed that a court of justice cannot, even by reference to the context, collect the meaning of the parties, it would be void on account of uncertainty. Consult Chitty or Addison or Leake on Contracts; Best, Roscoe, or Taylor on Evidence; Wigram on Wills; Norton on Deeds.

Parole, the promise made by a prisoner of war, when he has leave to go anywhere, to return at a time appointed, or not to take up arms till exchanged.

Paricide, same as patricide (q.v.).

Parson [fr. persona, Lat., because the parson omnium personam in ecclesiâ sustinet; or from parochianus, the parish-priest.—Johnson; and anciently written persone.—Todd], 'the rector of a church parochial' (Co. Litt. 300 a); one that has a parochial charge or cure of souls. 'The most legal, most beneficial, and most honourable title that a parish priest can enjoy,' says Sir W. Blackstone.

A parson has the freehold for life of the parsonage-house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues. But these are sometimes appropriated, that is to say, the benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living; which the law esteems equally capable of providing for the service of the church as any single private clergyman: see 1 Bl. Com. 384. Many appropriations, however, are now in the hands of lay persons, who are usually styled, by way of distinction, lay impropriators. In all appropriations there is generally a spiritual person attached to the church, under the name of vicar, to whom the spiritual duty or cure of souls belongs, in the same manner as to the rector in parsonages not appropriate or rectories, and to whom a portion of the tithes, etc., is assigned.

The method of becoming a parson or vicar is much the same. There are four requisites: holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction. A parson or vicar may cease to be so by death; by cession, in taking another benefice, by consecration to a bishopric, by resignation, or by deprivation.—1 Bl. Com. 388, 392.

Parsonage. 1. The benefice of a parish. 2. The parson's house. As to borrowing money for building, rebuilding, or repairing a parsonage, see 'Gilbert Act' (16 Geo. 3, c. 53), the Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776, the Parsonages Act, 1865, and the Parsonages Measure, 1930; and as to dilapidations, see the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Acts, 1871 and 1872, and the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Measures, 1923–1929. Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

Parson impersonator [fr. persona impersonata, Lat.], a clerk presented, instituted, and inducted into a rectory, and thus in full and complete possession of the church.—1 Bl. Com. 391; Co. Litt. 300 a.

Parson Mortal [fr. persona mortalis, Lat.], a rector instituted and inducted for his own life. But any collegiate or conventual body, to whom a church was for ever appropriated, was termed persona immortalis.—Jac. Law Dict.

Pars pro toto, the name of a part used to represent the whole; as the roof for the house, ten spears for ten armed men, etc.

Pars rationabilis. See REASONABLE PARTS.

Partial Insanity, mental unsoundness always existing, although only occasionally manifest; such as monomania.—See Smith v. Tebbitt, (1867) L. R. 1 P. & D. 398.

Partial Loss. See ABANDONMENT.

Particula terræ, a rood.—Spelm.

Particeps criminis, or fraudis (a partner in crime, or fraud).

Particula, a small piece of land

Particular Average. See AVERAGE (2) (b).

Particular Estate, that interest which is granted or carved out of a larger estate, which then becomes an expectancy either in reversion or remainder. See 3 Prest. Conv. 169.

Particular Lien. See LIEN.

Particular Tenants, Alienation by, when they conveyed by a feoffment, fine, or recovery, a greater estate than the law entitled them to make, a forfeiture ensued to the person in immediate remainder or reversion. As if a tenant for his own life alienated by feoffment for the life of another or in tail or in fee, these being estates which either must or may last longer than his own, his creating them was not only beyond his power, and inconsistent with the nature of his interest, but was also a forfeiture of his own particular estate to him in remainder or reversion, who was entitled to enter immediately.

Fines and recoveries having been abolished and a feoffment having no longer a tortious operation (Real Property Act, 1845, s. 4), a tenant, by creating a larger interest than he has in the property, did not after the passing of that Act incur a forfeiture, for such a creation was then void as to the excess, and good for his own interest.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed. 463. The R. P. Act, 1845, has been repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925, and conveyance by feoffments has been abolished by s. 51 of the L. P. Act, 1925.

Particulars. The courts have a general jurisdiction, independently of statute, to order a detailed statement of the demand in any litigation, or of any defence, to be given that surprise may be avoided, and substantial justice promoted.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac. The necessity for application for particulars has become less frequent since the Judicature Acts, as the Rules of Court under those Acts have substituted a statement of claim containing the material facts on which the plaintiff relied for the declaration under the old practice, which only contained a legal statement of the plaintiff's cause of action.

It is provided, however, by R. S. C., Ord. XIX., r. 7, that:—

A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading, notice, or written proceeding requiring particulars, may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as may be just;

and see the Index to the Annual Practice of the Supreme Court, tit. 'Particulars'; see also County Court Rules, Orders VI. and XV.

Particulars of Sale, description of property offered for sale by auction. The property should be described with as much minuteness and accuracy as possible. It is the duty of a vendor to make himself duly acquainted with the peculiarities and incidents of the property he is going to sell; and when he describes it for the information of the purchaser to describe everything material to be known in order to judge of its nature and value, and on the sale of a partial interest, any substantial variation from the description will even at law render the contract voidable; see Flight v. Booth, (1834) 1 Bing. N. C. 77, per Tindal, C.J. If there be anything connected with the property important to be known which cannot be discerned or may be misapprehended by ocular inspection, it ought to be stated in the particulars: see Dav. Prec. Conv. vol. i. On the sale of property of any considerable size the particulars are usually accompanied by a plan. In sales by auction the conditions of sale are generally printed at the end of the particulars and followed by a short printed form of contract. See CONDITIONS OF SALE.

Parties, persons jointly concerned in any deed or act; litigants.

The Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XVI., make very full provision as to the joinder of parties and the consequences of misjoinder and non-joinder. All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative. Two or more defendants may be joined, in case the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress. Trustees, executors, and administrators may sue and be sued on behalf of or as representing the property or estate of which they are the trustees or representatives, without joining any of the parties beneficially interested in the trust or estate. Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one action, one or more of such parties may sue or be sued, or may be authorized by the Court to defend in such action, on behalf of or for the benefit of all parties so interested. 'No cause or matter shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every cause or matter deal with the matter in controversy, so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. The Court or a judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court or a judge to be just, order that the names of any parties, whether as plaintiffs or as defendants, improperly joined, be struck out, and that the names of any parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants, who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action, be added' (r. 11).

The same Order, XVI., by rr. 48-55, allows the introduction of 'third parties' in cases where the defendant claims any remedy over against any other person. See THIRD PARTY.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 225, replacing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 100, the word 'party' includes every person served with notice of or attending any proceeding, although not named on the record.

As to change of parties by death, etc., see ABATEMENT; and as to who ought to be made parties, see Dacey on Parties.

The order in which the parties to a conveyance are set out is as follows: (1) The owner of the legal inheritance; (2) Persons having equitable or beneficial interests in the inheritance; (3) Persons possessed of chattel interests; (4) The grantee or releasee; (5) Trustees for the grantee or releasee.

In criminal cases the parties are the prosecutor and the prisoner or defendant.

Parties to a cause, civil or criminal, have a right to be present, in any case, throughout the trial. See WITNESSES.

Partition, the act of dividing.

Before 1926 all co-owners of land might make partition, and coparceners were compellable to do so by Common Law. Co-owners, other than coparceners or copyholders, were compellable to make partition by 31 Hen. 8, c. 1 (the preamble of which sets forth the disadvantages of co-ownership), and 32 Hen. 8, c. 32, the latter Act applying to joint tenants and tenants in common holding for life or years.

Co-owners of copyhold were first enabled to make partition by s. 85 of the Copyhold Act, 1841, since re-enacted by s. 87 of the Copyhold Act, 1894.

With a view to the more convenient and perfect partition or allotment of the premises, equity frequently decreed a pecuniary compensation to one of the parties for 'owelty,' i.e., equality of partition, so as to prevent any injustice or unavoidable inequality, as where one party has laid out large sums in improvements on the estate.

On a partition, not every part of the estate need be divided. If there be three houses, it would not be right to divide every house, for that would be to spoil them; but some recompense is to be made, either by a sum of money or rent for owelty of partition, to those that have the houses of least value.

For an order for partition of a wall separating the gardens of two adjoining houses, see Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnson, 1894, 1 Ch. 508.

By the Partition Act, 1868, now repealed, it was provided (s. 3) that in a suit for partition where, if this Act had not been passed, a decree for partition might have been made, then if it appear to the Court that, by reason of the nature of the property to which the suit relates, or the number of the parties interested, or of any other circumstance, a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds would be more beneficial for the parties interested than a division of the property, the Court might, on the request of any of the parties interested, and notwithstanding the dissent or disability of any other of them, direct a sale of the property accordingly; and see also ss. 4, 5. The Partition Act, 1876, further amended the law. After 1925, co-owners, coparceners and all others entitled to undivided shares in land having been deprived of their legal title to a legal estate by the Law of Property Act, ss. 1 (6), 34, and Settled Land Act, s. 36, the entirety becoming vested in trustees for sale, the Partition Acts, 1868 and 1876, were repealed by the Law of Property Act, 3rd Sched., s. 1 (10). Sect. 28 (3) of that Act provides that where the net proceeds of sale have under the trusts affecting the same become absolutely vested in persons of full age in undivided shares (whether or not such shares may be subject to a derivative trust) the trustees for sale may partition the land remaining unsold or any part thereof or provide for payment of any equality money subject to the consents in the section provided for. Derivative trustees not having power to invest in land may obtain the requisite power under s. 57 of the Trustee Act, 1925. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Partition'; Selon on Judgments.

A party asking for a sale was not compellable to part with his share to his co-owners at a valuation (Pitt v. Jones, (1880) 5 App. Cas. 651).

Partition was one of the matters assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

Partition, Deed of, a primary or original conveyance. When an estate was held in community by joint tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, or joint heirs in gavelkind, and they were desirous of dividing it into distinct portions, to be exclusively enjoyed by each, and were not under legal disability, they could accomplish their object by this deed, and by s. 3 of the Real Property Act, 1845 (now repealed), the partition of any tenements except copyhold is void unless made by deed. Sometimes, instead of agreeing as to their several allotments, a reference was made to a person to divide the estate into the required portions, and one mode of effecting this division was to convey the whole estate to the proposed referee upon trust to convey the several allotments to the respective parties according to his award.

In Kent, where the land was of gavelkind tenure, they called these partitions shifting, from the Saxon, shiftan, to divide. For the present practice, see PARTITION.

Partition of Chattels. The Court may order partition of chattels owned in undivided shares upon application by the persons interested in a moiety or upwards (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 188).

Partition, Writ of, abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36.

Partnership, the relation which subsists between persons carrying on a business with a view to profit—so defined by s. 1, sub-s. 1, of the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), a codifying Act of fifty sections, 'to declare and amend the law of partnership,' which, in effect, transfers the law of the subject from the region of reported cases to that of the statute; 'Bovill's Act' (see that title) of 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 86), and a small part of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856, being the only previous statutory enactments on the subject.

Rules, which, however, are subject to any agreement express or implied between the partners, are laid down by s. 24 for determining the interest of partners in the partnership property and their rights and duties in relation to the partnership. They provide, amongst other things, for equal shares in profits and equal contributions to losses; for indemnification of every partner by the firm in respect of payments properly made for the firm; that every partner may take part in the business; that no partner is to be entitled to remuneration; that 'no person may be introduced as a partner without the consent of all existing partners'; that differences as to ordinary matters may be decided by a majority, but that 'no change may be made in the nature of the business without the consent of all existing partners'; and that the partnership books are to be kept at the place of business of the partnership where every partner may have access to them.

The Act of 1890 is mainly declaratory. The chief amendment is that of the 23rd section, by which the judgment creditor of a partner, instead of being able to execute not only against his debtor's separate property but also against the property of the firm, may obtain only an order charging the partner's interest in the partnership property, and appointing a receiver of his share of profits.

The dissolution of partnerships and the taking of partnership accounts are matters assigned to the Chancery Division (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (1) (b), replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34). The County Court has jurisdiction if the assets do not exceed 500*l.* (County Courts Act, 1934, s. 52 (f)).

Limited Partnership.—The Limited Partnerships Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 24), purposes to put the law relating to limited partners upon a definite and systematic footing so that an investor may utilize his capital in a trading concern, which has not been converted into a limited liability company, without taking upon himself too heavy a burden, and at the same time retain the right of reasonable investigation into the manner in which his money is being applied.

The principle of limited partnership is very similar to what is known in France as en commandite (see that title), the limited partners themselves being termed commanditaires.

A 'limited partner' is a person (including in this word a company (s. 4 (4)) who, at the time of entering into the partnership, contributes thereto a sum or sums as capital or property valued at a stated amount, and who is not liable for the debts or obligations of the firm beyond the amount so contributed.

Any partner who is not a limited partner is a 'general partner,' and there must be in the partnership at least one general partner who is liable for all debts and obligations of the firm (s. 3). The partners will be known and described collectively by a 'firm name' (s. 3). A limited partnership in a banking business must not consist of more than ten.

and in any other business, twenty partners (Companies Act, 1929, s. 357).

A limited partner remains a general partner, and does not secure for himself the limitation of liability until the limited partnership is registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, the registration being effected (s. 8) by the delivery of a statement, signed by the partners, containing certain specified particulars, viz., the firm name and the names of the partners, the nature and place of the business, the term of the partnership and the date of its commencement, a statement that the partnership is limited and the description of every limited partner as such, and the sum contributed by each limited partner, and whether paid in cash or how otherwise. If the nature of the partnership is changed in any of these particulars, the registrar must be notified within seven days.

As in an ordinary partnership, so in a limited partnership, the parties are to a great extent free to make whatever terms and conditions they please for controlling their actions inter se. But there are certain things which a limited partner must not do; thus, he cannot take part in the management of the business or bind the firm (s. 6), and if he does take part in the management, he becomes for the time being to all intents and purposes a general partner.

Further, a limited partner may not, either directly or indirectly, draw out or receive back any part of his contribution, and if he does he in no way lessens his liability (s. 4 (3)).

The limited partner, however, may inspect the books of the firm and examine into the state and prospects of the partnership business, and may also advise with the partners thereon. There are certain other conditions which will bind the partnership unless there is an agreement which provides differently. Thus by s. 6 (5)—

- (a) Any difference arising as to ordinary matters connected with the business may be decided by a majority of the general partners;
- (b) A limited partner may, with the consent of the general partners, assign his share, and upon such assignment the assignee becomes a limited partner with all the rights of the assignor;
- (c) The other partners shall not be entitled to dissolve the partnership by reason of any limited partner suffering his share to be charged for his separate debt;
- (d) A person may be introduced as a partner without the consent of the existing limited partners;

- (e) A limited partner shall not be entitled to dissolve the partnership by notice.

A limited partnership is not dissolved by the death of a limited partner, and in the case of his becoming a lunatic the Court will not consider this a ground for dissolution of the partnership unless the lunatic's share cannot be otherwise ascertained and realized (s. 6 (2)). The bankruptcy law applies to limited partnerships as if they were ordinary partnerships, and if all the general partners become bankrupt the assets of the partnership vest in the trustee (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 127). Consult Pollock or Lindley on Partnership; Hemmant on Limited Partnerships.

Part-owners, or Co-owners, joint owners, or tenants in common, who have a distinct, or at least an independent, although an undivided, interest in the property. If the property is in land, by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1 (6), a legal estate is not capable of subsisting or of being created in an undivided share in land and the beneficial interest in the property is merely equitable (ibid., sub-s. (3)). See, further, UNDIVIDED SHARES. Neither of them can transfer or dispose of the whole property, or act for the others as partners in relation thereto; each can merely deal with his own share, and to the extent of his own several right and interest. It is an entirely different relation from partnership.

Part-owners of ships are tenants in common, with distinct and undivided interest, and each is the agent of the others, as to the ordinary repairs, employment, and business of the ship, in the absence of any known dissent. The property in a ship, is by s. 5 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, divided into 64 shares, the limit having been raised from 32, by which it was fixed by the Act of 1854, to 64 by the Act of 1880. Consult Lindley on Partnership.

Partridge. See GAME. There may be larceny of partridges reared by a hen, though uncooped (R. v. Shickle, (1868) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 158).

Partus sequitur ventrem. Loosely, the offspring is the property of the owner of the dam.

Party-wall, a term which has been used in different senses, may mean (1) a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common: (2) a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighbouring owners: (3) a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements: (4) a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross easement in favour of the owner of the other moiety (Watson v. Gray, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 192).

The common use of a wall separating adjoining lands of different owners is prima facie evidence that the wall and the land on which it stands belongs to the owners of those adjoining lands, in equal moieties, as tenants in common, or would so belong if tenancy in undivided shares in a legal estate had not been done away with by the land legislation of 1925. Now under s. 38, and 1st Sched., Part 5, of the Law of Property Act, 1925, a party-wall of this class is considered to be severed vertically with cross easements or rights such as in (4), supra, corresponding to those which would have subsisted if a valid tenancy in common had been created. If a house be separated from other premises by a wall, and that wall belongs to the owner of the house, he is of common right bound to repair it; and an action will lie against him for not doing it.

As to meaning of 'party-wall,' and its height above roof, etc., in London, see London Building Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), ss. 5, 64, 65, 66; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Metropolis'; and as to respective rights of 'building owner' and 'adjoining owner,' see ss. 114 et seq. of that Act; and Mason v. Fulham Corporation, 1910, 1 K. B. 631.

'Party-wall' by s. 5 means:—

(a) A wall forming part of a building and used or constructed to be used for separation of adjoining buildings belonging to different owners or occupied or constructed or adapted to be occupied by different persons; or

(b) A wall forming part of a building and standing to a greater extent than the projection of the footings on lands of different owners.

Parvise, an afternoon's exercise or moot for the instruction of young students—bearing the same name originally with the Parvise (little-go) of Oxford.—Selden's Notes on Fortescue, c. li.

Pas (Fr.), precedence; right of going foremost.

Pasch [fr. pasahh, Heb.], the passover.

Pascha clausum, the octave of Easter, or Low-Sunday, which closes that solemnity.

Pascha floridum, the Sunday before Easter, called Palm-Sunday.

Pascha rents, yearly tributes paid by the clergy to the bishop or archdeacon at their Easter visitations.

Pascuage, the grazing or pasturage of cattle.

Pascuum, feeding, is wheresoever cattell are fed, of what nature soever the ground is, and cannot be demanded in a præcipe by that name (Co. Litt. 4 b). See PASTURA.

Pasnage, or Pathnage in woods, etc. See PANNAGE.

Passage, properly a way over water.

Passage Broker, any person who sells or lets steerage passages in any ship proceeding from the British Islands to any place out of Europe, not within the Mediterranean (see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 341). Such person requires a licence, in London of the justices of the peace, in a county borough of the borough council, and in a county district of the district council. See s. 343 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Passage, Court of. This is an ancient court of record for the trial of civil actions arising within the City of Liverpool; see the preamble to the Liverpool Court of Passage Act, 1893, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Local Courts.' This and an amending Act of 1896 were repealed by a local Act (the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1926 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. lxxiv.), ss. 244-263, providing for jurisdiction, rules of procedure, removal of actions to the High Court, transfers to the county courts, appeals, execution, etc.

Passagio, an ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea.—Reg. Brev. 193.

Passagium regis, a voyage or expedition to the Holy Land made by the kings of England in person.

Passator, he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage.

Passengers, persons conveyed from one place to another. Passenger ships are those peculiarly appropriated to the conveyance of passengers, as distinguished from cargo ships. In some respects, passengers by ship may be considered as a portion of the crew. They may be called on by the master or commander of the ship, in case of imminent danger, either from tempest or enemies, to lend their assistance for the general safety; and in the event of their declining, may be punished for disobedience. This principle has been recognized in several cases; but as the authority arises out of the necessity of the case, it must be exercised strictly within the limits of that necessity.—Boyce v. Bayliffe, (1807) 1 Camp. 58.

A passenger is not, however, bound to remain on board a ship in the hour of danger, but may quit it if he have an opportunity; and he is not required to take upon himself any responsibility as to the conduct of the ship; if he incur any responsibility, and perform extraordinary services, in relieving a vessel in distress, he is entitled to a corresponding reward. The goods of passengers contribute to general average.

For definition of 'passenger' and 'passenger ship,' see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 267, and Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, ss. 13, 85, and Sched. II., and Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (c. 9), s. 33. The regulations concerning the inspection of passenger ships, their equipment, manning, and construction, are now contained in Part III. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 9). Consult Abbott on Shipping and Temperley's Merchant Shipping Acts.

As to passengers by land, see CARRIERS; NEGLIGENCE; RAILWAYS.

See also the London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843, s. 2, for definition of passenger for the purposes of the Act. See also Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), and AIR NAVIGATION.

As to the liability of a passenger to pay his fare without demand under a bye-law, fraud not being alleged, see London Passenger Transport Board v. Sumner, 1935, W. N. 196.

Passagiarius, a ferry-man.—Jac. Law Dict.

Passim, occurring in various places in a statute, book or works of a certain author—e.g., 'see Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, passim.'

Passing-ticket, a kind of permit, being a note or check which the toll-clerks on some canals give to the boatmen, specifying the lading for which they have paid toll.

Passive Debt, a debt upon which, by or without agreement between the debtor and creditor, no interest is payable, as distinguished from active debt, i.e., a debt upon which interest is payable. In this sense, the terms 'active' and 'passive' were long applied to certain debts due from the Spanish Government. Distinguish from 'Active' (assets) to 'Passive' (liabilities) (Fr. law.).

Passive Resistors, those persons who, as a protest against the expenditure of a local authority in connection with an object of which they disapprove, decline to pay that part of a rate attributable to such expenditure, and by such 'passive resistance' force the local authority to recover the sum withheld by distress and sale or other process. Passive resistance was resorted to especially in connection with the operation of the Education Act, 1902. See R. v. Gillespie, 1904, K. B. 174.

Passive Trust, a trust as to which the trustee has no active duty to perform. Passive uses were resorted to before the Statute of Uses, in order to escape from the trammels and hardships of the Common Law, the permanent division of property into legal and equitable interests being clearly an invention to lessen the force of some pre-existing law. For similar reasons equitable interests were after the statute revived under the form of trusts. As such, they continued to flourish, notwithstanding the singular amelioration effected at a later period in the law of tenure, because the legal ownership was attended with some peculiar inconveniences. For, in order to guard against the forfeiture of a legal estate for life, passive trusts, by settlements, were resorted to, and hence, trusts to preserve contingent remainders; and passive trusts were created in order to prevent dower.

Where an active trust was created, without defining the quantity of the estate to be taken by the trustee, the Courts endeavoured in the case of devises by will and executory contracts to give by construction the quantity originally requisite to satisfy the trust in every event, although the general rule is that the same words of limitation are (or were before 1926) necessary to convey either a legal or equitable estate in fee simple in a grant by deed to trustees as are required in any other grant of the legal estate in fee: see Moncton's Settlement, 1913, 2 Ch. 636; and also Bostock's Settlement, 1921, 2 Ch. 693. But if a larger estate was expressly given, the Courts could not reject the excess; and although the estate taken, whether expressly or constructively, might not have exceeded the original scope of the trust, yet, if eventually no estate, or a less estate, were actually wanted, the legal ownership remained wholly or partially vested in the trustee as a merely passive trustee.—1 Hayes' Conv. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, 1st Sched., par. 3, the legal estate existing on the 1st January, 1926, in a bare trustee became vested in the person of full age who at that date was entitled to require the legal estate to be vested in him subject to any mortgage term subsisting or created by the Act upon the conditions and subject to the provisions of the Schedule, and to the provisions of the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, in favour of a purchaser without notice from the trustee. See BARE TRUSTEE.

Passive Use, a permissive use. See PASSIVE TRUST and USES.

Passport, a licence for the safe passage of anyone from one place to another, or from one country to another. Passports are issued by the Foreign Office to British-born subjects or to those naturalized in the United Kingdom, British Dominions, Colonies or India, subject to the recommendation and identification of the applicant by a person holding certain positions, e.g., J.P., barrister, solicitor, physician. Application should be made to the Passport Office, 1, Queen Anne's Gate Buildings, Dartmouth Street, Westminster, London, or 36, Dale Street, Liverpool.

A combination to procure from the British Foreign Office a passport taken out in one name but to be used in another is an indictable misdemeanour (R. v. Brailsford and McCulloch, 1905, 2 K. B. 730). Forgery is a misdemeanour under the Official Secrets Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 86), and obtaining passports by false statements, under the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86).

Pastitium, pasture land.—Domesday.

Pastor [Lat., a shepherd], applied to a minister of the Christian religion, who has charge of a congregation, hence called his flock.

Pastura. Between pastura and pascuum, the legal difference is, that pastura in one signification containeth the ground itself called pasture, and by that name is to be demanded (Co. Litt. 4 b). See PASCUM.

Pasture, land on which cattle feed. See Norton on Deeds.

The laying down permanent pasture with the written consent of the landlord is an improvement for which a tenant is entitled to compensation on quitting by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923; and so is, though without any consent or notice, laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years before the termination of the tenancy. See AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT.

Breaking up pasture is frequently prohibited by penal rents and otherwise in agricultural leases, and s. 29 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, which restricts penal rents to the actual damage done, excepts 'breaking up permanent pasture,' amongst other things, from its operation. See Rush v. Lucas, 1910, 1 Ch. 437, and Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

Pastus, the procuration or provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money.

Patent Agent.—By s. 84 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, as amended by Patents and Designs Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32), this expression 'means exclusively an agent for obtaining patents in the United Kingdom'; and by the same section no person can so term himself unless he is registered in pursuance of the Act.

Patent Ambiguity, a doubt apparent upon the face of an instrument. See AMBIGUITY.

Patent Letters. See LETTERS-PATENT.

Patent Medicine. Patent or proprietary medicines are—(1) those enumerated in the schedule to the Medicine Stamp Act, 1812; (2) all other medicines intended for human use and claimed to be made by a secret process or protected by letters-patent, or which have been advertised as beneficial to the prevention, cure, or relief of any ailment or disorder affecting the human body. Under the Medicine Stamp Acts, 1802 and 1804, duties were imposed on each bottle or package according to the price. These duties are payable by the manufacturers and collected by means of labels of appropriate amounts, so affixed to the packages as to be destroyed when they are opened. The duties were doubled by the Finance Act, 1915: this increased rate has been continued from year to year. The schedule to the Act of 1812 exempts from duty—(1) medicinal drugs vended entire (i.e., without mixture or composition with any other drug or ingredient) by a medical practitioner, chemist or druggist, or by the holder of a patent medicine licence; and (2) medicinal drugs though mixtures or compositions, if not within the definition of patent medicine, if sold by a medical practitioner, chemist or druggist. An annual licence (5s.) must be taken out by every dealer in or maker of proprietary medicines which are liable to duty. See Medicine Stamp Acts, 1802, s. 9, and 1812, s. 1 and Sched.; Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1875.

By the Venereal Disease Act, 1917 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 21), it is an offence to advertise, etc., any patent preparation for the prevention, cure or relief of any venereal disease. Treatment must be by qualified medical practitioners; and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Medicines'; see DRUGS, DANGEROUS, and POISON.

Patent-right, the exclusive privilege granted by the Crown to the first inventor of a new manufacture of making articles according to his invention. See LETTERS-PATENT.

Patent-rolls, registers in which letters-patent are recorded.

Patentee, one who has a patent. The offices of patentee and deputy patentee of the Subpæna office were abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27.

Paterfamilias, one who was sui juris and the head of a family.—Civ. Law; Sand. Just.

Paternity. The general rule is that 'pater vero is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant' (Dig. Lib. 2, tit. 4, l. 5). For a discussion of the law on the subject of paternity and the cases in which it may be shown that the child is not that of the husband, see Russell v. Russell, 1924, A. C. 687; Hubback on Succession, pp. 378 et seq.; Sir Harris Nicolas on Adulterine Bastardy. A husband may give evidence that he had never had intercourse with his wife before the marriage (The Poulett Peerage, 1903, A. C. 395). It becomes a question, when a widow marries immediately after the death of her husband, and she is delivered of a child at the expiration of ten months from the death of the first husband, as to the paternity of the child. Blackstone and Coke say, that if a man die, and his widow soon after marry again, and a child is born within such a time as that by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate, for he may, when he arrives at years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. But Hargrave suggests that the circumstances of the case, instead of the choice of the issue, should determine who is the father. The Romans forbade a woman to marry until after the expiration of ten months from her husband's decease, which term was prolonged to twelve by Gratian and Valentinian. The French code has adopted the same rule, viz., after ten months. It was also established under the Saxon and Danish governments. It was the law in this country until the Conquest.—Beck's Med. Jurisp. See ACCESS.

Patibulary [fr. patibulum, Lat.], belonging to the gallows.

Patibulated, hanged on a gibbet.

Patria, the country; the men or jury of a neighbourhood.

Patria potestas, paternal power.—Civ. Law. For the extent of this great power, see Sand. Just.; Maine's Ancient Law. The modes in which the patria potestas was ended were: (1) The death of the father; (2) the father or son suffering loss of freedom or citizenship; (3) the son attaining certain dignities; (4) emancipation.

Patriarch, the chief bishop over several countries or provinces, as an archbishop is of several dioceses.—God. 20.

Patricide, or Parricide, the murder, or murderer, of a father. As to the punishment of that offence by the Roman Law, see Sand. Just.; 4 Bl. Com. 202. Our laws, unlike the ancient laws, distinguish in no respect between parricide, killing a husband, wife, or master, and simple murder.

Patriolus, a title of the highest honour, conferred on those who enjoy the chief place in the emperor's esteem.—Civ. Law.

Patrimony, an hereditary estate or right descended from ancestors.

Patrinus, a godfather.

Patriotic Fund. A fund originally formed in 1854 for the relief of the families of men who fell in the Crimean War. The fund is now controlled by the provisions of the Patriotic Fund Reorganisation Act, 1903. See PENSIONS.

Patrius, an honour conferred on men of the first quality in the time of the English Saxon kings.

Patron, (1) one who has the disposition of an ecclesiastical benefice; (2) among the Romans an advocate or defender. See CLIENT.

Patronage, the right of presenting to a benefice. A disturbance of patronage is a hindrance or obstruction of a patron to present his clerk to his benefice, the remedy for which was the real action of quare impedit. See that title, and BENEFICE.

Also, the right of appointing to any office (see that title).

Patronatus, patronage.

Patronum faciunt dos, edificatio, fundus. Dod. Adv. 7.—(Endowment, building, and land make a patron.)

Patruells, a cousin-german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother.—Civ. Law.

Patruus, an uncle by the father's side, a father's brother; magnus, a grandfather's brother, great-uncle; major, a great-grandfather's brother; maximus, a great-grandfather's father's brother.

Pauper, a discarded term, see POOR PERSON. See CASUAL PAUPER; POOR LAWS; and EDUCATION.

As to right of a poor person, having reasonable ground for proceeding, to sue without paying Court fees, solicitor, or counsel, see IN FORMÂ FAUPERIS.

Pauper Lunatic, a discarded term, replaced by 'rate-aided patient of unsound mind' (Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 23)), s. 3. See PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND.

Pavage, money paid towards paving.

Paving Acts. As to Local Government Districts, see the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55); and as to London, see the Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 29) ('Michael Angelo Taylor's Act'), the Metropolis Management Acts Amendment Act, 1862, s. 77, and the amending Act of 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 54).

Pawn or Pledge [fr. pignus, Lat.], a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged.

A mortgage of goods is in the Common Law distinguishable from a mere pledge or pawn. By a mortgage the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and if the goods be not redeemed at the stipulated time, the title becomes absolute at law although equity allows a redemption. But in a pledge, a special property only passes to the pledgee, the general property remaining in the pledgor. Also, in the case of a pledge, the right of a pledgee is not consummated, except by possession; and, ordinarily, when that possession is relinquished, the right of the pledgee is extinguished or waived. But, in the case of a mortgage of personal property the right of property passes by the conveyance to the mortgagee, and the possession is not or may not be essential to create or support the title.

As to things which may be the subject of pawn: These are, ordinarily, goods and chattels; but money, debts, negotiable instruments, choses in action, and indeed any other valuable things of a personal nature, such as patent-rights and manuscripts, may by the Common Law be delivered in pledge. It is not indispensable that the pledge should belong to the pledgor; it is sufficient if it is pledged with the consent of the owner. By the pledge of a thing, not only the thing itself is pledged, but also, as accessory, the natural increase thereof. If the pledgor have only a limited title to the thing, as for life or for years, he may still pawn it to the extent of his title; but when that expires, the pledgee must surrender it to the person who succeeds to the ownership. See FACTOR.

It is of the essence of the contract that there should be an actual delivery of the thing to the pledgee ; for until delivery, the whole contract is executory, however strong may be the engagement to deliver it ; and the pledgee acquires no right of property in it. But there need not be an actual manual delivery, as it is sufficient if there are any of those acts or circumstances which, in construction of law, are deemed sufficient to pass the possession of property, as the key of a warehouse. As possession is necessary to complete the title, so by the Common Law the title determines if the pledgee lose the thing pledged, or deliver it back to the pledgor unless for a temporary or special purpose.

It is also of the essence of the contract that the thing should be delivered as a security for some debt or engagement. It may be delivered as security for a future debt or engagement, as well as for a past debt ; for one or for many debts and engagements ; upon condition or absolutely ; for a limited time or for an indefinite period. It may also be implied from circumstances, as well as arise by express agreement, and it matters not what is the nature of the debt or the engagement. The pledge is understood to be a security for the whole and for every part of the debt or engagement. It is indivisible ; individua est pignoris causa.

As to the pledgee or pawnee's rights and duties : The pawnee acquires, in virtue of the pawn, a special property in the thing, and is entitled to the exclusive possession of it during the time and for the objects for which it is pledged. The pledgee has a right to sell the pledge, when the pledgor fails to perform his engagement. He might have filed a bill in equity against the pledgor for a sale, or he may proceed to sell ex mero motu, upon giving due notice of his intention to the pledgor. If several things be pledged, each is deemed liable for the whole debt or engagement ; and the pledgee may proceed to sell them from time to time, until the debt or other claim be completely discharged. The possession of the pawn does not suspend the right to sue for the whole debt or other engagement without selling the pawn, for it is only a collateral security. A pawnee cannot become the purchaser at the sale. A pledgee cannot alienate the property absolutely, nor beyond the title actually possessed by him, unless in special cases. He may deliver the pawn into the hands of a stranger for safe custody, without consideration ; or he may sell or assign all his interest in the pawn, or he may convey the same interest conditionally, by way of pawn, to another person, without destroying or invalidating his security.

The following rules elucidate the principles as to the pawnee's title to use the pawn :—

(1) If the pawn is of such a nature that the due preservation of it requires some use, there such use is not only justifiable, but it is indispensable to the faithful discharge of the duty of the pawnee.

(2) If the pawn is of such a nature that it will be worse for the use, such, for instance, as clothes, the use is prohibited to the pawnee.

(3) If the pawn is of such a nature that the keeping is a charge to the pawnee, as a cow or horse, there the pawnee may milk the cow and use the milk, and ride the horse by way of recompense for the keeping.

(4) If the use will be beneficial to the pawn, or it is indifferent, there it seems that the pawnee may use it.

(5) If the use will be without any injury, and yet the pawn will thereby be exposed to extraordinary perils, there the use is impliedly interdicted.

The pawnee is liable for ordinary neglect in keeping the pawn. He must return the pledge and its increments, if any, after the debt or other duty has been discharged. He must render a due account of all the income, profits, and advantages derived by him from the pledge, in all cases where such an account is within the scope of the bailment.

As to the pledgor's rights and duties :—

If the pledge is conveyed by way of mortgage, so that the legal title passes unless the pledge is redeemed at the stipulated time, the title of the pledgee becomes absolute at law ; and the pledgor has only an equitable right to redeem. If, however, it be a mere pledge, as the pledgor has never parted with the general title, he may, at law, redeem, notwithstanding he has not strictly complied with the condition of his contract. If, when the pledgor applies to redeem, the pledge has been sold by the pledgee without any proper notice to the former, no tender of the debt due need be made before bringing an action therefor : for the party has incapacitated himself to comply with his contract to return the pawn. Subject to the pledgee's right, the owner has a right to sell or assign his property in the pawn. As the general property of goods pawned remains in the pawnor, and the pawnee has a special property only, either may maintain an action against a stranger for any injury done to it, or for any conversion of it. Goods pawned are not liable to be taken in execution in an action against the pawnor, at least, not unless the bailment is terminated by payment of the debt, or by some other extinguishment of the pawnee's title, except in case of the Crown, and then subject to the pawnee's right. By the act of pawning, the pawnor enters into an implied engagement of warranty that he is the owner of the property pawned. The pawnor is responsible for all frauds, not only in the title but in the concoction of the contract. The pawnor must reimburse to the pawnee all expenses and charges which have been necessarily incurred by the latter in the preservation of the pawn, even though by some subsequent accident these expenses and charges may not have secured any permanent benefit to the pawnor.

The contract of pledge is put an end to or extinguished :—

(1) By the full payment of the debt, or the discharge of the other engagements for which the pledge was given ;

(2) By the satisfaction of the debt in any other mode, either in fact or by operation of law ; as, for instance, by receiving other goods in payment or discharge of the debt ;

(3) By taking a higher or different security for the debt, without any agreement that the pledge shall be retained therefor (this is called a novation in the Roman Law) ;

(4) By extinguishing the debt, which also extinguishes the right to pledge ;

(5) By the things perishing ;

(6) By any act of the pledgee which amounts to a release or waiver of the pledge.

—Story on Bailments, c. v. ; and consult Cooté on Mortgages, 9th ed., pp. 1476 et seq. See PAWNBROKERS.

Pawnage, or Pannage. See PANNAGE.

Pawnbroker, one who lends money on goods which he receives upon pledge.

The rate of interest which pawnbrokers may take has been fixed by law since 1800, by 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 48, which Act placed their whole business under various other restrictions. By the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (which applies to Scotland, but not to Ireland), this Act, together with its amending Acts, is repealed, and the statute law of the subject consolidated. Sched. IV., dealing with profits and charges, has been amended by the Pawnbrokers Act, 1922, in respect of loans not exceeding 40s.

By s. 5 of the Act, the term " pawnbroker " includes every person who carries on the business of taking goods and chattels in pawn,' but by s. 10 the Act does not apply to loans above 10l.

Pawnbrokers must take out annual excise licences from the Inland Revenue Commissioners, which may be forfeited on conviction of fraud or receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, and are not grantable without magisterial or district council certificates, not to be refused except for failure to produce satisfactory evidence of good character (ss. 37-40, and ss. 27, 32 of the Local Government Act, 1894).

By ss. 14 and 16-19 of the Act it is enacted that :—

14. Pawn-ticket. A pawnbroker shall, on taking a pledge in pawn, give to the pawnor a pawn-ticket, and shall not take a pledge in pawn unless the pawnor takes a pawn-ticket.

16. Redemption. Every pledge shall be redeemable within 12 months from the day of pawning, exclusive of that day ; and there shall be added to that year of redemption 7 days of grace, within which every pledge (if not redeemed within the year of redemption) shall continue to be redeemable.

17. Forfeiture of pledge for 10s. or under. A pledge pawned for ten shillings, or under, if not redeemed within the year of redemption and days of grace, shall at the end of the days of grace become and be the pawnbroker's absolute property.

18. Pledge above 10s. redeemable until sale. A pledge pawned for above ten shillings shall further continue redeemable until it is disposed of, as in this Act provided, although the year of redemption and days of grace are expired.

19. Sale by Auction of Pledges above 10s. A pledge pawned for above ten shillings shall, when disposed of by the pawnbroker, be disposed of by sale by public auction, and not otherwise ; and the regulations in the fifth schedule to this Act shall be observed with reference to the sale.

A pawnbroker may bid for and purchase at a sale by auction, made or purporting to be made under this Act, a pledge pawned with him, and on such purchase he shall be deemed the absolute owner of the pledge purchased.

The regulations in the 5th Schedule are very precise, directing, e.g., publication of catalogues of the pledges, that ' the pledges of each pawnbroker in the catalogue shall be separate from any pledges of any other pawnbroker ' ; that sales are to be advertised ' in some public newspaper ' ; that pictures, books, china, and other specified things are to be sold by themselves, ' four times only in every year, on the first Monday in the months of January, April, July, and October, and on the following day and days, if the sale exceeds one day, and at no other time, ' and that catalogues are to be preserved for three years at least.

Special Contracts.—By s. 24, special contracts (see Sched. III., Form 7, and Jones v. Marshall, (1889) 24 Q.B.D. 269) may be made with a loan above 40s. Extended by the Moneylenders Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 21), s. 10 (3), giving powers to the Court to reopen special contracts.

By s. 31, upon the conviction of a thief who has pawned the stolen property, an order can be made on the pawnbroker for its restitution upon payment of the loan; but if such order is not made on the application of the owner, he is not thereby prevented from bringing a common law action (Leicester v. Cherryman, 1907, 2 K. B. 101).

By s. 31, if a pawnbroker, without reasonable excuse, neglects or refuses to deliver up a pledge to a person entitled to it, he is liable to be summarily convicted, but if the article has been honestly lost by him, this will be a reasonable excuse (Allworthy v. Clayton, 1907, 2 K. B. 685).

Unlawful Pawning.—Unlawful pawning is specially guarded against by ss. 33–36. Firearms and ammunition must not be taken in pawn (Firearms Act, 1920, s. 2 (2)); nor must pledges be accepted from children under 14 (Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (2 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 8).

Rate of Interest.—The 4th Schedule of the Act gives the rate of interest thus:—

On a loan of 40s. or under, one halfpenny per month for every 2s. or fraction of 2s. lent.

On a loan of above 40s., one halfpenny per month for every 2s. 6d. or fraction of 2s. 6d. lent.

And the charge on a pawn-ticket thus:—

Where loan is 10s. or under, one halfpenny.

Where loan above 10s., one penny.

By the Act of 1922 the pawnbroker, in addition, may charge the pledger upon receipt of the pledge,  $\frac{1}{4}$ d. for each 5s. or part of 5s. lent where the loan does not exceed 40s. In Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Clark, (1879) 5 Ex. D. 37, it was held that the indemnity under s. 25 of the Act, to a pawnbroker delivering a pledge to the person producing the pawn-ticket, applies only as between the pawnbroker and the pawner, or the owner who has authorized the pledge, and that the Act does not affect the common law rights of the owner of property pledged against his will. As to the power of an executor to pledge the personal chattels of his testator, see Solomon v. Attenborough, 1913, A. C. 76. A trustee in bankruptcy may inspect goods pawned (Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 26). Consult Attenborough on Pawnbroking.

Pawnee, the person with whom a pawn is deposited. See PAWN.

Pawner, or Pawnor, the person depositing a pawn. See PAWN.

Pax regis, the King's peace—verge of the Court.

Payee, one to whom a bill of exchange or promissory note or cheque is made payable; he must be named or otherwise indicated therein, with reasonable certainty. The bill, note, or cheque may be made payable to one or more payees jointly, or in the alternative to one of two or one or some of several payees, or to the holder of an office for the time being; but where the payee is a fictitious or non-existing person, it may be treated as payable to bearer.—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 7; and see Bank of England v. Vagliano, 1891, A. C. 107.

Paymaster-General (see now Accountant-General; the duties of Paymaster-General transferred to Accountant-General: see Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 133 et seq.). Under the Chancery Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 44), the office of Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery was abolished, and the duties transferred to the Paymaster-General, and by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Funds, etc.) Act, 1883, there was only one accounting department for the Supreme Court of Judicature. Rules with respect to the Paymaster-General were authorized to be made by the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 24, and, further, s. 30 of that Act, and s. 4 of the Act of 1883, supra, the present practice and procedure being controlled by the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1927.

Payment. The payment of money before the day appointed is in law payment at the day; for it cannot, in presumption of law, be any prejudice to him to whom the payment is made to have his money before the time; and it appears by the party's receipt of it, that it is for his own advantage to receive it then, otherwise he would not do it.—5 Rep. 117. See the notes to Cumber v. Wane, (1719) in 1 Smith's L. C.

Payment of Money into Court, i.e., the deposit of money with the official of or banker to the court for the purpose of proceedings commenced in that court. Payment into court is not strictly a defence; it is rather an attempt at a compromise. No such plea was known to the Common Law; it is entirely the creature of Statute (Odgers on Pleading). By the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 70, the defendant in all actions (except for assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious arrest or prosecution or seduction) might pay into court a sum of money by way of compensation or amends, and by the Libel Act, 1843, money might be paid into court in actions of libel, but this provision was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1879.

Payment into court is now regulated by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXII., by which, where any action is brought to recover a debt or damages, any defendant may, before or at the time of delivering his defence, or by leave of the Court or a judge at any later time, pay into court a sum of money by way of satisfaction, which is taken to admit the cause of action; 'or he may, except in actions for libel or slander, pay money into court with a defence denying liability,' which he could not do before 1883.

The fact that money has been paid into court may not be mentioned to the jury, R. S. C., Ord. XXII., r. 6, except in an action to which a defence of tender before action is pleaded or in which a plea under the Libel Acts, 1843 and 1845, has been filed, no statement of fact that money has been paid into court under the preceding Rules of this Order shall be inserted in the pleadings and no communication of that fact shall at the trial of any action be made to the judge or jury until all questions of liability and amount of debt or damages have been decided, but the judge shall, in exercising his discretion as to costs, take into account both the fact that money has been paid into court and the amount of such payment (R. S. C. (No. 1, 1933)).

In the County Courts payment into court, together with costs of plaintiff up to payment in, is allowed by County Courts Act, 1934, s. 99 (3) (d), Sched. III., and C. C. R., Ord. IX., r. 26 of that Order directing that the fact of such payment is not to be communicated to a jury until after the verdict is given.

As to 'tender of amends' and payment into court by justices of the peace and other persons acting in the performance of certain public functions for anything done in the execution of their offices, see PUBLIC AUTHORITIES.

Quite distinct from payment into court in an action, is the Chancery practice of payment or transfer into court of money or funds in the hands of an executor or trustee who is unable to obtain a good discharge from the person beneficially entitled. This was formerly done under the Legacy Duty Act, s. 32, or the Trustee Relief Act, ss. 1, 2, and is now regulated by s. 42 of the Trustee Act, 1925, and R. S. C., Ord. LIV.B. The trustee lodges the money or funds in court on an affidavit in a specified form containing (inter alia) a description of the trust and the names of the persons interested; and the persons who claim to be entitled then apply by summons, or, if the amount exceeds 1,000*l.*, by petition, to have the money paid out to them. The costs of the lodgment are deducted by the trustee before he pays the money in. Consult Lewin on Trusts; Dan. Ch. Pr.; Seton on Judgments.

Peace, a quiet behaviour towards the king and his subjects. It is one of the prerogatives of the Crown to make war and peace.—1 Bl. Com. 257.

Peace, Bill of. This equitable remedy sought repose from perpetual and needless litigation, and protection from a multiplicity of suits, either by establishing and perpetuating a right which the plaintiff claimed and which, from its nature, might be controverted by different persons at different times and by different actions; or where separate attempts had already been unsuccessfully made to overthrow the same right, and justice required that the plaintiff should be quieted in the right if it was already, or if it should be thereafter, established under the direction of the Court. See Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeoman, (1866) L. R. 2 Ch. 8; Kerr on Injunctions.

The results obtained by this bill would now generally be obtained by an action in the High Court for a declaration of title and an injunction. See A. P. notes to R. S. C., Ord. XXV., r. 4.

Peace, Breach of the, a violation of that quiet, peace, and security which is guaranteed by the laws for the personal comfort of the subjects of this kingdom. An ordinary subject of the Crown must act as a peace-officer to arrest an offender if a felony is committed, or a bad wound given in his presence; and an ordinary subject may arrest another who is on the point of committing murder, and may break and enter a house to do so; and may arrest a lunatic about to do a mischief, and may arrest one against whom an indictment has been found; or may arrest one to put a stop to a breach of the peace committed in his presence.

The power of justices of the peace to adjudge a person to enter into recognizance and find sureties to keep the peace or be of good behaviour towards any other person on his complaint is regulated by s. 25 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices.'

Peace, Clerk of the, an officer who acts as clerk to the Court of Quarter Sessions, and records all their proceedings. He may have county property conveyed to him under the County Property Act, 1858, and is clerk of the County Council by virtue of s. 83 of the Local Government Act, 1888. See also Local Government Clerks Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5. c. 45). He may be removed for misbehaviour in his office under 1 M. & W. c. 21, by the justices in Quarter Sessions, as amended by the Clerks of the Peace Removal Act, 1864 (see now Local Government Clerks Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5. c. 45)), and the earlier Act also provides the form of oath not to pay for his appointment.

Peace, Commission of the, a special commission of the Great Seal, appointing justices of the peace. It is one of the authorities by virtue of which the judges sit upon circuit. See JUSTICES.

Peace of God and the Church [pax Dei et ecclesiæ, Lat.], was anciently used to signify that cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms, and on Sundays and holidays.—Cowel.

Peace, Justices of. See JUSTICES.

Peace of the King [pax regis, Lat.], that security for life and goods which the king promises to all his subjects, or others taken into his protection. See PEACE, BREACH OF.

Pecia, a piece or small quantity of ground.—Paroch. Antig. 240.

Peck, a measure of two gallons: a dry measure.

Peculatus, embezzling public money.

Peculiar, a particular parish or church that has jurisdiction within itself, and exemption from that of the ordinary. There are several sorts:—(1) Royal peculiars, which are the sovereign's free chapels, and are exempt from any jurisdiction but that of the sovereign. (2) Peculiars of the archbishops, exclusive of the bishops and archdeacons, which arose from a privilege they had to enjoy jurisdiction in such places where their seats and possessions were. (3) Peculiars of bishops, exclusive of the jurisdiction of the bishops of the diocese in which they are situate. (4) Peculiars of bishops in their own dioceses, exclusive of archidiaconal jurisdiction. (5) Peculiars of deans, deans and chapters, prebendaries, and the like, which are places wherein, by ancient compositions, the bishops have parted with their jurisdiction as ordinaries to these corporations. See Parham v. Temple, (1820) 3 Phill. Ec. Rep. p. 245; Tomlins' Law Dict.

Peculiars, Court of, a branch of, and annexed to, the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the province of Canterbury in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions are, originally, cognizable by this Court, from which an appeal lies to the Court of Arches.—3 Bl. Com. 65. See now 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85, and title PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT.

Peculium, the savings of a son or slave accumulated with the father's or master's consent.—Civ. Law.

Pecunia [fr. pecus, Lat., cattle], properly money, but anciently cattle, and sometimes other goods as well as money.

Pecunia dicitur a pecus omnes enim veterum divitiæ in animalibus consistebant. Co. Litt. 207.—(Money [pecunia] is so called from cattle [pecus], because all the wealth of our ancestors consisted in cattle.) So chattels (cattle) means all tangible personalty.

Pecunia sepulchralis, money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of a grave for the good of the deceased's soul. See MORTUARY.

Pecuniary Causes, such as arise either from the withholding of ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting to do some act relating to the church whereby damage accrues to the plaintiff, to obtain satisfaction for which he is permitted to institute a suit in the spiritual Court.—3 Bl. Com. 88.

Pedage, money given for the passage of foot or horse through any country.—Spelm.

Pedigree [fr. per and degré, Fr.—Skinner], genealogy; lineage; account of descent. Falsifying a pedigree, upon which title does or may depend, is punishable under the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, s. 24, now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 183 (1) (b); and see the Forgery Act, 1913. As to the admissibility of hearsay evidence in questions of pedigree, see Taylor on Evidence, s. 571; Hubbard on Succession, p. 648; and see ACCESS.

Pedis abscissio, cutting off a foot; a punishment anciently inflicted instead of death.—Fleta, l. 1, c. xxxviii.

Pedis possessio, an actual possession or foothold.

Pedlars, certificated persons who travel about offering their goods or skill in handicraft for sale, between whom and hawkers there is the statutory distinction that the hawker travels with a horse, whereas the pedlar does not. See HAWKERS AND PEDLARS, and Pedlars Acts, 1871 and 1881.

Pedones, foot soldiers.

Peel's (Sir R.) Acts (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), otherwise called 'The New Parishes Acts,' 1843, amended by the New Parishes Act of 1844 and 1856, making better provision for the spiritual care of populous parishes, by the establishment of district churches therein; and 7 & 8 Geo. 4, cc. 27-29, abolishing benefit of clergy, and otherwise amending the criminal law.

Peer, an equal; one of the same rank; a member of the House of Lords, as either Duke, Marquis, Earl, Viscount, or Baron, or Scots or presumably Irish representative peer, although the status of Irish representative peers is apparently undecided owing to the establishment of the Irish Free State. The king cannot create a dignity with a mesne between baron and baronets (Co. Litt. 16 b, Hargrave note 8).

A member of the House of Lords cannot become a member of the House of Commons, nor can he vote at an election to that House (Earl Beauchamp v. Madresfield, (1872) L. R. 8 C. P. 245), although an Irish non-representative peer (Lord Rendlesham v. Haward, (1873) L. R. 9 C. P. 252); but an Irish non-representative peer may, presumably, be elected a member of the House of Commons for any seat in Great Britain. A peer cannot surrender his dignity to the king so as to affect the rights of his descendants therein (The Norfolk Earldom, 1907, A. C. 10). See Jac. Law Dict.; Co. Litt. 160.

Under the rule, established by Magna Charta, which applies to every subject of the realm, a peer, indicted for treason or felony, must be tried by his peers, but when an indictment for a felony is found against a peer it is removable by writ of certiorari into the Court of the Lord High Steward (see that title). In 1935, on 12th December, the trial of Lord de Clifford took place on a charge of unlawful killing in connection with a collision by driving on a road. On 4th February, 1936, a motion that the present system of trial of peers by peers has outlived its usefulness, was carried in the House of Lords (see Times, 5th February, 1936).

Peerage, the dignity of the lords, or peers of the realm. Where, on the death of a peer, doubts arise respecting the devolution of his dignity, and in all cases of long abeyance or other non-enjoyment of a peerage, the Lord Chancellor will not issue his writ of summons to a claimant without a previous investigation of his title, in order to which the claimant must present a petition to the Crown through the Home Secretary, which the Crown then refers to the Attorney-General, and in most cases the claim is subsequently referred to the Lords Committee for Privileges. For the practice and procedure in peerage claims, see Hubback on Succession, p. 84; Shrewsbury Peerage, (1857) 7 H. L. C. 1; Palmer's Peerage Law in England. In modern practice the creation of a peerage must be shown to have taken place either by writ, or by letters patent; the latter mode of creation was introduced in the eleventh year of Ric. 2. If the claim is by writ, actually sitting in Parliament is also essential, for until he sit the writ has no operation (Co. Litt. 16 b, 9 b; Hubback, p. 151). As to what will amount to a 'Parliament' for this purpose, see St. John Peerage Claim, 1915, A. C. 282, and the Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 72), an Act to prevent abuses in connection with grant of honours.

Peeress. Women may acquire peerages by creation (as the Baroness Burdett Coutts), descent (as where a peerage goes in the female as well as in the male line, to which line it is usually confined), or marriage, but they have never had the legislative power, and it was decided in Viscountess Rhondda's Claim, 1922, 2 A. C. 339, that a peeress of the United Kingdom in her own right is not entitled to receive a writ of summons to Parliament by virtue of, the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 71). 20 Hen. 6, c. 9, declares that peeresses, either in their own right or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as peers of the realm.

Peers of Fees, vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function; these were termed peers of fees, because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees; but if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers.—Cowel.

Peine forte et dure (the strong and hard pain) [peine (or penance), probably a corrupted abbreviation of prison].—3 Bl. Com. 325], an old punishment by which a prisoner, indicted for felony, if he refused to plead, was pressed by a heavy weight of iron till he died or answered.—2 Reeves, c. ix., 134 ; 4 Steph. Com.

By the Criminal Law Act, 1827, s. 2, if a prisoner refuse to plead, the Court may order a plea of 'not guilty' to be entered.

Pela, a peel, pile, or fort.

Peles, issues arising from or out of a thing.

Pelfe, or Pelfre, booty : also the personal effects of a felon convict.

Pellage, the custom or duty paid for skins of leather.

Pelllela, a pilch or surplice.—Spelm.

Pelliparius, a leatherseller or skinner.—Jac. Law Dict.

Pellota, the ball of a foot.—4 Inst. 308.

Pellis, Clerk of the, an officer in the Exchequer, who entered every seller's bill on the parchment-rolls, the roll of receipts, and the roll of disbursements. Abolished.

Pelt-wool, the wool pulled off the skin or pelt of dead sheep.—8 Hen. 6, c. 22.

Pembrokehire, originally a county palatine, but dispalatinated in the reign of Henry VIII.

Pen (Welsh), a high mountain.—Camd. Brit.

Penal Action. See PENAL STATUTES.

Penal Laws, those laws which prohibit an act, and impose a penalty for its commission. For the penal laws par excellence, see ROMAN CATHOLICS, and Lilly and Wallis's Laws affecting Catholics.

Penal Servitude, a punishment in the United Kingdom which by the Penal Servitude Act, 1853, has superseded transportation (see that title) beyond the seas ; but is in all respects as to hard labour, etc., similar to it. It ranges in duration from three years to the life of the convict.

The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 frequently authorize a minimum term of three years' penal servitude. This minimum of three years was altered to five by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864, s. 2, but altered back to three by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891, that very important Act providing as follows by s. 1 :—

(1) Where under any enactment in force when this section comes into operation [5th Aug., 1891] a Court has power to award a sentence of penal servitude, the sentence may, at the discretion of the Court, be for any period not less than 3 years, and not exceeding either 5 years, or any greater period authorized by the enactment.

(2) Where under any Act now in force or under any future Act a Court is empowered or required to award a sentence of penal servitude, the Court may, in its discretion, unless such future Act otherwise provides, award imprisonment for any term not exceeding 2 years, with or without hard labour.

By the Penal Servitude Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 58), the court is given power to inflict penal servitude in lieu of imprisonment in the case of certain crimes.

The principal distinctions between imprisonment with hard labour and penal servitude are that the former is not, and generally speaking cannot be, imposed for more than two years, whereas penal servitude may be imposed for any period (within the limits of the statute governing the punishment for the particular offence) being not less than three years, and that the work done by the prisoner in the case of 'hard labour' is done within the prison, but in the case of penal servitude may be carried out in any place properly appointed for the purpose.

Penal Statutes, those which impose penalties or punishments for an offence committed ; they are construed strictly in favour of the person charged with the offence. See, however, remarks of Lord Alverstone, C.J., in Dunning v. Sweetman, 1909, 1 K. B. at p. 776.

The penalties or forfeitures under these statutes are generally made recoverable by the Crown, or the party aggrieved, or a common informer, as the case may be. See 4 Hen. 7, c. 20 ; 31 Eliz. c. 3 ; 18 Eliz. c. 5 ; 21 Jac. 1, c. 4 ; the House of Commons (Disqualification) Acts of 1782 and 1801 ; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Penal Actions.'

This remedy is generally designated a penal action ; or, where one part of the forfeiture is given to the Crown and the other part to the informer, a popular or qui tam (q.v.) action. For an instance of a recent action for penalties, see Forbes v. Samuel, 1913, 3 K. B. 706.

Penalty. 1. A sum agreed to be paid on non-performance of the condition of a bond. See BOND.

2. A sum agreed to be paid on breach of an agreement or any stipulation of it. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES, and NOMINE PENÆ. The fact that the parties state expressly in their contract that the sum named is 'liquidated damages' will not prevent the Court from deciding that it is a penalty. 'The cases upon the subject of penalty or liquidated damages are very numerous. The result of them seems to be this, that what the Courts look at is the real intention of the parties as it is to be gathered from the language they have used' (Lea v. Whitaker, (1872) L. R. 8 C. P. p. 73, per Keating, J.). The words are not conclusive ; the essence of penalty is a payment stipulated as in terrorem of the offending party : the essence of liquidated damages is a genuine covenanted pre-estimate of loss, Dunlop Co. v. New Garage Co., 1915, A. C. 79, approved in Widnes Foundry (1925) Ltd. v. Cellulose Acetate Co. Ltd., 1931, 2 K. B. 393, and 1933, A. C. 20.

3. A sum recoverable by action from a person infringing a statute. See PENAL STATUTES.

4. A sum, also called a fine, recoverable in a Court of Summary Jurisdiction from a person infringing a statute.

Penance [fr. pœnitentia, Lat.], an ecclesiastical punishment used in the discipline of the primitive church, which affected the body of the penitent, by which he was obliged to give a public satisfaction to the church for the scandal he had given by his evil example. See the still unrepealed Articuli Cleri, 9 Edw. 2, st. 1, c. 2; Statutes Revised, vol. i, at p. 66; also the Introduction to the Communion Service in the Prayer Book.

Pendente lite (during litigation).

Administration pendente lite is sometimes granted when an action is commenced in the Probate Court touching the validity of a will.

An injunction may be granted to restrain a party from disposing of or dealing with property pendente lite. As to registration of a lis pendens, see LAND CHARGES.

Pendente lite, Alimony. See ALIMONY.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur. Co. Litt. 344. —(During a litigation nothing new should be introduced.)

Pendentes, ungathered fruits.—Civ. Law.

Penerarius, an ensign-bearer.—Cowel.

Penitentiary-houses, prisons where criminals were confined to hard labour. See the repealed 19 Geo. 3, c. 74, and GAOL.

Pennon, a standard, banner, or ensign carried in war.

Penny Postage Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 96), repealed by Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48).

Pennyweight, twenty-four grains; see Weights and Measures Act, 1878, Second Schedule, 'Weights.'

Pensam, the full weight of twenty ounces.

Pension, an annual allowance made to any one, usually in consideration of past services.

By the Succession to the Crown Act, 1707, (6 Anne, c. 7) (c. 41 in the Revised Statutes), and 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 56, no person having a pension under the Crown during pleasure, or for any term of years, is capable of being elected or sitting in the House of Commons.

Old Age Pension.—The Old Age Pensions

Act, 1908, which was not on a contributory basis, gave to every person the right to a pension who fulfilled certain conditions. The Act, with the amending Old Age Pensions Acts, 1911, 1919, and 1924, has been repealed by the Consolidating Old Age Pensions Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 31). These conditions are contained in s. 2 of the Act of 1936, as follows:—

2. The statutory conditions for the receipt of an old age pension by any person are—

- (1) The person must have attained the age of seventy, or in the case of a blind person, the age of fifty.
- (2) The person must satisfy the pension authorities that for at least ten years up to the date of the receipt of any sum on account of a pension he has been a British subject, and that he has been resident in the United Kingdom, if he is a natural-born British subject, for an aggregate of not less than twelve years since attaining the age of fifty years or in the case of a blind person thirty years and, if he is not a natural-born British subject, for an aggregate period of twenty years.
- (3) The person must satisfy the pension authorities that his yearly means as calculated in accordance with the provisions of the first schedule to the Act, after deducting therefrom such part, if any, thereof, but not exceeding in any case thirty-nine pounds, as is derived from any source other than earnings, do not exceed forty-nine pounds seventeen shillings and sixpence.

There are, however, several disqualifications, chief of which are the receipt of poor relief; or being detained in prison without the option of a fine; or maintained as a rate-aided patient of unsound mind; or criminal lunatic; or in a mental hospital. But see Widows, Orphans and Old Age Contributory Pensions Act, 1936, s. 11, in regard to pensions to persons who have been entitled under the contributory Acts becoming entitled after attaining 70 years of age to old age pensions although statutory conditions as to means, residence, or locality have not been fulfilled. The pension is 10s. per week where the yearly means do not exceed 26l. 5s. Between this sum and the yearly means of 49l. 17s. 6d. the pension is in accordance with a sliding scale.

Contributory Pensions.—A contributory old age pension under the Widows, Orphans and Old Age Contributory Pensions Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 33), consolidating the Acts of 1925 and 1929, 1931, is paid to persons between sixty-five and seventy, whereas non-contributory old age pensions are payable at seventy; see ante, and ss. 8, 9, 10 and 11 of this Act (c. 33). The Old Age Pensions and the Widows, Orphans and Old Age Contributory Pensions Act, for persons insured under the National Health Insurance Acts, 1936, and others (see sec. 2 of c. 33, 1936), is administered by the Ministry of Health by Ministry of Health Act, 1919, s. 3.

Neither old age nor contributory pensions are assignable, nor do they pass to the trustee in bankruptcy (sec. 7 of c. 31 and sec. 36 of c. 33, respectively, of 1936).

Claims and questions relating to old age pensioners are made to and considered by local pensions committees appointed by the county or borough or urban district councils with a population of over 20,000 and then referred to the local pensions officer for inquiries and report, on which the committee give their decision. Claims relating to contributory pensions are to be made to the Minister of Health, and then may be made to referees (sec. 30 of c. 33).

Pensions are payable under special statutory provisions to grantees from the Crown, for political, naval and military, police, civil and other services and for services under local authorities under the Local Government Officers' Superannuation Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 59), an adoptive Act for local authorities and other public bodies. Pensions for the clergy have been provided by the Clergy Pensions Measures, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, No. 6), as amended and extended by later measures, of which the most recent are the Clergy Pensions Measures, 1930 (No. 6), 1936 (Nos. 1 and 3), and see the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (Provision for Unbeneficed Clergy) Measure, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, No. 1).

See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Pension,' and SUPERANNUATION.

Pension of Churches, certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes. A spiritual person may sue in the spiritual Court for a pension originally granted and confirmed by the ordinary; but where it is granted by a temporal person to a clerk, he cannot; as if one grant an annuity to a parson he must sue for it in the temporal Courts.—Cro. Eliz. 675. See previous title.

Pensions, Ministry of. Established by the Ministry of Pensions Act, 1916, to take over the powers and duties of (a) the Admiralty with respect to the pensions and grants to persons who have served in H.M. naval forces and their dependants, other than service pensions, so far as the pensions and grants are payable out of moneys provided by Parliament and not provided exclusively for Greenwich Hospital; (b) the Commissioners for the Royal Hospital for Soldiers at Chelsea with respect to the grant and administration of disability pensions and grants other than in-pensions; (c) the Army Council and the Secretary of State for War with respect to the pensions and grants to persons who have served in any of H.M. military forces and their dependants, and to persons who have served in the nursing service of these forces, other than service pensions. The Minister may sit in the House of Commons. See also Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Pension.'

Pension of the Inns of Court, an annual payment formerly made by each member to the houses. Also, that which in the two Temples is called a parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a council, is, in Gray's Inn, termed a pension, being an assembly of the benchers to consult upon the affairs of the society. See INNS OF COURT.

Pensioner. 1. One who is supported by an allowance at the will of another; a dependant; he who receives an annuity from Government without filling any office.

2. A band of gentlemen who attend as a guard on the royal person. It was instituted in 1539; each gentleman has an allowance of 150*l.* per annum, and two horses. This band is now called the Honourable Body of Gentlemen-at-Arms.

3. A member of a college at Cambridge who is not on the foundation.

Pension-writ, a process formerly issued against a member of an Inn of Court when he was in arrear for pensions, commons, or other duties, etc.

Pentecostals, pious oblations made at the feast of Pentecost by parishioners to their priests; and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes to the principal mother churches. They are also called Whitsun-farthings.

Pentonville Prison, a place provided in 1842 under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 29 and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 39 for the confinement of male convicts under sentence of transportation, and later used for the confinement of those sentenced to penal servitude. Discontinued and sold under powers provided by 48 & 49 Vict. c. 72.

Peon, a footman, a soldier, an inferior officer, a servant employed in the business of the revenue, police, or judicature.—Indian.

People [peuple, Fr.; populo, It.; pueblo, Sp.; fr. populus, Lat.], the many, the multitude, the inhabitants of a nation, state, town, etc.; the commonalty or common folk, as distinguished from the higher classes; men; individuals.—Richard. Dict.

Peppercorn. When it is desired to reserve only a nominal rent for any period, a 'peppercorn, if demanded,' is usually reserved. A writing showing that a peppercorn has been handed over is not 'a receipt for the last payment due for rent' within s. 3 (4) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. See now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 45 (2) and (3) (Re Moody and Yates, (1885) 30 Ch. D. 344). These rents may be reserved in building leases by mortgagors and mortgagees (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 99), and in building and forestry leases by tenants for life (Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 44 and 48).

Per and Post. To come in in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate, as the heirs or assigns of the grantee: to come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title, as the lord by escheat. See Co. Litt. 271 b, Harg., n. (1), II.

Perambulation, a travelling through or over. Perambulation of parishes is to be made by the minister, churchwardens, and parishioners, by going round them once a year, in or about Ascension week; and the parishioners may well justify going over any man's land in their perambulation, according to usage, and it is said may abate all nuisances in their way.—Cro. Eliz. 441. Manors are also perambulated.—Wheat. Com. Pr. 234. See PARISH BOUNDARIES.

Perambulatione faciendâ, a writ which lay where any encroachments had been made by a neighbouring lord, etc., to the sheriff to perambulate or settle the bounds. See Jac. Law Dict.

Actions upon writs of perambulation were authorized in Scotland, by the Act 1597, c. 79, to settle the bounds of disputed properties adjoining each other.

Perca, a perch of land, 16½ feet. See PERCH.

Per capita (by the number of individuals), opposed to per stirpes (by the number of families); if a man die and leave all his goods 'among my grandsons,' having nine grandsons, one of whom was an only son, and the other eight brethren; then if the division be per stirpes, the only son shall take half the goods as representing one of his grandsire's two children; if the division was to be per capita, he would take a ninth part only as being one of nine grandsons. Whether legatees are to take per stirpes or per capita is often a difficult question of construction; for the authorities, see Theobald on Wills; and see the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 47.

Perceptura, a place in a river properly banked for the better preserving and taking of fish.—Par. Ant. 120.

Perch, a measure of land, consisting of five yards and a half of the standard measure.

Per, Cui, and Post, writs of entry, now abolished. See PER AND POST.

Perdings, men of no substance.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 29.

Perdonatio utlagarum, a pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of a court, is outlawed, and afterwards of his own accord surrenders.—Reg. Brev. 28.

Perduellio, treason.—Civ. Law.

Peregrini, foreigners commorant or sojourning in Rome.—Civ. Law.

Peremption, a nonsuit, also a quashing or killing. See NONSUIT.

Peremptory [fr. primo, Lat., I cut off], final, determinate and, in statutes, obligatory, as opposed to permissive.

Peremptory Challenge, an arbitrary species of challenge to a certain number of jurors without showing any cause.

This privilege is granted to a prisoner in cases of treason and felony, but not misdemeanour, and is denied to the Crown. In treason a prisoner can challenge without cause thirty-five jurors, unless the treason affects the King's person, when the number is limited to twenty, as in felony (Treason Acts, 1695, 1800 and 1842, and the Juries Act, 1825). See also the Criminal Law Act, 1827, s. 3.

Peremptory Day, a precise time when certain business by a rule of Court ought to be spoken to; but if it cannot be spoken to then, the Court, at the prayer of the party concerned, with give a further day without prejudice to him.

Peremptory Mandamus, a second mandamus, which issues where the return which has been made to the first writ is found either insufficient in law or false in fact. To this writ no other return will be admitted, but a certificate of perfect obedience and due execution. See MANDAMUS; and as to 'peremptory mandamus' in the first instance, to hold a municipal election, see Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 225 (8), repealed by the Local Government Act, 1933.

Peremptory Paper, a court paper containing a list of all motions, etc., which are to be disposed of before any other business.

Peremptory Pleas, or Pleas in Bar, those which were founded on some matter tending to impeach the right of action.

Peremptory Rule. Formerly a defendant might obtain a peremptory rule to declare within a certain time, absolute in the first instance. This was abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 53, and a four-day notice substituted. See now PLEADING; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Perengaria. See ANGARIA.

Perils of the Sea. They are strictly the natural accidents peculiar to the water, but the law has extended this phrase to comprehend events not attributable to natural causes, as captures by pirates, and losses by collision, where no blame is attachable to either ship, or at all events to the injured ship. It was held by the House of Lords in Hamilton, Fraser & Co. v. Pandorf & Co., (1887) 12 App. Cas. 518, that, where (under a charter-party or bills of lading which excepted 'dangers and accidents of the seas'), rats gnawed a hole in a pipe on board ship, whereby sea-water escaped and damaged a cargo of rice, without neglect or default on the part of the shipowners or their servants, the damage was held to be due to a peril of the sea (as the proximate cause) and within the exception.

The word peril, like periculum, Lat., from which it is derived, is in itself ambiguous, and sometimes denotes the risk of inevitable mischance, and sometimes the danger arising from the want of due circumspection.—Jones on Bailments, 98.

Per incuriam, through want of care. An order of the Court obviously made through some mistake or under some misapprehension is said to be made per incuriam.

Perinde valere, a dispensation granted to a clerk, who, being defective in capacity for a benefice or other ecclesiastical function, is, de facto, admitted to it.—Gibbs, 87; 25 Hen. 8, c. 21.

Perindinare, to stay, remain, or abide in a place.

Per infortunium, by mischance.

Periodical Payments, Apportionment of. See APPORTIONMENT.

Periphrasis, circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one.

Perishable Goods, goods which decay and lose their value if not consumed soon—as fish, fruit, and the like. By s. 48 (3) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, if on the sale of goods 'of a perishable nature' the buyer does not within a reasonable time pay or tender the price, the unpaid seller may resell and recover damages from the buyer; and by Ord. L., r. 2, such goods, when the subject of an action, may, by order of the Court or a judge, be sold.

Perished Goods. 'Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have perished at the time when the contract is made, the contract is void,' and 'Where there is an agreement to sell specific goods and subsequently the goods, without any fault on the part of the seller or buyer, perish before the risk passes to the buyer, the agreement is thereby avoided.'—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, ss. 6, 7. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

Perjury, the offence committed when a lawful oath or affirmation (see OATHS and AFFIRMATION) is administered and the witness swears or affirms falsely in a matter material to the issue.

The law on this subject is now contained in the Perjury Act, 1911, 'an Act to consolidate and simplify the law relating to perjury and kindred offences'; it repeals the whole of the Acts 5 Eliz. c. 9 and 2 Geo. 2, c. 25 (the Perjury Act, 1728) and portions of one hundred and thirty other statutes. The Act may be briefly summarized as follows: If any person lawfully sworn as a witness or as an interpreter in a 'judicial proceeding' wilfully makes a statement material in that proceeding, which he knows to be false or does not believe to be true, he will be guilty of perjury and liable to penal servitude for not exceeding seven years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not exceeding two years, or to a fine, or to both penal servitude or imprisonment and fine; 'judicial proceeding' includes a proceeding before any Court, tribunal, or person having by law power to hear, receive and examine evidence on oath, and the question whether a statement was 'material' is a question of law to be determined by the Court of trial (s. 1). Section 2 deals with false statements on oath otherwise than in a judicial proceeding, and s. 3 with false oaths, declarations, notices, etc., with reference to marriage; an offence under either of these sections is a misdemeanour and punishable as above. Section 4 deals with false answers, declarations, etc., as to births and deaths; s. 5 (extended by Local Government Act, 1933, ss. 225 and 243) with false statutory declarations (see that title) and other false statements without oath; and s. 6 with false or fraudulent declarations, certificates, or representations, made in order to obtain registration for the purpose of carrying on any vocation or calling. Every person who aids, abets, counsels, procures or suborns another to commit an offence against the Act is liable as a principal offender (s. 7), and every person who incites or attempts to procure or suborn another to commit an offence is guilty of a misdemeanour (ibid.). See SUBORNATION.

No person can, however, be convicted of any offence against the Act, or of any offence declared by any other Act to be perjury or subornation of perjury or to be punishable as such, solely upon the evidence of one witness as to the falsity of any statement alleged to be false (s. 13); in other words, there must be corroboration on that issue.

Of the remaining sections the principal are s. 9, which empowers judges and others to direct a prosecution for perjury; s. 10, which denies jurisdiction to quarter sessions; and s. 14, which deals with the proof of certain proceedings in which perjury can occur; and see also the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86).

Perkins, the author of the 'profitable boke' on the learning of conveyancing; as valuable a performance as any, perhaps, of the reign of Henry VIII. This was first printed in 1532, with the following title: 'Incipit perutilis Tractatus Magistri Jo. Perkins Interioris Templi Socii,' etc. The book is in French.—4 Reeves, c. xxx., 120.

Permanent Pasture.—See PASTURE.

Permissions, negotiations of law, arising either from the law's silence, or its express declaration.—Ruth. Nat. Law, bk. 1, ch. 1.

Permissive Use, a passive use which was resorted to before the Statute of Uses, in order to avoid a harsh law, as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture; it was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy, as a conveyance to A. to the use of B. A. simply held the possession, and B. enjoyed the profits of the estate. See PASSIVE USE.

Permissive Waste, the neglect of necessary repairs. See WASTE.

Permit, a licence. An instrument granted by the officers of excise, certifying that the excise duties on certain goods have been paid, and permitting their removal from some specified place to another.

Permutation, or Barter, the exchange of one moveable subject for another.

Permutations, etc., a writ to an ordinary, commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice upon exchange made with another.—Reg. Brev. 307.

Per my et per tout (not of any part but of the whole). Et sic totum tenet et nihil tenet, scil. totum conjunctim et nihil per se separatim; see Murray v. Hall, (1849) 7 C. B.

455). Joint tenants, by reason of the combination of entirety of interest with the power of transferring in equal shares, are said to be seised per my et per tout. 'And this,' says Littleton, 'is as much as to say, as he is seised by every parcell and by the whole, etc.'; see Co. Litt. 186 a. If any joint tenant severs by alienating his share he destroys the joint tenancy in that share and the grantee obtains no joint tenancy. See JOINT TENANTS; ENTIRETIES.

Pernancy [fr. prendre, Fr., to take], the taking or receiving of anything, e.g., tithes.

Pernor, he who receives the profits of lands, etc.; the cestui que use.—1 Rep. 123; Co. Litt. 323 b.

Per pals, Trial, trial by the country (i.e., by jury).

Perparks, a part of the inheritance.—Fleta Perpetua lex est, nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quæ abrogationem excludit, ab initio non valet. Bacon.—(It is an everlasting law, that no positive human law shall be perpetual; and any part of an enactment which purports to admit of no repeal, is void from the beginning.)

Perpetual Commissioners (under Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833). See COMMISSIONERS, PERPETUAL.

Perpetual Curate, a minister in holy orders, who is charged with the permanent care of a parochial church, which, although an appropriation, has no endowed vicar. He is entitled to emolument for his services.

By the Church Building Act, 1831, churches or chapels built and endowed by particular individuals shall have districts assigned to them, and be deemed perpetual curacies, and the right of nomination thereto shall be vested in the person so building and endowing.

Perpetual Injunction, an injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time; as opposed to an injunction ad interim, i.e., until the trial or further order. See INJUNCTION.

Perpetuating Testimony. When evidence is likely to be irrecoverably lost, by reason of a witness being old, or infirm, or going abroad before the matter to which it relates can be judicially investigated, equity will, by anticipation, preserve and perpetuate such evidence in order to prevent a failure of justice; and by R. S. C. Ord. XXXVII., r. 35, superseding but substantially re-enacting the repealed 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69, any person who would become entitled, upon the happening of any future event, to any honour, title, dignity, or office, or to any property, real or personal, the right or claim to which cannot by him be brought to trial before the happening of such future event, may commence an action to perpetuate any testimony which may be material for establishing such right or claim.

This jurisdiction emanates from the anxiety of equity to ward off litigation, where it may be oppressively exercised, by preserving the evidence in maintenance of an unpossessed legal right, or where an adversary with an apparent right is postponing his attack against the lawful possessor, until the death of witnesses who can give evidence against his claim. A common case used to be that of a devisee establishing a will against the heir-at-law, by compelling him to litigate the question at once or not at all, and by perpetuating the evidence of the attesting witnesses. See DE BENE ESSE.

The suit for declaration of legitimacy is in the nature of a suit for perpetuating testimony. See LEGITIMACY DECLARATION ACTS.

The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), s. 6, provides in criminal cases for the taking of the depositions of persons dangerously ill and not likely to recover, and the making of the same evidence in certain events after the death of such persons, and see now Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 13 (3).

Perpetuity, unlimited duration; exemption from intermission or ceasing, where, though all who have interest should join in a covenant, so that they could not bar or pass the estate. It is odious in law, destructive to the commonwealth, and an impediment to commerce, by preventing the wholesome circulation of property.

The rule against perpetuities, or the doctrine of remoteness, applies to the corpus of property whether real or personal, and whether limited by deed or will, and may be thus stated: that the vesting of property cannot be postponed, or the alienation of it restricted, beyond any number of lives in being [whether interested or not is quite immaterial (Duke of Norfolk's Case, 3 Cha. Ca. 1; 33 Car. 2, called 'the Case of Perpetuities'; and Stephens v. Stephens, Ca. tem. Talb. 228 (1736))], and twenty-one years from the death of the surviving life, without reference to the infancy of any person who is to take under the limitations, or of any other person, allowance for gestation being made only in those cases where it exists. If proof of the extinction of the lives mentioned is impracticable before the property can vest, the trust may be avoided (Re Villar, 1929, 1 Ch. 243).

The rule requires a limitation, whether of an absolute or partial interest, positively and necessarily to vest within the period prescribed, and not to depend upon a mere possibility. Moreover, not only the person to take, but also the precise amount of his interest, must be ascertained within the prescribed period (Blight v. Hartnoll, (1881) 19 Ch. D. 294; Re Thompson, 1906, 2 Ch. p. 202).

In regard to limitations and interests which take effect under or by virtue of any instrument executed before 1926 or any will of a person who died before that date, and subject to s. 163 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, infra, to all limitations after that date, if the rule be exceeded, the limitation is wholly void and cannot be validated by the happening of any event subsequently to its creation. When a limitation might have included objects too remote it is invalid, notwithstanding the objects may actually be ascertained within the verge of the rule. Further, limitations following upon a limitation void for remoteness are themselves void, whether within the line of perpetuity or not. But the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 163, declares that:

Where in a will, settlement or other instrument the absolute vesting either of capital or income of property or the ascertainment of a beneficiary or class of beneficiaries, is made to depend on the attainment by the beneficiary or members of the class of an age exceeding 21 years and thereby the gift to that beneficiary or class or any member thereof or any gift over, remainder, executory limitation or trust arising on the partial or total failure of the original gift is, or but for this section would be, rendered void for remoteness, the will, settlement or other instrument shall take effect for the purposes of such gift, gift over, remainder, executory limitation, or trust as if the vesting or ascertainment aforesaid had been made to depend on the beneficiary or member if the class attaining the age of 21 years and that age shall be substituted for the age stated in the will, settlement or other instrument.

The statutory modification only extends to instruments executed after 1925 or to any appointment or bequest by will of a person dying after 1925.

The period presented by the rule is to be computed from the date or delivery of the deed creating the limitations, or from the testator's death, when given by will, that being the period at which a will takes effect, while a power in favour of a special class or class is considered to have been created by the instrument conferring the power and not by the instrument exercising it.

The following limitations are exempt from the perpetuity rule :—

(1) A limitation expectant upon an entail, for it can be destroyed by barring the entail; but should the entail be preceded by a term for years, and its trusts be postponed until the failure of the issue in tail, they will be void, because limited to arise on an indefinite failure of issue.

(2) Limitations the nature of whose subject-matter is such as to render it necessary for them to take effect, if at all, within the period prescribed by the perpetuity rule.

(3) Limitations in mortmain, and to charitable uses. Church property is not embraced by the law of perpetuity.

(4) Perpetuities allowed or created by Act of Parliament, such as Blenheim, settled upon the renowned Duke of Marlborough and his posterity (3 & 4 Anne, c. 6; 4 Anne, c. 4; and 5 Anne, c. 3); and Strathfieldsaye, on the great Duke of Wellington and his descendants (41 Geo. 3, c. 59; 42 Geo. 3, c. 113; and 54 Geo. 3, c. 171). See also as to the effect of an Act of Parliament, Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. Manchester Racecourse Co., 1900, 2 Ch. 352; 1901, 2 Ch. 37.

(5) Express exceptions set out in the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 162, relating to rents, rent-charges and rights to land or relating to land and certain rights or remedies connected therewith, and see also s. 7, ibid. (determinable fees).

Closely connected with the rule against perpetuities was another and independent rule, commonly known as the rule against double possibilities, or the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 85, viz., that after an estate has been limited to an unborn person for life, a remainder cannot be limited to any child of that unborn person, and this rule applies to equitable as well as to legal estates; see Re Nash, 1901, 1 Ch. 1. This rule has been abolished in regard to the instruments coming into operation after 1925 (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 161). See POSSIBILITY.

For the general law of perpetuities, consult the works of Lewis (1849); Marsden (1883); and Prof. Gray (Boston, U.S.A., 2nd ed. 1906); and as to option of purchase in a lease, and the present restrictions on the creation of a lease in futuro, see OPTION and LEASE.

Compare also title ACCUMULATION.

Per Pro. By procurator, which see.

Per quæ servitū, a judicial writ issuing from the note of a fine; it lay for cognisee of a manor, seignior, chief rent, or other services to compel him who was tenant of the land at the time of the note of the fine levied, to attorn unto him.—Old N. B. 155.

Perquisite, something gained by a place or office over and above the stated wages; anything gotten by industry or purchase with money different from that which descends from a father or ancestor; also fines of copyholds, heriots, amerciaments, etc.

Perquisitor, a searcher.

Per quod (whereby), a phrase formerly made use of by a plaintiff in a declaration alleging special damage, without which an action would not have been maintainable.

Per quod servitū amisit, words used by a plaintiff in his claim for damages from a defendant who has deprived him of the services of his servant by a wrongful act. See, e.g., Martinez v. Gerber, (1841) 3 M. & G. 88; The Amerika, 1917, A. C. at p. 38; SEDUCTION.

Perry, a drink made from the juice of pears fermented. The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, provides that any reference to cider shall include a reference to perry.

Per se, by itself, taken alone.

Person, in an Act of Parliament passed after 1st January, 1890, includes 'any body of persons corporate or unincorporate' unless the contrary intention appears.—Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 19. A corporation, such as a limited company, may be a 'respectable and responsible person' within the meaning of a covenant against assignment in a lease (Willmott v. London Road Car Co., 1910, 2 Ch. 525). A corporation is not a person for the purpose of suing for penalties as a common informer unless expressly empowered by statute to do so (Guardians of St. Leonards v. Franklin, 3 C. P. D. 377). Apart from the provisions of the Interpretation Act, 1889, a firm of partners is not a person, although partners may sue or be sued in the firm's name (R. S. C. Ord. XLVIII.A, r. 1), and artificial persons are endowed only with the status or capacity conferred by the charter or statute of incorporation, see CORPORATION; COMPANY; TRUST CORPORATION.

Person of full age, under the Settled Land Act, 1925, means a person not being an infant, see Re Earl of Carnarvon's Settled Estates, 1927, 1 Ch. 138, and therefore includes a corporation (ibid.). An infant cannot be a tenant for life under s. 19 of the Act.

Person of Unsound Mind, a term by which in a more enlightened age persons afflicted with a mental illness affecting their reason are to be known, as distinguished from Idiots, Imbeciles, Feeble-minded Persons and Moral Defectives under the Mental Deficiency Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 33) (see those titles, and LUNATICS).

The statute law affecting persons of unsound mind is contained in the Lunacy and Mental Treatment Acts, 1890 to 1930, of which the principal are the Lunacy Acts, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), 1891 (54 & 55 Vict., c. 56), and, as regards Boards of Control, the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913 to 1927, and the Mental Treatment Rules, 1930 (S. R. & O., 1930, No. 1083). A classification of patients has been made as follows: (a) Voluntary (see the Act of 1930, s. 1; (b) Temporary (ibid., s. 5 (1); (c) Certified (Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 4); (d) Found to be of unsound mind upon inquisition (see that title), and a further classification is into a private certifiable patients and rate-aided certifiable patients. Voluntary and temporary patients will be admitted or received into the charge of institutions, hospitals, licensed houses, nursing homes, or single care as provided by the Acts, without being certified; and see 26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 17 (paying patients). In all other cases the requirements are:—

(1) An order of judicial authority (county court judge, stipendiary or police magistrate, or justice of the peace specially appointed) for the detention as persons of unsound mind of any such person not so found by inquisition.

(2) Examination of all detained persons of unsound mind with a view to their discharge unless they are expressly certified still to be in that state.

The Acts also authorize and provide for the management and administration of the estates and property of persons who are not detained as, and not found to be persons of unsound mind, who are proved to the satisfaction of the judge in lunacy to be, through mental infirmity arising from disease or age, incapable of managing their affairs.

The powers and duties of the Commissioners in Lunacy were transferred to the Board of Control by the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, s. 65.

The Lord Chancellor's Visitors, who are independent of the Board of Control, report to the Judge or Master in Lunacy.

The Mental Treatment Rules, 1930, chiefly relate to the reception of lunatics, and their proper care and treatment. The Patients Estate Rules, 1934 (S. R. & O., 1934, No. 269/L.2), relate chiefly to inquisitions (q.v.) and the management and administration of the property of patients. See also CONCURRENT JURISDICTION; MASTER IN LUNACY.

See Mills and Poyser's Lunacy Practice; Archbold's Lunacy and Mental Deficiency; Pope on Lunacy; Heywood and Massey's Lunacy Practice; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Lunatics.' Under the present practice a person who has become more or less of unsound mind is not generally so found, nor is a committee appointed; the usual course is to obtain the appointment of a 'receiver,' who manages the patient's affairs under the direction of the Masters in Lunacy. The cost of maintenance in a criminal lunatic asylum is a Crown debt recoverable against the lunatic's estate (In re J., 1909, 1 Ch. 574).

Persona, anybody capable of having and becoming subject to rights.—Civ. Law. See Sand. Just.

Personæ ecclesiæ, the parson or personation of the church.

Personable, the being able to hold or maintain a plea in court; also capacity to take anything granted or given.—Plowd.

Personal Action, one brought for the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or for damages or other redress for breach of contract, or other injuries, of whatever description, the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments only excepted. The term has been used in a narrower sense to express an action for injury to the person, as for slander, assault, injury by accident, as distinguished from injury to property. It is in this sense that it is said 'Actio personalis moritur cum personâ.' See that title, and EXECUTOR and NEGLIGENCE.

Personal Acts of Parliament, statutes confined to particular persons, e.g., authorizing a person to change his name, etc.

Personal Bar, the name applied in Scotland to estoppel (q.v.).

Personal Chattels, goods, money, or moveables, and see the definitions in the Optional Statutory Forms of Wills prescribed under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 179, by S. R. & O., 1925, No. 780/L.15, and Adm. of Estates Act, 1925, s. 55.

Personal Property, money, goods, cattle, chattels, stocks, shares, securities, debts, etc., and also leases for years, however long. Personal property is either in possession, or in action, where a man has not the actual occupation of the thing, but only a right to it arising upon some contract, and recoverable by an action at law.

Any person may assign personal property, including chattels real, directly to himself and another person or other persons or corporation, by the like means as he might assign the same to another.—Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, s. 21.

This was extended by the Emergency Act, 1881, to conveyances of freehold land or choses in action by a husband to a wife or e contra. Now, by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 72, a person may convey real or personal property to himself alone.

In the case of real property there can be no such thing as an absolute ownership in the subject-matter, i.e., land; the utmost that any one, even an owner in fee simple, can have is an estate. But in the case of personal property the primary rule is precisely the reverse; such property is essentially the subject of absolute ownership and cannot be held for any estate (Williams on Pers. Prop.). This strict rule of the law, however, was not recognized in equity, and accordingly under a gift of personal property to A. for life and after his decease to B., the Court of Chancery, to carry out the obvious intention, would hold that A. was entitled to a life interest merely, and that B. had during the life of A. a vested interest in remainder of which he could dispose at his pleasure; and if the property consisted of moveable goods, A. could be compelled to furnish and sign an inventory of them and an undertaking to take proper care of them. See Re Swan, 1915, 1 Ch. 829. The only exception was in the case of goods quæ ipso usu consumuntur, e.g., wines and household provisions, for in these a person to whom they are given for life takes the absolute interest. The proper and usual mode of creating limited interests in personal property is by means of the doctrine of trusts, i.e., by vesting the property absolutely in trustees and declaring that they shall hold it upon trust for the proposed beneficiaries either for life or otherwise as may be agreed. But even in equity personalty which was settled either by deed or will to follow the trusts of an equitable entailed estate in land vested absolutely in the first tenant in tail at his birth. See Re Lord Chesham, 1909, 2 Ch. 310. Joint tenancy and tenancy in common may subsist in the case of personal property, though now tenancy in common of any legal estate in land, including leaseholds or other interests in land, has been abolished (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1); of the latter kind of property almost every marriage settlement affords an instance. The policy of the land and property legislation of 1925 being to assimilate the law of real and personal property as much as possible, the Law of Property Act, 1925, provides (s. 130) that personal property may be entailed like real estate, but only (in either case) by way of equitable interest (see TAIL). Before the Land Transfer Act, 1897, a notable distinction between realty and personalty was that realty devolved directly on the heir or devisee upon the death of a person seized of the estate or inheritance. After that Act it devolved upon the personal representative in trust for the heir or devisee, and after the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, it devolved, as personal property and chattels real had always devolved, upon the personal representative, whose conveyance or assent is necessary and sufficient to confer title.

Personal Representatives, executors or administrators of a deceased person. See EXECUTOR; ADMINISTRATOR; and REAL REPRESENTATIVE.

Personal Rights, the rights of personal security, comprising those of life, limb, body, health, reputation, and the right of personal liberty.

Personal Tithes, those that are paid out of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person, as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise, handicrafts, etc.

Personality of Laws. By the personality of laws, foreign jurists generally mean all laws concerning the condition, state, and capacity of persons; by the reality of laws, all laws which concern property or things; quæ ad rem spectant. Whenever they wish to express that the operation of a law is universal, they compendiously announce that it is a personal statute; and whenever, on the other hand, they wish to express that its operation is confined to the country of its origin, they simply declare it to be a real statute.—Story's Conf. of Laws, 8th ed. p. 20.

Personalty, personal property—as distinguished from realty, or real property, in the usual sense of the word, freehold or copyhold land or houses; that which relates to the person. See PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Personation, pretending to be some other particular person.

Personation in order to obtain property is made felony by the False Personation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 36). Personation of a voter is made felony by the Ballot Act, 1872, and personation of a master for the purpose of giving a false character to a servant is a misdemeanour by 32 Geo. 3, c. 56. Personation of an official entitled to wear uniform, see 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 75, s. 1; of police, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93; and, generally, Local Government Act, 1933, and Companies Act, 1929, s. 71, and other statutes.

Perspleua vera non sunt probanda. Co. Litt. 16.—(Evident truths need not be proved.)

Per stirpes (by the right of representation—literally, according to the stocks). See PER CAPITA.

Perticata terræ, the fourth part of an acre.

Perticulas, a pittance; a small portion of alms or victuals. Also, certain poor scholars of the Isle of Man.

Pertinents, appurtenants.—Scots term.

Per totam curiam, by the voice or judgment of the whole Court.

Perturbatrix, a woman who breaks the peace.

Per varios actus legem experientia fecit. 4 Inst. 50.—(By various acts experience framed the law.)

Per verba de futuro [tempore], Per verba de præsenti [tempore], a contract of marriage by words. See MARRIAGE.

Perverse Verdict, a verdict whereby the jury refuse to follow the direction of the judge on a point of law. See NEW TRIAL.

Pervise, the palace-yard at Westminster.—Somner.

Pesa, a weight of 256 lb.

Pesage, a custom or duty paid for weighing merchandise or other goods.

Peshoush, a present, particularly to Government, in consideration of an appointment, or as an acknowledgment of a tenure. Also tribute, fine, quit-rent, or advance, or stipulated revenues.—Indian.

Peshura, Paishura, guide, leader, the prime minister of the Mahratta Government.—Ibid.

Pessimil exempli, of the worst example.

Pessona, mast of oaks, etc., or money taken for mast, or feeding hogs.—Cowel.

Pessurable, Pestorable, or Pestarable Wares, merchandise which takes up a good deal of room in a ship.

Pests. See DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS.

Peter-pence, an ancient levy or tax of a penny on each house throughout England paid to the Pope, called Peter-pence, because collected on the day of St. Peter ad vincula. Abolished by 25 Hen. 8, c. 21.

Petit Cape. See CAPE.

Petitio, a count or declaration.—Glanv.

Petition, a supplication made by an inferior to a superior, having jurisdiction to grant redress.

The subject has a right to petition the sovereign, or the two Houses of Parliament, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are declared by the Bill of Rights (see BILL OF RIGHTS) to be illegal.

But by 13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 5, prior in date to the Bill of Rights, it was enacted that not more than twenty names should be signed to a petition to the Crown or either House of Parliament for alteration of matters in Church or State, without the previous approval of the contents by three justices or the majority of a grand jury, and further, that no petition should be presented by a company of more than ten persons.

There are several regulations respecting petitions to Parliament, which, if neglected in any one particular, will prevent their reception. For instance, signatures or marks must be original, not copies nor signatures of agents on behalf of others; no chairman of a public meeting can sign for the whole meeting (though the common seal of a corporation is received as the petition of the whole corporate body). In the Chancery Division of the High Court, petitions (as to which see R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LII., rr. 16 et seq.) are used for getting money out of court, and a variety of other matters, but many matters in which a petition was formerly necessary are now disposed of on originating summons. Consult Dan. Ch. Pr.

In bankruptcy, proceedings are commenced by one or more creditors of the debtor, or the debtor himself, filing a petition in the Court of Bankruptcy, praying that the debtor may be adjudged bankrupt. See ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Petition to wind up a company. A winding-up of a company by order of the Court must be begun by petition (Companies Act, 1929, s. 170). For form of petition, see Winding-up Rules, 1929, and WINDING UP.

Divorce and matrimonial suits, and suits instituted under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, are commenced by petition.

As to election petitions, see that title.

Petition de droit (Petition of Right), one of the Common Law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the Crown of either real or personal property, or compensation in damages for breach of contract, the Crown not being liable to an ordinary action at the suit of a subject. It is said to owe its origin to Edward I.

By the Petition of Right Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 34) (commonly called Bovill's Act), the procedure on a petition of right is assimilated as far as practicable to the course of an ordinary action. The fiat of the sovereign 'that right be done' is, however, a necessary preliminary step; this is obtained by leaving the petition with the Home Secretary. A judgment that the suppliant is entitled to the whole or some portion of the relief sought by his petition, or to such other relief as the Court may think right, has the same effect as a judgment of amoveas manus. Costs are made payable both to and by the Crown, and nothing in the Act is to prevent any suppliant from proceeding as he might have done before the Act passed. Consult Robertson on the Crown.

Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1, c. 1, a parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by Charles I. in the beginning of his reign.

In the first parliament of Charles I., which met in 1626, the Commons refused to grant supplies until certain rights and privileges of the subject, which they alleged had been violated, should have been solemnly recognized by a legislative enactment. With this view they framed a petition to the king, in which, after reciting various statutes by which their rights and privileges were recognized, they prayed the king 'that no man be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, or suchlike charge, without common consent by Act of Parliament; that none be called upon to make answer so to do; that freemen be imprisoned or detained only by the law of the land, or by due process of law, and not by the king's special command, without any charge; that persons be not compelled to receive soldiers and mariners into their houses against the laws and customs of the realm; that commissions for proceeding by martial law be revoked; all which they pray as their rights and liberties, according to the laws and statutes of the realm.'

To this petition the king at first sent an evasive answer: 'The king willeth that right be done according to the laws and customs of the realm, and that the statutes be put in due execution, that his subjects may have no cause to complain of any wrongs and oppressions contrary to their just rights and liberties, to the preservation whereof he holds himself in conscience obliged as of his own prerogative.' This answer being rejected as unsatisfactory, the king at last pronounced the formal words of unqualified assent, Soit droit fait comme est désiré—'Let right be done as it is desired' (3 Car. 1, c. 1).

Notwithstanding this, however, the ministers of the Crown caused the petition to be printed and circulated with the first insufficient answer.—See Hall, Const. Hist. ch. vii.

Petitioning Creditor, one who applies for an adjudication in bankruptcy against his debtor. See Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 3 et seq., whereby the creditor's debt must be a liquidated one for 50*l.* at least, and grounded upon an act of bankruptcy (see ACT OF BANKRUPTCY) having occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition.

Petitio principii, begging the question, which is the taking of a thing in itself in dispute or not proved or false, for true or for granted, and drawing conclusions from it as such, when it is really dubious, perhaps false, or at least wants to be proved, before any rational inference can be drawn from it. For a discussion of the further question 'Is the syllogism a petitio principii?' see 1 Mill's Log., bk. 2, chap. 3, s. 1.

Petit Jury, a jury in criminal cases who try the bills found by the grand jury. See JURY.

Petit Larceny, stealing of goods to the value of a shilling or under. The distinction between grand and petit larceny was abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 2.

Petit Serjeanty, holding lands of the Crown by the service of rendering annually some small implement of war, as a bow, a sword, a lance, an arrow, flag, or the like. By s. 136 of the Law of Property Act, 1922, nothing in the Act shall affect the services incident to Grand or Petty Serjeanty (which are not to be deemed manorial incidents; see COPYHOLD), and the land is to be held in like manner as if before the commencement of the Act it had been held in free and common socage or had been copyhold as the case may require. See Co. Litt., 108 a, and TENURE.

Petit Treason, treason of a lesser kind, as if a servant killed his master, a wife her husband, a secular or religious man his prelate. But by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2, every offence which, before the passing of the Act, would have amounted to petit treason, is deemed murder only.

Peto's Act, the Trustee Appointment Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 28), whereby property conveyed for religious or educational purposes vests in the trustees from time to time without any further conveyance; amended by the Trustees Appointment Act, 1890, by its extension to societies of associated congregations, such as those of the Wesleyan Methodists, to which body the Act of 1850 had been held in Re Hoghton Chapel, (1854) 2 W. R. 631, not to apply. Extended to burial grounds by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 26.

Petra, a stone weight.

Petroleum. The landing, carriage, and storage of petroleum, a highly inflammable oil, is regulated by the Petroleum (Consolidation) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 32); under which petroleum includes crude petroleum, oil made from petroleum or from coal, shale, peat or other bituminous substances, and other products of petroleum; and 'petroleum spirit' means such petroleum which when tested in the manner set out in the schedule gives off an inflammable vapour at a temperature of less than 73° Fahrenheit. The Act also prohibits the keeping of petroleum without a licence (except a small amount in sealed cans for private use). Accidents causing loss of life by petroleum must be reported to the Secretary of State.

The Petroleum (Production) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 36), vests in the Crown the property in petroleum and natural gas within Great Britain and makes provision with respect to the searching and boring for petroleum. It prohibits the boring for petroleum in the United Kingdom unless on behalf of or under licence for the Crown. Petroleum for the purposes of this Act includes any mineral oil or relative hydrocarbon and natural gas existing in its natural condition in strata, but does not include coal or bituminous shales or other stratified deposits from which oil can be extracted by destructive distillation.

See also London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1912, Part II.; London Building Act, 1930, s. 99; and EXPLOSIVE SUBSTANCES; OIL IN NAVIGABLE WATERS; MOTOR SPIRIT; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Petroleum.'

Pettifogger [fr. petit, Fr., little, and vogueur, a rower], a dishonest lawyer in a mean way of business.—Cont. term.

Petty-bag Office, an office belonging to the Common Law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, for suits for and against solicitors and officers of that Court, and for process and proceedings by extents on statutes, recognizances, ad quod damnum, scire facias to repel letters-patent, etc.—Termes de la Ley. The term is derived from the little bag (parva бага) in which original writs relating to the business of the Crown were anciently kept.

By the Great Seal Offices Abolition Act, 1884, s. 5, provision was made for the abolition of the office of Clerk of the Petty Bag, and the transfer of his duties, and in 1888, the last holder of the office dying, it ceased to exist.

The Common Law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is now transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 18 (2) (b)), replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 16).

Petty Constables, inferior officers in every town and parish, subordinate to the high constable of the hundred. See CONSTABLE.

Petty Jury. See PETIT JURY.

Petty Sergeanty. See PETIT SERJEANTY.

Petty Sessions. A meeting of two or more justices of the peace, not being a general or quarter sessions, to transact business with which it is either necessary or desirable that more than one justice should deal. The expression is, however, often used to denote a Petty Sessional Court, which is defined as 'a court of summary jurisdiction, consisting of two or more justices, sitting in a petty sessional court-house,' and includes 'any stipendiary magistrate when sitting in a court-house or place at which he is authorized to do alone any act authorized to be done by more than one justice of the peace.'—Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13 (12). The principal business transacted by a petty sessional court is the trial of minor offences in a summary way without a jury. This power is given by various statutes dealing with particular offences and by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. There is an appeal from the decision of a petty sessional court on questions of law and fact to quarter sessions in the manner provided by the S. J. Acts by any person aggrieved by any conviction in respect of any offence who did not plead, or who has pleaded, guilty, or did or did not admit the truth of the information (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 37, and Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 25). An alternative method of appeal on a point of law only is by case stated to the High Court. Appeals to petty sessions are provided for by a number of Acts, e.g., Public Health, Housing, Road Traffic, etc. As to the duties of justices, see JUSTICES, and Stone's Justices' Manual.

Pew [fr. puye, Dut.; appui, Fr.], an enclosed seat in a church. It is somewhat in the nature of an heirloom, and may descend by immemorial custom, without any ecclesiastical concurrence, from an ancestor to his heir. Consult Cripps's Law of the Church and Clergy, 5th ed., 467.

The right to sit in a particular pew in the church arises either from prescription, as appurtenant to a messuage—but not to land (Philpotts v. Halliday, 1891, A. C. 228), or from a faculty or grant from the ordinary, for he has the disposition of all pews, which are not claimed by prescription. As to the proof of a right by prescription and the doing of repairs, see Stileman-Gibbard v. Wilkinson, 1897, 1 Q. B. 749, and see Bathurst (Earl) v. Cirencester Parish, 1921, P. 381. All other pews and seats in the body of a church are the property of the parish; and the churchwardens, as the officers of the ordinary, and subject to his control, have authority to place the parishioners therein. See 3 Steph. Com.; Carson's R. P. Stat., p. 98; 3 Hagg. Ec. Rep. 733; Reynolds v. Monckton, 1841, 2 M. & Rob. 384.

The New Parishes Act, 1856, s. 6, provides for pew-rents in district churches, but also that one half of the whole number of pews or sittings shall be free sittings; the New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869, that pews or sittings which are subject to any trust or are private property may be surrendered to the bishop and become 'subject to the same laws as to all rights and property therein as the pews and sittings of ancient parish churches'; and by the Church Seats Act, 1872, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may accept a church site under a grant declaring that the pews or part of them shall not be let. A mortgage of pew rents by the vicar of a district church is void under the Act 13 Eliz. c. 20 (Ex parte Arrowsmith, (1878) 8 Ch. D. 96). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. See CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST.

Pharmacopœia (British), a book containing a list of medicines and compounds, and the manner of preparing them, together with the true weights and measures by which they are to be prepared and mixed, published by the Medical Council, under the Medical Act, 1858, s. 54, as amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 91. As to whether the standard set up by the British Pharmacopœia is final and absolute, see Dickins v. Randerson, 1901, 1 K. B. 437; Boots Cash Chemists, Ltd. v. Cowling, 88 L. T. 539.

Pharmacy Acts. See CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST, and POISON.

Pharos, a watch-tower, or sea-mark, which cannot be erected without lawful warrant and authority.—3 Inst. 204.

Phatuk, a gaol or prison.—Indian.

Pheasant. See GAME, and for larceny of young hen-hatched pheasants, see R. v. Corry, (1864) 10 Cox, 23.

Photographs. By the Copyright Act,

1911, s. 5, the author of a work is the first owner of the copyright therein, but where in the case of a photograph the plate or other original was ordered by some other person, and was made for valuable consideration in pursuance of that order, then, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the person by whom such plate or other original was ordered will be the first owner of the copyright; and such person can restrain the public sale of his photographic likeness (Pollard v. Photographic Co., (1888) 40 Ch. D. 345). The period for which copyright in photographs subsists is fifty years from the making of the original negative (s. 21). 'Photograph' includes photo-lithograph and any work produced by any process analogous to photography (s. 35). See COPYRIGHT.

It is a misdemeanour to send indecent matter, including photographs, through the post (Post Office Act, 1908, s. 63, as amended by the Post Office Act, 1935, s. 13 and 1st Sched.).

Photographing or sketching a judge, magistrate, coroner or any litigant, juror, etc., in Court or its precincts is an offence under the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 4, and as to prohibited places, see the Official Secrets Acts, 1911 and 1920.

As to taking photographs of criminals, see PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT, 1871.

Phylasist [fr. φύλασσω, Gk., to keep], a gaoler.

Physician, one who professes the art of healing.

The necessity of placing under supervision the practitioners of physic and surgery appears early in the statute-book; for by the still unrepealed 3 Hen. 8, c. 11, it is enacted, that no person within London or seven miles thereof, shall practise as a physician or surgeon without examination and licence of the Bishop of London or Dean of St. Paul's (duly assisted by the faculty); or beyond these limits without licence from the bishop of his diocese or his vicar-general similarly assisted, saving the privileges of the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford. The superintendence of the bishops was taken away by a royal charter, dated 23rd September (10 Hen. 8), which incorporated the physicians. By 14 & 15 Hen. 8, c. 5, this charter was confirmed, and a perpetual college of physicians established with a constitution of eight elects, etc. The subsequent history of the college is sufficiently traced in 23 & 24 Vict. c. 66, which provides for the style of the new charters allowed to be granted by the Medical Act, 1858, s. 47. And see Davies v. Makuna, (1885) 29 Ch. D. 596. The Act of 1858 was amended by the Medical Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 48); by s. 6 of this Act a physician may recover his fees by action unless he is a fellow of a college of physicians prohibited by bye-law from so doing; bye-law 170 of the Royal College of Physicians forbids such recovery. See MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS.

Piacle [Lat. piaculum], an enormous crime. Obsolete.

Picaroon [fr. picare, Ital.], a robber; a plunderer.

Pick of Land, a narrow slip of land running into a corner.

Pickage [fr. picagium, Low Lat.], money paid at fairs for breaking ground for booths.

Pickery, petty theft, or stealing things of small value.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Picketing [fr. piquet, Fr., a diminutive of pique, a pike]. In its legal sense this word means the stationing of men to watch and accost workmen passing between their homes and place of employment in order thereby to induce them to come out on strike, or to remain on strike. Such proceeding is to some extent legalized by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2 (1) of which is as follows:—

2. (1) It shall be lawful for one or more persons, acting on their own behalf or on behalf of a trade union or of an individual employer or firm in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, to attend at or near a house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be, if they so attend merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working.

But the right of picketing is limited to peaceful attendance, and by the Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 22), s. 3, the attendance in such numbers or otherwise in such manner as to be calculated to intimidate any person in that house or place, is declared to be unlawful. For a definition of intimidation see that Act, s. 3 (2), and the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (c. 86), provides penalties for intimidation, which includes violence, persistent following, and watching and besetting.

As to the meaning of 'trade dispute,' see s. 5, sub-s. (3), of the Act; Conway v. Wade, 1909, A. C. 506; and that title.

Pickle, Pyele, or Pightel [fr. piccolo, Ital.], a small parcel of land enclosed with a hedge, which in some counties is called a pingle.

Pick-lock, an instrument by which locks are opened without a key.

Pick-pocket, or Pick-purse, a thief who steals by putting his hand privately into the pocket or purse of another: an offence punishable with great severity in early times and still a felony as larceny from the person within s. 14 of the Larceny Act, 1916. See Reg. v. Ring, (1892) 61 L. J. M. C. 116, where it was held an offence to attempt to pick an empty pocket.

Picture. For copyright in, see FINE ARTS; and as to the copyright in a picture not registered at the commencement of the Copyright Act, 1911, see E. W. Savory v. The World of Golf, 1914, 2 Ch. 566. Where framed pictures are sent by rail, the frames as well as the pictures are within the Carriers Act (Henderson v. London and N. W. Ry. Co., (1870) L. R. 5 Ex. 90); and see CARRIER. A picture may be libellous (5 Rep. 125); consult Odgers on Libel.

Piedpoudre, Court of [curia pedis pulverizati, Lat., so called either from the dusty feet of the suitors, or because justice is there done as speedily as dust can fall from the foot; or derived from pied poudreux, Old Fr., a pedlar or petty chapman, such as resorts to fairs or markets], a Court of record incident to every fair and market, though fallen into disuse, and now in a manner forgotten; of which the steward of him who owns, or has the toll of the market, is the judge; its jurisdiction extends to administer justice for all commercial injuries done in that very fair or market, and not in any preceding one; so that the injury must be done, complained of, heard and determined, within the compass of one and the same day, unless the fair continue longer. The Court had cognizance of all matters of contract that could possibly arise within the precinct of that fair or market, and the plaintiff must make oath that the cause of action arose there. A writ of error lay in the nature of an appeal to the Courts at Westminster.—3 Reeves, c. 20, p. 293.

Pierage, the duty for maintaining piers and harbours.

Piers and Harbours. As to the formation, management, and maintenance of piers and harbours in Great Britain and Ireland, see the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 45), amended by 25 Vict. c. 19, and later Acts. See HARBOURS.

Pietantia, a pittance, a portion of victuals distributed to the members of a college.

Pietantiarius, the officer in a college who distributed the pietantia.

Pig. See SWINE.

Pigeons. Unlawfully and wilfully to 'kill, wound, or take any house dove or pigeon under such circumstances as shall not amount to larceny at common law' is, by s. 23 of the Larceny Act, 1861, punishable 'on conviction before a justice of the peace' by fine up to 2*l.*, over and above the value of the bird, and though the owner be compensated and satisfied, any other person may prosecute; see Cotterill v. Penn. (1935) 51 T. L. R. 459, and L. Q. R. (1935), p. 60, in which a member of the 'National Homing Union' prosecuted. As to cruelty to pigeons, see Protection of Animals Act, 1911, s. 15, as amended by the Protection of Animals Act, 1927.

Piggot's Act (14 Geo. 2, c. 20), relating to recoveries which are abolished. Repealed by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 59.

Pightel, a little enclosure.

Pignorative, Pignorary [fr. pignus, Lat.], pledging, pawning.

Pignus, a pledge or security for a debt or demand, is derived, says Gaius (Dig. 50, tit. 16, s. 238), from pugnus, 'quia quæ pignori dantur, manu traduntur.' This is one of several instances of the failure of the Roman jurists when they attempted an etymological explanation of words. The element of pignus (pig) is contained in the word pa(n)go and its cognate forms. A pledge was called pignus when the possession of a thing was transferred to the pledgee, and hypotheca, when the pledgor retained it in his possession. See Sand. Just.; 2 Steph. Com.

Pila, that side of money which was called pile, because it was the side on which there was an impression of a church built on piles. —Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39 [cf. Fr. 'pile ou face'; 'heads or tails'].

Pileus supportationis (the cap of maintenance); see that title.

Pilferer, one who steals petty things.

Pillery, rapine; robbery. Obsolete.

Pillettus [fr. pila, Lat., a ball], in our ancient forest laws, an arrow which had a round knob a little above the head, to hinder it from going far into the mark.

Pillory, a frame erected on a pillar, and made with holes and moveable boards, through which the heads and hands of criminals were put.

The punishment of the pillory, abolished by 56 Geo. 3, c. 138, except for perjury, a person convicted for which was directed, by the still unrepealed 5 Eliz. c. 9, to have his ears nailed thereto, was altogether and finally abolished in 1837 by 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 23.

Pilot, a person taken on board at any particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into a port, defined in s. 742 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, as meaning 'any person not belonging to a ship who has the conduct thereof.' Pilots are established in various parts of the country, by ancient charters of incorporation or by particular statutes. The most important of these in corporations are those of the Trinity House, Deptford Strond; the fellowship of the Pilots of Dover, Deal, and the Isle of Thanet, commonly called the Cinque Port Pilots; and the Trinity Houses of Hull and Newcastle. For the general law on the subject of pilots and pilotage, see the Pilotage Acts, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 31) and amending Acts and the Pilotage Authorities (Limitation of Liability) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 36). Consult Digby and Cole on Pilots.

Compulsory Pilots.—By the Act of 1913, s. 15 (reversing the Common Law rule), owners and masters of ships become liable for damage caused by the ship or fault in navigation, in districts where the employment of a pilot is compulsory, even though the pilot was in charge of the ship.

A pilot is included in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 35 (4).

As to pilots by air, see Air Navigation Act, 1920.

Pilotage, the compensation of a pilot. Pilotage dues are not payable by his Majesty's ships (Symons v. Baker, 1905, 2 K. B. 723), unless they are registered under s. 80 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906.

Pimp-tenure, a very singular and odious kind of tenure mentioned by our old writers, 'Wilhelmus Hoppeshort tenet dimidiam virgatum terre per servitium custodiendi sex damisellas, scil. meretrices ad usum domini regis.'—12 Edw. 1. It is suggested by some writers that 'usum' is a copyist's error for 'custum,' and that the last four words mean 'at the cost of our lord the king,' and not 'for the use of our lord the king,' and that this record is one of reformatory activity.

Pin-money, an annual sum settled on a wife, to defray her personal expenses in dress and pocket-money. See Howard v. Lord Digby, (1834) 2 Cl. & Fin. 634; Sugd. Law of Property, pp. 162 et seq.

There was a very ancient tax in France for providing the queen with pins.

Pinnage [fr. pin or pen], poundage of cattle.

Pinner, a pounder of cattle, a pound-keeper.

Pint, or four gills; a measure of half a quart, or the eighth part of a gallon. See Weights and Measures Act, 1878.

Pipe, a roll in the Exchequer; otherwise called the great roll. The Pipe Rolls contained an account of the ancient revenue of the Crown, written out in process every year to the several sheriffs of England, who were the general receivers and collectors thereof, and by them levied and answered to the Crown upon their annual accounts, before the clerk of the pipe (First Rep. of Select Com. on Pub. Rec., App. p. 161). The Pipe-office was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 99. Consult Hubback on Succession, p. 624.

Piracy [fr. pirata, Lat.], the commission of those acts of robbery and violence upon the sea, which if committed upon land would amount to felony. Pirates hold no commission or delegated authority from any sovereign or state, empowering them to attack others. They can, therefore, be only regarded in the light of robbers. They are, as Cicero has truly stated, the common enemies of all (communes hostes omnium); and the law of nations gives to every one the right to pursue and exterminate them without any previous declaration of war (see Piracy Jure Gentium, 1934, A. C. 586, where a frustrated attempt was held to be piracy by that law); but it is not allowed to kill them without trial, except in battle. Those who surrender or are taken prisoners must be brought before the proper magistrates, and dealt with according to law. By the ancient Common Law of England, piracy, if committed by a subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; if by an alien, to be felony only; but since the Statute of Treason (25 Edw. 3, c. 2), it is held to be only felony in a subject. Formerly this offence was only cognizable by the Admiralty Courts, which proceed by the rules of the civil law, but it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his peers, the still unrepealed Offences at Sea Act, 1536 (28 Hen. 8, c. 15), established a new jurisdiction for this purpose, which proceeds according to the course of the Common Law.

By the Piracy Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 88) (which repealed various previous enactments), it is provided by s. 2 that :—

2. Whosoever, with intent to commit or at the time or of immediately before or immediately after committing the crime of piracy in respect of any ship or vessel, shall assault, with intent to murder, any person being on board of or belonging to such ship or vessel, or shall stab, cut, or wound any such person, or unlawfully do any act by which the life of such person may be endangered, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall suffer death as a felon.

If sentence is passed under this section a public execution will have to take place, as the section is not within the Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868 (31 Vict. c. 24).

Section 3 of the Act of 1837 as now amended provides that :—

3. Whosoever shall be convicted of any offence which by any of the Acts hereinbefore referred to amounts to the crime of piracy, and is thereby made punishable with death, shall be liable to penal servitude for the term of the natural life of such offender.

As to the punishment of principals in the second degree and accessories before or after the fact, see s. 4 of the same Act. Various acts which do not amount to piracy at Common Law have been made piracy by statute, e.g., rendering assistance to a pirate, or boarding a merchant ship and destroying her goods (8 Geo. 1, c. 24, s. 1, made perpetual by 2 Geo. 2, c. 28). As to piracy, see 13 & 14 Vict. cc. 26, 27. As to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty in regard to the Colonies, see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 96 and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 26; to India, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 88; in territorial waters, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 73, s. 6.

The Treaty of Washington Act, 1922, s. 4, provides for the trial and punishment of persons who violate any of the rules set forth in Art. 1 of Sch. II. of the Act as if for an act of piracy. These rules prohibit (a) the seizing of a merchant vessel in time of war unless first ordered to submit to visit and search; (b) the attack on such a vessel unless it refuses to submit to visit and search after warning or to proceed as directed after seizure; (c) the destruction of such a vessel unless the crew and passengers have been first placed in safety. As to the meaning of 'piracy' in a policy of marine insurance, see Bolivia Republic v. Indemnity Mutual Insurance Co., 1909, 1 K. B. 785.

Piracy of Works, an offence against the law of copyright or an author's right to his works, which consists in an exclusive right to the sequence of the words as they stand; and if any one else reprint these without addition, subtraction, or transposition, it is an inroad on the author's right. But, on the one hand, the sentences and words may be so rearranged that, although nothing be added to or taken from them, they give a substantially new idea to the public, and are therefore no infringement of the law. And, on the other hand, although parts may be omitted and new passages introduced, yet, if these alterations be merely colourable, and it is really an attempt to profit by taking the ideas of another, the publication is a piracy. An author who has been led by a former author to refer to older writers, may, without committing piracy, use the same passages in the older writers which were used by the former author (Pike v. Nicholas, 1869, L. R. 5 Ch. 251); as to pirating news from another newspaper, see Walter v. Steinkopff, 1892, 3 Ch. 489.

The remedies for piracy are, an action at law for damages, and an injunction to restrain its continuance. See INJUNCTION and COPYRIGHT.

Pirata est hostis humani generis. 3 Inst. 113.—(A pirate is an enemy of the human race.) See PIRACY.

Piscary, Common of, a right or liberty of fishing in the waters of another person. See Ecroyd v. Coulthard, 1898, 2 Ch. 358; Chesterfield (Earl) v. Harris, 1908, 2 Ch. 397; 1911, A. C. 623; Staffordshire, etc., Navigation v. Bradley, 1912, 1 Ch. 91; and FISHERY.

Pistol. See GUN; FIREARMS.

Pitching-pence, money (commonly a penny) paid for pitching or setting down every bag of corn or pack of goods in a fair or market.—Jac. Law Dict.

Pittance, a slight repast or refection of fish or flesh more than the common allowance; and the pittance was the officer who distributed this at certain appointed festivals.—Ibid.

Pitt Press, the University Press at Cambridge.

Plx. See PYX.

Pl., abbreviation for Placitum, which see.

Placard, or Placart [fr. placard, Fr.; fr. plaque, a flat piece of metal, stone, or wood], an edict, a declaration, a manifesto; also an advertisement or public notification.

Place. See PUBLIC PLACE.

Place of Trial. See VENUE.

Placeman, one who exercises a public employment, or fills a public station; one who lays himself out for the obtaining of public appointments.

Placit, or Placitum, decree, determination.

Placita, the public assemblies of all degrees of men where the sovereign presided, who usually consulted upon the great affairs of the kingdom. Also, pleas, pleadings, or debates, and trials at law; sometimes penalties, fines, mulcts, or emendations; also, the style of the Court at the beginning of the record at nisi prius; but this is now omitted. See Jac. Law Dict.

Plactare, to plead.

Plactory, relating to pleas or pleading.

Placitum, any of the points decided in a judgment put concisely by the reporter, abbreviated pl. See PLACITA.

Placitum aliud personale, aliud reale, aliud mixtum. Co. Litt. 284.—(Pleas are personal, real, and mixed.)

Placitum nominatum, the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead and make his defence.—Leg. H. 1, c. 29. Placitum fractum, when the day is past.

Plagiarist, or Plagiary, one who publishes the thoughts or writings of another as his own; if thoughts only, not expressed in the same or substantially the same words, there is no breach of copyright. See PIRACY OF WORKS.

Plagiarius, one who knowingly kept in irons, or confined, sold, gave, or bought a citizen (whether freeborn or a freedman), or the slave of another; the offence being called plagium.—Civ. Law.

Plagiary [fr. plagiarius, Lat.], a man-stealer.

Plagii-crimen, or Plagium, the stealing and retaining the children of freemen and slaves.—Civ. Law.

Plague [fr. πληγη, Gk., a wound], pestilence; a contagious and malignant fever.

By 1 Jac. 1, c. 31, it was a capital offence for any infected with the plague, after having been commanded by the mayor or constable, etc., to keep house, to go abroad and in company. This Act was repealed by 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 91, s. 4. See now Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 134–140; repealed as from October, 1936, and replaced by ss. 143–170, Public Health Act, 1936; and tits. PUBLIC HEALTH; QUARANTINE, post. For an account of the Great Plague in London in 1665, see Pepys's Diary.

Plaidour [Fr.], an attorney who pleaded the cause of his client; an advocate. Obsolete.

Plaintant, a plaintiff.

Plaint [fr. plainte, Fr.; querela, Lat.], the statement in writing of a cause of action. It is the first process in an inferior court in the nature of an original writ, because there is briefly set forth the plaintiff's cause of action: and the judge is bound, of common right, to administer justice therein without a special mandate from the Crown.

Plaintiff [abbrev. plff., or plff., fr. plaintif, Fr.], he who commences an action against another, who is called defendant.

Plan. In the Copyright Act, 1911, 'literary work' includes 'plans' (s. 35); and see also as to plans, s. 2, sub-s. (1) (ii). See COPYRIGHT. Under various Acts, plans have to be deposited with local authorities for various purposes. If the local authority neglect to pass the plans the remedy is by mandamus (Davis v. Bromley Corporation, 1908, 1 K. B. 170, and R. v. Cambridge Corporation, 1922 1 K. B. 250). As to a purchaser's right to have the property conveyed to him by reference to a plan on his conveyance, see Re Sansom, 1910, 1 Ch. 741; Re Sparrow, ib. 2 Ch. 60, and as to maps as evidence, Storey v. Eastbourne R. D. C., 1927, 1 Ch. 367.

Under the Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 76, land may be described by description and a map or plan. For the practice of the Land Registry, consult The Land Registry General Map, by W. S. Tratman, and L. R. Rules, 272-285.

As to the property in plans, see ARCHITECT.

Plant, the fixtures, tools, machinery, and apparatus necessary to carry on a trade or business. See the Employers Liability Act, 1880, and Yarmouth v. France, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 647, where a horse was held to be 'plant' within that Act; and see National Provincial and Union Bank of England v. Charnley, 1924, 1 K. B. 431, and Daphne v. Shaw, (1926) 53 T. L. R. 45. 'Plant' does not include solicitors' books under the Finance Act, 1925, s. 16.

For the meaning under the Rating and Valuation Acts, 1925 and 1929, consult Weston Booth on Valuations for Rating.

Plant. Stealing, or damaging with intent to steal, any plant, root, fruit or vegetable production growing in a garden, orchard, greenhouse, etc., is punishable on summary conviction by imprisonment up to six months with or without hard labour, or by fine up to 20l.; a second offence being felony punishable as simple larceny. Stealing, etc., any cultivated root or plant used for food of man or beast or dyeing or manufacture in any land, not being a garden, is punishable by imprisonment up to one month or fine up to 20s.—Larceny Act, 1861, ss. 36, 37. Malicious damage is similarly punishable by ss. 23, 24 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861.

Plantation, a colony.

With respect to their internal policy our colonies are of three sorts: (1) provincial establishments; (2) proprietary governments; (3) charter governments.—Steph. Com. See COLONY.

Plate, of gold and silver. The duties were repealed by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, s. 10. The hall-marking of foreign plate is prescribed by ss. 59, 60 of the Customs Act, 1842, as amended by the Hall-marking of Foreign Plate Act, 1904 4 Edw. 7, c. 6), which directs that foreign plate when brought to be assayed and stamped, as it has to be by revenue law, must be marked so as to distinguish it as foreign, and that every person bringing it to an assay office, unless it be in charge of a revenue officer, must state in writing whether it was wrought in England, Scotland, or Ireland, or was imported from foreign parts. Watch-cases imported from foreign parts before 1st June, 1907, are exempted from assay by the Assay of Imported Watch-Cases (Existing Stocks Exemption) Act, 1907. As to the meaning of 'plate' in ss. 2, 6 of the Plate (Offences) Act, 1738, and other statutes, see Fabergé v. Goldsmiths' Co., 1911, 1 Ch. 286. Gold watches which are jewelled and set in gold chain-bracelets are not exempt from being hall-marked (ibid.).

Platform. He who causes a platform to be erected for viewing a public exhibition, and admits the public for payment thereto, impliedly guarantees, to those so admitted, the security of the platform: Francis v. Cockerell, (1870) L. R. 5 Q. B. 591, Ex. Ch.; and see s. 37 of the (adoptive) Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, by which platforms erected or used on public occasions must be safely constructed to the satisfaction of the urban authority of urban districts in which the Act has been adopted.

Play-debt, debt contracted by gaming. See GAMING.

Play-grounds. See RECREATION GROUNDS.

Plea [fr. plée, Fr.]. This was the name of a defendant's answer of fact to a plaintiff's declaration; and anciently a suit or action.

Pleas were divided into common pleas, relating to civil causes, and pleas of the Crown, relating to criminal prosecutions.

At Common Law pleas were divided into—
(1) Dilatory; which were subdivided into—

- (a) To the jurisdiction of the Court,
- (b) In suspension of the action,
- (c) In abatement of the writ or declaration, and—

(2) Peremptory, i.e., in bar of the action.

The distinction between these two classes of pleas was, that the dilatory showed some ground for quashing the declaration, the peremptory for defeating the action. Consult Bullen and Leake, or Odgers on Pleading, and Ch. Arch. Practice.

In equity, a plea was resorted to by a defendant when an objection was not apparent on the bill itself, or, as the technical phrase was, where it arose from matter dehors the bill, other matter being dealt with by 'Answer' (see that title).

A defendant now raises his defence in all actions in the High Court of Justice by a statement of defence; see that title and PLEADING.

The order of a prisoner's pleas in criminal law is as follows:—

- (1) To the jurisdiction.
- (2) In abatement.
- (3) Special pleas in bar, as
  - (a) Autrefois acquit.
  - (b) Autrefois convict.
  - (c) Pardon.
- (4) General issue of not guilty.

Plead, to make an allegation in a cause; also to argue a cause in court.

Pleader [fr. narrator, Lat.], one who draws pleadings. See SPECIAL PLEADER.

Pleading. 1. In its general sense, the proceedings from the statement of claim to issue joined, i.e., the opposing statements of the parties. 2. Any part of these proceedings.

The science of pleading was no doubt derived from Normandy. The use of stated forms of pleading is not to be traced among the Anglo-Saxons. Pleading was cultivated as a science in the reign of Edward I. The object of pleading is to ascertain, by the production of an issue, the subject for decision. Before the Judicature Acts, pleading in equity consisted of long statements of fact (generally with a liberal admixture of evidence) in 'bill' and 'answer'; while pleading at Common Law mainly consisted of short technical statements in 'declaration,' 'plea,' 'replication,' 'rejoinder,' 'sur-rejoinder,' 'rebutter,' 'surrebutter,' the four last being rarely used. The system of pleading under the Judicature Act is intended to combine the advantages of the two systems; it being provided by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 4, that 'every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a summary form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies; but not the evidence by which they are to be proved,' and 'shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively.' Consult Bullen and Leake, or Odgers on Pleading.

Plead Over, to follow up an opponent's pleading by replying, etc., and so overlooking some defect to which exception might have been taken.

Pleas of the Crown, the Criminal Law department of our jurisprudence: so called because the sovereign, in whom centres the majesty of the whole community, is supposed by the law to be the person injured by every wrong done to that community, and is, therefore, in all cases, the proper prosecutor for every such offence. See the works on this subject of Coke (3rd Institute), Hale, or Hawkins.

Pleasure-grounds may be provided by local authorities under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 164 (this section coming in place of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 74); and by parish councils under s. 8 of the Local Government Act, 1894, as amended by the Local Government Act, 1933. Rules prescribing restrictions and conditions can be made by virtue of s. 76 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907. See RECREATION GROUNDS.

Plebanus, a rural dean.

Plebelty, or Pleblity, the common or meaner sort of people; the plebeians.

Plebiana, a mother church.—Old Record.

Plebscille, or Plebsciltum, among the Romans a law enacted by the common people at the request of the tribune or some other plebeian magistrate, without the intervention of the senate; more particularly applied to the law which the people made, when upon some misunderstanding with the senate they retired to the Aventine mount.

Pledge, anything put to pawn or given by way of warrant or security; also a surety, bail, or hostage. See PAWN; PIGNUS.

Pledgee, one who receives pledges; a pawnee.

Pledgery, suretyship, or an undertaking or answering for another.

Pledgor, one who offers a pledge, a pawnor.

Plegil de prosequendo, pledges to prosecute with effect an action of replevin.

Plegil de retorno habendo, pledges to return the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin.—3 Steph. Com.

Plegils acquietandis, a writ that anciently lay for a surety against him for whom he was surety, if he paid not the money at the day.—Fitz. N. B. 173.

Plena forisfactura, a forfeiture of all that one possesses.

Plena probatio, testimony by two witnesses.—Civ. Law.

Plenary [plenus, full, Lat.], said of a benefice when full, or possessed by an incumbent; opposed to vacancy.—3 Steph. Com.

Plenary, full, complete; an ordinary proceeding through all its gradations and formal steps, opposed to summary.

Plenary causes in the Ecclesiastical Courts are reduced to the following :—

(1) Suits for ecclesiastical dilapidations.

(2) Suits relating to seats or sitting-places in churches.

(3) Suits for tithes.

Plene administravit (he has fully administered). A defence by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered all the assets that have come to his hands. If the defendant simply pleads plene administravit without any other defence, the plaintiff may apply under Ord. XXXII., r. 6, to have judgment for his debt and costs of future assets quando acciderint; or he may take issue on the defence, and if successful obtain judgment to the extent of the existing assets against the defendant and of future assets quando acciderint for the residue of his debt. Bullen and Leake, Pr. Pl.

Plene administravit præter (he has fully administered, except). A defence by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered the assets that have come to his hands, except, etc. The plaintiff may go to trial upon this defence, or may apply under Ord. XXXII., r. 6, for leave to sign judgment to the extent of the assets admitted and of future assets quando acciderint for the residue of his debt and costs. Bullen and Leake, Pr. Pl.

Plenipotentiary, a person who has full power and commission to do anything, generally used in connection with ambassadors and delegates of States on special occasions.

Pleno lumine. See IN PLENO LUMINE.

Plenum dominium, a title combining the right and the corporal possession of property, which possession could not be acquired without both an actual intention to possess, and an actual seisin or entry into the premises, or part of them, in the name of the whole.—Civ. Law.

Plevin [fr. plevina, Low Lat.], a warrant or assurance.

Plight, significeth an estate, with the habit and quality of the land; it extends to a rent-charge and to a possibility of dower.—Co. Litt. 221 b.

Plough-alms [eleemosynæ aratrales, Lat.], the ancient payment of a penny to the Church from every-plough land.—Dugd. Mon. tom. i. 256.

Plough-bote, a tenant's right to take wood for the repairs of ploughs, carts, and harrows, and for making rakes, forks, etc.

Plough-land, a hide of land, a carucate, which see.—Co. Litt. 69 a, 86 b.

Plough-Monday, the Monday after Twelfth-Day.

Plough-silver, money formerly paid by some tenants, in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands.

Plowden's (Edm.) Commentaries or Reports, first published in 1571. They contain cases from 4 Edw. 6 to 20 Eliz., and from the close style of the reporter, have been said to form some of the most instructive and most entertaining books in the law.—5 Reeves, c. 35, 241.

Plumage. As to prohibition on importation, see Importation of Plumage (Prohibition) Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 16).

Plunderage, embezzling goods on ship-board.—Marit. Law.

Pluralist, one that holds more than one ecclesiastical benefice with cure of souls.

Plurality, majority; in greater number than one. The holding of more than one ecclesiastical benefice is very much restricted.

The Pluralities Act, 1838 (repealing the former statute against pluralities, 21 Hen. 8, c. 13), as amended by the Pluralities Measure, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, No. 7), provides that two benefices may be held together, by dispensation of the archbishop on the recommendation of the bishop, if the churches be within four miles of each other, and if the annual value of one does not exceed 400*l.*

Plures cohæredes sunt quasi unum corpus propter unitatem juris quod habent. Co. Litt. 163.—(Several co-heirs are, as it were, one body, by reason of the unity of right which they possess.)

Plures partielles sunt quasi unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent. Co. Litt. 164.—(Several parceners are as one body, in that they have one right.)

Pluries (as often), a writ that issues in the third instance, after the first and the alias have been ineffectual. See EXECUTION.

Plus petitto, or Pluris petitto, when a demandant includes in his demand (in the intentio of the formula) more than his due. It happens in four ways. See Sand. Just.

Plus valet quod agitur quam quod simulate concipitur.—(What is done more avails than what is pretended to be done.)

P. O., abbreviation for public officer (q.v.); also for Post Office.

Poaching, taking game by trespass. Also taking fish, e.g., salmon and trout by illegal methods (see infra).

Trespassing in the daytime in pursuit of 'game'—i.e., hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath or moor game, black game, or bustards—or woodcock, snipe, quails, land-rail, or rabbits, is punishable summarily by fine up to 2*l.*, and in case of a trespass by five or more, up to 5*l.*; the leave of the occupier being no defence if the landlord or other person have by reservation the right to kill the game. See Game Act, 1831, ss. 2, 30.

Unlawfully taking in the night, i.e., between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the commencement of the first hour before sunrise, 'game,' as above defined, is punishable summarily by imprisonment with hard labour; and any persons, to the number of three or more, by night unlawfully entering lands, for the purpose of taking or destroying any 'game,' as above defined, or rabbits (any of them being armed with any gun or other offensive weapon), are each guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to penal servitude for any term between seven and three (now five) years, or imprisonment with hard labour for not more than three years; see Night Poaching Act, 1828.

Any constable, in any highway, etc., may search any person whom he may have good cause to suspect of coming from any land where he shall have been unlawfully in search of 'game'—i.e., hares, pheasants, partridges, eggs of pheasants or partridges, woodcock, snipe, rabbits, grouse, black or moor game, or eggs of grouse, black or moor game—and having in his possession any game unlawfully obtained, or any gun, or net for taking game, and may stop and search any cart, etc., in which such constable, etc., shall have good cause to suspect that any such game, etc., is being carried by any such person, and should there be found any game, etc., upon such person, cart, etc., may seize such game, etc. (see Stone v. Benstead, 1909, 2 K. B. 415); and such constable, etc., shall in such case apply to some justice for a summons, citing such person to appear before two justices, by whom the party may on conviction be fined any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, etc.—Poaching Prevention Act, 1862. See Aggs on Agricultural Holdings, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Game.'

As to unlawfully taking fish in private water, see Larceny Act, 1861, ss. 24, 25; and Salmon and Fresh Water Fisheries Acts, 1923 to 1935; Chit. Stat. tit. 'Fish.'

Pocket-judgment, a statute-merchant which was enforceable at any time after non-payment on the day assigned, without further proceedings. See STATUTE-MERCHANT.

Pocket-sheriff. When the sovereign appoints a person sheriff who is not one of the three nominated in the King's Bench Division of the High Court, he is called a pocket-sheriff.—1 Bl. Com. 342.

Pœnæ potius mollendæ quam exasperandæ sunt. 3 Inst. 220.—(Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated.)

Pœt-laureate. See LAUREATE.

Poinding, the Scots term for taking goods, etc., in execution, or by way of distress. It is defined to be 'the diligence (process) which the law has devised for transferring the property of the debtor to the creditor in payment of his debt.' It is either real or personal; not that any inheritance is conveyed by a poiding, but real poiding is a power of carrying off the effects on the land in payment of such debts as are debita fundi, or heritable; personal poiding is the poiding of movables for debt or for rent, etc. There is also a species of poiding by attaching cattle trespassing.—See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Poiding of the Ground, a poiding in Scotland, founded on a heritable security or other debitum fundi, for poiding or taking in execution all the goods on the lands over which the security extends.

Points, in the paper books were the chief grounds or heads of argument on which each party relied, on an argument in the special paper. See PAPER BOOK.

Poison (poison, Fr.; fr. potio, Lat., a drink—applied originally to a medicated drink or draught).

The administration of poison or other destructive thing, if done with intent to commit murder, is a felony, punishable with penal servitude for life, or any term not exceeding three years, or with imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 11), and so is the attempt to administer with like intent, whether bodily injury be effected or not (s. 14).

On a trial for murder of A. by poisoning, evidence of a subsequent poisoning of other persons is admissible against the prisoner (Reg. v. Geering, (1849) 18 L. J. M. C. 215; Rez v. Armstrong, (1922) 38 T. L. R. 631); as also of antecedent poisoning (Reg. v. Garner, (1863) 3 F. & F. 681).

The unlawful and malicious administering poison so as to endanger life or to inflict grievous bodily harm is a felony, punishable by penal servitude up to ten years, or imprisonment; and such administration with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy is a misdeemeanour, punishable by penal servitude up to five years: see ss. 23, 24 of the same Act. As to poisoning to procure miscarriage by a woman, see ABORTION.

Restrictions on Sale.—By the Arsenic Act, 1851 (now repealed), certain restrictions—as that name and address, etc., of the purchaser are to be registered by the seller—were placed upon the sale of arsenic, and by the Pharmacy Act, 1868, persons selling or compounding poisons, or assuming the title of chemist or druggist, must be qualified as by that Act is required. See CHEMISTS AND DRUGGISTS. For the purposes of that Act a list of articles deemed poisons was set out—a list which may be added to by the Pharmaceutical Society with the approval of the Privy Council (Brown v. Leggett, 1906, 1 K. B. 330). The list as contained in Schedule A. of that Act was repealed, and a list in substitution was given in the Schedule to the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908. This in turn was repealed by the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 25), which set up a Poisons Board to prepare and submit a list of substances to be treated as poisons, for the approval of the Secretary of State. The list is to be in two parts, Part I. consisting of those poisons which are to be sold only by an authorized seller of poisons, and Part II. consisting of those poisons which may be sold by an authorized seller of poisons, or by a person whose name is entered on the 'local authority's list' (s. 17).

Sect. 18 deals with prohibition regarding the sale of poisons, and s. 19 makes exemptions with respect to medicines.

The Dangerous Drugs Act, 1920, 1923 and 1932, and the regulations made thereunder, impose stringent restrictions upon the importation, exportation and sale of certain poisons and dangerous drugs. See these Acts and regulations, and DRUGS, DANGEROUS.

Poisoned Food or Grain.—Penalties are imposed upon persons placing poisoned fluid or edible matter upon land, and upon persons selling or exposing for sale poisoned grain or seed, unless for bona fide use in agriculture; see Protection of Animals Act, 1911, s. 8; and see s. 1, sub-s. 1 (d) of the same Act as to administering poisonous drugs to animals. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Poison.'

Poison Gas, the making, sale or possession of weapons or ammunition for discharge of noxious liquids or gas is prohibited by the Fire Arms Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 43).

Pole, a measure of five and a half yards.

Police [fr. πόλις, Gk., a city], the regulation and government of a country or city; the constabulary of a locality. The police forces now consist of County, Borough (these may be consolidated, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 14, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 69, s. 20), Metropolitan, City of London, and River Forces, e.g., Tyne, Manchester Ship Canal, Mersey and Wear; and Railway Police. As to the liability of a local authority for a tort committed by a member of its police force, see Stanbury v. Exeter Corporation, 1905, 2 K. B. 838. See CONSTABLE; METROPOLITAN POLICE; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Police' and 'Police (Metropolis).'

Police Courts (Metropolis). See METROPOLITAN POLICE MAGISTRATES.

Police Supervision. Where a person is twice convicted on indictment he may be subjected to police supervision for not more than seven years in addition to any other punishment. He is obliged to notify his place of residence to the chief officer of police of the district, and, if a male, to report himself monthly to this officer or to some one nominated by him (Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, s. 8, and amending Acts 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, and 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 26).

Policies of Insurance, Court of. It was erected in pursuance of 43 Eliz. c. 12, which enabled the Lord Chancellor yearly to grant a standing commission to the Judge of the Admiralty, the Recorder of London, two doctors of the civil law, two common lawyers, and eight merchants; any three of whom, one being a civilian, or a barrister, were thereby, and by 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 23, empowered to determine in a summary way all causes concerning policies of insurance in London, with an appeal by way of bill to the Court of Chancery. It had been long wholly disused in Blackstone's time, and both the above Acts were repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.

Policy, the general principles by which a government is guided in its management of public affairs, or the legislature in its measures. See PUBLIC POLICY. In Scotland, the park or demesne land lying around a country seat or gentleman's house (Oxf. Dict.).

Policy of Insurance, a contract between A. and B., that upon A.'s paying a premium equivalent to the hazard run, B. will indemnify or insure him against a particular event. See INSURANCE.

The Policies of Assurance Act, 1867, enabled assignees of life policies to sue thereon in their own names. The Policies of Marine Assurance Act, 1868, made a like provision in regard to marine policies. See also CHOSE.

Policy Proof of Interest (P.P.I.). A policy of marine insurance which was made valid by its terms, although the insurer had no insurable interest. Such a policy in the absence of an insurable interest is made void by the Gaming Act, 1845. The Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (s. 4), specifically declares such policies void. The Marine Insurance (Gambling Policies) Act, 1909, makes it an offence to effect a contract of marine insurance without an insurable interest.

Politæ legibus non leges pollitils adaptandæ. Hob. 154.—(States are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to States.)

Political Offence. As to the meaning of 'offence of a political character' in the Extradition Act, 1870, see Re Castioni, 1891, 1 Q. B. 149, where it was held that to come within the words of the statute the offence must be incidental to and form part of political disturbances. Cf. Re Meunier, 1894, 2 Q. B. 415.

Political Offices Pensions Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 60), not applicable to any person in the Civil Service of the Crown, but only to persons who have held political offices. There are three classes named in the Act, and no pension can be granted in any class while four pensions in that class are subsisting, nor may more than one pension under the Act be granted in the same year. A pension is only granted in the absence of adequate private income.

Polity [fr. πολιτεία, Gk., the government of a city], the form of government; civil constitution.

Poll, to give a vote at an election; also to receive a vote; also a taking of votes of all persons entitled to vote present, by proxy, or otherwise, as opposed to counting the votes of voters present at a meeting.

As to taking a poll at parliamentary and municipal elections by secret voting, see the Ballot Act, 1872.

Wherever a person has to be chosen, or a thing may be ordered to be done by the majority of persons entitled to vote, there is a Common Law right to demand a poll, so that all entitled to vote may have a second opportunity of voting (Reg. v. Wimbledon Local Board, (1881) 8 Q. B. D. 459, better reported, 46 L. T. 47). Voting papers are allowed if the Articles of Association or other regulations so provide (McMillan v. Le Roi Mining Co. Ltd., 1906, 1 Ch. 331, and

s. 116, Companies Act, 1929). As to the power of the chairman to direct a poll to be taken forthwith, i.e. at the meeting, see Re Chillington Iron Co., (1885) 29 Ch. D. 159; Re British Flax Co., (1889) 60 L. T. 215. The taking of a poll is not a 'meeting' (Shaw v. Tati Concessions, 1913, 1 Ch. 292).

Pollah, a Government lease granted to a cultivator, either written on paper or engraved with a style on a leaf of the Fanpalmyra tree.—Indian.

Pollards, or Pollengers, trees which have been lopped, distinguished from timber-trees.—Flowd. 649.

Pollcitation, a promise before it is accepted.—Civ. Law.

Polligar, Polygar, the head of a village or district; also a military chieftain in the peninsula, answering to a hill zemindar in the northern circars.—Indian.

Poll-money, Poll-silver, Poll-tax, a capitation-tax. It was formerly assessed by the head on every subject according to rank.

Polls, Challenge to the. See CHALLENGE.

Polyandry, the state of a woman who has several husbands. See BIGAMY.

Polygamy [fr. πολύς, Gk., many; and γαμος, marriage], plurality of wives or husbands. It is prohibited by the Christian religion, but permitted by some others. See BIGAMY.

Polygarchy [fr. πολύς, Gk., many; and ἀρχή, government], that kind of government which is in the hands of many.

Pondus, poundage, i.e., a duty paid to the Crown according to the weight of merchandise.

Pondus regis, the standard weight appointed by our ancient kings.

Pone. If goods had been replevied by virtue of a replegiari facias (which was rarely if ever the case), the plaintiff in a County Court was removed into the King's Bench or Common Pleas by writ of pone. It was an original writ obtained from the cursor, bearing teste after the entry of the plaintiff in the County Court, and returnable on a general day in term, wheresoever, etc. It was also the proper writ to remove all suits which were before the sheriff by writ of justices. Obsolete.—3 Steph. Com.

Pone per vadium, an obsolete writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute: it was so called from the words of the writ, pone per vadium et salvos plegios—'put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant.'

Ponendis in assisis, an abolished writ to empanel juries.—Fitz. N. B. 165.

Ponendum in bailium, a writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable.—Reg. Brev. 133.

Ponendum sigillum ad exceptionem, a writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings before them, according to the statute, West. 2, 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 31. See BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Pontage [fr. pons, Lat., a bridge], duty paid for the reparation of bridges; also, a due to the lord of the fee for persons or merchandises that pass over rivers, bridges, etc.

Pontibus reparandis, a writ directed to the sheriff, etc., requiring him to charge one or more to repair a bridge.—Reg. Brev. 153.

Pool, a small lake of standing water. By the grant of a pool, both the land and water will pass.—Co. Litt. 5.

Poor Laws. By the Poor Relief Act, 1601, (43 Eliz. c. 2), frequently called 'The Act of Elizabeth,' overseers of the poor were annually appointed in every parish; the churchwardens of every parish being also ex-officio overseers, except in rural parishes, in which the churchwardens ceased to be overseers by virtue of the Local Government Act, 1894.

Overseers of the Poor and Boards of Guardians were abolished (overseers from 1st April, 1927, boards of guardians from 1st April, 1930, except in the Scilly Islands) by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, and their powers, duties and property were transferred to local authorities.

By the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, the administration of the parochial funds and the management of the poor throughout the country were placed for five years under the control of a central board called 'The Poor Law Commissioners'; succeeded in 1847 by a temporary 'Poor Law Board' made perpetual, after many continuances, in 1867; and in 1871, by 'The Local Government Board Act, 1871,' superseded by the Local Government Board. The powers and duties are now vested in the Ministry of Health (Ministry of Health Act, 1919).

The Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 17) consolidates the enactments relating to the relief of the poor in England, and it repeals the greater part of the Poor Law Act, 1927, which latter consolidated enactments relating to the relief of the poor, but it did not provide for all the powers and duties which had been conferred on overseers of the poor and boards of guardians by various statutes, such as the Vaccination, Bastardy, and Lunacy Acts; and the law as regards this is not affected by the 1930 Act; the functions of boards of guardians in connection therewith were transferred to local authorities by the Local Government Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17). The Poor Law Act, 1934, amends the Act of 1930 so as to secure uniformity throughout Great Britain in the provisions relating to the disregarding of sick pay, maternity benefit, and wounds or disability pensions in connection with relief.

General or special orders of a voluminous and detailed character (see Glen's Poor Law Orders), made by one or other of the above-named authorities under the powers of the Act of 1834, have been since that Act the main sources of the Poor Law; but the statutes upon the subject have also been very numerous. Consult Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Poor,' 'Poor (Apprentices),' 'Poor (Rating),' 'Poor (Settlement and Removal),' and 'Poor (Metropolis).'

The duty of making and levying the poor-rate or parochial fund, out of which the relief is to be afforded, belonged to the churchwardens and overseers; and the concurrence of the inhabitants was not necessary. But for the better execution of these duties, the appointment of collectors and assistant overseers was authorized. They were abolished from 1st April, 1927, supra; for details of the transfer to the rating authority, see the Overseers Order, 1927 (S. R. & O., 1927, No. 55). The rate was raised prospectively for some given portion of the year, and upon a scale adapted to the probable exigencies of the parish; and the Act of Elizabeth directed that it should be raised by 'taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes inappropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the parish.' By the Rating Act, 1874, the liability to rates was extended to (1) land used for a plantation or wood, or for the growth of saleable underwood, and not subject to any right of common; (2) rights of fowling, shooting, taking, or killing game or rabbits, and fishing, when severed from the occupation of the land; and (3) mines of every kind not mentioned in the Act of Elizabeth. As an occupier, a man is rateable for all lands which he occupies in the parish, whether he is resident or not; but the tenant and not the landlord is considered as the occupier within this statute.

The poor rate is now part of the general rate (see RATES) under the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, the object of which was to consolidate the numerous rules levied by different authorities on differing areas and to enlarge the unit of administration so as to secure uniformity; the power to make rates being conferred on the rating authority, with special provisions for representation of every parish in rural areas.

The poor in Ireland had, till of late years, no relief but from private charity. But by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, intituled 'An Act for the more effectual Relief of the destitute Poor in Ireland,' the authority of the Poor Law Commissioners was extended to that part of the realm, and an Irish Board of Commissioners established.

Numerous statutes deal with the administration of poor law in Scotland, the latest of which is the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 25).

If a prisoner on his release after the termination of his sentence is likely to need poor law relief, an order may be made for his removal to the workhouse immediately on his discharge from prison (Poor Law Act, 1930, s. 103).

Aliens have the same right to relief under the Poor Laws as natural-born subjects have.

Poor Person includes any poor or indigent person applying for or receiving relief (Poor Law Act, 1930). As litigant, see IN FORMÂ PAUPERIS.

Poor Prisoners, Defence of. The Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 32), repealing the Poor Prisoners' Defence Act, 1903, entitles any person to free legal aid in the preparation and conduct of his defence at the trial and to have solicitor and counsel assigned to him for that purpose, if a certificate, called the 'defence certificate,' is granted by the justices committing him for trial or of the judge or chairman of the Court before which he is to be tried, at any time after reading the depositions. The certificate is grantable only 'when it appears to the certifying authority that his means are insufficient to enable him to obtain such aid, and must be granted in respect of any person committed for trial on a charge of murder, and may be granted when a person committed for trial upon any other charge, if it appears to the authority, having regard to all the circumstances of the case (including the nature of such defence, if any, as may have been set up) that it is desirable in the interests of justice that he should have legal aid in the preparation and conduct of his defence at the trial. Rules for carrying the Act into effect may be made by the Attorney-General, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor and a Secretary of State, and regulations as to scales of payment may be made by a Secretary of State. For the Regulations, Report of House of Commons Select Committee on the Bill which became the Act, and notes on the Act, see Chitty's Statutes.

Criminal Appeal.—The Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, provides (s. 10) as follows:—

10. The Court of Criminal Appeal may at any time assign to an appellant a solicitor and counsel, or counsel only, in any appeal or proceedings preliminary or incidental to an appeal in which, in the opinion of the Court, it appears desirable in the interests of justice that the appellant should have legal aid, and that he has not sufficient means to enable him to obtain that aid.

Popery. See PAPISTS.

Popular Action, brought by one of the public to recover some penalty given by statute to any person who chooses to sue for it. See also QUI TAM ACTION.

Population. As to the mode of ascertaining the 'population' of a municipal borough according to the returns of the last census, q.v., for the purposes of investment in its stock under s. 1 (m) of the Trustee Act, 1925, see Re Druitt, 1903, 1 Ch. 446.

Populous Parishes. For their spiritual improvement, see the New Parishes Acts, 1843, 1844, and 1856 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104); Chit. Stat. tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

Populous Place, was defined by s. 32 of the Licensing Act, 1874, as 'any area with a population of not less than 1,000 which by reason of the density of such population the county licensing committee may by order determine to be a populous place.' By s. 3 of this Act the closing hours were made different in towns and 'populous places' from those (1) in London and (2) elsewhere than in London or in towns and populous places. The above definition was repealed and substantially re-enacted by Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, but was repealed by the Licensing Act, 1921. A 'populous place' no longer exists in licensing law.

Porrecting, producing for examination or taxation, as porrecting a bill of costs, by a proctor.

Port, a place for the lading or unlading of ships, created by royal charter or lawful prescription. See Foreman v. Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable, (1869) L. R. 4 H. L., at p. 285. Portus est locus in quo exportantur et importantur merces. 2 Inst. 148.—(A port is a place where goods are exported and imported.) See LONDON, PORT OF; HAVENS; and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 314, and 2 Steph. Com., and HARBOUR.

Port Health Authority. See QUARANTINE.

Portatica, port-duties charged on ships.

Porteous Mob, an extraordinary riot and conspiracy which occurred in Edinburgh in 1736. On the occasion of the execution of a man named Wilson, Porteous, the Captain of the City Guard, fearing a riot, had given orders to fire on the crowd who had assembled to witness the spectacle, and several persons were killed. For this he was tried and sentenced to death, but on the eve of his execution he was respite by orders from London. This enraged the mob, with whom Porteous was very unpopular, with the result that they rose, stormed the Tolbooth in which Porteous was confined, and themselves hanged him in the Grassmarket. For an account of the inquiries made into the affair by the Crown Counsel, see Scott's Heart of Midlothian, Centen. Ed., note D.

Porter, an officer who carries a white or silver rod before the justices in eyre, so called a portando virgam; also, a person employed to carry messages, parcels, etc. Porters in the City of London are regulated by the Corporation.

Porterage, a kind of duty formerly paid at the custom-house to those who attended the water-side, and belonged to the package-office; but it is now abolished; also, the charge made for sending parcels.

Portgreve, or Portreeve, a magistrate in certain sea-coast towns.

Portion, property settled or provided in favour of children or their issue. In settlements by deed or will of personal property, portions were and are usually effected by direct trusts in favour of the children or issue, either immediately or after the death of the parent or parents. In regard to realty the usual plan was to settle a long term of years from or out of the real estate upon trust to sell or mortgage the term in order to provide the portions when they became payable. See SATISFIED TERM; ATTENDANT TERM. This term preceded the settlement of the estate in fee or in tail according to the intention of the settlor. This method is still available although the term is not a legal estate and will not affect a purchaser even with notice who takes his title from estate owners who are entitled to sell the estate unaffected by the term, but the trustees entitled to the term may require to have the term secured by a legal mortgage. See Law of Property Act, s. 3 (1) and Settled Land Act, s. 16; and see also in the 1st Schedule, Form 3, which is an optional statutory form of settlement. See Key and Elphinstone, Notes to Real Settlements. Settlements of portions usually contain a provision for hotchpot and maintenance of infants and advancement of capital before the period of vesting or distribution. Interest is payable on portions from the time they become due. All causes and matters connected with the raising of portions or other charges on lands are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56, reproducing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34), and see SATISFACTION.

Portioner, a minister who serves a benefice, together with others, so called because he has only a portion of the tithes or profits of the living; also an allowance which a vicar commonly has out of a rectory or impropriation.

Portmen, the burgesses of Ipswich and of the Cinque Ports.—Camden.

Portmote, a court held in haven towns or ports, and sometimes in inland counties.

Portoria, duties paid in ports on merchandise.—Civil Law.

Portrait. Where a portrait is ordered and made for valuable consideration, the person who gave the order is, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the first owner of the copyright: see Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), s. 5.

Portsale, a public sale of goods to the highest bidder; also a sale of fish as soon as it is brought into the haven.

Portsoka, or Portoken, the suburbs of a city, or any place within its jurisdiction.

Portuas, a breviary.

Positio, a claim.

Positive Evidence, proof of the very fact, opposed to negative evidence.

Positive Law. A rule of conduct enforced by sovereign sanction, Consult Austin's Jurisprudence and Maine's History of Law. See MALA PROHIBITA; LAW.

Posse, a possibility. A thing is said to be in posse when it may possibly be; in esse when it actually is.

Posse comitatus, the 'power of the county,' including the aid and attendance of all knights and other men above the age of fifteen within the county; but ecclesiastical persons, peers, and such as labour under any infirmity are not compellable to attend. It is called out when a riot is committed, a possession is kept on a forcible entry, or any force is used or rescue made contrary to the commandment of the King's writ, or in opposition to the execution of justice ; and it is expressly authorized to be called out by the Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 8, sub-s. 2, if the sheriff finds any resistance in the execution of a writ. See Jac. Law Dict.

Possessio, in its primary sense, is the condition or power by virtue of which a man has such a mastery over a corporeal thing as to deal with it at his pleasure, and to exclude other persons from meddling with it. This condition or power is detention ; and it lies at the bottom of all legal senses of the word 'possession.' This possession is no legal state or condition, but it may be the source of rights, and it then becomes possessio in a juristical or legal sense. Still, even in this sense it is not in any way to be confounded with property (proprietas). A man may have the juristical possession of a thing without being the proprietor, and a man may be the proprietor of a thing without having the juristical possession of it, and consequently without having the detention of it (Dig. 41, tit. 2, s. 12). Ownership is the legal capacity to operate on a thing according to a man's pleasure, and to exclude everybody else from doing so. Possession, in the sense of detention, is the actual exercise of such a power as the owner has a right to exercise. The term possessio occurs in the Roman jurists in various senses. There is possessio generally, possessio civilis, and possessio naturalis.

Possessio denoted, originally bare detention ; but this detention, under certain conditions, becomes a legal state inasmuch as it leads to ownership through usucapio. Accordingly the word possessio, which required no qualification so long as there was no other notion attached to possessio, requires such qualification when detention becomes a legal state. This detention, then, when it has the conditions necessary to usucapio, is called possessio civilis, and all other possessio as opposed to civilis is naturalis.—Sand. Just.

Possessio fratris, a seisin to turn the descent away from the brother of the half-blood to the sister of the whole-blood ; thus, if a father had two sons, A. and B., by different wives, these two brethren were not brethren of the whole-blood, and therefore could never inherit to each other, but the estate rather escheated to the lord. Nay, even if the father died, and his lands descended to his eldest son, A., who entered thereon, and died seised without issue, still

B. could not be heir to this estate, because he was only of the half-blood to A., the person last seised ; but it descended to a sister (if any) of the whole-blood to A. ; for in such cases the maxim was that the seisin, or possessio fratris, made the sister the heiress. Yet, had A. died without entry, B. might have inherited, not as heir to A., his half-brother, but as heir to their common father, who was the person last actually seised.—2 Bl. Com. 227. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse hæredem. 3 Rep. 41.—(the brother's possession of an estate in fee simple makes the sister to be heir.)

Possession, the state of owning or having a thing in one's own hands or power ; the thing possessed.

It is either actual, where a person enters into lands or tenements descended or conveyed to him ; apparent, which is a species of presumptive title where land descended to the heir of an abator, intruder, or disseisor, who died seised ; in law, when lands, etc., have descended to a man, and he has not actually entered into them : or naked, that is, mere possession, without colour of right.

The primary meaning is physical control. A secondary meaning is physical control by an agent or servant, or by relation back, e.g., by the owner having entered without remaining in physical possession, see Ocean Accident etc., Corporation v. Ilford Gas Co., 1905, 2 K. B. 493.

Possession may also extend over a thing in itself uncontrolled within an inclosure which is controlled, such as horses, sheep or cattle within a fenced field, but see FERÆ NATURÆ. A condition of possession is the intent to control. Possession may connote different kinds of control according to the nature of the thing or right over which it is being exercised. A man may possess an estate of land ; if he leases it he will be in possession of the rents and profits and the reversion, but not of the land which is in the lessee who may bring an action of trespass against the lessor. Possession, even wrongful, is a form of ownership. In all cases it confers the rights to the thing under possession against all the world except any one with a better legal title to it (see next title) and LIMITATIONS. But there are many kinds of ownership without possession, and in its legal meaning, possession is often indistinguishable from ownership, which is the right to possess. In regard to real property a mere right without possession is not sufficient to found an action for trespass, for instance, until 1926 a lessee before entry having a mere interesse termini could not bring an action for trespass on the land demised (Wallis v. Hands, 1893, 2 Ch. 75); and see POSSESSIO FRATRIS. In regard to chattels it is said that property draws to it the possession (Bac. Abr. Trespass, C. 3), but this is subject to a temporary interest of another, such as a bailee, in the property if his possession is inconsistent with the owner's right to possession at the same time. In that case the bailee is the only person who can bring an action for trespass, detinue or conversion if and so long as his contract of bailment has not been exceeded (Donald v. Suckling, 1866, L. R. 1 Q. B. 585). If the owner, reversioner or person entitled, subject to the bailee's interest, has suffered damage by the same acts, he may sue for the damage done to his interest, but not on the causes of action referred to. Under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205 (1) (xix.): 'Possession' includes the receipt of rents and profits or the right to receive the same, if any; while, for the purposes of the Act, the right of the person in 'actual occupation' of the land appears to have been safeguarded by s. 14, ibid. Consult Pollock and Wright's Possession in the Common Law.

Possession is nine points of the law. This adage is not to be taken to be true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times better than his; but it places in a stronger light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title and not by the weakness of his antagonist's. For instance, if the claimant be able to show a descent from the grantor of the estate, perfect except in one link of the chain, and the man in possession be a perfect stranger, the latter shall keep the estate; and so, also, if the claimant be a natural son of the last owner and adopted by him, and declared by him to be designed as his heir, yet if he die without making a will in his favour, a stranger in possession has a better title. In Beddall v. Maitland, (1881) 17 Ch. D. p. 183, Sir Edward Fry, speaking of the statute 5 Rich. 2, stat. 1, c. 8, which makes a forcible entry an indictable offence, says: 'This statute creates one of the great differences which exist in our law between the being in possession and the being out of possession of land, and which gave rise to the old saying that possession is nine points of the law. The effect of the statute is this, that when a man is in possession he may use force to keep out a trespasser; but if a trespasser has gained possession, the rightful owner cannot use force to put him out, but must appeal to the law for assistance.' And see Lous v. Telford, (1876) 1 App. Cas. 414, and cases there referred to; also Hemmings v. Stoke Poges Golf Club, 1920, 1 K. B. 720, C. A., and POTIOR EST CONDITIO DEFENDENTIS, and POTIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS.

Possession, Writ of, the process of execution in an action of ejectment. A judgment for the recovery, or for the delivery of the possession of land may be enforced by writ of possession (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLVII.) In County Courts, see County Courts Act, 1934, and Rules. See HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM.

Possessory Action, the action of trespass, the gist of which is the injury to the possession; a plaintiff, therefore, cannot maintain it, unless at the moment of the injury he was in actual, or constructive, and exclusive possession.

Possessory Lien. A possessory lien arises at common law from an agreement express or implied. As a rule it is immaterial how possession is obtained (Robbins v. Gray, 1895, 2 Q. B. 501; Keene v. Thomas, 1905, 1 K. B. 136). The lien can be extinguished by tender of the amount due and may be lost by waiver express or implied, and also only continues so long as actual possession is retained. See LIEN.

Possibility, expectation, an uncertain thing which may or may not happen.

It is either near, or ordinary, as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another; or remote, or extraordinary, as where it is limited to a man, provided he marries a certain woman, and that she shall die and he shall marry another. See next title.

A possibility coupled with an interest in any tenements or hereditaments, of any tenure, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such possibility be or be not ascertained, may be disposed of by deed (Real Property Act, 1845, s. 6, reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 4 (2)).

Possibility on a Possibility. Lord Coke lays it down as a rule that the event on which a remainder is to depend must be a common possibility, and not a double possibility, or a possibility on a possibility, which the law will not allow. Thus he tells us that the chance that a man and a woman, both married to different persons, shall themselves marry one another is but a common possibility. But the chance that a married man shall have a son named Geoffrey is stated to be a double or remote possibility; see Williams on Real Property; 2 Rep. 51 a; 10 Rep. 50 b; Co. Litt. 184 a. The idea that there cannot be a possibility on a possibility seems to have been a conceit invented by Popham, C.J., but it was never really intelligible (Whitby v. Mitchell, (1890) 44 Ch. D. p. 92, per Lindley, L.J.), and never applied to trusts of personal estate (Re Boules, 1902, 2 Ch. 650). It gave rise, however, to the rule, now well settled in regard to limitations and trusts of realty created by instruments coming into operation before 1926, but abolished in regard to those created by instruments coming into operation after 1925 by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 161 (see PERPETUITIES), that if land is limited to an unborn person for life, a remainder cannot be limited so as to confer an estate by purchase on that person's issue (Whitby v. Mitchell, ubi sup.), and the rule applies to equitable as well as to legal limitations (Re Nash, 1910, 1 Ch. 1); and see also Re Park's Settlement, 1914, 1 Ch. 595. Consult Williams on Real Property; Gray on Perpetuities, 2nd ed. par. 125 et seq.; and Wolst. and Ch. Conveyancing Acts.

Post, after: occurring in a report or a text-book, is used to direct the reader to a subsequent part of the book.

Post, a conveyance for letters or dispatches. The word is derived from positi, the horses carrying the letters or dispatches being kept or placed at fixed stations. The word is also applied to the person who conveys the letters to the houses where he takes up and lays down his charge, and to the stages or distances between house and house. Hence the phrases, 'post-boy,' 'post-horse,' 'post-house,' etc.

Contract through Post.—A letter of acceptance posted, though not received, if the post has been expressly or impliedly (as it usually is) authorized as a means of communication, creates a binding contract between the party offering and the party accepting as soon as it is posted (Household Fire Insurance Co. v. Grant, (1879) 4 Ex. D. 216), but a revocation of an offer is of no effect until brought to the mind of the person to whom the offer was made, and therefore a revocation sent by post does not operate from the time of posting it (Henthorn v. Fraser, 1892, 2 Ch. 27).

Service by Post.—Service by means of registered post is frequently provided for by statute; see, e.g., s. 53 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. See also R. S. C. Ord. LXVII., r. 2; also Ord. VIII., r. 39 of the County Court Rules, 1936, allows of the service of notices, etc., by ordinary post. See also Companies Act, 1929, s. 370. See SERVICE.

As to the meaning of 'service by post' in an Act of Parliament, see SERVICE.

Post, Writ of Entry In, an abolished writ given by the Statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3, c. 29, which provided that when the number of alienations or descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all.

Postage, the duty or charge imposed on letters or parcels conveyed by post. See POST OFFICE.

Postal Convention, a treaty made at Berne in October, 1874, for the regulation of rates of postage and matters connected with the Post Office, between England and various other countries. See 38 & 39 Vict. c. 22, now repealed by the Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48). See now Post Office Acts, 1908-1935, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 74, ss. 14 and 15.

Post and Per. See PER AND POST.

Post Conquestum (after the Conquest).

Post-dating Bills or Notes. A bill or note or cheque may be post-dated.—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 13, sub-s. 2.

Post disseisin, a writ that lay for him who, having recovered lands or tenements by force of novel disseisin, was again disseised by the former disseisor.

Postea (afterwards), the return of the judge before whom a cause was tried, after a verdict of what was done in the cause. It was indorsed on the nisi prius record by the associate.—1 Chil. Arch. Prac.

Post Entry. When goods are weighed or measured, and the merchant has got an account thereof at the Custom House, and finds his entry already made too small, he must make a post or additional entry for the surplusage in the same manner as the first was done. As a merchant is always in time prior to the clearing of the vessel to make his post, he should take care not to over-enter. However, if this be the case, and an over-entry has been made and more paid or bonded for customs than the goods really landed amount to, the land-waiter and surveyor must signify the same upon oath, and a statement be made and subscribed by the person so over-entered, that neither he, nor any other to his knowledge, had any of the said goods over-entered on board the said ship, or anywhere landed them without payment of custom; which oath must be attested by the collector or comptroller, or their deputies, who then compute the duties and set down on the back of the certificate the several sums to be paid.—McCull. Com. Dict.

Posteriority, coming after, the correlative of priority.

Posterity, succeeding generations, descendants, opposed to ancestry.

Post fine, a duty otherwise called the King's silver, formerly paid to the King for the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree the suit, on the levying of a fine.—2 Bl. Com. 350. See FINE.

Posthumous Child, a child born after its father's death. By 10 & 11 Wm. 3, c. 16, such child may take an estate as if born in its father's lifetime, although there be no limitation to trustees to preserve the contingent remainder to such child. See EX VENTRE SA MERE.

Postliminium, the return of a person to his own country, after having sojourned abroad. The right of Postliminy (jus postliminii) is that by virtue of which persons and things taken by an enemy in war are restored to their former state, upon coming again under the power of the nation to which they belonged.—International Law. See 2 Steph. Com.

Post litem motam (after the commencement of litigation), depositions, etc. Where they relate to the subject of suit, they are not admissible as a rule when made after the litigation has commenced.—Stark. Evid., 4th ed., 421.

Postman, a barrister in the Court of Exchequer and Exchequer Division of the High Court, who had precedence in motions till the Exchequer was merged in the Queen's (now King's) Bench Division.

Postmaster-General. The head of the Post-office, whose appointment and powers are regulated by the Post Office Acts, 1908 to 1920 and the Post Office (Amendment) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 15). He acts in a corporate capacity (Post Office Act, 1908, s. 33), and for the purpose of holding land is a corporation sole. See CORPORATION, s. 45, ibid. He is usually one of the Ministry, and may sit in the House of Commons (see 29 & 30 Vict. c. 55), and if an Assistant Postmaster-General is appointed he can sit and vote in the House of Commons by virtue of the Assistant Postmaster-General Act, 1909. There were two before 1822, when one was abolished.

Post-mortem (after death), as a post-mortem examination of a corpse by a surgeon, in order to discover the cause of death. Such an examination may be ordered by a coroner under the Coroners Act, 1887, s. 21. See CORONER.

Post-natus, the second son; also one born in Scotland after the accession of James I., and therefore not an alien in England. See Calvin's Case, (1608) 7 Rep. 1; 2 State Tr. 559; Broom's Const. Law.

Post-note, a bank-note intended to be transmitted to a distant place by the public mail, and made payable to order; differing in this from a common bank-note, which is payable to the bearer.

Post-nuptial Settlement, a settlement made after marriage; it is generally deemed voluntary unless made pursuant to written articles entered into before marriage. See VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES.

Post-obit Bond. A bond, conditioned to be void on the payment by the obligor of a sum of money upon the death of another person. In most cases the person upon whose death it is so payable is one from whom the obligor expects to derive some property. Post-obit bonds, and other securities of a like nature, are set aside, when made by heirs and expectants, as frauds upon the parents and other ancestors, unless the person dealing with such heir can prove satisfactorily that the stipulated payment is not more than a just indemnity for the hazard. Even the sale of a post-obit bond at public auction will not necessarily give it validity, or free it from the imputation of being obtained under the pressure of necessity. See BOND; EXPECTANT HEIR.

Post Office, the Government service for the carriage of letters, first established in 1643. Regulated by statutes 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 33; 1 & 2 Vict. cc. 97, 98; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96 (the Post Office (Duties) Act, 1840, which established penny postage), and many other Acts, which are consolidated by the Post Office Act, 1908, as amended by subsequent Acts. Besides its monopoly in respect of letters, telegraphs and wireless telegraphy (q.v.) and telephones (q.v.), it carries on the business of a carrier of parcels, a savings bank, life assurance, the transmission of money by postal orders and money orders, and pays old age pensions. See also Post Office and Telegraph Act, 1920; Post Office (Parcels) Act, 1922; Post Office and Telegraph (Money) Acts, 1928 and 1931; and also, in connection with National Health and Unemployment Insurance (stamps), old age, widows' and orphans' pensions and other functions.

Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, a temporary Act expiring six months from the date of its passing (3rd August, 1914), and empowering His Majesty by Proclamation to postpone payment of bills of exchange and payments in pursuance of other obligations. Under this Act a 'moratorium' was at once proclaimed on the outbreak of the war with Germany, and subsequently renewed until 4th November, 1914, when it finally expired.

Postponement of Trial. Civil trials in the High Court may be postponed under R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVI.; County Court trials under County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. XIII., r. 4; and criminal trials under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 27.

Postremo-geniture. Borough - English, which see.

Postulatio, the first act in a criminal proceeding.—Civ. Law.

Postulation, a petition.

Pothier, Robert Joseph, 1699–1772, a professor and legal writer of Orleans, author of works of authority on many legal subjects, e.g., 'Traité des Obligations' (translated into English by W. D. Evans).

Potior est conditio defendentis.—(The defendant has the better position.) Where both parties have been concerned in an illegal transaction, the Court will not help the plaintiff against the defendant. Compare In pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis.—(Where both parties are in the wrong the position of the possessor is the better.)

Potior est conditio possidentis.—(The possessor is in the stronger position.) See POSSESSION and next preceding title.

Potwallers, or Potwallopers, persons who cooked their own food, and were on that account in some boroughs entitled to vote for Members of Parliament.

Poultry. As to the protection of live poultry from unnecessary suffering, see the Poultry Act, 1911, authorizing Orders for that purpose to be made under the Diseases of Animals Acts. See also Diseases of Animals Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 31).

Pound [fr. pund, Sax.; pondo, Lat.], a certain weight, consisting in troy weight of 12, in avoirdupois of 16 ounces; the sum of 20s.—said to be so called because in Saxon times 240 pence weighed a pound. See Lambard, 219. A pound Scots, anglicè, a shilling.

Pound [fr. pinndan, Sax.], a penfold, an inclosure, a prison in which beasts seized for rent (see DISTRESS) or caught on the land of another (see DAMAGE FEASANT) may be kept until they are replevied or redeemed. It is either overt, i.e., open overhead; or covert, i.e., in a close. See 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12, whereby no distress of cattle may be driven more than three miles from where it was taken, and not more than 4d. may be taken for any one whole distress impounded; the Distress for Rent Act, 1737, s. 10, empowering any person lawfully distraining for rent to impound the distress on the premises chargeable with the rent.

By s. 7 of the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27) penalties are imposed for impounding or confining any animal in any pound without supplying it with wholesome and suitable food and water—any one may supply the animal in pound if kept for six hours or longer without sufficient suitable food. The reasonable cost may be recovered from the owner as a civil debt. These provisions extend an old law. See Co. Litt. 47 b as to expenses, etc., and, in Scotland, see 55 & 56 Vict. c. 55, s. 380.

Pound-breach in the case of distress for rent makes the breaker liable to the party grieved to treble damages and costs, by the Sale of Distress Act, 1690, s. 4, and in the case of distress on cattle damage feasant to a penalty of not more than 5l., recoverable before justices of the peace, by the Pound-Breach Act, 1843.

Pound of Land, an uncertain quantity of land, said to be about fifty-two acres.

Poundage, a certain sum deducted from or added to each pound of any sum of money recovered by one person for another, to remunerate the person recovering the sum for his trouble.

The sheriff's poundage by sub-s. 1 of s. 20 of the Sheriffs Act, 1887, in case of debts due to the Crown, is 1s. for the first hundred pounds recovered, and 6d. for every pound exceeding the first hundred; while in case of other debts it is as fixed by Rules under sub-s. 2. It is added to each pound of the debt, and may be levied with other expenses of execution over and above the sum due, by R. S. C. Ord. XLII., r. 15.

Pour faire proclamation, an ancient writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring him to make proclamation concerning nuisances, etc.—Fitz. N. B. 176.

Pourparty, to divide the lands which fall to parceners.—Old N. B. 11.

Pourpresture or Purpresture [fr. pourpris, Fr., an inclosure], anything done to the nuisance or hurt of the King's demesnes, or the highways, etc., by enclosure or building, endeavouring to make that private which ought to be public; see Co. Litt. 277 b.

The difference between a purpresture and a public nuisance is that purpresture is an invasion of the jus privatum of the Crown; but where the jus publicum is violated it is a nuisance. Skene makes three sorts of this offence: (1) against the Crown; (2) against the lord of the fee; (3) against a neighbour—2 Inst. 38. Purpresture within a forest was where any man made any manner of encroachment upon the forest either by building or inclosure or by using of any liberty or privilege without lawful warrant so to do (Williams on Rights of Common, p. 231). See also Glanv. i. 9, c. 11.

Pour selsir terres, an ancient writ whereby the Crown seized the land which the widow of its deceased tenant, who held in capite, had for her dower, if she married without leave; it was grounded on the statute De Prærogativa Regis, 7.—17 Edw. 2, st. 1, c. 4. It is abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Poursuivant, a king's messenger; those employed in martial causes were called Poursuivants-at-Arms.

There are, at present, in the Heralds' Office four poursuivants, distinguished by the names following:—

(1) Rouge Croix.—Instituted at an uncertain period, but generally considered to be the most ancient. The title was doubtless derived from the cross of St. George.

(2) Blue Mantle.—An office instituted by Edward III. or Henry V., and named either in allusion to the colour of the arms of France or to that of the robes of the Order of the Garter.

(3) Rouge Dragon.—This poursuivance was founded by Henry VII. on the day before his coronation, the name being derived from the ensign of his ancestor, Cadwaladr. He also assumed a red dragon as the dexter supporter of his arms.

(4) Portcullis.—This office was instituted by the same monarch, from one of whose badges the title was derived. See HERALD.

As to the office of poursuivant of the Great Seal, see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81.

Pourveyance, or Purveyance, the providing necessaries for the sovereign, by buying them at an appraised valuation in preference to all others, and even without the owner's consent. Indeed, it was a royal right of spoil, and was long since abolished. It was forbidden, without the owner's consent, by 25 Edw. 1 (Statut. de Tallag.), and see 12 Car. 2, c. 24; 3 Hallam's Middle Ages, c. 8, pt. 3, p. 148. See LAND COMPULSORY ACQUISITION.

Purveyor, or Purveyor, a buyer; one who provided for the royal household.

Powdikes, an ancient dyke or embankment to keep out the fen waters. Destroying them in the fens of Norfolk and Ely is felony by 22 Hen. 8, c. 11.

Power. A power is an authority reserved by or limited to a person to dispose, either wholly or partially, of real or personal property, either for his own benefit or that of others (Farwell on Powers; and see Freme v. Clement, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 499). So far as they relate to land, powers are either (1) Common Law authorities; (2) declarations, or directions, operating only on the conscience of the persons in whom the legal interest is vested; or (3) declarations or directions deriving their effect from the Statute of Uses. A power given before 1926 by a will to A., an executor, to sell an estate, to whom no estate was devised, and a statutory power to sell estates, as in the instance of the Land Tax Redemption Acts, are both Common Law authorities. The estate passed by force of the will or passes by force of the Act, and the person who executes the power merely nominates the party to take the estate. A power of attorney is also a Common Law authority. A power to dispose of an estate or sum of money where the legal interest is vested in another may be a power of the second sort. The legal interest is not divested by the execution of the power, but equity will compel the person seized of it to clothe the estate created with the legal right. Powers deriving their effect from the Statute of Uses are either given to a person who has an estate limited to him by the deed creating the power, or who had an estate in the land at the time of the execution of the deed; or to a stranger, to whom no estate is given, but the power is to be exercised for his own benefit; or to a mere stranger to whom no estate is given, and the power is for the benefit of others. For the difference between a power vested in a public authority for the purposes of a statute, and property, see Russ and Brown's Contract, 1934, Ch. 34.

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1 (8), all powers of appointment over, or powers to convey or charge land or any interest therein, whether created by statute or other instrument or implied by law, and whether created before or after the Act, will operate only in equity and are termed equitable powers. The only exceptions are legal powers (see ibid., s. 1 (8)) which can operate in law after 1925, i.e., the powers vested in legal mortgagee; the powers vested in an estate owner and exercisable by him or on his behalf; certain statutory powers (see ss. 7 and 8, ibid.). This Act, having abolished the Statute of Uses, powers deriving their effect by way of a declaration to uses will, after 1925, only take effect as either legal or equitable powers. By the same Act (s. 205, (1) (xi)): 'Legal powers' include the powers vested in a chargee by way of legal mortgage or in an estate owner under which a legal estate can be transferred or created, and 'equitable powers' mean all the powers in or over land under which equitable interests or powers only can be transferred or created.

The classification of powers appearing below has been retained for the determination of legal titles existing before 1925 and because the equitable force of powers has been preserved by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 3.

(1) Collateral, which are given to strangers, i.e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply collateral, or powers not coupled with an interest, or powers not being interests. These terms have been adopted to obviate the confusion arising from the circumstance that powers in gross have been by many called powers collateral.—Saville v. Blackett, (1721) 1 P. Wms. 777.

(2) Relating to the land, which are either—

(a) Appendant or appurtenant, because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life. Such an estate must be created, which will attach on an interest actually vested in himself; or,

(b) In gross, which are given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the time of the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enable him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross. A power to a tenant for life to appoint the estate after his death amongst his children, a power to jointure a wife after his death, a power to raise a term of years to commence from his death for securing younger children's portions, are all powers in gross.

A power may, with reference to the particular estates in the land over which it extends, have different aspects; it may, in regard to one, be a power appendant; in respect to another, a power in gross. Thus where an estate is settled to A. for life, remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee, and A. has a power to jointure his wife after his death, this power is in gross as to the estate for life, but appendant or appurtenant as to the remainder in fee. It may affect the latter, but never can attach on the former.

An important distinction is established between general and particular or special powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases. Such a power is, in fact, merely a mode of ownership. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the instrument creating the power, as to his own children.

A power is expounded strictly; therefore, if a man have power to make leases generally, this extends to make leases in possession only, and not in reversion.

Powers appendant may be destroyed by release, bargain and sale, or feoffment; powers in gross, by feoffment or release; but powers simply collateral could not formerly be destroyed by the act of the person to whom they are given. By s. 52 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, replaced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 155, however, a person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given, may by deed release, or contract not to exercise, the power; and by s. 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, replaced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 156, a person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given, may by deed disclaim the power, and after disclaimer will not be capable of exercising, or joining in the exercise of the power, though it may be exercised by the other or others of the persons to whom the power was given unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument creating the power. A power given to two or more jointly annexed to an office, e.g., a trust, will survive to the other or others after the death of one of the donees (Trustee Act, 1925, s. 18), but a bare power to two or more by name will not survive (Sugden on Powers; Wms. on Executors). A power intended to be exercised personally and jointly will not survive, sed. qu., if the power is appendant to a joint beneficial interest or estate in the donees.

Wills in execution of powers of appointment by will are to be executed like other wills, and to be valid, although other required solemnities are not observed (Wills Act, 1837, s. 10) ; and a deed attested by two witnesses is a valid execution of a power of appointment by deed or by any instrument in writing not testamentary, notwithstanding it shall have been expressly required that a deed or instrument in writing made in exercise of such power should be executed or attested with some additional or other form of execution, or attestation or solemnity (Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, s. 12), reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 159 ; and equity will aid defective execution if there is good consideration ; see Sugden on Powers, and Hals. L. E., tit. 'Powers.'

The Powers of Appointment Act, 1874 ('Lord Selborne's Act'), reproduced by Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 158, provides that appointments under powers shall be valid notwithstanding one or more objects are excluded, in certain cases.

For ascertaining the date for the purpose of the rule against perpetuities, the date from which the period is taken is the date of the instrument conferring the power unless the power is exercisable by an owner or having a general power equivalent to that of ownership. See Hals. L. E., tit. 'Perpetuities.'

Consult Farwell or Sugden on Powers. See APPOINTMENT IN EXERCISE OF A POWER ; ILLUSORY APPOINTMENTS ACT ; POSSIBILITY ;

Power of Attorney (Letter of Attorney), a writing usually, but not always necessarily, under seal authorizing another person, who is called the attorney of the person appointing him, to do any lawful act in the stead of another, as to give seisin of lands, receive debts or sue a third person. It is either general or special. The nature of this instrument is to give the attorney the full power and authority of the maker to accomplish the act intended to be performed. If it is an authority coupled with an interest, e.g., if the attorney is authorized to collect debts and pay thereout a debt due to himself, it is irrevocable. As it is necessary for certain purposes (e.g., execution of a deed) that it should be under seal, a power of attorney is usually in the form of a deed. By ss. 8 and 9 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, now Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 126 and 127, powers of attorney may be made irrevocable either absolutely or for a limited period according as they are given for valuable consideration or not. See REVOCATION OF AGENCY. No person making any payment or doing any act bond fide under or in pursuance of any power of attorney is liable for the moneys so paid or the act so done by reason that the person who gave the power of attorney was dead, or had become a person of unsound mind or bankrupt, or had revoked the power before such payment or act, if the death, etc., was not known to him at the time of the payment or act. See Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 124, replacing Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 47, extending Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, s. 26, which applied to trustees, etc., only, and to the case only of death of the donor of the power. Sect. 124 of the Act of 1925 further provides that proof by an attorney by statutory declaration made within three months after the performance of an authorized act that he has had no notice of revocation, may be conclusive. As to filing at the Central Office of the original power of attorney if it relates to unregistered land and the obtaining of office copies and the searching of the file, see s. 48 of the Act of 1881 and s. 125 of the 1925 Act. If to unregistered as well as registered land, the original must be filed at the Central Office and an office copy at the Land Registry ; if to registered land only, at the Land Registry. Sect. 46 of the 1881 Act, now s. 123 of the 1925 Act, allows the attorney to act in his own name instead of in that of the donor of the power. As to derivative powers exercisable by a purchaser if, as regards registered land, the power is protected by a caution or other entry on the register, see s. 128, Law of Property Act, 1925. A company can give a power of attorney under s. 31 of the Companies Act, 1929, to execute deeds on its behalf outside the United Kingdom.

Power of the County. See POSSE COMITATUS.

Poynding. See POINDING.

Poyning's Act, or STATUTE OF DROGHEDA, an Act of Parliament, made in Ireland, 10 Hen. 7, c. 22, A.D. 1495 ; so called because Sir Edward Poynings was lieutenant there when it was made, whereby all general statutes before then made in England were declared of force in Ireland, which, before that time, they were not.—12 Rep. 109 ; 3 Hall, Const. Hist. c. xviii. p. 361.

P.P.I. See POLICY PROOF OF INTEREST.

Practice, the form and manner of conducting and carrying on suits, actions, or prosecutions at law or in equity, civil or criminal, through their various stages, from the commencement to final judgment and execution, according to principles and rules laid down by the several Courts. As to the precise meaning of 'practice,' see A.-G. v. Sillem, (1864) 10 Jur. N. S. 457.

Multa exercitatione multo facilius quam regulis percipies (You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules): 4 Inst. c. 50.

As to the practice of the Courts of Common Law, see Day's Common Law Procedure Acts, and Chitty's Archbold's Practice; of Courts of Equity, Daniell's Chanc. Prac.; Seton on Judgments. As to the practice of the Supreme Court, see the Judicature Acts, 1873, 1875, and 1925, the Rules of the Supreme Court, and the Annual Practice. And see the titles of the various proceedings in an action; e.g., PLEADING, SUMMONS, etc.

As to the practice of the County Courts, see the County Court Act of 1934 (which consolidates with amendments the former Acts), the County Court Rules, 1936; and the County Courts Annual Practice.

Practice Court. See BAIL COURT.

Practitioner, one who is engaged in the exercise or employment of any art or profession.

Præceptories, a kind of benefices, so called because they were possessed by the more eminent Templars, whom the Chief Master by his authority created and called Præceptores Templi.—Dugd. Mon. ii. 543.

Præcipe (command), a slip of paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written; it is lodged in the office out of which the required writ is to be issued.

A præcipe must be filed by the party issuing or his solicitor before a writ of execution is issued, which præcipe must contain the title of the action, the reference to the record, the date of the judgment, and of the order, if any, for execution, and the names of those against whom it issued, and must be signed by the party or solicitor issuing it (R. S. C. Ord. XLII. r. 12). For forms of such præcipes, see ibid., App. G. The goods of the debtor are bound immediately after the application for the præcipe (Murgatroyd v. Wright, 1907, 2 K. B. 333).

Præcipe in capite, a writ out of Chancery for a tenant holding of the Crown in capite, i.e., in chief.—Mag. Chart. c. 24.

Præcipe, Tenant to the, a person having an estate of freehold in possession, against whom the præcipe was brought by a tenant in tail, seeking to bar his estate by a recovery. If the latter was tenant in tail in possession, it was usual for him to convey a freehold estate to any indifferent person against whom the præcipe was brought. See RECOVERY.

Præscriptum, the punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

Præcognita, things to be previously known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

Præda belli, booty, property seized in war.

Prædia stipendiaria, provincial lands belonging to the people.—Civ. Law.

Prædia tributaria, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.—Ibid.

Prædia volantia. In the duchy of Brabant, certain things movable, such as beds, tables, and other heavy articles of furniture, were ranked amongst immovables, and were called prædia volantia, or volatile estates.—2 Bl. Com. 428.

Prædial Tithes [fr. prædium, Lat., ground], such as arise merely and immediately from the ground; as grain of all sorts, hops, hay, wood, fruit, herbs.—2 Steph. Com.

Prædilot (aforesaid).—Hob. 6.

Prædium dominans, an estate to which a servitude is due; the ruling estate.—Colquhoun's Roman Civil Law, s. 937.

Prædium rusticum, heritage which is not destined for the use of man's habitation; such, for example, as lands, meadows, orchards, gardens, woods, even though they should be within the boundaries of a city.—Ibid.

Prædium serviens, an estate which suffers or yields a service to another estate.—Ibid.

Prædium urbanum, a building or edifice intended for the habitation and use of man, whether built in cities or in the country.—Ibid.

Præfectus urbi, from the time of Augustus, an officer who had the superintendence of the city and its police, with jurisdiction extending one hundred miles from the city, and power to decide both civil and criminal cases. As he was considered the direct representative of the emperor, much that previously belonged to the prætor urbanus fell gradually into his hands.—Ibid., s. 2395.

Præfectus vigilum, the chief officer of the night watch. His jurisdiction extended to certain offences affecting the public peace, and even to larcenies. But he could inflict only slight punishments.—Ibid.

Præfectus villæ (the mayor of a town).

Præfine, the fee paid on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, before the fine was passed.—2 Bl. Com. 350.

Præmium pudicitiae, the consideration given by the seducer of a chaste woman for her defilement. See Annamdale v. Harris, (1727) 2 P. Wms. 432; 3 Bro. P. C. 445.

Præmunire [fr. præmoneri, Lat., to be forewarned]. It is an offence so called from the words of the writ preparatory to the prosecution thereof: præmunire facias A. B. (cause A. B. to be forewarned) that he appear before us to answer the contempt wherewith he stands charged; which contempt is particularly recited in the preamble to the writ. The offence of præmunire is, in effect, described by Blackstone to be 'introducing a foreign power into the land, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to alien process which constitutionally belonged to the King alone': see 4 Bl. Com. pp. 103 et seq.

The statutes of præmunire (which are all still unrepealed, and are of the most confused character) were framed to encounter papal usurpation by presentation of aliens to English benefices. The first of them, called the Statute of Provisors, was passed in 1350, in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of Edward III., and was the foundation of all the subsequent statutes of præmunire, of which 16 Rich. 2, c. 5, passed in 1392, is the 'Statute of Præmunire' generally so called, and incorporated by reference in many subsequent statutes; e.g., in 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, s. 6, whereby an archbishop or bishop refusing to confirm and consecrate a person elected bishop still incurs a præmunire; and 13 Car. 2, c. 1, whereby to assert maliciously and advisedly, by speaking or writing, that both or either House of Parliament have or has a legislative authority without the sovereign, is still an offence within the statutes of præmunire, or, as it is shortly called, a præmunire; and the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 11, whereby it is still a præmunire to send any subject of this realm a prisoner, under certain exceptions in the Act specified, into parts beyond the seas.

The punishment of the offence is (see 25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 22, and 16 Rich. 2, c. 5) that, from the conviction, the defendant be out of the Crown's protection, and his lands and goods are forfeited to the Crown. Until the passing of the repealed 5 Eliz. c. 1, it was perhaps lawful to kill the defendant. Consult Co. Litt. 391 a and Harg. note.

Prænomen, the name of a person, distinguishing him from others of the same family.—Civil Law.

Præpositus, an officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred, called præpositus regius; or a steward or bailiff of an estate, answering to the wicnere.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Also the person from whom descents are traced under the old canons.

Præpositus ecclesie, a church-reeve or churchwarden.

Præpositus villæ, a constable of a town, or petty constable.

Præscriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab autoritate legis.—(Prescription is a title taking his substance of use and time allowed by the law.) Co. Litt. 113 a, b.

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis: et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. Bac. Max. 224.—(The presence of the body (substance) cures error in the name: the truth of the name cures an error of description.)

Præstat cautela quam medela. Co. Litt. 304.—(Caution is better than cure.)

Præsumitur pro negante.—(It is presumed for the negative.) The rule of the House of Lords when the numbers are equal on a motion. See SEMPER PRÆSUMITUR PRO NEGANTE.

Præsumptio, intrusion, or the unlawful taking of anything.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 11.

Prætor fidelicommissarius, the judge at Rome who enforced the performance of all fiduciary obligations and confidence. See 1 Steph. Com.

Pragmatic Sanction, a rescript or answer of the sovereign, delivered by advice of his council to some college, order, or body of people, who consult him in relation to the affairs of the community. A similar answer given to an individual is simply called a rescript.—Civ. Law. Also, the instrument by which the Emperor Charles VI. endeavoured to secure the succession of his daughter Maria Theresa to the Austrian dominions after his death.

Pratique [fr. practica, Ital.], a licence for the master of a ship to traffic in the ports of Italy upon a certificate that the place whence he came is not annoyed with any infectious disease.

Pratum bovis, or carucæ, a meadow for oxen employed in tillage.

Praxis, use, practice.

Prayer Book. See UNIFORMITY, ACT OF.

Prayer for the Dead. A bequest of personal estate for masses for the dead is not void as a gift to superstitious uses (Bourne v. Keane, 1919, A. C. 815 (overruling West v. Shuttleworth, (1835) 2 My. & K. 684, and the cases decided thereunder). See also O'Hanlon v. Logue, 1906, 1 Ir. 247, and Re Caus. Lindenboom v. Camille, 1934, Ch. 162, A tombstone bearing an inscription 'Of your charity pray for the repose of the soul of' or similar words can be removed (Pearson v. Stead, 1903, P. 66), but see Capel St. Mary v. Packard, 1927, P. 289.

Pray in Aid, to petition in a court of justice for the calling in of help from another that has an interest in the cause in question.

Preamble, introduction, preface; also the beginning of an Act of Parliament, etc., serving to portray the interests of its framers, and the mischiefs to be remedied; a good mean to find out the meaning of the statute, and as it were a key to open the understanding thereof.—1 Inst. 79 a; and see the Sussex Peerage Case, (1844) 11 Cl. & F. 143; Winn v. Mossman, (1869) L. R. 4 Ex. 299; Marwell on Statutes; Hardcastle on Statutes; Mews's Digest, tit. 'Statute'; the effect of the cases being that as a general rule the preamble is to be resorted to only in case of ambiguity in the statute itself.

Preambles, which in early Acts (see, e.g., 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, the Act of Settlement, and the Irish Act, 1 Car. 1, c. 1), and even in comparatively modern Acts (see, e.g., 3 & 4 Vict. c. 77, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 48), often extended to very great length, are now very frequently discontinued; and in Statute Law Revision Acts passed since 1888, Parliament has repealed preambles of statutes still in force, but Lord Halsbury, L.C., in Powell v. Kempton Park Race Course, 1899, A. C. 143, affirming the Court of Appeal (S.C., 1897, 2 Q. B. 242), referred to a preamble so repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1892, and in his Laws of England, tit. 'Statute,' declared that 'the repeal of a preamble by a Statute Law Revision Act will in no way affect the future construction of the Act.'

Pre-audience, the right of one to be heard before another; as of the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General before King's Counsel, of King's Counsel before other barristers, and of barristers generally in the order of their call.

Prebend, a stipend granted in cathedral churches ad prebendum, to maintain a priest; also, but improperly, the priest himself. A simple prebend is merely a revenue; a prebend, with dignity, has some jurisdiction attached to it. The term 'prebend' is generally confounded with canonicate; but there is a difference between them. The former is the stipend granted to an ecclesiastic in consideration of his officiating and serving in the church; whereas the canonicate is a mere title or spiritual quality which may exist independently of any stipend.—2 Steph. Com.

Prebenda, or Probanda, provisions.

Precarie, or Preces, day-works which the tenants of certain manors are bound to give their lords in harvest time. Magna precaria was a great or general reaping day.

Precarium, a contract by which the owner of a thing, at another's request, gives him the thing to use as long as the owner shall please. This was distinguished from an ordinary gratuitous loan, and in the Roman Law gave rise to different obligations on the part of the borrower.—See Storey on Bail., ss. 227, 253 b.

Precatory Words, expressions in a will, praying or recommending that a thing be done; e.g., that property bequeathed to a legatee be disposed of by him for the benefit of other persons, the question then arising whether the legatee was meant to take absolutely or merely as a trustee for such other persons. The general rule is that such words will create a precatory trust if they are capable of being construed as imperative, but the cases are numerous and conflicting. In former times the Court was very apt to construe words of recommendation as imperative, but of late years the tendency has been the other way; see Hill v. Hill, 1897, 1 Q. B. 483; Williams v. Williams, 1897, 2 Ch. 12; Re Oldfield, 1904, 1 Ch. 549; Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury, 1905, A. C. 84.

Precedence, or Precedency, the act or state of going before; adjustment of place.

The rules of precedence may be reduced to the following list, in which those marked * are entitled to the rank here allotted them by 31 Hen. 8, c. 10; marked † by 1 W. & M. c. 1; marked || by letters-patent, 9, 10 & 14 Jac. 1, which see in *Seld. Precedence, Patent of, a grant from the Crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honour with that rank of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and pre-audience as are assigned in their respective patents.—3 Steph. Com. (Discontinued).

Precedent Condition, such as must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged, or an obligation be performed.
See CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Precedents, authorities or examples to be followed by Courts of justice. Each of the three superior Courts of Common Law was by the practice of the law bound to follow a decision of its own or of either of the others on a point of law, and a decision of its own on a point of practice; but it was not bound to follow the decisions of another co-ordinate Court on a point of practice.
The same rules prevailed in the Courts of Equity. The Divisions of the High Court being parts of one and the same Court, each Division ordinarily considers itself bound by the decision of the other Divisions upon points of practice as well as of law; and so of each Divisional Court; but in more than one case where there was no appeal, a Divisional Court, inclined to disagree with a prior judgment of another Divisional Court upon the same point, has been strengthened in number, and so strengthened, has declined to follow such prior judgment. See Winyard v. Toogood, (1882) 52 L. J. M. C. 25.

The House of Lords is absolutely bound by its own prior decisions, although decided, on an equality of votes, in the negative, and nothing but an Act of Parliament will remove them (London Tramways Co. v.
London County Council, 1898, A. C. 75).
The decisions of a judge at Nisi Prius are not considered binding.

The decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are not binding on the High Court, though of course treated with great respect.

Scottish (see Hoyle v. Hitchman, (1879)
4 Q. B. D. 423) and Irish (see London and
North Western Ry. Co. v. Skerton, (1864) 33
L. J. M. C. 158) decisions are treated with respect in the English Courts and differed from with reluctance. The differing from the Scots decision in Hoyle v. Hitchman led to the passing of s. 2 a of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879. In London and North Western
Ry. Co. v. Skerton three judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, being themselves in doubt as to the construction of s. 46 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, followed two Irish cases. In Chislett v. Macbeth & Co., 1909, 2 K. B. at p. 815, Farwell, L. J., said: 'It is desirable that the decisions in the Scottish Court and in the Courts of this country should, if possible, be uniform'; approved by Lord Shaw, ib., 1910, A. C. at p. 224. Consult Mew's Digest, tit. 'Decided Cases,' and Chitty on Contracts.

The term 'precedents' is also used to designate the collections of pleadings, such as Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings, or of forms of wills, settlements, leases, mortgages, and other documents in ordinary use which are made and published from time to time as models which a practitioner can safely follow, after adaptation so far as necessary to his own particular case. See Davidson's Precedents in Conveyancing; Bythewood and Jarman; Key and Elphinstone, Prieaux, Encyclopedia of Forms and Precedents, and others. For an historical notice of Forms of Assurance and Precedents, see Davidson's Prec. in Conveyancing, vol. i. ch. i. For precedents of documents in company matters, see Palmer's, Stiebel's, or Gore-Brown's Company Precedents.

Precept, a rule authoritatively given; a mandate: (1) A command in writing by a justice of the peace or other officer, for bringing a person or record before him; the direction of the sheriff to the proper officer to proceed to the election of members of parliament; a command to a sheriff to empanel a jury; also a provocation whereby one incites another to commit a felony.

(2) Under the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, as amended by the Local Government Act, 1929, the mandate, styled 'precept to be sent' by the precepting authority to the rating authority to levy the general rate to a specified amount; and see Local Government Act, 1933, s. 193, for power of a parish council to issue precepts to its rural district council to meet certain expenses.

Preces, primariæ, or Primæ, a right of the Crown to name the first prebend that becomes vacant after the accession of the sovereign in every church of the empire. This right was exercised by the Crown of England in the reign of Edward I.—2 Steph. Com.

Precinct. 1. A constable's district. 2. The immediate neighbourhood of a palace or court.

Precipe. See PRÆCIPUE.

Precludi non (not to be barred) was the technical name of the commencement of a replication to a plea in bar (1 Chit. Pl. 627, 752), abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 66.

Preconition, in Scotland, is the 'proof' of a witness committed to writing for use upon his examination. In criminal cases, the preliminary examination of witnesses usually conducted under the superintendence of the procurator fiscal.

Preconization [fr. præconium, Lat., the office of a crier], proclamation.

Pre-contract. Where one of the parties to a marriage was under a prior agreement to marry a third person, such prior agreement was called a pre-contract. It was a canonical impediment to the marriage of either party. The Ecclesiastical Courts would formerly enforce this agreement, by compelling the parties to a public marriage, and if one of them had already married, such marriage would be void ab initio; but until thus avoided it was good. See 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, and 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 23, s. 2; Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, s. 53. But pre-contract is no longer a cause for dissolving a marriage in England; see 26 Geo. 2, c. 33; Co. Litt. 79 b, and Hargrave's note (4).

Predecessor, one who has preceded another. The word predecessor has a technical signification in law, answering to successor in the case of a corporation sole, as ancestor does to heir in the case of a natural person (Burt. Comp. pl. 378); the correlative of successor under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, s. 2.

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36), defined in relation to a tenant or landlord, as any person through whom either respectively has derived title by assignment, will, intestacy, or operation of law.

Predial. See PRÆDIAL.

Predicament, the condition of things concerning which a logical proposition may be stated.

Predicate, that which is said concerning the subject in a logical proposition, as, 'The law is the perfection of common sense'; perfection of common sense, being affirmed concerning the law (the subject), is the predicate or thing predicated.

Predicate, to affirm logically.

Pre-emption, Right of, the power of buying a thing before others, as superfluous lands under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 128, which must before sale be offered to the persons from whom they were originally taken, or to the adjoining owners; as to registration of contracts or deeds giving the right of pre-emption as estate contracts, see Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10. Compare the right of pre-emption which a county council has by virtue of s. 12 (4) of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908. Also, a privilege formerly allowed to the royal purveyor, but abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24. See OPTION TO PURCHASE.

Prefer, to apply, to move for; as 'to prefer for costs' is a phrase for 'to apply for costs.'

Preferences, Fraudulent. See FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES.

Preferential or Preference Shares or Stock, shares or stock in a company having priority as to payment of dividends of a fixed amount, and, in some cases, of capital upon a winding-up, over the ordinary shares. The dividends are usually contingent upon the profits of each year or half-year. In some cases, however, the arrears of dividend form an accumulating debt by the ordinary to the preference shareholders, the preference being in that case described as a 'non-contingent' or a 'cumulative' preference. And see DEFERRED STOCK.

Preferential Payments, in bankruptcy, administration of estates of persons dying insolvent, and winding up of a company:—One year's rates and taxes, four months' salaries of clerks up to fifty pounds, and two months' wages of labourers or workmen, up to twenty-five pounds (labourers in husbandry paid partly in a lump sum at the end of the year of hiring to have the whole or proportionate part of that sum). Also sums due under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, the National Insurance Acts (Health and Unemployment and Contributory Pensions). These debts rank equally between them unless the assets are insufficient, in which case they are to abate in equal proportions. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (see s. 34), the preference was extended to apprentices. See the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 33, and the Companies Act, 1929, s. 264, by which these debts are directed to be paid in priority to all others; and by s. 264 (4) (b) of the Companies Act, 1929, these debts are to have priority over the claims of holders of debentures or debenture stock under any floating charge created by a company. The debts are a first charge on goods or proceeds distrained upon within three months of the date of the receiving order or winding-up order, but if the landlord pays the debts he is to have a first charge for the debts on the goods or proceeds (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 35, and Companies Act, 1929, s. 264 (6); and see also County Courts Act, 1933, ss. 134 and 153, as to administration of small estates; Cairney v. Back, 1906, 2 K. B. 746; Re Beeton, 1913, 2 Ch. 279; Re Havana Co., 1916, 1 Ch. 8, and Lewis Merthyr Collieries, Ltd., Lloyds Bank v. The Company, 1929, 1 Ch. 498; and STANNARIES.

As to improper preferential payments, see FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES.

Pregnancy, the state of being with child. It may be an 'illness' preventing the attendance of a witness (Reg. v. Wellings, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 426).

Pregnancy, Plea of. When a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, execution will be respite until she be delivered. See JURY OF MATRONS.

Prejudice, Without, is a term given to overtures and communications between parties in the course of negotiation, or between litigants before action, or after action, but before trial or verdict. The words import an understanding that if the negotiation fails, nothing that has passed shall be taken advantage of thereafter; so, if a defendant offer, 'without prejudice,' to pay half the claim, the plaintiff must not rely on the offer as an admission of his having a right to some payment.

The rule is that nothing written or said 'without prejudice' can be considered at the trial without the consent of both parties—not even by a judge in determining whether or not there is good cause for depriving a successful litigant of costs (Walker v. Wilsher, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 335; Hulton v. Chadwick, 35 T. L. R. 620). There must, however, be an existing dispute for the rule to apply (Re Daintrey, 1893, 2 Q. B. 116). The word is also frequently used without the foregoing implications in statutes and inter partes to exclude or save transactions, acts and rights from the consequences of a stated proposition and so as to mean 'not affecting,' 'saving,' or 'excepting.'

Prelate, an archbishop or bishop.

Prefector, reader; a lecturer.

Preliminary Act, a document stating the time and place of a collision between vessels, the names of the vessels, and other particulars required to be filed by each solicitor in actions for damage by such collision. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 28.

Premier, a principal minister of State. See PRIME MINISTER.

Premises (premissa), in logic, propositions antecedently supposed or proved. In a deed the 'premises' are all the parts preceding the habendum. The word properly applies to what has been previously described or mentioned, and is used only in that sense in well-drawn instruments (Dav. Prec. in Conveyancing, vol. i.). It is, however, often used as meaning land or houses.

For the statutory meaning, see particular statutes, e.g., Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4, where 'premises' includes messuages, buildings, lands, easements, tenements and hereditaments of any tenure.

Premium, a consideration; something given to invite a loan or a bargain; the consideration paid to the assignor by the assignee of a lease, or to the transferor by the transferee of shares or stock, etc.

Also the name given to the annual or other payment for renewal of a policy of assurance.

Premunire. See PRÆMUNIRE.

Prender [fr. prendre, Fr.], to take anything as of right before it is offered.

Prender de baron (to take a husband).

Prepense, forethought, preconceived, contrived beforehand. See MALICE.

Prerogative, a peculiar or exclusive privilege. Especially, all the rights which by law the King has as chief of the kingdom and as entrusted with the execution of the laws. The prerogative of the Crown cannot be taken away even by an Act of Parliament unless the Act contains express words to that effect; see Re Wi Malua's Will, 1908, A. C. 448, and A.-G. v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Ltd., 1920, A. C. 508, and under Statute of Westminster, British Coal Corporation v. Regem, 1935, A. C. 500. Also Moore v. A.-G. for Irish Free State, 1935, A. C. 484. See KING; REGALIA.

Prerogative Court. The two archbishops have each of them a prerogative court. The appeal is to the Privy Council.—2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 92. See now Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 20 (a), 107, replacing Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 4, which took away their jurisdiction in testamentary matters.—2 Steph. Com.

Prerogative of Mercy. In early times the operation of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy was far wider than at the present day, as it was not only extended to some persons who in later ages would not be considered to have incurred any criminal responsibility, e.g., persons who had committed homicide by misadventure or in self-defence (Pollock and Maitland's Hist. Engl. Law, vol. ii., pp. 476 et seq.), but was even extended to jurors who had been attainted for an oath that, though not false, was fatuous: ibid. p. 661. The power of pardoning offences is stated by Blackstone to be one of the great advantages of monarchy in general above every other form of government, and which cannot subsist in democracies. Its utility and necessity are defended by him on all those principles which do honour to human nature: see 4 Bl. Com. c. 31, p. 397. In early times, again, there were fewer offences that did not admit of being pardoned. In appeals (i.e., private accusations of felony) which were not the suit of the King, but of the party injured, the prosecutor might release, but the King could not pardon: 3 Inst. 237. Appeals by wager of battel (see that title) were abolished in 1819 by 56 Geo. 3, c. 46, in consequence of Ashford v. Thornton, (1818) 1 B. & A. 405. Blackstone observes that the King could not pardon a common nuisance while it remains unredressed, or so as to prevent an abatement of it; though afterwards he might remit the fine, because, though the prosecution is vested in the King to avoid multiplicity of suits, yet (during its continuance) this offence savours more of the nature of a private injury to each individual in the neighbourhood than of a public wrong. The King cannot pardon some offences against a popular or penal statute, after information brought: 3 Inst. 238. By the passing of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2), Chit. Stat. tit. 'Habeas Corpus', the offence of sending a subject to a foreign prison against s. 12 of that enactment was made unpardonable by the King. The Prerogative of Mercy was frequently invoked to alter the sentence, either to obviate the necessity for the literal execution of the sentence in cases of high treason, or to change the sentence of death by hanging for felony into one of decapitation: cf. advice given by the judges to James II. in Lady Lisle's case, 11 How. St. Tr. 297, 378. In the eighteenth century conditional pardons for felony were regularly granted in order that the offender might transport himself for a term of years. Formerly free pardons were only grantable under the Great Seal, but by s. 13 of the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28) (see Chit. Stat. tit. 'Criminal Law'), the King may grant a free pardon for felony by sign manual. The practice of obtaining a free pardon before 1848 was fully explained in a letter to the Home Secretary by the judges who formed the Special Commission before whom Frost and others were tried for high treason in 1839: see The Queen v. Frost, (1839) 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 85, 479, 480.

The anomaly of pardoning either an innocent or guilty man on the ground of his innocence, protested against by Lord Denman, L.C.J., and Parke and Alderson, BB., before a Select Committee of the House of Lords in 1848 (Parl. Pap. Session 1847-48, cd. 523), and by the Beck Commission in 1904 (Parl. Pap. 1904, cd. 2315, Rep.), may, if he thinks fit, be avoided under the provision in the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 19, by which the Home Secretary may, if he thinks fit, refer the case to the Court of Criminal Appeal (as upon an appeal) or refer any point to that Court (see also s. 4, ibid.). This is the direct adoption of a suggestion made by Sir James Graham to Baron Parke more than sixty years before. Cf. Parl. Pap. 1847-48, cd. 523, p. 5. The Prerogative of Mercy is not affected by the Act (see s. 19). See PRADON.

Prerogative Writs, processes issued upon extraordinary occasions on proper cause shown. They are the writs of procedendo, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and certiorari.

Presbyter, a priest, elder, or honourable person.

'New Presbyter is but old Priest writ large.'—Milton.

Presbyterian, a presbytery; that part of the church where divine offices are performed, applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priest, and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church.—Dugd. Mon. i. 243.

Presbyterian Church of England, a Protestant Church constituted under the 'Book or Order' of that Church.

Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The established Church of Scotland. See Will. 1 & Mary, c. 5, the Union of Scotland Act, 1706 (6 Ann. c. 11), and Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly) v. Overtoun (Lord), 1904, A. C. 515.

Presbyterians, a sect of Christians chiefly to be found in Scotland and Ireland (see 34 Vict. c. 24), who do not acknowledge the authority of bishops. In England the term 'Presbyterian' originally designated a distinct body of Protestant Dissenters. The Presbyterian form of worship was established in England during the Commonwealth, and when the Presbyterian ministers who filled the churches were ejected by the Act of Uniformity in 1662 they spread over the country and founded Presbyterian churches in almost every part of it. In process of time, however, many of these Presbyterian congregations gradually changed their views, some becoming Independents, others Baptists, and not a few became Unitarians; see A.-G. v. Bunce, (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. 563.

Prescription [fr. præscribo, Lat.], title produced and authorized by long usage. It is known in the Roman Law as usuacapio.

Title by prescription arises from a long-continued and uninterrupted possession of property, and is thus defined by Sir Edward Coke (Co. Litt. 113 b), Præscriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. (Prescription is a title taking his substance of use and time allowed by the law.)

Every species of prescription, by which property is acquired or lost, is founded on the presumption that he who has had a quiet and uninterrupted possession of anything for a long period of years is supposed to have a just right, without which he would not have been suffered to continue in the enjoyment of it. For a long possession may be considered as a better title than can commonly be produced, as it supposes an acquiescence in all other claimants; and that acquiescence also supposes some reason for which the claim was foreborne.—1 Cruise's Dig., tit. xxxi., 'Prescription,' c. i., s. 4, p. 421.

There are two kinds of prescription, viz.: (1) negative, which relates to realty or corporeal hereditaments, whereby an uninterrupted possession for a given time gives the occupier a valid and unassailable title, by depriving all claimants of every stale right and deferred litigation, now mainly governed by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27); as amended by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57); and (2) positive, which relates to incorporeal hereditaments, and originated at the Common Law from immemorial or long usage only.

Positive prescription has been greatly modified by the Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71).

The most important rules of the Common Law concerning positive prescription were these:—

(1) The only property claimable by positive prescription is an incorporeal hereditament.

(2) It must be founded on actual usage or enjoyment; for a mere claim will not establish the right.

(3) The use or enjoyment must have been continuous and peaceable; although an interruption of comparatively short duration will not destroy it.

(4) The usage must have been from time immemorial, or from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, which is held to be from the beginning of the reign of Richard I.

(5) The prescription must be certain and reasonable.

Blackstone, however, states the rules as to prescription somewhat differently; see 2 Bl. Com., pp. 263 et seq.

The Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71) (Lord Tenterden's Act), for shortening the time of prescription in certain cases enacts in substance as follows:—

(1) Claims to right of common and other profits à prendre (except tithes and rent) are primâ facie indefeasible after thirty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, and absolutely indefeasible after sixty years, except by showing that the enjoyment was by some agreement in writing.

(2) Claims to ways or 'other' easements or use of water are primâ facie indefeasible after twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, and absolutely indefeasible after forty years, except by showing that the enjoyment was by some agreement in writing.

(3) Claims to light for a building uninterruptedly enjoyed for twenty years are absolutely indefeasible after twenty years' enjoyment, except by showing that the enjoyment was by some agreement in writing. See Richardson v. Graham, 1908, 1 K. B. 39, and LIGHT.

By s. 4 of the Prescription Act, 1832, the periods are to be taken to be the period next before some suit or action relating to the right in dispute, and no act or matter shall be deemed to be an 'interruption' within the meaning of the statute unless the same shall have been submitted to or acquiesced in for one year.

See Gale on Easements; Goddard on Easements; Dalton v. Angus, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 740; WAY and addenda.

Prescription, Corporations by, those which have existed beyond the memory of man, and therefore are looked upon in law to be well created, such as the City of London and many others.—1 Bl. Com. 473.

Presentation, the offering by the patron of a benefice to the ordinary of a person to be instituted to the benefice. It must be in writing (29 Car. 2, c. 3), and is in the nature of letters-missive to the ordinary.

The sovereign, as protector ecclesiarum, is the patron paramount of all benefices which do not belong to other patrons, and usually presents by letters-patent (26 Hen. 8, c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 1).

As to other patrons, the right of presentation is sometimes confounded with that of nomination; but presentation is the offering a person to the bishop, while nomination is the offering such a person to the patron. These two rights may co-exist in different persons; thus where an advowson is vested in trustees or mortgagees they have the right of presentation, while the right of nomination is in the cestus que trust, or mortgagors, but the trustees or the mortgagee must judge of the qualification of the nominee.—Mirehouse on Advowsons, 136.

A bishop has, by Canon 95 (which abridged the period from two months), 28 days for inquiry before instituting (see INSTITUTION) the clergyman presented by the patron.

All persons seised in fee, in tail, or for life, or possessed of a term for years of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, or of an advowson in gross, may present; and his right descends by course of inheritance, from heir to heir, or passes to a devisee or purchaser, unless the benefice become vacant in the lifetime of the patron, when the void turn devolves upon the personal representatives (Mirehouse v. Rennell, (1833) 7 Bli. 241), being, indeed, a personal right or interest dis-annexed from the estate in the advowson, and vested in the patron simply as an individual. And where the incumbent is also a patron, if he died seised of the advowson, without having devised it, his heir, not his executor, is entitled to present, because the descent of heir and the fall of the avoidance to the executor happening at the same time, the elder right prevails. If a bishop die, a church being vacant in his lifetime, the Crown exercises its prerogative to present.—Co. Litt. 388 a.

Joint-tenants and tenants in common should present jointly; and if co-parceners cannot agree, the eldest sister is entitled to the first turn, the second sister the second turn, et sic de cæteris, every one in turn according to seniority, and this part which the oldest thus takes by virtue of her priority of age is called the enitia pars.

By 7 Anne, c. 18, s. 2, if co-parceners, or joint-tenants, or tenants in common, be seised of an estate of inheritance in the advowson of any church, or vicarage, or other ecclesiastical promotion, and a partition is made between them, to present by turns, every one shall be taken to be seised of his separate part to present in his turn.

An infant at any age may nominate or present (Hearle v. Greenbank, (1749) 3 Atk. at p. 710; Arthington v. Coverly, (1733) 2 Abr. Cas. Eq. 518). The position now appears to be doubtful, an advowson or right to fill a church and benefice is now 'land' (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205), and previously was an incorporeal hereditament, but if the benefice has become vacant, the nature of the right of presentation is altered: it becomes a personal right or chattel. In the latter case an infant is not incapacitated from owning or exercising the right. See Hals. L. E., tit. 'Eccl. Law.'

A corporation aggregate presents by the corporate name under their common seal.

A patron may present himself (Walsh v. Bishop of Lincoln, (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. 518).

The sale of the right of next presentation is invalidated by s. 1 of the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), which Act also (see BENEFICE) greatly enlarges the powers of the bishop to refuse to institute.

A presentation may be revoked or varied before admission and institution, since it does not vest any right, and does not confer, before institution, any interest whatever.

The right of a Roman Catholic to present devolves upon the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge: see 3 & 4 Jac. 1, c. 5; 1 W. & M. c. 26; 12 Anne, st 2, c. 14; 11 Geo. 2, c. 17, and the mode of exercising this devolved right is regulated by s. 7 of the Benefices Act, 1898; the right of presentation of a person professing the Jewish religion, in right of any office held by him in the gift of the Crown, devolves on the Archbishop of Canterbury (Jews Relief Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49), s. 4).

See Chit. Stat. tit. 'Church and Clergy'; 1 Br. & Had. Com. 470; Fox v. Bp. of Chester, (1829) 3 Bl. N. S. 123; Tud. L. C. in R.P. See ADVOWSON.

Presentative Advowson. See ADVOWSON.

Presenter, one who presents a presentee to a benefice.

Presentment, a very comprehensive term, including not only presentations properly so called, but also inquisitions of office, and indictments by a grand jury; properly speaking, the notice taken by a grand jury of any offence, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the Crown; as the presentment of a nuisance, a libel, and the like, upon which the officer of the Court must afterwards frame an indictment before the party presented can be put to answer it.

Presentments are also made in courts-leet and courts-baron, before the stewards.—1 Steph. Com.

Presentment of Bill of Exchange, Cheque, or Promissory Note, the presenting of a bill by the holder to the drawee for acceptance, or to the acceptor or an indorser for payment of, a cheque to the banker for payment, and of a note to the maker or indorser for payment.

The law on this subject is regulated by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, as follows:—

Presentment of Bill for Acceptance.—Presentment is necessary if the bill be payable after sight or if it be expressly stipulated for by the bill, or if it be drawn payable elsewhere than at the residence or place of business of the drawee, but in no other case (s. 39). When a bill payable after sight is negotiated, the holder must either present or negotiate it within a reasonable time (s. 40).

'The presentment must be made by or on behalf of the holder to the drawee or to some person authorized to accept or refuse acceptance on his behalf at a reasonable hour on a business day and before the bill is overdue.' Presentment must be made to each of many drawees, not being partners or having authorized one to accept for all. 'Where authorized by agreement or usage, a presentment through the post is sufficient.' Presentment is excused by the death or bankruptcy of the drawee, or 'where, after the exercise of reasonable diligence, such presentment cannot be effected,' but 'the fact that the owner has reason to believe that the bill, on presentment, will be dishonoured, does not excuse presentment' (s. 42).

Presentment of Bill for Payment.—Unless a bill be duly presented for payment, or presentment for payment be dispensed with by the drawee being a fictitious person, or by waiver or impracticability of presentment, the drawer and indorsers are discharged.

'Where the bill is not payable on demand, presentment must be made on the day it falls due.' A bill payable on demand must be presented within a reasonable time after its issue in order to render the drawer liable, and within a reasonable time after its indorsement in order to render the indorser liable. Presentment must be made at the proper place at a reasonable hour on a business day. 'Where authorized by agreement or usage, a presentment through the post-office is sufficient' (ss. 45, 46).

Presentment of Cheque for Payment.—A cheque must be presented within a reasonable time after its issue in order to render the drawer liable, and within a reasonable time after its indorsement in order to render the indorser liable (ss. 45, 46, 73); and all the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand apply to a cheque also (s. 73). A reasonable time is, in general, if customer and banker reside in the same place, the day after the cheque is received (Alexander v. Burchfield, (1842) 7 M. & G. 1061).

Presentment of Note for Payment.—Presentment within a reasonable time of indorsement is necessary in order to render an indorser liable, but not in order to render the maker liable, unless the note be made payable at a particular place (ss. 86, 87).

Presentment in relation to Copyholds. In order to give effect to a surrender out of Court it was formerly necessary that due mention or 'presentment' of the transaction should be made at some subsequent Court.

The surrender, and every other document relating to the title, on being presented in court, had to be endorsed thus:—'Presented and enrolled at a court held for the manor of —, the — day of —,' and then undersigned by at least two of the homage. The ceremony was dispensed with by the Copyhold Act, 1841, s. 89.

Present. 'These presents' is the phrase by which reference is made in a deed to the deed itself; e.g., 'And whereas the parties to these presents have agreed, etc.'

Present Use, one which had an immediate existence, and was at once operated upon by the Statute of Uses.

President, one placed in authority over others; one at the head of others; a governor; a chairman.

President of the Council, a great officer of state; a member of the Cabinet. He attends on the sovereign, proposes business at the council-table, and reports to the sovereign the transactions there.—1 Bl. Com. 230.

Press. By the Local Authorities (Admission of the Press to Meetings) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 43), passed in consequence of the decision in Tenby Corporation v. Mason, 1908, 1 Ch. 457, the expression 'representatives of the Press' means duly accredited representatives of newspapers and duly accredited representatives of news agencies which systematically carry on the business of selling and supplying reports and information to newspapers. Though the Act gives a general right of admission, there is power by resolution temporarily to exclude the Press. See LOCAL AUTHORITY.

There is no longer any censorship of the Press in this country, and any man may write and publish whatever he pleases concerning another, subject only to this—that he must take the consequences, if a jury should deem his words defamatory (Odgers on Libel, p. 10). 'The liberty of the Press consists in printing without any previous licence, subject to the consequences of law'

(R. v. Dean of St. Asaph, (1784) 3 T. R. 431, n., per Lord Mansfield, C.J.).

The case of Stockdale v. Hansard, (1839) 9 A. & E. 1, led to the passing of the Parliamentary Papers Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 9), which Act made reports published by order of Parliament absolutely privileged, and the printing of any extract or abstract of such report, subject to qualified privilege; if found published bonâ fide and without malice, a verdict of 'not guilty' is to be entered.

See the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 60), whereby (s. 4) a court of summary jurisdiction may make inquiry as to newspaper libel being for public benefit or being true; and the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), extended the privilege to reports of proceedings in court, public meetings, etc.; and requires the leave of a judge before criminal proceedings can be brought against the Press. See also CONTEMPT OF COURT; LIBEL.

Pressing Seamen. See IMPRESSING MEN.

Pressing to Death. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

Prest, a duty in money that was to be paid by the sheriff on his account in the Exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands. Abolished by 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 4.

Prestation-money, a sum of money paid by archdeacons yearly to their bishops; also purveyance.

Prestimony, or Præstimonla, a fund or revenue appropriated by the founder for the subsistence of a priest, without being erected into any title or benefice, chapel, prebend, or priory. It is not subject to the ordinary; but of it the patron, and those who have a right from him, are the collators.—Canon Law.

Prest Money, a payment which binds those who receive it.

Presumptio juris et de jure. See next title.

Presumption, a supposition, opinion, or belief previously formed.—Wood's Inst. 599.

Presumptions have been said to be either: (1) juris et de jure (irrebuttable); or (2) juris (rebuttable); or (3) hominis vel judicis (rebuttable, of fact). (1) The presumption juris et de jure is that where law or custom establishes the truth of any point, on a presumption that cannot be overcome by contrary evidence; thus, that a child under seven is incapable of committing a felony. (2) The præsumptio juris is a presumption established in law till the contrary be proved.

as the property of goods is presumed to be in the possessor; every presumption of this kind must necessarily yield to contrary proof. (3) The presumptio hominis vel judicis is the conviction arising from the circumstances of any particular case. See Best on Evidence.

Presumption of Life or Death. Where a person is once shown to have been living, the law will in general presume that he is still alive, unless after a lapse of time considerably exceeding the ordinary duration of human life; but if there be evidence of his continued unexplained absence from home and of the non-receipt of intelligence concerning him for a period of seven years, the presumption of life ceases and he is presumed to be dead at the end of the seven years. But the law raises no presumption as to the time of his death. And, therefore, if any one has to establish the precise time during those seven years at which such person died, he must do so by evidence; see Doe v. Nepean, (1833) 5 B. & Ad. 86; Nepean v. Doe, (1837) 2 M. & W. 894; Re Rhodes, (1887) 36 Ch. D. 586. See also 18 & 19 Car. 2, c. 11, by which the person on whose life a lease for lives depends is accounted dead if not proved alive after an absence of seven years, and the lessee may be ejected, with the proviso, however, that if he should turn out to be alive the lessee may be reinstated; and see, as to Scotland, the Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Act, 1891, which fixes a like period of limitation generally with an absolute bar after thirteen years.

Presumption of Survivorship. Where two or more persons perish by the same calamity, the Civil Law presumes that the stronger survived. The common law of England recognized no such presumption, but by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 184, in all questions affecting title to property upon deaths in similar circumstances after 1925, the younger is presumed to have survived, subject to any order of the Court. See COMMORIENTES.

Presumptive Heir. one who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be his heir: but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born.

Presumptive Title. A barely presumptive title, which is of the very lowest order, arises out of the mere occupation or simple possession of property (jus possessionis, Lat.), without any apparent right, or any pretence of right, to hold and continue such possession. This may happen when one man disseises another; or where after the death of the ancestor, and before the entry of the heir, a stranger abates and holds out the heir. The law assumes that the actual occupant of land has the fee-simple in it, unless there be evidence rebutting such presumption, or his possession be properly explained and shown to be consonant with the right of the true proprietor of the reversionary fee. Such a presumption, in the absence of any satisfactory proof to the contrary, will sustain an action for a trespass by a wrongdoer, and will indeed be strengthened, by lapse of time, into a title complete and indefeasible.

This assumption is based on the well-known feudal maxim that seisin must be the basis or standpoint in the deduction of every title except in the case of descent.

Prêt a usage [Fr.], loan for use.

Pretensed Right: where one is in possession of land, and another, who is out of possession, claims and sues for it; here the pretended right is said to be in him who so claims and sues.—Mod. Cas. 302.

By s. 2 of 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, no one might sell or purchase any title to land, unless the vendor had received the profits, or been in possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder, for one whole year, on pain that both purchaser and vendor should each forfeit the value of such land to the King and the prosecutor; but a right of entry may be sold by virtue of the Real Property Act, 1845, s. 6, repealed by, and see now, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 4 (2), and to recover under s. 2 of 32 Hen. 8, c. 9 (which is now repealed by s. 11 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (now repealed)), it had to be shown that the buyer knew the title to be bad (Kennedy v. Lyell, (1885) 15 Q. B. D. 491).

Preterition, the entire omission of a child's name in the father's will, which rendered it null—exheredation being allowed, but not preterition.—Civ. Law, Colquhoun, s. 1304.

Pretium affectionis, an imaginary value put on a thing by the fancy of the owner in his affection for it.—Bell's Dict.

Pretium sepulchri, mortuary, which see.

Pretium succedit in loco rei. 2 Buls. 321. —(The price succeeds in the place of the thing.)

Prevarication, a collusion between an informer and a defendant, in order to a feigned prosecution. Also, any secret abuse committed in a public office or private commission; also, the wilful concealment or misrepresentation of truth, by giving evasive or equivocating evidence.

Prevention [fr. prævenio, Lat.], the right which a superior person or officer has to lay hold of, claim, or transact, an affair prior to an inferior one, to whom otherwise it more immediately belongs.—Canon Law Term.

Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112). This Act, which was amended by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 55), and which repeals and replaces the Habitual Criminals Act, 1869, provides for the keeping of a register of criminals, and the photographing of all persons convicted of crime with a view to their identification, and for subjecting to the supervision of the police persons who have been twice convicted of crime, and for the amendment of the law with regard to licences under the Penal Servitude Acts. See also PREVENTIVE DETENTION; BORSTAL INSTITUTION; and PENAL SERVITUDE.

Preventive Detention. By the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 59), s. 10, as amended by the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), a person after three previous convictions after attaining sixteen years of age, can with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions (R. v. Waller, 1910, 1 K. B. 364) in certain cases be charged (R. v. Smith, 1910, 1 K. B. 17) with being an habitual criminal, and if the charge is established, he can, in addition to a punishment of penal servitude, receive a further sentence of not less than five years or more than ten years, called a sentence of preventive detention. During such detention the Secretary of State has power to let the person out on licence, if he is satisfied that there is a reasonable probability that he will abstain from crime and lead a useful and industrious life, or that he is no longer capable of engaging in crime. Unless the offender admits he is an habitual criminal the jury must determine whether he is or not and for this purpose can be sworn as on a trial for a misdemeanour (R. v. Turner, 1910, 1 K. B. 346). The jury is not bound to find that an offender is an habitual criminal because he has been previously so found (R. v. Norman, 40 T. L. R. 693).

Preventive Service, the Coastguard. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 83.

Previous Conviction. The 11th section of the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), reciting that 'it is expedient to provide for the more exemplary punishment of offenders who commit felony after a previous conviction for felony,' empowered a court to inflict transportation for life and whipping for such subsequent conviction. Penal servitude has since been substituted for transportation, and the whipping is abolished. The Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), by s. 37, authorizes the infliction of penal servitude up to ten years on those committing simple larceny after having been previously convicted of felony and up to seven years if previously convicted of an indictable misdemeanour punishable under the Act or twice summarily convicted of certain other offences; males under sixteen are liable to whipping in addition.

Frequently statutes (see, e.g., Licensing Act, 1872, s. 12, as to drunkenness; Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 13; Truck Act, 1831, s. 9) in imposing penalties, increase them for second or subsequent offences.

Mentioning to Jury.—A previous conviction must in general not be mentioned to the jury on the trial of a subsequent offence until after conviction of it, unless (see CRIMINAL EVIDENCE ACT) the prisoner gives evidence of good character, in which case, or after conviction of the subsequent offence, it may be proved by production of documentary proof of the previous conviction and actual proof of the identity of the prisoner. See Previous Convictions Act, 1836. As to evidence of conviction within preceding five years of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty when prisoner is charged with receiving stolen goods, see Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, s. 19.

A person convicted on indictment of any crime after having been previously convicted of any crime may be subjected, by the Court having cognizance of the crime, to police supervision for seven years or less, under s. 8 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871. See Faulkner v. R., 1905, 2 K. B. 76.

Multiplicatâ transgressione crescat poenæ inflictio.—2 Inst. 479. And see PROBATION and PREVENTIVE DETENTION.

Prices Current, a list or enumeration of various articles of merchandise, with their prices, the duties (if any) payable thereon, when imported or exported, with the drawbacks occasionally allowed upon their exportation, etc.

Prickling for Sheriffs. See SHERIFFS.

Prize-gavel, a rent or tribute.—Tayl. Hist. Gavelk. 112.

Priest, a person in Holy Orders either in the Church of England or Rome. A person under twenty-four years of age cannot be ordained a priest.—44 Geo. 3, c. 43. See CLERGY.

Primæ, or Primariæ Preces. See PRECES PRIMARIÆ.

Primæ impressionis. A case prima impressionis (of the first impression) is a case of a new kind, to which no established principle of law directly applies, and which must be decided entirely by reason as distinguished from authority. See COMMON LAW, and the remarks of Parke, B., in Mirehouse v. Rennell, (1832) 8 Bing. at p. 515.

Primâ facie Evidence, that which, not being inconsistent with the falsity of the hypothesis, nevertheless raises such a degree of probability in its favour that it must prevail if it be credited by the jury, unless it be rebutted, or the contrary proved; conclusive evidence, on the other hand, is that which excludes, or at least tends to exclude, the possibility of the truth of any other hypothesis than the one attempted to be established.

Prima tonsura (the first crop).

Primage, a certain allowance paid by the shipper or consignor of goods to the master of a vessel for loading them. See HARMONEY. The amount varies according to the custom of the place. See Best v. Saunders, M. & M. 208; Charleton v. Cotesworth, R. & M. 175; and Caughney v. Gordon & Co., (1878) 3 C. P. D. 419.

Primaria Ecclesia, the mother church.—1 Steph. Com.

Primary Conveyances, original conveyances, sometimes opposed to secondary conveyances, such as release, surrender, etc., and see DERIVATIVE DEED, are:—

(1) Feoffments. (2) Grants. (3) Gifts. (4) Leases. (5) Exchanges. (6) Partitions. Consult 1 Steph. Com.

Primary Evidence, the best evidence as distinguished from secondary evidence.

Primate, a chief ecclesiastic; part of the style and title of an archbishop; thus the Archbishop of Canterbury is styled Primate of All England; the Archbishop of York is Primate of England.

Prime Minister. The statesman who in response to a summons from the King accepts the commission to form a Ministry; the Premier. The expression is of comparatively recent origin, dating from about the end of the eighteenth century. By a Royal warrant of December, 1905, he takes precedence directly after the Archbishop of York. See Lord Morley's Walpole, ch. vii., for an account of the position of the Prime Minister, and Ministers of the Crown Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 38).

Primer Election, first choice.

Primer Fine. On suing out the writ or præcipe, called a writ of covenant, there was due to the Crown, by ancient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for; that was one-tenth of the annual value.—1 Steph. Com.

Primer Seisin, a feudal burthen, only incident to the King's tenants in capite, and not to those who held of inferior or mesne lords. It was a right which the King had, when any of his tenants in capite died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir (provided he were of full age) one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession; and half a year's profits, if they were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. It was incident to socage-tenants in capite, as well as those who held by knight-service. It was abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Primicerius, the first of any degree of men.—Dugd. Mon. i. 838.

Primitiæ, the first fruits which were presented to the gods by the ancients; also, the profits of a living during the first year after avoidance, formerly taken by the Crown.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 199; ii. 532.

Primo Beneficio, a writ directing a grant of the first benefice in the sovereign's gift.

Primo excutienda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstruatur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis. Co. Litt. 68.—(The full meaning of a word should be ascertained at the outset, in order that the sense may not be lost by defect of expression, and that the law be not without reasons.)

Primogeniture, seniority, eldership, state of being first-born.

The right of primogeniture obtaining in the United Kingdom was that right whereby the eldest son succeeded to all the real estate of an intestate parent. An analogous right of succession is frequently given by will, and even more frequently given and preserved by marriage or other settlement. The right was not acknowledged by the Romans; sons and daughters all shared equally the property of their parents; and in continental countries exists in a modified form only, if at all. See Eyre Lloyd's 'Rights of Primogeniture and Succession.' In England the customs of gavelkind and Borough-English were almost the only exceptions to this Norman rule of inheritance.

The right, which was a corner-stone of the social structure in England, has been swept away by the land legislation of 1925. See DESCENT. Hereditary dignities and titles of honour are not affected. Cf. Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 201 (2).

Primum decretum, a provisional decree.

Prince [fr. princeps, Lat.], a sovereign; a chief ruler of either sex. 'Queen Elizabeth, a prince admirable above her sex for her princely virtues.'—Camden.

Prince of Wales, the eldest son of the reigning sovereign, if so created. He is the heir-apparent to the Crown; he is created Earl of Chester, and is Duke of Cornwall by inheritance (during the life of the sovereign), without any new creation. See Letters of Queen Victoria, Sir James Graham to Her Majesty, 6th Dec. 1841. As to rights of the heir-apparent to submarine mines and minerals in Cornwall, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 109; as to the obligation of his creditors to claim payment of debts within a short period of their being incurred on pain of the debts being barred, see 35 Geo. 3, c. 125.

Prince of Wales Island, Singapore and Malacca. Administered together as a British Colony. See Straits Settlements Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 115).

Princes of the Royal Blood, the younger sons and daughters of the sovereign and other branches of the royal family who are not in the immediate line of succession; see Civil List Acts.

Princess Royal. The title conferred by the sovereign on his eldest daughter. It would seem that the title is not held by more than one person at the same time. The present Princess Royal is Princess Mary, Countess of Harewood, daughter of George V.

Principal, a head, a chief; also, a capital sum of money placed out at interest; also, an heirloom, mortuary, or corse-present.

Principal and Accessory (or Accessory).

(1) Principals in offences are of two degrees: (a) of the first degree, i.e., the actual perpetrators of the crime; (b) of the second degree, i.e., those who are present, aiding and abetting the act to be done.

Accessories are not the chief actors in the offence, nor present at its performance, but are in some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact is committed. See ACCESSORY.

Principal and Agent, he who being sui juris, and competent to do any act for his own benefit on his own account, employs another person to do it, is called the principal constituent, or employer, and he who is thus employed is called the agent, attorney, proxy, or delegate of the principal, constituent or employer. The relation thus created between the parties is termed an agency. The power thus delegated is called in law an authority. And the act, when performed, is often designated as an act of agency or procurement.—Story on Agency, 3. See AGENT; POWER OF ATTORNEY; VICARIOUS

RESPONSIBILITY; and consult Bowstead on Agency or Wright on Principal and Agent.

Principal and Surety. See GUARANTY.

Principal Challenge, a species of challenge to the array made on account of partiality or some default in the sheriff or his under-officer who arrayed the panel. See CHALLENGE.

Print Works. Any premises in which any persons are employed to print figures, patterns, or designs upon any cotton, linen, woollen, worsted, or silken yarn, or upon any woven or felted fabric not being paper: placed first on the list of 'non-textile factories,' and regulated as such by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), 'letter-press print works' being in the same list (Sched. vi.) described separately as 'any premises in which the process of letter-press printing is carried on.'

Printers. Every person who shall print anything which is meant to be published or dispersed, and shall not print upon the front or the first or last leaf, in legible characters, his name and usual place of abode or business, or who shall take any part in publishing or dispersing any printed matter without such name and address, shall forfeit for each copy a sum not more than five pounds (2 & 3 Vict. c. 12, s. 2); and see the Newspapers Printers and Reading Rooms Repeal Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 24), and enactments, including 1 & 2 Vict. c. 12, s. 2, contained in the second schedule thereto, as being excepted from the repeals effected thereby.

For compelling discovery of the printer of a newspaper, see Dixon v. Enoch, (1872) L. R. 13 Eq. 394.

Prior, chief of a convent, next in dignity to an abbot.

Priority, an antiquity of tenure in comparison with another less ancient; also that which is before another in order of time.

As to priority among creditors, see Administration of Estates Act, 1869, reproduced by ss. 32 to 34, Administration of Estates Act, 1925, and the First Sched., which provides that in the administration of the estate of any person who shall die on or after 1st January, 1870, no debt or liability of such person shall be entitled to any priority or preference by reason merely that the same is secured by or arises under a bond, deed, or other instrument under seal, or is otherwise made or constituted a specialty debt.

The priority in legal and equitable assignments of equitable choses in action are determined according to the date of receipt of notice by the persons who are for the time being owners of the legal interest in the property assigned. Before 1926 the notice might be verbal; after 1926 it must, for the purposes of establishing priority among competing claims, be in writing (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 137 : and see DEARLE v. HALL).

Subject to the Land Charges Act, 1925, the assignee of an equitable interest in land having notice will himself be bound to give effect to prior equitable claims of which he has notice, whether verbal or written, or actual or constructive (Torkington v. Magee, 1902, 2 K. B. 427). The notice does not, under the rule in Dearle v. Hall, affect the validity of the assignment (Ward v. Duncombe, 1893, A. C. 369); it merely establishes priority. Under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 137, important classes of property were swept into this rule, viz., all equitable interests in land (i.e., all estates for less than a fee simple absolute in possession or a term of years absolute and corresponding incorporeal hereditaments (see s. 1 of the Act)), as well as all equitable interests in capital money, and securities representing capital money. Before 1926 the priorities in regard to these were determined by the date and time of creation of the equitable interest and subject to the formalities required for the transfer. Special rules as to the persons, if any, to whom notice must be given and, in their absence, for the indorsement of a memorandum on the trust instrument are provided by the section (see DEARLE v. HALL).

In regard to mortgages : before 1926, puisne mortgagees to whom the equity of redemption was conveyed in succession obtained priority by the order in date of their mortgages, subject to the application of the doctrine of tacking or to equitable reasons (if any) for the postponement of their mortgages :—

After 1926 subsisting and future mortgages of the equity of redemption of a legal estate in its new and statutory meaning, i.e., a fee simple or a term of years absolute, but not mortgages of life interests or of an undivided share or of an estate in remainder or reversion were transformed into legal mortgages. Consequently the former rules of equity, based on the rule of equity 'qui prior in tempore potior est in jure' ceased to apply. Priority among all mortgages, both legal and equitable, of a legal estate is now ascertained, if the mortgages were created or transferred after 1925 :—

(a) By possession of the documents of title subject, presumably, to notice, actual or constructive, of equities affecting the security.

(b) By date of registration at the Red Lion Square office under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1), Class C., irrespectively of notice, except absence of documents of title (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 97). If the mortgage is by trustees for sale, or a tenant for life as estate owner, or personal representatives or other persons referred to in the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 2, and is made in accordance with the statutory requirements, the mortgagees as purchasers, whether registered or not, will not be affected by equities which can be overreached under that section, or otherwise under the legislation of 1925.

(c) Registered land, according to date of registration (Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 29), and see REGISTRATION OF TITLE.

The priorities (b) and (c), above mentioned, are subject to the provisions of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1926, s. 4, and the Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 144, respectively, relating to PRIORITY NOTICES.

In regard to property locally situate in Middlesex and Yorkshire, before 1926 priorities in Yorkshire were effected by registration; after 1884, in the Yorkshire Registries but not in Middlesex, under the Middlesex Registry Act, 1708 (q.v.), and it does not seem clear that the law has been altered by s. 97 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, in regard to memorials registered in the Middlesex Registry until 1936.

Priorities in respect of equitable charges by a tenant for life or statutory owner for death duties and other estate liabilities discharged by him, and subject to these equitable charges which are not protected by possession of the documents of title or which do not affect interests under a trust for sale or settlement, are, if created or conveyed after 1925, determined by date of their registration under Class C., Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10.

In regard to equitable mortgages and other charges upon land, or any interest therein created before 1926, which have not been transferred or conveyed after 1925, the rule qui prior est tempore potior in jure prevails if equities are equal, and a purchaser is still affected with notice of these and cannot gain priority by registration, but registration, if available (as in the case of any mortgage), amounts to notice. See also PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS; ASSETS.

Priority Caution. See CAUTION. This form of caution is not available at the Land Registry except for the protection of persons entitled to 'minor interests' (see LAND REGISTRATION), and does not affect a purchaser for value. Consult Fortescue-Brickdale and Stewart-Wallace, Land Registration Act, 1925.

Priority Notice. A form of notice providing temporary protection for an application about to be made for first registration of land at the Land Registry (see Land Registration Rules, 1925); also a notice protecting the priority of an intended dealing in registered land; the notice must be accompanied by the land certificate or charge certificate, and is usually effective for fourteen days after lodgment. See r. 88, Land Registration Rules, 1925, and Fortescue-Brickdale and Stewart-Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925.

Priority Notice of charge under Land Charges Act, 1925. By the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, s. 4, persons intending to register a charge, instrument or matter under the Land Charges Act, 1925, may give notice at the Land Charges Department of the Land Registry at least two days before the registration, and the effect of the notice is to relate the date of registration of the charge, instrument or matter as provided by s. 4 if the application to register is presented within fourteen days after the date of entry of notice, and refers to the notice: thus protecting the person intending to register from incumbrances created subsequently to the notice and before application to register.

Prisage or Butlerage, a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark laden with wine, two tuns of wine, at his own price. Abolished by 51 Geo. 3, c. 15. Also, that share, usually a tenth part, which belongs to the sovereign or admiral out of such merchandises as are taken at sea, by way of lawful prize.—2 Steph. Com. and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 375.

Priso, a prisoner taken in war.

Prison, a place of confinement for the safe custody of persons; a gaol.—3 Steph. Com.

The erection, maintenance and regulation of prisons are provided for by several Acts of Parliament, for which see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Prison.' And for Scotland see the Prisons (Scotland) Acts, 1860 to 1909.

The Prison Act, 1877, transferred the management of prisons from counties and boroughs to the government, and put an end to the obligation theretofore existing on the part of the counties and boroughs to maintain prisons of their own, and the Prison Act, 1898, c. 41 (for which and for extracts from the Prison Rules, 1899, under it, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Prison'), has constituted the Prison Commissioners Directors of Convict Prisons, established three divisions of prisoners, not sentenced to penal servitude or hard labour, and restricted the authorization of corporal punishment. Both these Acts have been amended in certain respects by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, which see.

Prisonam frangentibus, Statute de, 1 Edw. 2, st. 2 (in the Revised Statutes, 23 Edw. 1), a still unrepealed statute, whereby it is felony for a felon to break prison, but misdemeanour only for a misdemeanant to do so.—1 Hale, P. C. 612.

Prisoner, one who is being tried for felony: one who is confined in a prison. As to legal aid for a prisoner, see POOR, and as to the forcible feeding of a prisoner, see Leigh v. Gladstone, (1909) 26 T. L. R. 139. As to the temporary discharge of prisoners on account of the condition of their health, see Prisoners (Temporary Discharge for Ill-health) Act, 1913.

Private Acts of Parliament, Acts operating upon particular persons and private concerns, as Naturalization Acts, Divorce Acts, and Change of Name Acts. They are generally not printed, but copies of them can be obtained at the Copyists' Office, House of Lords, on payment of fees. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Private Bill Office, an office of parliament where the business of obtaining private Acts of Parliament is conducted.

Private Chapels Act, 1871, by which the bishop may license a clergyman to serve any college, school, hospital, etc., chapel, whether consecrated or unconsecrated, but not to solemnize marriages therein.

Private Company. A 'private company' is defined by s. 26 of the Companies Act, 1929, as follows:—

26.—(1) For the purposes of this Act the expression 'private company' means a company which by its articles—

- (a) restricts the right to transfer its shares; and
- (b) limits the number of its members to 50, not including persons who are in the employment of the company and persons who, having been formerly in the employment of the company, were, while in that employment and have continued after the determination of such employment to be, members of the company; and
- (c) prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company.

(2) Where two or more persons hold one or more shares in a company jointly they shall, for the purposes of this section, be treated as a single member.

Sect. 27, ibid., provides that if a company alters its articles so that the provisions of s. 26 for the constitution of a private company are not included, the company ceases upon such alteration to be a private company and must deliver to the registrar of companies a prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus (see those titles) within fourteen days, and if the company makes default in complying with those provisions, although contained in its articles, the same section (27) withdraws the privileges and exemptions of private companies to be found in, e.g. s. 40 (statement in lieu of prospectus and allotment of shares), s. 94 (commencement of business), s. 139 (number of directors), or s. 113 (statutory meeting and report), which do not apply to private companies.

Privateers. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Privation [an abbreviation, by aphæresis, of the word deprivation], a taking away or withdrawing.—Co. Litt. 239.

Privement ensient, pregnancy in its earlier stages.—Wood's Inst. 662.

Privies, those who are partakers or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another. They have been said to be of six kinds :—

(1) Privies in blood, such as the heir to his ancestor, or between coparceners.

(2) Privies in representation, as executors or administrators to their deceased testator or intestate.

(3) Privies in estate, as grantor and grantee, lessor and lessee, assignor and assignee, etc.

(4) Privities, in respect of contract, are personal privities, and extend only to the persons of the lessor and lessee, or the parties to the contract or assignees upon a fresh contract or novation with the assignee.

(5) Privies, in respect of estate and contract together, as where the lessee assigns his interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues, the lessor not having accepted the assignee in substitution.

(6) Privies in law, as the lord by escheat, a tenant by the courtesy, or in dower, the incumbent of a benefice, a husband suing or defending in right of his wife, etc. See Jac. Law Dict. ; Co. Litt. 271 a.

Privilege, an exceptional right or advantage ; an exemption from some duty, burthen, or attendance, to which certain persons are entitled, from a supposition of law, that the stations they fill or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their care ; and that, therefore, without this indulgence, it would be impracticable to execute such offices so advantageously as the public good requires.

The separate privileges of either House of Parliament are extensive, but they are at the same time uncertain and indefinite. Amongst those privileges are, the power of committing persons to prison ; the power of publishing matters which, if not issuing from such high authority, might become the subject of proceedings in a court of law ; the power of directing the Attorney-General to prosecute persons accused of offences against the law or affecting the privilege of parliament ; and finally, a power vested in each House, respectively of doing anything not directly contravening an Act of Parliament which may be necessary for the vindication or protection of itself in the exercise of its own constitutional functions. In the daily proceedings of parliament questions of privilege take precedence of all other business.

The privileges of individual members of parliament are, freedom of speech and person, including freedom from arrest and seizures, under process from the courts of justice ; this, however, does not extend to indictable offences, to actual contempts of the courts of justice, or to proceedings in bankruptcy. Members of parliament are exempt from serving the office of sheriff, from obeying subpoenas, and serving on juries. 'Privilege of parliament' continues to peers at all times, and to commoners for a 'convenient' time after prorogation and dissolution. Peers are exempt from attending courts-leet or the posse comitatus ; when arraigned for any criminal offence it must be before their peers, who return a verdict, not upon oath, but upon honour ; they have the privilege of sitting covered in courts of justice.

Barristers are privileged from arrest, eundo, morando et redeundo, going to, coming from, and abiding in court—this includes judge's chambers ; so clergymen as to divine service. See also the following titles and DISTRESS ; LIBEL.

Privilege, Writ of, a process to enforce or maintain a privilege.

Privileged Communication, a communication which a witness cannot be compelled to divulge, such as that which takes place between husband and wife (see the Evidence Amendment Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 83), s. 3, and Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1), between a client and his legal adviser, and which cannot be disclosed without the client's consent ; secrets of State, etc. See also CONFESSION. Also a communication which cannot be made the ground of an action for defamation, either (a) absolutely, or (b) without a malicious motive, such as that which is made truthfully and bonâ fide by a master respecting the character of a servant to a person intending to employ him. Incidental publication will not affect the privilege: Edmondson v. Birch, 1907, 1 K. B. 371. Consult Odgers on Libel. See LIBEL.

Privileged Copyholds, customary copyholds, which see.

Privileged Debts, debts which an executor may pay in preference to all others, such as funeral expenses, etc. And see PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS.

Privilegia, or Laws ex post facto, laws which are enacted after an act is committed declaring it for the first time to have been a crime, and inflicting a punishment upon the person who has committed it. Compare Cicero Pro Domo, 17.

Privilegium clericale, the benefit of clergy, which is abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 23. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

Privilegium, property propter, a qualified property in animals ferâ nature, i.e., a privilege of hunting, taking, and killing them, in exclusion of others.—2 Bl. Com. 394; 2 Steph. Com.

Privilegium est beneficium personale, et extinguitur cum personâ. 3 Buls. 8.—(A privilege is a personal benefit, and dies with the person.)

Privilegium est quasi privata lex. 2 Buls. 189.—(Privilege is, as it were, a private law.)

Privity, participation in interest or knowledge. See PRIVIES.

Privy [fr. privé, Fr.], having a participation in some Act, so as to be bound thereby, see the word in this sense in the statutory implied covenant in Part vi. of the Second Sched. of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and Woodhouse v. Jenkins, (1832) 9 Bing. 441. Also a participation in interest or knowledge. See PRIVIES. Also sanitary accommodation. The Public Health Acts (see PUBLIC HEALTH) aim at securing proper sanitary accommodation for every house. See Tracey v. Pretty, 1901, 1 K. B. 444.

Privy Council, a great Council of State held by the sovereign with his councillors, to concert matters for the public service, and for the honour and safety of the realm.

The sovereign nominates privy councillors, and no patent or grant is necessary. The number of the Council is indefinite, and is dependent upon the royal will. It is summoned on a warning of forty-four hours, and never held without the presence of a Secretary of State; the junior delivers his opinion first, and the sovereign, if present, last; it is dissolved six months after the demise of the Crown, unless sooner determined by the successor.

Privy councillors, on taking the necessary oaths, become immediately privy councillors, with the title of 'Right Honourable,' during the life of the sovereign who chooses them, but subject to removal at the royal discretion, See R. v. Speyer, 1916, 1 K. B. 595.

Their duties are: (1) To advise the sovereign according to the best of their cunning and discretion. (2) To advise for the sovereign's honour and good of the public; without partiality through affection, love, need, doubt, or dread. (3) To keep the sovereign's counsel secret. (4) To avoid corruption. (5) To help and strengthen the execution of what shall be resolved. (6) To withstand all persons who would attempt the contrary. (7) To observe, keep, and do all that a true and good counsellor ought to do to his sovereign.—2 Steph. Com. See also JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.

Privy Purse, the income set apart for the sovereign's personal use. See CIVIL LIST.

Privy Seal and Privy Signet. The Privy Seal (privatum sigillum) is a seal of the sovereign under which charters, pardons, etc., signed by the sovereign, pass before they come to the Great Seal, and also used for some documents of less consequence which do not pass the Great Seal at all, such as discharges of recognizances, debts, etc. The Privy Signet is one of the sovereign's seals, used in sealing his private letters, and all such grants as pass his hand by bill signed, which seal is always in the custody of the King's secretaries. There were formerly four clerks of the Signet Office, but by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 82, s. 3, the offices of the clerks of the signet and of the privy seal are abolished. The practice as to the passing of letters under these seals was altered and simplified by the same statute.

Privy Tithes, small tithes.

Prize Commission. See ADMIRALTY COURT.

Prize Court. This is an international tribunal, existing only by virtue of a special commission under the Great Seal, during war or until the litigations incident to war have been brought to a conclusion. It is frequently confounded with the Court of Admiralty, in consequence, perhaps, of the same judge having usually presided in both courts; but this is a mistake, for the whole system of litigation and jurisprudence in the prize court, though exceedingly important, is peculiar to itself, and is governed by rules not applying to the Instance Court of the Admiralty (now part of the High Court), which is a mere civil tribunal.

The old Court of Admiralty had in fact from very ancient times two separate and distinct jurisdictions—the Instance Jurisdiction and the Prize Jurisdiction, though the real origin of the latter is wrapped in obscurity. When the High Court of Admiralty became merged in the High Court of Justice, Jud. Act, 1925, s. 23, replacing the Jud. Act, 1891, s. 4, provided that the High Court should be a Prize Court within the meaning of the Naval Prize Acts, 1864 to 1916, as amended by any subsequent enactment, and should have all such jurisdiction on the high seas and throughout His Majesty's dominions and in every place where His Majesty has jurisdiction as under any Act relating to naval prize or otherwise the High Court of Admiralty possessed when acting as a Prize Court. But see ss. 1, 6, and 10 of the Statute of Westminster, 1931. Subject to rules of court all jurisdiction as a Prize Court is assigned to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (3)). The procedure and practice in the Prize Court are regulated by the Prize Court Rules, 1914, made under Prize Court (Procedure) Act, 1914, which repealed those sections of the Naval Prize Act, 1864, which dealt with the practice and procedure of Prize Courts; and see the Naval Prize (Procedure) Act, 1916. The Act of 1914 excepted ships of war. See also the Prize Courts Acts, 1894 and 1915, and as to Vice-Admiralty Courts, in the Colonies, the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890.

The law administered in the Prize Court is 'the course of Admiralty and the law of nations,' the questions arising being those relating to captures, prize, and booty (being prize on shore). There is an appeal from this court to the Privy Council.

It is sometimes supposed that if, when a prize has been captured, she is condemned, the prize belongs to the captors, but this is not quite accurate. It is true that under the old practice the captors applied for a condemnation of the ship, but if a decree of condemnation was made it decreed a good and lawful prize to the Crown, and it was by a subsequent Act of the Royal Judgment and Discretion that the proceeds of the prize might be distributed among the captors. At the present day the conditions of naval warfare have become so altered that though the old principle that if a prize is taken and condemned it is condemned to the Crown is still maintained, the distribution of the proceeds exclusively among the actual captors has been modified and some share of the proceeds will go to the men who, though rendering services of incalculable value, have had no opportunity of actually capturing enemy ships.

See, generally, the speech of Sir John Simon, A.-G., at the first sitting of the Prize Court on September 4, 1914, Times, 5th September, 1914; Chile, 1914, P. 212; Berlin, ib. 265; Kim, 1915, P. 215; Roumanian, 1916, A. C. 124.

Prize of War. See BOOTY OF WAR and PRIZE COURT.

Prizefighting. Public prizefighting is an affray and an indictable misdemeanour on the part of both combatants and backers (see Reg. v. Coney, (1882) 8 Q. B. D. 534, in which it was held that the mere presence of persons at a prizefight was not enough to sustain a conviction for assault), and railway companies providing trains for any prizefights are liable to heavy penalties under the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, s. 21. If death ensue, the surviving combatant is guilty of manslaughter.

Pro [for, or in respect of], in the grant of an annuity, pro consilio, showing the cause of a grant, amounts to a condition; but in a feoffment or lease for life, etc., it is the consideration, and does not amount to a condition; for the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory.—Plowd. 412.

Proamita, a great paternal aunt, the sister of one's grandfather.

Proamita magna, a great great-aunt.

Proavia, a great-grandmother.

Proavunculus, a great-uncle.

Proavus, a great-grandfather.

Probandi necessitas incumbit illi qui agit.—(The necessity of proving lies upon him who commences proceedings.)

Probate, official proof of a will. This is obtained by the executor in the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice, and is either in common form, where the will is undisputed and quite regular, or per testes, in solemn form of law, where it is disputed or irregular. When the will is proved, the original is deposited in the registry of the Court, a copy being delivered to the executor with a certificate of its having been made out under seal of the Court, all which together is usually styled the probate. Consult Tristram and Coote, Prob. Pr., 17th ed.

Probate, Court of, a tribunal established by the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to which the former jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in testamentary matters was transferred. By Jud. Act, 1873, it was merged in the Supreme Court of Judicature, q.v. See WILLS.

Probate Duty, a tax (now merged in estate duty) on the gross value of the personal property of the deceased testator. For amount from 1815 to 1880, see schedule to the Stamp Act, 1815 (55 Geo. 3), s. 184. In 1880 a new scale of duties was imposed by 43 Vict. c. 14, s. 9, and in 1881 a further increased scale by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12). By 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 37, a penalty of 100l. and 10 per cent. additional duty is payable by a person acting as executor and not obtaining probate within six months.

The Finance Act, 1894, substitutes an estate duty, to which both real property and personal property are liable, for probate duty. See ESTATE DUTY.

Probation. (1) Proof generally. (2) Suspension of a final appointment to an office until a person temporarily appointed (who is called a 'probationer') has by his conduct proved himself to be fit to fill it. (3) Treatment of an offender under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 17).

By s. 1 of this Act where any person is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction and the court thinks that the charge is proved, but is of opinion that, having regard to the character, antecedents, age, health, or mental condition of the person charged, or to the trivial nature of the offence, or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is inexpedient to inflict any real punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may make an order either (1) dismissing the charge; or (2) discharging the offender conditionally.

Where any person has been convicted of any offence punishable with imprisonment, and the court is of opinion that, having regard to the like circumstances, it is inexpedient to inflict any real punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may discharge him conditionally.

The court may, in addition to any such order, order the offender to pay damages and costs, and if the offender is under the age of sixteen years, and the parent or guardian of the offender has condoned to the commission of the offence, the court may order payment of such damages and costs by such parent or guardian. See Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 86.

The Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86) provides for the appointment of probation officers for every probation area. A recognizance under this Act cannot contain a condition to abstain from intoxicating liquor (R. v. Davies, 1909, 1 K. B. 892). The 1907 Act has been amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, ss. 7-9, and the Criminal Justice Acts, 1925 and 1926.

Probator, an examiner; an accuser or approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another. See 4 Steph. Com.

Probatory Term, a term for taking testimony.

Probatum est (it is tried or proved).

Probi et legales homines [Lat.] (good and lawful men).

Proc., short for Procuration, which see.

Procedendo, a writ which issued out of the Common Law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, when judges of any subordinate court delayed the parties, for that they would not give judgment either on the one side or on the other, when they ought so to do. In such a case, a writ of procedendo ad iudicium was awarded, commanding the inferior court in the King's name to proceed to judgment, but without specifying any particular judgment; for that, if erroneous, might be set aside by proceedings in error, or by writ of false judgment; and upon further neglect or refusal, the judges of the inferior court might be punished for their contempt by writ of attachment, returnable in the courts at Westminster.—3 Bl. Com. 109. It also lay where an action had been removed from an inferior to a superior court by habeas corpus, certiorari, or any like writ, and it appeared to the superior court that it was removed on insufficient grounds. A suit once so remanded could not afterwards be removed before judgment in any court whatever.—21 Jac. 1, c. 23. Procedendo still lies, though disused.

Procedendo on Aid Prayer. If one pray in aid of the Crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the sovereign in Chancery, and the justices in the Common Pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loqueld come to them. So also on a personal action.—New N. B. 154.

Procedure, the mode in which the successive steps in litigation are taken. The procedure of the Common Law courts was regulated by the C. L. P. Acts of 1852, 1854, and 1860; as to which see Day's C. L. P. Acts. As to the procedure in equity, consult Daniell's Chancery Practice, and Morgan's Chancery Acts and Orders. The procedure in actions in the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal is now governed under the Judicature Act, 1925, for the most part by the Rules of the Supreme Court, based on the rules in the schedule to the Judicature Act, 1875; but where no other provision is made by the Acts or those rules, the former procedure remains in force. See PRACTICE.

Proceeds, the sum, amount, or value of land, investments, or goods, etc., sold, or converted into money.

Proceres, chief magistrates. Dom Proc., Domus Procerum; House of Lords.

Procès verbal [Fr.], an authentic minute of an official act, or statement of facts.

Process. It is largely taken for all the proceedings in any action or prosecution, real or personal, civil or criminal, from the beginning to the end; strictly, the summons by which one is cited into a court, because it is the beginning or principal part thereof, by which the rest is directed.—Britt. 138.

At Common Law the three superior Courts at Westminster, in personal actions, differed greatly, before the Uniformity of Process Act, 1832, in their modes of process, and even the same court admitted a considerable variety of methods, according to the circumstances of the case. The ordinary process in Chancery suits was service of a copy of the bill or claim, with an endorsed citation, which required the defendant to appear on a certain day.

The process now for the commencement of all actions is the same in all the Divisions of the High Court of Justice, and is called a writ of summons. See SUMMONS.

Processum continuando, a writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer.—Reg. Brev. 128.

Prochein amy [proximus amicus, Lat.], the next friend or next of kin to a child in his nonage, who in that respect is allowed to deal for the infant in the management of his affairs; as to be his guardian if he hold land in socage, and in the redress of any wrong done to him. Consult Jac. Law Dict. See NEXT FRIEND.

Prochein avoidance, a power to appoint a minister to a church when it shall next become void.

Prochronism (fr. πρόχρονος, Gk., anterior), an error in chronology; dating a thing before it happened.

Proclamation, publication by authority; a notice publicly given of anything whereof the King thinks fit to advertise his subjects. Proclamation is used particularly in the beginning or calling of a court, and at the discharge or adjourning thereof, for the attendance of persons and dispatch of business.—Jac. Law Dict.

Proclamation, Fine with. To render a fine more universally public and less liable to be levied by fraud or covin, it was directed by 4 Hen. 7, c. 24 (in confirmation of a previous statute), that a fine after engrossing should be openly and solemnly read and proclaimed in court (during which all pleas should cease), sixteen times, viz., four times in the term in which it was made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms, which was reduced to once in each term by 31 Eliz. c. 2, and these proclamations were endorsed on the record. Abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833.

Proclamator, an officer of the Court of Common Pleas.

Pro confesso. See CONFESSO, BILL TAKEN PRO.

Proconsules, justices in eyre.

Proctor [fr. procurator, Lat.], a manager of another person's affairs; also a university official at Oxford or Cambridge having disciplinary powers over members of the university.

Proctors in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts formerly discharged duties similar to those of solicitors and attorneys in other courts, as and being a separate body of practitioners. The title still survives, but the separation no longer exists. Owing to the abolition of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in causes matrimonial and testamentary, the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), ss. 43, 105, 106, and c. 85, s. 69, awarded compensation to the proctors, and admitted them to practise, not only in the Probate and Divorce Courts, but also in the Courts of Equity and Common Law. The Solicitors Act, 1877, s. 17, allows solicitors to practise as proctors; the Jud. Act, 1925, s. 256 (1), replacing Jud. Act, 1873 (s. 87), gives them the title of 'Solicitors of the Supreme Court'; and the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 44, allows solicitors to appear as proctors in ecclesiastical courts and exercise the former rights of proctors.

Proctors of the Clergy, they who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches, as also for the common clergy of every diocese, to sit in the convocation-house in the time of parliament.

Procuratio est exhibitio sumptuum necessariorum facta praelatis, qui dioceses peragrande, ecclesias subjectas visitant. Dav. 1.—(Procuratio is the providing necessities for the bishops, who, in travelling through their dioceses, visit the churches subject to them.)

Procuration, an agency, the administration of the business of another; also moneys which parish priests pay yearly to the bishop or archdeacon, ratione visitationis; these are also called proxies, and it is said that there are three sorts—ratione visitationis, consuetudinis, et pacti.—Hardr. 180.

Bills of exchange may be drawn, accepted, or endorsed by procuration, i.e., by an agent who has an authority for such a purpose, and 'a signature by procuration operates as notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign, and the principal is only bound by such signature if the agent in so signing was acting within the actual limits of his authority.'—Bills of Exchange Act, 1832, s. 25. The words 'per pro.' or 'p.p.' (by procuration) usually follow the signature of an agent, and by s. 26 of the Bills of Exchange Act, a person signing a bill and adding words indicating that he signs in a representative capacity is not personally liable on the bill.

Procuration Fee, a sum of money or commission taken by scribes on effecting loans of money. See 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 16, s. 2, repealed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90.

Procuration of Women, the providing of women for the purposes of illicit intercourse. If the woman be under twenty-one and not a common prostitute, the offence is a misdemeanour punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912. Conspiring to procure is a misdemeanour at Common Law; see Reg. v. Mears, (1851) 20 L. J. M. C. 59.

Procuracionem adversus nulla est præscriptio. Dav. 6.—(There is no prescription against procuration.)

Procurator, one who has a charge committed to him by any person; an agent.

Procurator Fiscal. Each of the inferior (Sheriff's) Courts in Scotland has its Procurator Fiscal, who acts, with deputies if necessary, as Public Prosecutor; and to make inquiry into suspected offences in his area; under guidance of Crown Office Regulations. There are no coroners in Scotland.

Procuratores ecclesiæ parochialis, churchwardens.—Paroch. Antiq. 562.

Procuratorium, the instrument by which any person or community constituted or delegated their proctor to represent them in any court or cause.

Procuratory of Resignation, a proceeding in the law of Scotland, by which a vassal authorizes the fee to be returned to his superior, either to remain the property of the superior, in which case it is said to be a resignation ad emanentiam, or for the purpose of the superior's giving out the fee to a new vassal or to the former vassal and a new series of heirs, which is termed a resignation in favorem. It is somewhat analogous to the surrender of copyholds in England. See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Prodes homines, the barons of the realm.

Prodition, treason, treachery.

Proditor, a traitor. Obsolete.

Proditorie (treasonably).

Producent, the party calling a witness under the old system of the Ecclesiastical Courts.

Pro eo quo (for this that).

Pro falso clamore suo, a nominal averment of a plaintiff 'for his false claim,' which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant. Obsolete.

Profaneness. See BLASPHEMY.

Profane Swearing. See SWEARING.

Profer [fr. proférer, Fr.], to produce; an offer to endeavour to proceed in an action.

Profert in curiâ (he produces in court). Where either party alleged any deed, he was generally obliged, by a rule of pleading, to make profert of such deed; that is, to produce it in court simultaneously with the pleading in which it was alleged. This, in the days of oral pleading, was of course an actual production in court. Since then it consisted of a formal allegation that he showed the deed in court, it being, in fact, retained in his own custody. See OYER. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 55.

Profession, calling, vocation, known employment; divinity, physic, and law are called the learned professions.

Profit à prendre, a right for a man, in respect of his tenement, to take some profit out of the tenement of another man. Except in the case of a copyholder no claim of a profit à prendre in alieno solo can be made by custom, nor can it be claimed by a fluctuating body such as the inhabitants of a place (Williams on Rights of Common, p. 194). See LAMMAS LANDS. A prescription in a que estate for a profit à prendre in alieno solo without stint and for commercial purposes is unknown to the law (Harris v. Chesterfield (Earl), 1911, A. C. 623). As to a demise of a profit à prendre, see Radcliff v. Hayes, 1907, 1 Ir. R. 101. A profit à prendre in gross is a right of property which may be dealt with and transferred in the manner appropriate to the right (Welcome v. Upton, (1840) 6 M. & W. 536). Consult Gale on Easements, and Hall on Profits à Prendre.

Profit and Loss, the gain or loss arising from goods bought or sold, or from carrying on any other business, the former of which, in book-keeping, is placed on the creditor's side, the latter on the debtor's side. Net Profit is the gain made by selling goods at a price beyond what they cost the seller, and beyond all costs and charges.

Profits, the advantages which land yields in the shape of rent, issues, or other emoluments: also gains, pecuniary advantage, from whatever source derived.

Pro forma, as a matter of form.

Pro hac vice, for this occasion.

Prohibitio de vasto, directa parti, a judicial writ which used to be addressed to a tenant, prohibiting him from waste, pending suit.—Reg. Jud. 21; Moor, 917.

Prohibition, a writ to forbid any court to proceed in any cause there depending, on the suggestion that the cognizance thereof belongs not to such court. It is a remedy provided by the Common Law against the encroachment of jurisdiction.

This writ issued not only out of the King's Bench, but also out of the Courts of Chancery, Exchequer, and Common Pleas, and now issues out of the High Court of Justice, on application by motion supported by affidavits for a rule to show cause (Rules 70, 71, of Crown Office Rules, 1906), to any inferior court concerning itself with any matter not within its jurisdiction. If either the judge or a party proceed after such prohibition, an attachment may be had against them for contempt, at the discretion of the Court that awarded it; and an action for damages will lie against them, by the party injured.

Sometimes the point is too doubtful to be decided upon motion, and the party applying is directed to declare in prohibition, setting forth concisely so much of the proceeding in the court below as may be necessary to show the ground of the application; this procedure has been directed since the Jud. Act, 1873 (see South-Eastern Ry. Co. v. Railway Commissioners, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 217), but where the prohibition applied for is to a county court, it is expressly dispensed with by County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 112, replacing County Courts Act, 1888, s. 128. Where a want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the proceedings in an inferior court, the High Court is bound to grant a prohibition, although the applicant has acquiesced in the proceedings of the inferior court (Farquharson v. Morgan, 1894, 1 Q. B. 552); and the writ of prohibition may issue even though there is an alternative remedy (Channel Coalng Co. v. Ross, 1907, 1 K. B. 145).

Pro indiviso (as undivided), the possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, whereof none knows his several portion; as coparceners before partition.

Pro interesse suo, in respect of his interest.

Project, the draft of a proposed treaty or convention.

Pro læsione fidei. See LÆSIONE FIDEI.

Prolem ante matrimonium natam, ita ut post legitimam, lex civilis succedere facit in hæreditate parentum; sed prolem, quam matrimonium non parit, succedere non sinit lex Anglorum. Fort. c. 39.—(The Civil Law permits the offspring born before marriage, provided such offspring be afterwards legitimized, to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the offspring not produced by the marriage to succeed.) See LEGITIMATION; MERTON.

Proles, progeny. See S. P.

Proletarius, a person who had no property to be taxed, but paid a tax only on account of his children.—Civil Law.

Prolelde [fr. proles, Lat., offspring, and cædo, to kill], the destruction of human offspring. It is either fœticide or infanticide, which see.—Dunglison's Med. Lex.

Prolixity, an unnecessary, too long, or impertinent statement, discouraged by Rules of Court; see, e.g., R.S.C. Ord. XXXVIII., r. 2, as to affidavits, and Ord. XIX., r. 1, as to pleadings: in each case the costs may have to be borne by the party in fault.

Prolocutor, the foreman; the speaker of a convocation.

Prolocutor of the Convocation House, an officer chosen by ecclesiastical persons publicly assembled in convocation by virtue of the sovereign's writ; at every parliament there are two prolocutors, one of the upper house of convocation, the other of the lower house, the latter of whom is chosen by the lower house, and presented to the bishops of the upper house as their prolocutor, that is, the person by whom the lower house of convocation intends to deliver its resolutions to the upper house, and have its own house especially ordered and governed: his office is to cause the clerk to call the names of such as are of that house, when he sees cause, to read all things propounded, gather suffrages, etc.—Jac. Law Dict.

Prolytæ, students of the Civil Law during the fifth and last year of their studies.

Promatertera, a maternal great-aunt; the sister of one's grandmother.

Promatertera magna, a great-great-aunt.

Promise, an engagement for the performance or non-performance of some particular thing, which may be made either by deed, or without deed, when it is said to be by parol; 'promise' is usually applied when the engagement is by parol only, for a promise by deed is technically called a covenant. See CONTRACT.

A simple promise, i.e., a promise not under seal, made voluntarily and without a legal consideration, is not binding either at law or in equity; see Re Whitaker, (1889) 42 Ch. D. 119; Tweddle v. Atkinson, (1861) 1 B. & S. 393.

Promisee, one to whom a promise has been made.

Promisor, one who makes a promise.

Promissory Note, defined in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 83, as 'an unconditional promise in writing, made by one person to another, signed by the maker, engaging to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to or to the order of a specified person or to bearer.' The note can require payment at a particular place (Joselyne v. Roberts, 1908, 2 K. B. 349). The person who makes the note is called the 'maker,' and the person to whom it is payable is called the 'payee': when it is negotiated by the indorsement of the payee, he is called the 'indorser,' and the person to whom the note is transferred is called the 'indorsee.' The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, codifies the law relating to promissory notes, and by s. 89 of that Act all the provisions of the Act (with few exceptions) which relate to bills of exchange relate also to promissory notes. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

Promissory Oaths. See OATH.

Promoter, a term anciently sometimes applied to a common informer generally (see 5 Inst. 191), but in modern times applied only to the prosecutor of an ecclesiastical suit, as in Combe v. Edwards, (1878) 3 P. D. 103.

Those who obtain, or take steps for obtaining, the passing of a private Act of Parliament, or the incorporation of a company under the Companies Acts, are called the promoters. In many respects promoters stand in a fiduciary capacity towards the company which they are engaged in forming, see Twycross v. Grant, (1877) 2 C. P. D. 469; Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate, 1899, 2 Ch. 392, and also OMNIUM; Electric Palace v. Baines, 1914, 1 Ch. 532, where the position of promoter vendors was discussed. The promoters usually pay the registration fees, and the company is under no liability to repay them (Re National Motor Co., 1908, 2 Ch. 515).

As to the liability of promoters of a company for any untrue statements in the prospectus, see s. 37 of the Companies Act, 1929, and 4th Sched., par. 12, under which the prospectus must disclose the amount paid within the two preceding years or intended to be paid to any promoter and the consideration for any such payment.

See PROSPECTUS; DIRECTOR; MISFEASANCE.

Promulgation, publication; open exhibition.

Promutuum, a quasi-contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, delivered to him through mistake, contracts the obligation of restoring as much.

It resembles the contract of mutuum: (1) That in both a sum of money or some fungible things are required. (2) That in both there must be a transfer of the property in the thing. (3) That in both there must be returned the same amount or quantity of the thing received.—Civ. Law.

Pronepos, a great-grandson.

Pronotary, first notary. See PROTHONOTARIES.

Pronurus, the wife of a great-grandson.

Proof, evidence, testimony, convincing token, means of conviction. Also standard strength of spirituous liquids.

See BURDEN OF PROOF; EVIDENCE; BANKRUPTCY; WINDING-UP.

Pro partibus liberandis, an ancient writ for partition of lands between co-heirs.—Reg. Brev. 316.

Propatruus magnus, a great-great-uncle.

Proper Feuds, the original and genuine feuds held by pure military service.

Property, the highest right a man can have to anything, being used for that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which does not depend on another's courtesy.

Property is of three sorts: absolute, qualified, and possessory.

Property in realty is acquired by entry, conveyance, descent, or devise; and in personalty, by many ways, but most usually by gift, bequest, or bargain and sale. Under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205, 'Property' includes anything in action and any interest in real or personal property. There must be a definite interest, a mere expectancy as distinguished from a conditional interest is not a subject of property.

Consult Williams on Real Property; Williams on Personal Property.

Property Qualification, for Members of Parliament, abolished by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 26; for members of municipal corporations and local governing bodies, by 43 Vict. c. 17.

Property-tax, an annual tax, called also 'Income Tax,' on the income of every person, except where below a certain figure. See INCOME TAX and Chit. Stat., tit. 'Property Tax'; and consult the works of Dowell, or Robinson.

Prophecies. See FALSE PROPHECIES.

Propinquity, kindred, parentage.

Proponent, the propounder of a thing.—Eccl. Law.

Proportum, intent or meaning.

Proposal, a statement in writing of some special matter submitted to a master in the Chancery Division of the High Court, pursuant to an order made upon an application ex parte, or a decretal order of the Court. It is for maintenance of an infant, appointment of a guardian, placing a ward of Court at the university, or in the army, or apprentice to a trade; for the appointment of a receiver; the establishment of a charity, etc. See R. S. C. Ord. LI., 1 a.

Proposition, a single logical sentence.

Propositus, the person proposed; the person from whom a descent is traced. Also the name by which a testator is referred to on propounding his will in the Probate Division.

Propound, to produce (e.g., a will) as authentic.

Proprietary, he who has a property in anything.

Proprietary Chapels, those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise. See Private Chapels Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 66).

Proprietary Medicines. See PATENT MEDICINE.

Proprietas verborum est salus proprietatum. Jenk. Cent. 18.—(Propriety of words is the salvation of property.)

Proprietary probandâ, de, a writ addressed to a sheriff to try by an inquest in whom certain property, previous to distress, subsisted.—Finch L. 316.

Proprietor, owner. In s. 93 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, as amended by the Act of 1932 (see LETTERS PATENT), the following definition occurs:—

'Proprietor of a new and original design,'—

(a) Where the author of the design, for good consideration, executes the work for some other person, means the person for whom the design is so executed; and

(b) Where any person acquires the design or the right to apply the design to any article, either exclusively of any other person or otherwise, means, in the respect and to the extent in and to which the design or right has been so acquired, the person by whom the design or right is so acquired; and

(c) In any other case, means the author of the design; and where the property in, or the right to apply, the design has devolved from the original proprietor upon any other person, includes that other person.

Proprio vigore [Lat.] (by its own force).

Pro querente [abbrev. pro quer.] (for the plaintiff).

Pro ratâ, or Pro ratâ parte (in proportion).

Pro re natâ, to meet the emergency.

Prorogated jurisdiction, a power conferred by consent of the parties upon a judge who would not otherwise have adjudicated.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Prorogation, prolonging or putting off to another day.

A prorogation is the continuance of the parliament from one session to another, with the effect that bills, whatever stage they have reached, drop and have to be taken up from the beginning in a succeeding session; an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day.

Prorogation never extends beyond eighty days, but fresh prorogations may take place from time to time by proclamation. See PARLIAMENT.

Pro salute animæ [for the good of his soul]. All prosecutions in the ecclesiastical courts are pro salute animæ.

Prosecution, a proceeding either by way of indictment or information, in the criminal courts, in order to put an offender upon his trial. In all criminal prosecutions the King is nominally the prosecutor. See titles PUBLIC PROSECUTOR and ADVOCATE, LORD.

Prospectus, is defined by s. 380 of the Companies Act, 1929, as any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, or other invitation offering to the public for subscription or purchase any shares or debentures of a company. By s. 35 of the Act every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company or engaged or interested in its formation, must state the matters specified in Part I. of the 4th Schedule and set out the reports specified in Part II. of that Schedule, subject as to both parts to the provisions of Part. III. ibid., and otherwise comply with the requirements of the Act. Any condition waiving compliance with this provision is void. The issue of any form of application for shares or debentures of a company unaccompanied by a prospectus is prohibited except in an offer to underwriters or not to the public, or to existing members or debenture holders of the company. By s. 36, contracts referred to in a prospectus are not to be varied without the approval of the statutory meeting (q.v.). As to the liability of directors or others for statements in the prospectus, see s. 37, DIRECTORS and DECEIT. These requirements extend to offers by the purchasers of shares or debentures offered by the company to them with a view to sale by them to the public under s. 38, which was enacted in order to include offers by such purchasers which had not previously been deemed to be prospectuses. The statutory requirements as to dating and registering the prospectus are set out in s. 34, and among the provisions of the 4th Schedule (see supra), prospectuses, published as newspaper advertisements, need not include the contents of the memorandum and ancillary details. Under Part III. of the Schedule, the memorandum and similar details and some other particulars may be omitted from a prospectus which is issued more than two years after the company is entitled to commence business. As to prospectuses by companies incorporated outside Great Britain, see s. 354.

Sect. 356 prohibits house-to-house hawking of shares. Where shares are offered in writing for sale to any individual the offer must be accompanied by a statement complying with the requirements of that section. These requirements do not apply to offers of shares, dealings in which have been permitted by any recognized Stock Exchange in Great Britain or to shares allotted with a view to sale to the public under s. 38, or offers to persons whose regular business it is to buy and sell shares. Consult Palmer's Company Law.

Prostitute. A woman who indiscriminately consorts with men for hire. Solicitation by prostitutes is punishable in towns by the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28 (in cases where the town is subject to a special Act incorporating that Act); in London by the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, s. 54, and generally by the Vagrancy Act, 1824.

A licensed retailer of intoxicating liquor permitting his premises to be the habitual resort of reputed prostitutes, whether their object be prostitution or not, is, if he allows them to remain longer than is necessary for the purpose of obtaining reasonable refreshment, liable to a penalty under the Licensing Act, 1910, s. 76.

A man who lives on the earnings of prostitution may be dealt with as a 'rogue and a vagabond' by the Vagrancy Act, 1898, amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912. See VAGRANTS.

As to the sending of children associating with prostitutes to approved schools, etc., see Children's Act, 1933, s. 62.

Words imputing that a woman or girl is a prostitute are actionable without proof of special damage; see the Slander of Women Act, 1891.

As to the repealed Contagious Diseases Acts, see that title.

Protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectione protectionem. Co. Litt. 65 a.—(Protection begets subjection, and subjection protection.)

Protection Order. 1. A wife deserted by her husband may obtain from a magistrate or the Divorce Court an order to protect property acquired and to be acquired by her since desertion, as if she were a feme sole; after the order is granted, she sues and is sued as a feme sole. The husband may apply to the magistrate who made the order, or his successor, for the discharge thereof.—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 2; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 44, s. 1; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 43 (Ireland). See DESERTION; MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY. 2. An order obtained under s. 88 of the Licensing Act, 1910, from the justices authorizing the transferee of a justices' licence to carry on business and to sell intoxicating liquors until the next licensing sessions.

Protectorate, (1) the period during which Oliver Cromwell ruled in this country under the title of the 'Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland and of the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging'; (2) also the office of protector; (3) territories placed under the protection of the British sovereign generally by treaty with the native ruler or chiefs administered on the same lines as Crown Colonies (Hals. L. E., tit. 'Dependencies, Colonies and British Possessions').

Protector of the Settlement. The person whose consent is required to enable a remainderman in tail to bar the entail. In the absence of such consent the remainderman can only bar his own issue and create a Base Fee (see that title). Under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 32, the settlor might appoint a special protector. In the absence of this 'special' protector, the statutory protector, i.e., the owner of the first (sufficient) estate in possession, e.g., the tenant for life under the same settlement, was and is a statutory protector. The special protector was to be appointed as stated in substitution for the old tenant to the precipe, whose concurrence in barring estates-tail in remainder was required in order to preserve, under certain modifications, the control of the tenant for life over the remainderman. The statutory protector might be excluded by the settlor, who by the settlement creating the entail might appoint not more than three persons in esse, and not being aliens, to be (special) protector, in which case the office survived and the last surviving protector could exercise it (Sugd. R. P. Stat., pp. 201, 204; Cohen v. Bayley-Worthington, 1908, A. C. 97). Under the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, Sched. vii., repealing s. 32 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, special protectors have been abolished in settlements made after 1925. As to married women acting alone as protectors of a settlement, see s. 3 of the Married Woman's Property Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 18), as amended by the Law Reform (M. W. & T.) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 30).

The office of Protector is not assignable and if the protector is tenant for life under the settlement he may make terms in consideration of his consent (ss. 36 and 37, F. & R. Act, 1833) (Banks v. Le Despencer, (1843) 11 Sim. 508).

Protest, a solemn declaration of opinion, generally of dissent. Each peer has a right, when he disapproves of the vote of the majority of the House of Lords, to enter his dissent on the Journals of the House, with his reasons for such dissent, which is usually styled his protest.

Also, a notification written by a notary upon a foreign bill of exchange of non-acceptance or non-payment; as to this, see Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 51, by which a foreign bill, dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment, must be duly protested, otherwise the drawer and indorsers are discharged. All protests made in England must, by the Stamp Act, 1891 (see schedule), be stamped, otherwise they cannot be given in evidence without payment of a penalty.

The following is a form of protest for non-payment:—

On the — day of —, at the request of A. B., bearer of the original bill of exchange, whereof a true copy is on the other side written, I [notary's name], of [address], notary public, by lawful authority duly admitted and sworn, did exhibit the said bill.

[Here the presentment is stated, and to whom made, and the reason, if assigned, for non-payment.]

'Wherefore I, the said notary, at the request aforesaid, have protested, and by these presents do solemnly protest as well against the drawer, acceptor, and indorsers of the said bill of exchange, as against all others whom it may concern, for exchange, re-exchange, and all costs, charges, damages, and interests suffered and to be suffered, for want of payment of the said original bill. Thus done and protested in the presence of E. F. and G. N., witnesses.'

Which I attest

[signature],

Notary public of

There may be a protest by a householder when the services of a notary cannot be obtained.

[Here is set out an exact copy of the bill with all indorsements.]

Also, a writing attested by a justice of the peace or consul, drawn up by a master of a ship, stating the circumstances under which an injury has happened to the ship, or to the cargo, or other circumstances calculated to affect the liability of the shipowner or the charterer, etc.

Also, an objection made to a proceeding in which the person protesting is by force of circumstances obliged to take part against his will (see Voinet v. Barrett, (1885) 55 L. J. 39, and DUFFESS).

Upon a payment under protest or under duress of more than is legally due, the excess can be recovered (see Baxendale v. London and South Western Ry. Co., (1866) L. R. 1 Exch. 137; CARRIERS).

Protestando, a word made use of to avoid double pleading in actions; it prevented the party that made it from being concluded, by the plea he was about to make, that issue could not be joined upon it; and it was also a form of pleading, where one would not directly affirm or deny anything alleged by another or himself. It was formally abolished by Rule of Court in 1834, whereby it was rendered unnecessary.—Chit. Pl. 646.

As to protestation in equity pleadings, consult Story's Eq. Pl.; Daniell's Chancery Practice.

Protestant. This term does not occur in the Canons of 1603, or in the Thirty-nine Articles, or in the Acts of Uniformity, but appears in many statutes of later date, notably in the Act of Settlement of 1700 (12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2), in which, by way of making further provision (in addition to that made by the Bill of Rights in 1688) 'for the succession of the Crown in the Protestant line,' the Crown was settled, in default of issue of Princess Anne of Denmark (afterwards Queen Anne) and William III., on the Princess Sophia and the heirs of her body, 'being Protestants'; it being added that 'whosoever shall hereafter come to the possession of this Crown shall join in communion with the Church of England as by law established.'

The Bill of Rights (1 W. & M. sess. 2, c. 2), after reciting that 'it hath been found by experience that it is inconsistent with the safety and welfare of this Protestant kingdom to be governed by a popish prince or by any king or queen marrying a papist,' debars such from succession to the Crown, and entails the succession on such person or persons being Protestants as would have succeeded in case the person reconciled to or holding communion with the Church of Rome or professing the popish religion or marrying a papist were dead, and also required every sovereign on the first day of the meeting of his first parliament or on coronation, which shall first happen, to make a declaration taken from 30 Car. 2, st. 2 (repealed by the Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866), and expressed therein to be 'in the plain and ordinary sense of the words as they are commonly understood by English Protestants,' against transubstantiation, invocation of saints, and the sacrifice of the Mass as used in the Church of Rome. For the declaration that now has to be made by the sovereign, see BILL OF RIGHTS.

The Union with Scotland Act, 1706, confirms the English succession to the Crown of the heirs of the body of the Electress Sophia,

'being Protestants,' and so did the Union with Ireland Act, 1800, though not in express terms; the 5th Article of that Union, however, provided for the union of the churches of England and Ireland into one 'Protestant Episcopal Church'—a union dissolved by the Irish Church Act, 1869.

The term was originally applied to those who 'protested' against a decree of the Emperor Charles V. and the Diet held at Spire in 1529. See ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Prothonotaries, officers in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, who were superseded by the masters.—7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 30; 1 Steph. Com. They were, however, continued in the Courts of Common Pleas at Durham and Lancaster. See now DISTRICT REGISTRARS.

Protocol [fr. πρωτος, (Gk.; and κόλλη], the original copy of any writing.

An original is styled the protocol or scriptura matrix.—Encyc. Londin.

The term is usually applied to writings of a diplomatic character.

Protutor, a quasi tutor.—Civil Law.

Prout patet per recordum (even as it appears by the record). The omission of the words 'per recordum' is but form, and so it was twice adjudged, viz., in Hancocke v. Prowd, and Clegat v. Bambury, 2 Sid. 16; 1 Saund. 337 b, n (4). Rendered unnecessary by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 24.

Prover, an approver (q.v.).

Provident Societies. See INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES.

Province, the district over which the jurisdiction of an archbishop extends. England is divided into two provinces, Canterbury and York; the province of York comprises all north of the Humber, i.e., Yorkshire and Lancashire, etc., and Cheshire; all the rest of the island is in the province of Canterbury. A county; an outlying county governed by a deputy or lieutenant. Metaphorically, the sphere of duty: as the province of the judge and the province of the jury.

Provincial Constitutions, the decrees of provincial synods held under divers archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton, in the reign of Henry III., to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Henry V., and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI.—Lynd. Provinciale.

Provincial Courts, the several archiepiscopal courts in the two ecclesiastical provinces of England.

Provinciale, a work on ecclesiastical law, by William Lyndwode, official principal to Archbishop Chichele in the reign of Edward IV.—4 Reeves, c. xxv. 117.

Provision of food for school children ; see Education Act, 1921, ss. 82-85.

Provisional Assignees, those who (under a former system of the bankruptcy law) were appointed under fiats in bankruptcy in the country to take charge of bankrupts' estates, etc., until the creditors' assignees were appointed.

Provisional Committee, a committee, appointed for a temporary occasion.

Provisional Order, an order by a Government department, called 'provisional' because it is of no force unless and until it is confirmed by Act of Parliament. In some cases, these orders are to have effect unless petitioned against or objected to by Parliament.

Procedure by provisional order has been increasingly and necessarily used in modern times for a very great variety of purposes ; but the tendency in these orders to confer arbitrary powers upon the executive without appeal or with an appeal to the same executive exclusively has been severely commented upon by the judiciary and publicists : see LORD HEWART, L.C.J., and next title.

Provisions, those Acts of Parliament which were passed to curb the arbitrary power of the Crown.—Mat. Paris.

Proviso, stipulation, caution, a condition, inserted in any deed, on the performance whereof the validity of the deed depends. As to the proviso for re-entry in a lease, see FORFEITURE (5) ; CONDITION ; USUAL COVENANTS.

The terms proviso and condition are synonymous, and signify some quality annexed to a real estate by virtue of which it may be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event. Such qualities annexed to personal contracts and agreements are generally called conditions. A proviso or condition differs from a covenant in this, that the former is in the words of, and binding upon, both parties ; whereas the latter is in the words of the grantor only. At the same time a proviso or condition may be construed as a covenant or agreement if the proviso involves the consideration upon which the benefit is obtained a fortiori, where words such as 'provided that, and it is hereby agreed' are used. But if no intention that the proviso was intended to be obligatory can be gathered from the deed or contract, the proviso merely amounts to a qualification of the grant or promise. See Halsbury, L.E., tit. 'Interpretation of Deeds.'

Proviso est providere præsentia et futura non præterita. Co. 72.—(A proviso is to provide for the present or future, not the past.)

Proviso for Redemption. The condition in a conveyance upon mortgage whereby if the mortgagor pays to the mortgagee the principal, interest, and any other moneys secured by the mortgage on a specified day, the mortgagee becomes bound to reconvey the mortgaged property to the mortgagor at any time at his request and cost. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 115, a receipt of the person entitled to give a receipt (see statutory form) for the moneys secured by the mortgage endorsed on or written at the foot of, or annexed to the mortgage operates as a surrender or release of the mortgagee's term or as a reconveyance of all the mortgaged interest or property, and in either case a discharge of all the moneys secured by the mortgage without any other reconveyance, surrender or release. See MORTGAGE.

Proviso, Trial by. Where the plaintiff after issue joined, did not proceed to trial when he ought to have done so, the defendant might, under the practice before the Judicature Acts, have the action tried by proviso ; he might give the plaintiff notice of trial, make up the record, carry it down and enter it, and proceed to the trial as if he were proceeding as plaintiff. The right to try by proviso was expressly saved by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 116, but a defendant seldom tried by proviso, as the better course was to take proceedings under the repealed s. 101 of the C. L. P. Act, 1852 ; see now R. S. C. Ord. XXVII.

Provisor, a purveyor ; also one who sued to the Court of Rome for a provision or prearrangement that a particular benefice when it should fall vacant should be bestowed, for an immediate payment by the provisor, on a particular person.

Various statutes, called generally 'Statutes of Provisors,' were passed in ancient times to suppress such persons. In 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, s. 7, the first and most important of them, 25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 22, is called 'the Statute of the Provision and Præmunire.' See PRÆMUNIRE.

Provocation. In law no provocation whatever can render homicide justifiable, but it may reduce the offence to manslaughter. Generally speaking, words do not amount to sufficient provocation to reduce homicide to manslaughter. To reduce homicide upon provocation to manslaughter, the wounding, etc., must have been inflicted immediately upon the provocation being given and before anger has had time to subside, and the provocation must be of a kind which would deprive an ordinary man of self-control. See ASSAULT.

Provost, the principal magistrate of a royal burgh in Scotland ; a governing officer of a university or college.

Provost-Marshal, an officer of the royal forces who has the charge of military prisoners.—13 Car. 2, c. 9, and Manual of Military Law.

Proxenetæ, a kind of broker or agent.

All contracts for marriage (commonly called marriage-brokerage contracts), by which a party engages to give another a compensation if he will negotiate an advantageous marriage for him, are void, as being injurious to or subversive of the public interest ; see Hermann v. Charlesworth, 1905, 2 K. B. 123. But the Civil Law does not seem to have held contracts of this sort in such severe rebuke : for it allowed proxenetæ, or match-makers, to receive a reward for their services to a limited extent.—1 Story's Eq. Jurisp., s. 260.

Proxies, annual payments by the parochial clergy to the bishop, etc., on visitation.

Proximate Cause. See CAUSA CAUSANS.

Proxy, a person appointed, usually by written authority, by a person entitled to vote personally, to vote at the discretion of the proxy. See Harben v. Phillips, (1883) 23 Ch. D. p. 35.

As to voting by proxy under the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), see ss. 76, 77 of that Act ; amended in the case of a company being shareholder, by the Companies Clauses Acts, 1888 and 1889.

A letter ' for the sole purpose of appointing or authorizing a proxy to vote at any one meeting at which votes may be given by proxy, whether the number of persons named in such instrument be one or more,' must bear a penny stamp, must specify the day on which the meeting is to be held, and is to be available only at the meeting so specified, and any adjournment thereof (Stamp Act, 1891, and First Schedule). The Standing Orders of Parliament (L. S. O. 62 and C. S. O. 62) prohibit the sending out of stamped proxies in connection with extension bills. Directors, acting in good faith in the interests of the company, may do what they think advisable to get shareholders to vote either in favour of or against a resolution, e.g., they may send out stamped forms at the company's expense (Peel v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co., 1907, 1 Ch. 5, overruling Studdert v. Grosvenor, (1886), 33 Ch. D. 528).

On a show of hands, a proxy has only one vote, however many persons he may represent ; see Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, 1897, 1 Ch. 1, in which case it was also held that a blank date of the meeting in the proxy paper might be filled up by the secretary of the company before the paper was lodged.

Voting by proxy at the meetings of the creditors of a bankrupt is regulated by the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 13, and First Schedule thereto ; and at the meetings of the creditors and contributories of companies being wound up, by rules 139-149 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1909.

Pryk, a kind of tenure. Blount says it signifies an old-fashioned spur with one point only, which the tenant, holding land by this tenure, was to find for the King.

Psalter, the table of Psalms. See 34 & 35 Vict. c. 37, amending the law relating to the Tables of Lessons and Psalter contained in the Prayer-book.

Pseudograph, false writing.

Pubertas. See AGE.

Puberty [fr. pubertas, Lat.], the age of fourteen in men and twelve in women ; when they are held fit for and capable of contracting marriage.

Public Accounts, the accounts of the expenditure of the nation. They are rendered to the Comptroller and Auditor-General under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 39, and the amending Act, 11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 52.

Public Act. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Public Analyst is an analyst appointed by a local authority under the Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31).

Public Appointments, Sale of, is contrary to the policy of the law : see OFFICE.

Public Auditors and Valuers, persons appointed by the Treasury for the purpose of audits and valuations under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, s. 30, and under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, s. 72. Their duties and remuneration are as prescribed from time to time by the Treasury. In the case of the latter class of Society, audit by a public auditor is now compulsory (Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1913, s. 2). See also Industrial Insurance Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 8), s. 15.

Public Authorities, Protection of. Very numerous statutes have from time to time protected justices of the peace, constables, surveyors of highways, local boards and other public authorities from vexatious actions for things done in pursuance of the Acts. This protection was given by requiring the plaintiff to give notice of action, by compelling him to try the action in the place where the cause of it arose, by requiring him to bring his action within a short limit of time, by enabling defendants to plead the general issue (see GENERAL ISSUE) and to tender amends, and by enacting that the plaintiff if unsuccessful should pay double or treble costs. These varying enactments were reduced into one by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), which applies to common law as well as to statutory duties, to individuals as well as to public authorities, and to acts of omission as well as to acts of commission. This Act provides (1) six months as the limit of time for the action, but does not apply to an action in rem (The Burns, 1907, P. 137); or if the cause of action alleged is fraud (Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, 1907, A. C. 351), or if there is a continuance of the injury or damage (Hague v. Doncaster Rural Council, (1909) 100 L. T. 121; Brownlie v. Barrhead Magistrates, 1923, S. C. 915); and (2) costs as between solicitor and client if judgment given for defendant; and also (3) deprives a plaintiff of costs if he fail to recover more than the sum tendered or paid into court by the defendant; besides (4) empowering the Court to award costs as between solicitor and client to the defendant if the plaintiff has not given the defendant a sufficient opportunity of tendering amends. These provisions only apply to an action, prosecution or other proceeding against any person for any act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of any Act of Parliament or any public duty or authority or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty or authority. See Bradford Corporation v. Myers, 1916, 1 A. C. 242, and also Betts v. Receiver, Metropolitan District and Betts v. Carter Paterson & Co., 1932, 2 K. B. 595, for the meaning of 'intended execution of a public duty.' The Act repeals all prior enactments by which in any proceeding to which it applies the proceeding is to be commenced in any particular place, or within any particular time, or notice of action is to be given, or the defendant is to be entitled to or the plaintiff deprived of costs, or the defendant may plead the general issue. As to taxation in the county court of solicitor and client costs under this Act, see Tory v.

Dorchester Corporation, 1907, 1 K. B. 393. For discussion on the Act, see Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, 1907, A. C. 351; Bradford Corp. v. Myers, 1916, A. C. 242; and as to 'public authority' The Johannesburg, 1907, P. 65; The Wilhelmina, 1923, P. 112. See also CROWN JUSTICES; NUISANCE.

Public Chapels are chapels founded at some period later than the church itself; they were designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as in course of time had begun to fix their residence at a distance from its site: and chapels so circumstanced were described as chapels of ease, because built in aid of the original church.—3 Steph. Com.

Public Health. The first Public Health Act was passed in 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63); this was an adoptive Act not applying to London, and forms the foundation of modern sanitary legislation. It was followed by some twenty-nine amending Acts which were repealed and consolidated by the Public Health Act, 1875 (the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), repeals certain sections of this Act, re-enacting them with amendments), which thus formed a sanitary code for England outside the metropolis. This Act has been since amended and extended by subsequent statutes. The latest is the Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), which, as from 1st October, 1937, consolidates many of the provisions of earlier legislation, without, however, repealing parts of the Public Health Acts of 1875, 1890, 1907 and 1925. The Act repeals and replaces among other enactments and as from various dates respectively provided by the Act: the whole of the Baths and Wash-houses Acts, 1846–1899 and Part IX. of the P. H. Act, 1925, and parts of the Local Government Acts, 1871 and 1894, relating to the same subject; the greater part, if not the whole, of the previous legislation relating to Infectious Diseases Acts—i.e., the Prevention (1883), Notification (1889 and 1899) and Treatment, (1913), Tuberculosis (1921, except s. 6) Acts; the Cleansing of Persons Act, 1897; Isolation of Hospitals Acts, 1893 and 1901; Nursing Homes Registration Act, 1927; Notification of Births Acts, 1907 and 1915; Maternity and Child Welfare Act, 1918; Part I. of the Children Act, 1908, and consequential legislation; Canal Boats Acts, 1877 and 1884; and many of the Public Health Acts (Water, 1878); (Fruit Pickers' Lodgings, 1882); (Ships, etc., 1885); (Ports, 1896); Smoke Abatement, except ss. 4 and 12, 1926; and the Public Health Act, 1904. The Act of 1936 is voluminous, containing 347 sections and 3 Schedules. It is generally directed to promote healthy and sanitary surroundings and sanitation for the general population under the following heads: Port health authorities, building from the sanitary point of view, sewage and sewers, drains and cesspools, filthy or verminous premises or persons, public conveniences, nuisances, offensive trades, smoke, water supply (works, wells, charges, supply, waste); prevention, notification and treatment of diseases; preventing spread of infection, disinfection of premises and removal of infected persons, tuberculosis, blindness, medicine, medical assistance and instruction, hospital and nursing cases, laboratories, ambulances and mortuaries; notification of births, child welfare and life protection, baths, wash-houses, bathing places, lodging-houses, canal boats, water-courses, ditches, ponds, ships and boats, tents, vans and sheds, hop-pickers. The Act is administered by the Minister of Health, either directly, as in the case of regulations for the prevention, etc., of disease, or relating to canals, or by the county councils or local authorities, or under bye-laws of such local authorities. The Ministry of Health Act, 1919, established a Ministry of Health to exercise in England and Wales powers with respect to health and local government; the Ministry superseded the Local Government Board. The Law as to public health in London is mainly governed by the Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50). Consult the works on public health of Lumley, Glen or Chambers.

Public-House. See PUBLICANS.

Public-House Closing Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 64), an 'adoptive' Act whereby public-houses and refreshment houses, till then allowed to be open all night, were closed in boroughs and Improvement Act districts between 1 and 4 a.m. The Act has been repealed, and the matter is now dealt with by ss. 54-63 and Sched. VI. of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, and amending Acts under the collective title, Licensing Acts, 1910 to 1934. See also REFRESHMENT HOUSE.

Public Libraries. See LIBRARIES.

Public Meeting, a meeting which any person may attend. Any number of persons may meet in any place for any lawful purpose with the consent of the owner of that place; but without such consent, and in any case in the public streets, which are lawfully used for the purpose of passing and repassing only (see the ruling of Charles, J., in the Trafalgar Square case in 1887, and Ex parte Lewis, (1888) 21 Q. B. D. 191), there is no 'right of public meeting' known to English law.

Political meetings within a mile of Westminster Hall during the session of Parliament are prohibited by the Seditious Meetings Act, 1817. As a result of disturbances created by persons advocating the extension of the parliamentary franchise to women there was passed the Public Meeting Act, 1908, which by s. 1 provides as follows:—

1.—(1) Any person who at a lawful public meeting acts in a disorderly manner for the purpose of preventing the transaction of the business for which the meeting was called together shall be guilty of an offence, and, if the offence is committed at a political meeting held in any parliamentary constituency between the date of the issue of a writ for the return of a member of Parliament for such constituency and the date at which a return to such writ is made, he shall be guilty of an illegal practice within the meaning of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, and in any other case shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds, or to imprisonment not exceeding one month.

(2) Any person who incites others to commit an offence under this section shall be guilty of a like offence.

(And, as amended by the Public Order Act, 1936, s. 6).

(3) If any constable reasonably suspects any person of committing an offence under the foregoing provisions of this section, he may if requested so to do by the chairman of the meeting, require that person to declare to him immediately his name and address and, if that person refuses or fails so to declare his name and address or gives a false name and address he shall be guilty of an offence under this sub-section and liable on summary conviction thereof to a fine not exceeding forty shillings, and if he refuses or fails to declare his name and address or if the constable reasonably suspects him of giving a false name and address, the constable may without warrant arrest him.

Newspaper reports of public meetings (unless such report or publication was published or made maliciously) are 'privileged' (see LIBEL) by the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, which, for the purposes of that Act, defines a public meeting as 'any meeting bona fide and lawfully held for a lawful purpose, and for the furtherance and discussion of any matter of public concern, whether the admission thereto be general or restricted.'

Consult Odgers on Libel.

As to public meetings of limited bodies, see MEETING. Consult Crewe, Procedure at Pub. and Co. Meetings.

Public Mischief. Conduct causing or tending to cause public mischief constitutes a misdemeanour at common law. Prosecutions for this offence have become increasingly frequent of late years, and as to what constitutes the offence, see R. v. Munley, 1932, 1 K. B. 529 (false information to Police), Kerr v. Hill, Duncan v. Jones, 1936, 1 K. B. 218 (public meeting, apprehension of breach of the peace); and see Public Meeting Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 66), and title infra.

Public Officer. The general name for any authorized officer acting in a public capacity under the Crown or public authority, more particularly a person appointed by joint-stock banking companies, etc., under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 9, or otherwise to sue and be sued on behalf of a company. As to the punishment of frauds committed by such persons, see the Larceny Act, 1861, ss. 81-84, and the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 20.

Public Order Act, 1936 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 6). An Act to prohibit the wearing of uniforms in connection with political objects and the maintenance by private persons of associations of military or similar character, and to make further provision for the preservation of public order on the occasion of public processions and meetings and in public places.

Sect. 1.—Prohibition of uniform in connection with political objects.

Sect. 2.—Prohibition of quasi-military organizations.

Sect. 3.—Confers powers for the preservation of public order on the occasion of processions.

Sect. 4.—Prohibition of offensive weapons at public meetings and processions.

Sect. 5.—Prohibition of offensive conduct conducive to breaches of the peace.

Sect. 6.—Amendment of Public Meeting Act, 1908; see PUBLIC MEETING.

Sect. 7.—Enforcement.

Sect. 8.—Application to Scotland.

Sect. 9.—Interpretation.

Sect. 10.—Short title and extent.

A person who commits an offence under s. 2 is liable on summary conviction to a maximum of 6 months' imprisonment or a fine up to 100*l.* or both; and on conviction on indictment to a maximum of 2 years or 500*l.* or both.

For any other offence, on summary conviction, imprisonment up to 3 months or a fine up to 50*l.* or both.

Public Parks. See PARK, and also 22 Vict. c. 27, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 13. See also OPEN SPACES; PLEASURE GROUNDS.

Public Place. A public place would seem to include a place to which the public are accustomed to resort without being interfered with, though there is no legal right to do so; see per Lord Coleridge, C.J., in R. v. Wellard, (1884) 14 Q. B. D. at p. 66. But for criminal purposes the attribute 'public' will apply to many other places, e.g., the roof of a private house within the view of many persons (R. v. Thallman, (1863) 33 L. J. M. C. 58); and a railway carriage at the time it is used for the purposes of travel is an 'open and public place' (Langrish v. Archer, (1882) 10 Q. B. D. 44).

As to the meaning of 'public place' in connection with the offence of betting, see the Street Betting Act, 1908.

Public Policy, the principles under which the freedom of contract or private dealings is restricted by law for the good of the community. See, e.g., the titles CHAMPERTY; RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE; RESTRAINT OF TRADE; MORTMAIN.

Thus it is against public policy to allow an action to be brought on a promise to marry made by a man who at the time of making it was known to be married (Wilson v. Cranley, 1908, 1 K. B. 729).

Public policy, however, said an eminent judge, 'is a very unruly horse, and when once you get astride it you never know where it will carry you' (Richardson v. Mellish, (1824) 2 Bing. p. 252). The term in fact does not admit of any precise definition and is not easily explained; see Davies v. Davies, (1887) 36 Ch. D. p. 364; Besant v. Wood, (1879) 12 Ch. D. p. 620, per Jessel, M.R.; Egerton v. Earl Brownlow, (1853) 4 H. L. O. 1, where a condition subsequent in a will was held to be void on the ground of public policy.

Public Prosecutor, the King, in whose name criminals are prosecuted, because all offences are said to be against the King's peace, his Crown and dignity. By the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879, an officer called the 'Director of Public Prosecutions' may be appointed with six assistants, and such an officer (the late J. B. Maule, Esq., Q.C.), with one assistant, was appointed shortly after the commencement of the Act in 1880; but the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1884, revoked all appointments made under the Act of 1879, and constituted the Solicitor to the Treasury Director of Public Prosecutions. This fusion of offices, however, was subsequently done away with by the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 3). By the Act of 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 58), s. 3, the chief officer of every police district becomes bound to give information from time to time to such Director with respect to indictable offences alleged to have been committed within his district.

As to Scotland, see PROCURATOR FISCAL; ADVOCATE, LORD.

Public Records. The general Records of the Realm are in the custody of the Master of the Rolls (see RECORD), and may be proved by a copy purporting to be carried by the deputy keeper of these Records (see the Public Record Office Acts, 1838-1898). As to public documents, see Mercer v. Denne, 1905, 2 Ch. 538.

Public Right. A right enjoyed by the public as distinguished from private or personal rights attached to the personality of an individual. Public rights exist at Common Law, such as the right of the public to pass along a highway, or they may be conferred by statute in either case if the statute does not provide a remedy; the remedy for infringement is by indictment or information filed by the Attorney-General either directly or upon the relation of an individual (relator) who becomes liable for the costs, but if the individual has suffered special damage or some private right has been interfered with specially, the Attorney-General is not an essential party to the action though he is often joined as a party. See Boyer v. Paddington Borough Council, 1903, 1 Ch. 109; and David v. Britannic Merthyr Coal Co., 1909, 2 K. B. 146. See NEGLIGENCE; NUISANCE.

Public Schools, schools open to all, subject to the terms of their foundation and the regulations of some governing body, private schools being only open to such pupils as the proprietor or head master chooses to admit. The term has in some modern statutes been confined to the larger public schools, such as Eton, Winchester, Westminster, Charterhouse, Harrow, Rugby, and Shrewsbury, the governing bodies of which were, by the Public Schools Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 118), empowered to make new regulations for their constitution and management, requiring confirmation by Order in Council. See generally, Birkenhead School v. Dring, (1926) 43 T. L. R. 48.

Public Sewer. By the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 20, sewers, which by virtue of the section continue to be or become vested in a local authority, shall be known as public sewers, provided that a sewer constructed by a local authority after the 1st October, 1937, for draining their own property shall not be deemed public sewers for the purposes of the Act until so declared. Public sewers include combined drains which would have vested in a local authority as sewers but for some Act or statutory scheme for the construction of combined drains or order made thereunder; all sewers and sewage disposal works constructed by the local authority at their expense or acquired by them; and for other instances, see the section. See DRAIN.

Public Statues. See the Public Statues (Metropolis) Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 33), which placed public statues in the metropolitan police district under the control of the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings; and for punishment for damage, see the Malicious Damage Act, 1851, s. 29.

Public Stores. By the Public Stores Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 25), various provisions are made for the protection of public stores and the punishment of persons improperly obtaining the same or obliterating the marks thereon, and see Army and Air Force Acts.

Public, True, and Notorious, the old form by which charges in the allegations in the ecclesiastical courts were described at the end of each particular.

Public Trustee. The office of Public Trustee was established by the Public Trustee Act, 1906, which came into force on 1st January, 1908. The Public Trustee is a corporation sole, and may if he thinks fit act in the administration of estates of deceased persons if under one thousand pounds; act as custodian trustee (see that title, and Re Cherry's Trusts, 1914, 1 Ch. 83); act as an ordinary trustee; be appointed to be a judicial trustee (see that title); be appointed administrator of the property of a convict under the Forfeiture Act, 1870; and he may also be appointed an executor and obtain a grant of probate (s. 5). He may be appointed a trustee whether the trust instrument came into operation before or after the Act, and either as an original or a new trustee, or as an additional trustee, in the same cases and manner and by the same persons or court as if he were a private trustee, with this addition—that he may be appointed sole trustee although the trustees originally appointed were two or more; but he cannot be appointed a new or additional trustee when the trust instrument directs the contrary unless the court otherwise order, and notice of any proposed appointment must be given to the beneficiaries ; see s. 5. The Public Trustee may decline to accept any trust, but not on the ground only of the small value of the trust property ; and he cannot, except under certain conditions (see r. 7), accept a trust which involves the carrying on of any business, nor a trust under a deed of arrangement, nor the administration of an insolvent estate, nor a trust exclusively for religious or charitable purposes (s. 2, sub-ss. (3), (4), (5) ). The Consolidated Fund is, speaking generally, liable to make good all sums required to discharge any liability which the Public Trustee, if he were a private trustee, would be personally liable to discharge (s. 7). By s. 13 an investigation and audit of trust accounts may be made at the instance of any trustee or beneficiary, by some agreed solicitor or accountant, and in default of agreement by the Public Trustee or some person appointed by him ; and there is an important provision in s. 3 (4), under which the Public Trustee can take the opinion of the Court on any question arising in the course of his administration of an estate. The Act does not extend to Ireland or Scotland (s. 17 (2)), and the Public Trustee cannot accept the trusteeship of any settlement other than an English one (Re Hewitt's Settlement, 1915, 1 Ch. 228). For the Act and the Rules made thereunder, see Ann. Pr. The head office is situate in Kingsway, W.C., and there is a branch office in Albert Square, Manchester. A pamphlet giving full information as to the work of the Department can be obtained on application at the head office, or at any Post Office.

The Public Trustee is the person in whom the legal estate is (in the first instance) to vest in certain cases of undivided shares, in land and infancy subsisting on the 1st January, 1926, under the transitory provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 39, and see 1st Sched.

For the Powers of the Public Trustee in opening accounts in the Post Office Savings Bank, see Post Office Savings Bank (Public Trustee) Act, 1908.

Banks and insurance companies of great financial strength act as trustees at charges somewhat lower than those payable to the Public Trustee, and, it is believed, with equal efficiency. See CUSTODIAN TRUSTEE ; TRUST CORPORATION.

Public Ways, highways.

Public Works Loans Act, 1875, which repeals twenty-seven previous statutes on the same subject, makes provision for the constitution of a body to be called 'The Public Works Loan Commissioners,' who are authorized to make loans for certain public purposes which are enumerated in the first schedule to the Act. They are appointed every five years : see the Public Works Loans Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 49). The Act of 1875 has been extended and amended by numerous Acts.

Among the works for the purposes of which the Commissioners were authorized to lend money are as follows : Baths and wash-houses provided by local authorities ; burial grounds provided by burial boards or, in Scotland, by either burial or parochial boards ; construction or improvement of canals ; conservation or improvement of rivers of main drainage ; docks, harbours, and piers, and any work for which the Public Works Loan Commissioners are authorized to lend by s. 3 of the Harbour and Passing Tolls Act, 1861 ; improvement of towns ; housing of the Working Classes (Housing Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 14), s. 89), as amended by s. 95 of the Housing Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 51) ; lighthouses, floating and other lights for the guidance of ships ; buoys and beacons ; mental hospitals of any county or borough in Great Britain, or of any district or parochial board in Scotland ; police stations and justices' rooms of any county or borough in Great Britain, and the offices connected therewith, also sheriff court buildings in Scotland ; prisons, public libraries and museums ; any school-house or work for which a school-board is authorized to borrow under the Education Acts, or under the Education (Scotland) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 62) ; waterworks established or carried on by a sanitary or other local authority ; workhouses or poor-houses, and any work for which the council of a county, borough, district or parish are authorized to borrow ; see also P. W. Loans Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 42), or in Scotland the appropriate authority ; see also the Public Health Acts, 1875-1936, and any work for which the Commissioners are authorized to lend by any Act passed after the passing of this Act. For the numerous Public Works Loans Acts passed since 1875, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Loans.'

Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85). By this Act—which proceeds on the preamble that it is expedient that in certain cases further regulations should be made for the administration of the laws relating to the performance of divine service according to the use of the Church of England—it was provided that whensoever a vacancy should occur in the office of official principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury (see ARCHES COURT), the judge appointed under that Act should become ex officio such official principal, and all proceedings thereafter taken before the judge in relation to matters arising within the province of Canterbury should be deemed to be taken in the Arches Court of Canterbury. The Court may be set in motion on representation by one arch-deacon, or churchwarden, or any three parishioners declaring themselves to be members of the Church of England: (1) that in any church any alteration in or addition to the fabric, ornaments, or furniture thereof has been made without lawful authority, or that any decoration forbidden by law has been introduced into such church; or (2) that the incumbent has within the preceding twelve months used or permitted to be used in such church or burial ground any unlawful ornament of the minister of the church, or neglected to use any prescribed ornament or vesture; or (3) that the incumbent has within the preceding twelve months failed to observe, or to cause to be observed, the directions contained in the Book of Common Prayer relating to the performance in such church or burial ground of the services, rites, and ceremonies ordered by the said book, or has made or permitted to be made any unlawful addition to, alteration of, or omission from, such services, rites, and ceremonies. Rules and Orders have been issued under the Act. Lord Penzance was appointed judge shortly after its passing. The Act has been set in motion upon but few occasions, and the meaning and effect of it has been vigorously contested upon each of them, sometimes on very technical points. See, e.g., Hudson v. Tooth, (1877) 3 Q. B. D. 46, and Ex parte Dale, (1881) 6 Q. B. D. 376, in which latter case the Rev. T. P. Dale, after having been committed to prison by Lord Penzance, was discharged by writ of Habeas Corpus granted by the Court of Appeal. The Rev. S. F. Green, however, was imprisoned by a valid sentence, and discharged only upon his benefice becoming void (see s. 13 of the Act). See WORSHIP.

Publicans, persons authorized by licence to keep a public-house and retail therein, for consumption on or off the premises where sold, all intoxicating liquors. Publicans (who are also termed 'licensed victuallers') are subjected to a number of restrictions by a series of Acts called the Licensing Acts.

See INTOXICATING LIQUORS, and as to the duties and the responsibility of innkeepers, see INNKEEPERS.

Publication, confiscation.—Civ. Law.

Publication, divulgation; proclamation: also 'the communication of defamatory words to some person or persons other than the person defamed' (Odgers on Libel).

The publication of fair reports of legal proceedings in court (other than ex parte proceedings) is a Common Law right exempt from proceedings for libel.

As to the publication of an apology for libel in a newspaper, see LIBEL.

It is essential in an action of defamation that the publication be to a third person, though the law is otherwise in Scotland. Thus, there can be no publication as between husband and wife (Wennhak v. Morgan, (1888) 20 Q. B. D. 635); but publication can be made to either husband or wife respecting the other (Jones v. Williams, (1885) 1 T. L. R. 572). The third party to whom the matter is published may be in the position of a servant or clerk (Edmondson v. Birch & Co., 1907, 1 K. B. 371), but see Osborn v. Boulter & Son, 1930, 2 K. B. 226; but must be able to understand the defamatory character of the matter (Sadgrove v. Hole, 1901, 2 K. B. 1). It is no defence that the publication was unintentional unless without negligence the person charged with 'publishing' was in fact ignorant of the contents of the document (M'Leod v. St. Aubyn, 1899, A. C. 549); but the onus of proving this lies on the defendant (Vizetelly v. Mudie's Library, 1900, 2 Q. B. 170). In criminal libel, publication to the prosecutor is sufficient.

For the purposes of the Copyright Act, 1911, publication means the issue of copies of a work to the public, and does not include the performance in public of a dramatic or musical work, the delivery in public of a lecture, the exhibition in public of an artistic work, or the construction of an architectural work of art, but the issue of photographs and engravings of works of sculpture and architectural works of art is not to be deemed to be publication of such works (s. 1 (3)).

As only a new and original invention can be patented, publication before protection defeats the inventor's right to protection by patent, unless the publication be without the knowledge or consent of an inventor who has not been guilty of unreasonable delay in obtaining protection. An invention covered by any patent is not deemed to have been anticipated by reason only of, inter alia, its publication in a specification left pursuant to an application made in the United Kingdom not less than fifty years before the patent, or of its publication in a provisional specification of any date not followed by a complete specification (Patents and Designs Act, 1932, s. 13 and Sched., substituting the scheduled section for s. 41 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907). Similarly, prior publication of a design (q.v.) prevents registration, but publication by exhibition at industrial and international exhibitions and exhibition elsewhere without the proprietor's privity or consent does not operate as a publication so as to defeat registration, provided that the conditions imposed are complied with (ibid., ss. 49 and 59, as amended by the Act of 1932).

Publication of evidence in Chancery is no longer practised, as all parties attend the examination of witnesses.

Publication of a citation in two newspapers is frequently ordered by the Court for Divorce and the Court of Probate as a step to entering an appearance for a party.

As to publication of banns of marriage, see MARRIAGE.

Publication of a will is no longer necessary, the proper attestation of two witnesses taking the place of the 'publication,' i.e., the declaration by the testator in the presence of witnesses that it was his will (Wills Act, 1837, s. 13). See REPUBLICATION.

Publicist, a writer on the law of nations.

Publisher. A publisher of libellous matter is liable both civilly and criminally in respect of any such matter he may publish, and his civil liability exists even though the publication takes place without his knowledge. 'Not only the party who originally prints, but every party who sells, who gives, or who lends a copy of an offensive publication will be liable to be prosecuted as a publisher' (R. v. Mary Carlile, (1819) 3 B. & Ald. p. 169, per Bayley, J.). If the publisher of a book becomes bankrupt, an author to whom royalties are due is not in any more favourable position than other creditors, and can only prove for the damages he has sustained by the breach of contract (Re Grant Richards, 1907, 2 K. B. 33).

As to the duty of publishers to send a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom to the British Museum and other libraries, see Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), s. 15, and the British Museum Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 34), also BRITISH MUSEUM.

Pudzeld, to be free from the payment of money for taking wood in a forest.—Co. Litt. 233 a. See WOODGILD.

Pueritia, the age from seven to fourteen.

Puffer, one who attends a sale by auction, to bid on the part of the owner, for the purpose of raising the price and exciting the eagerness of the bidders.

The Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), regulates the employments of puffers at an auction for the sale of land, and enacts that all sales of land where a puffer has bid shall be illegal unless a right of bidding on behalf of the owner shall have been reserved; that the conditions of sale shall state whether the sale is to be without reserve, or subject to a reserved price, or whether a right to bid is reserved; that if it be stated that the sale is to be without reserve, a puffer is not to be employed; that if a right to bid be reserved, the seller or one puffer may bid; and that the practice of opening biddings, formerly sanctioned by courts of equity, shall be discontinued. As to sale of goods by auction, see similar provisions, s. 58 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and see AUCTION.

Pugilism. See PRIZEFIGHTING.

Puis darrein continuance, Plea of. In olden times, when the pleadings were each entered separately on the record, every entry after the first was called a continuance. When the matter of defence arose after writ, but before plea or continuance, it was said to be pleaded 'to the further maintenance' of the action. When it arose after plea or continuance it was called a plea of puis darrien continuance—since the last continuance; see 1 H. & C. 697 (Odgers on Pleading, 7th ed., p. 232).

'Pleading after action' is now regulated by Order XXIV. of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

Puisne [fr. puisé, Fr.], junior, inferior, lower in rank. The several judges and barons of the former Common Law Courts at Westminster, other than the chiefs, were called puisne. By s. 5 of the Judicature Act, 1877, a puisne judge of the High Court means, for the purposes of that Act, a judge of the High Court other than the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of England, and their successors respectively. Puisne judges of the High Court shall be styled Justices of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 2 (4)). The term is also used as meaning later or subsequent with reference to mortgages and the like, e.g., puisne mortgages.

Puisne Mortgage. In the legal phraseology which was used before 1926 meant a mortgage subsequent to the mortgage of a legal estate, but for the purposes of the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1) (Class C.), it is enacted that 'puisne mortgage' means any legal mortgage (including the first) of a legal estate not being a mortgage protected by a deposit of documents relating to the legal estate affected and (if the whole of the land affected is within the jurisdiction of a local deeds registry) not registered there. These mortgages, if created after 1925, must be registered at the Land Charges Registry, Red Lion Square, or they will lose priority; see, further, MORTGAGE CHARGE. Mortgages created before 1926 may be registered before transfer. This amounts to notice, but even this notice will not prevent tacking on further advances by a prior mortgagee if that mortgagee has not seen the register at the date of the first advance or has no other actual or direct notice. See TACKING.

Under the transitional provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Part VII. (6) and Part III. (5), puisne mortgages not protected by a deposit of documents or registered as a land charge became mortgages of a legal estate, but as against a purchaser in good faith without notice, the mortgages are to remain an equitable interest. Registration as a land charge is not compulsory but advisable, as it amounts to notice. See NOTICE; LAND CHARGES; MORTGAGE.

Pulsator [fr. pulso, Lat., to accuse], the plaintiff or actor.

Punchayet, an arbitration.—Indian.

Punctually. Payment 'punctually' means payment on the day fixed for payment (Leeds and Hanley Theatre of Varieties v. Broadbent, 1898, 1 Ch. 343). Payment 'duly' does not necessarily mean 'punctually' (Starkey v. Barton, 1909, 1 Ch. 284).

Punctuation has no place in deeds or weight in Acts of Parliament. See Maxwell on Stat.

Pund-bréch, pound-breach.

Pundit, an interpreter of the Hindoo law, a learned Brahmin.—Indian.

Punishment, the penalty for transgressing the law: in England usually left within very wide limits to the discretion of the Court. Too great severity has frequently led to refusals of juries to convict, especially where the punishment is death, as it was down to 1810, for the offence of stealing goods to the value of forty shillings from a dwelling-house, and down to 1832 for forgery. In the former case the jury would falsely find the value of the goods stolen to be thirty-nine shillings; in the latter, a petition of bankers hastened the mitigation of a punishment which failed to protect them.

Pupil, a ward, one under the care of a guardian. In Scotland, a male under 14 and a female under 12. During that period, the disabilities are somewhat similar to those of an infant in English law. A pupil cannot sue except by his or her tutor. The word 'minor' (q.v.) is sometimes loosely used to include the word 'pupil.'

Pur autre vie, Tenant. See AUTRE VIE.

Purchase (fr. perquisitio, or conquisitus, Lat., according to the feudists), in its popular sense, an acquisition of land, obtained by way of bargain and sale, for money or some other valuable consideration; in its legal acceptation, an acquisition of land in any lawful manner, other than by descent, or the mere act of law, and including escheat, occupancy, prescription, forfeiture, and alienation. See 2 Br. and Had. Com. 408 et seq. It is possession to which a man cometh not by title of descent; see Co. Litt. 18 b.

Purchase, Words of, those by which, taken absolutely without reference to or connection with any other words, an estate first attaches, or is considered as commencing in point of title, in the person described by them. 'It is a rule in law, known as the rule in Shelley's case, when the ancestor by any gift or conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs in fee or in tail, that always in such cases "the heirs" are words of limitation of the estate and not words of purchase' (1 Rep. 104 a; Van Grutten v. Fozzwell, 1897, A. C. 658). The rule has been abolished in regard to all conveyances executed after 1925. In a limitation to an ancestor for life, then to his heir or any class of heirs or issue, the words heirs or issue are now words of purchase and not of limitation (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 131). See HEIR, and SHELLEY'S CASE. At the same time, a grant to A. and his heirs may still be used to limit an estate in fee simple in law, but any words of limitation other than the conveyance to the grantee simply are unnecessary for that purpose (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 60).

Purchaser, a buyer, a vendee; also the root of descent, from whom, under the Inheritance Act, 1833, the descent was in every case to be traced, before 1926, and now, as to a limitation to the heir taking effect as purchaser (see previous title, and L. P. Act, 1925, s. 132).

The statute enacts that in every case descent shall be traced from the purchaser; and to the intent that the pedigree may never be carried further back than the circumstances of the case and the nature of the title shall require, the person last entitled to the land (which expression extends to the last person who had a right thereto, whether he did or did not obtain the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits thereof (s. 1)), is, for the purposes of the Act, to be considered to have been the purchaser thereof, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same, in which case the person from whom he inherited the same shall be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same; and, in like manner, the last person from whom the land shall be proved to have been inherited will in every case be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same (s. 2).—Sugd. Real Property Stat., 256.

For various meanings of the word 'purchaser,' see the dissenting judgment of Buckley, L.J., in I. R. C. v. Gribble, 1913, 3 K. B. p. 218, in which the majority of the Court held that the word 'purchase' in s. 14 (1) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, meant 'buy' in the ordinary commercial sense: and the same meaning was attributed to it in s. 27 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (Re Lawley, 1911, 2 Ch. 530).

Under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205, 'purchaser' means a purchaser in good faith for valuable consideration and includes a lessee, mortgagee or other person who for valuable consideration acquires an interest in property except that in Part I. (ss. 1 to 39) of the Act, purchaser only means a person who acquires an interest in or charge on property for money or money's worth. Valuable consideration includes marriage but does not include a nominal consideration in money. On the other hand, the Land Charges Act, 1925, does not import 'good faith' in the word purchaser, and a distinction between purchaser and purchaser for money or money's worth is made (see ss. 13 and 14, ibid.).

Purchaser for Value without Notice. As to the position of such a purchaser, see the judgment of Lord Westbury, L.C., in Phillips v. Phillips, (1862) 4 De G. F. & J. 208, and see NOTICE; LAND CHARGE.

Purgation, the clearing a man's self of a crime of which he was publicly suspected, and accused before a judge. It was either canonical, which was prescribed by the canon law, the form whereof, used in the spiritual court, was that the person suspected took his oath that he was clear of the fact objected against him, and brought his honest neighbours with him to make oath that they believed he swore truly; or vulgar, which was by fire or water ordeal, or by combat. See Jac. Law Dict.; 3 Bl. Com. 100.

Purging Contempt, atoning for, or clearing oneself from contempt of court (q.v.).

Purificatio Beatæ Mariæ Virginis, the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which falls on the second day of February in every year.

Puritans. See DISSENTERS.

Purlieu [fr. poirallée, Fr.], land formerly added to an ancient forest by unlawful encroachment, and disafforested by the Charta de Foresta.—4 Inst. 303. See Williams on Rights of Common, p. 233; Manwood, c. 20.

Purlieu-men, those who have ground within the purlieu to the yearly value of 40s. a year freehold, and are accordingly licensed to hunt in their own purlieus.—Manwood, c. 20, s. 8; Williams on Rights of Common, p. 233.

Purparty, share, part in a division.

Purpresture (purprestura, porprestura, Lat.). See POURPRESTURE.

Purprise [fr. purprisum, law Lat.], a close or inclosure; as also the whole compass of a manor.

Purple, or Porprin, the colour commonly called purple, expressed in engravings by lines in bend sinister. In the arms of princes it was formerly called Mercury, and in those of peers, Amethyst.—Heraldic term.

Pursebearer to the Lord Chancellor. The Great Seal Office Act, 1874, s. 7, makes provision for the abolition of this office.

Pursuance, prosecution, process.

Pursuer, a plaintiff is so called in Scots law.

Pursulant. See POURSUITANT.

Purus idiota (a congenital idiot). See 2 Steph. Com.

Purveyance. See POURVEYANCE.

Purview, the body of a statute as distinguished from the preamble; the general scope and object of a statute.—2 Inst. 403; 12 Rep. 20.

Putage, Putagium, incontinence.—Spelm.

Putative, supposed, reputed; used of a man supposed to be the father of an illegitimate child, and proceeded against as such by the mother under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 65).

Putts and Refusals, time-bargains or contracts for the sale of supposed stock on a future day. They were forbidden by the 7 Geo. 2, c. 3, s. 1 (the Stock Jobbing Act), repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 28. See GAMING.

Puture, a custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse's meat, and dog's meat, of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, etc. The land subject to this custom is called terra putura. Others, who call it puture, explain it as a demand in general; and derive it from the monks, who before they were admitted, pulsabant, knocked at the gates for several days together.—4 Inst. 307.

Pyke, Paik, a foot-passenger; a person employed as a night-watch in a village, and as a runner or messenger on the business of the revenue.—Indian.

Pyx [fr. πυξ Gk., a box], the box in which sample coins are kept. For the purpose of ascertaining that coins issued from the Mint have been coined in accordance with law, a 'trial of the pyx' is held once at least in every year in which coins have been issued: see the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), s. 12. The trial takes place before a jury of members of the Goldsmiths' Company.

Q.

Quā, in the character of, in virtue of being. Quācumque viā datā, whichever way you take it.

Quadragesima, the time of Lent, because consisting of forty days. Quadragesima Sunday is the first Sunday in Lent.

Quadragesimalis, offerings formerly made, on Mid-Lent Sunday, to the mother church.

Quadragesms, the third part of the year-books of Edward III., commencing with the 40th year of his reign.—2 Reeves, c. xvi. p. 436.

Quadrans, the fourth of a whole.—Civ. Law.

Quadrant, an angular measure of 90 degrees; an instrument used in astronomy and navigation for taking altitudes and angles.

Quadrantata terræ, a quarter of an acre, now called a rood.

Quadriennium utile, the term of four years allowed to a minor after his majority, in which he might by suit or action endeavour to annul any deed to his prejudice granted during his minority.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Quagripartite, having four parties; divided into four parts.

Quadruplatores, informers among the Romans, who, if their information were followed by conviction, had the fourth part of the confiscated goods for their trouble.

Quadruplicatio [Lat.], a surrebutter.—Civ. Law. See Colquhoun's Rom. Civ. Law, s. 2267.

Quæ est eadem (which is the same). In trespass and other actions, when the plea necessarily stated the trespass to have been committed at some other time, place, etc., than that laid in the declaration, it was usual, before the conclusion of the plea, to allege, that the supposed trespasses mentioned in the plea were the same as those whereof the plaintiff had complained. This allegation was usually termed quæ est eadem. It was equivalent to a traverse of the time and place named in the declaration.—1 Chit. Pleading, 581.

Quæ plura, a writ which lay where an inquisition had been taken by an escheator of lands, etc., of which a man died seised, and all the land was supposed not to be found by the office or inquisition; it was to inquire of what more lands or tenements the party died seised.—Reg. Brev. 293. Rendered useless by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Quærens non inventi plegium (the plaintiff has not found pledge), a return made by a sheriff upon certain writs directed to him with this clause: Si A. fecerit B. securum de clamore suo prosequendo, etc.—Fitz. N. B. 38.

Quæsta, an indulgence or remission of penance, sold by the pope.

Quæstio, a commission to inquire into a criminal matter.—Civ. Law.

Questionarii, those who carried quæsta about from door to door.

Quæstor, or Quæstor, a Roman magistrate.

Quæstus, that estate which a man has by acquisition or purchase, in contradistinction to hereditas, which is what he has by descent.—Glanv. l. 7, c. 1.

Quaker, the statutory, as well as the popular, name of a member of the religious Society of Friends.

The society was founded by George Fox about the middle of the seventeenth century, and gained many adherents owing to the discontent with the existing priestcraft of the day. There is no adherence to any definite or formal creed, and the tenets of the society are chiefly distinguishable from those of other Christian bodies in that the members disclaim any necessity for the outward observance of baptism or partaking of the Sacrament, and further believe that all war is contrary to Christian principles. Men and women alike share in the ministry and government of the religious body.

As to affirmations by Quakers instead of oaths, see AFFIRMATION. As to their marriages, see MARRIAGE.

Quale jus, a judicial writ, which lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land, before execution was made of the judgment; it went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or whether the judgment were obtained by the collusion of the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded.—Reg. Judic. 8. See 13 Geo. 1, st. 1, c. 32.

Qualification, that which makes any person fit to do a certain act; also, abatement, diminution.

An annual Act used to be passed indemnifying persons who had omitted to qualify themselves for certain offices and employments, and to extend the time limited for those purposes. See 26 & 27 Vict. c. 107. But by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 22, it is rendered unnecessary to make and subscribe declarations theretofore required as a qualification for offices and employments.

Qualification Act (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 25), by which any person not having freehold land of the yearly value of 100*l.*, or for his life or for 99 years or more of the yearly value of 150*l.* 'other than the son and heir of an esquire or person of higher degree, or owners of parks or warrens, stocked with deer or conies for their necessary use in respect of the said parks and warrens,' was prohibited from having 'guns, bows, greyhounds, setting-dogs, ferrets, coney-dogs, lurchers, bags, nets, loubels, hare-pipes, gins, snares, or other engines,' for taking game—repealed, with many other Acts, by the Game Act, 1831. See GAME.

Qualified, a term applied to a person enabled to hold two benefices. See PLURALITY.

Qualified Fee. See BASE FEE.

Qualified Indorsement, an indorsement sans recours, i.e., without recourse to the indorser for payment.—Byles on Bills, 11th ed. 151.

Qualified Property, an ownership of a special and limited kind. It may arise either from the peculiar circumstances of the subject-matter, which render it incapable of being under the absolute dominion of any proprietor, as in the case of animals feræ nature, or from the peculiar circumstances of the possessor, as in the case of a bailment. See BAILMENT and POSSESSION.

Qualify, to become qualified.

Quality of Estate, the period when, and the manner in which, the right of enjoying an estate is exercised. It is of two kinds: (1) the period when the right of enjoying an estate is conferred upon the owner, whether at present or in future; and (2) the manner in which the owner's right of enjoyment of his estate is to be exercised, whether solely, jointly, in common, or in coparcenary.

Quamdiu se bene gesserit (as long as he shall behave himself well), a clause frequent in letters-patent or grants of certain offices, as that of judge or recorder, to secure them so long as the persons to whom they are granted shall not be guilty of abusing them—the opposite clause being durante bene placito (during the pleasure of the grantor), as that of town clerk, which office is held during the pleasure of the town council.

Quando acciderint (when they shall fall in). See PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. 5 Rep. 116.—(When anything is commanded, everything by which it can be accomplished is also commanded.)

Quantity of Estate, its time of continuance, or degree of interest, as in fee, during life, or for years. See QUALITY OF ESTATE.

Quantity Surveyor. A person whose business consists in taking out in detail the measurements and quantities from plans prepared by an architect for the purpose of enabling builders to calculate the amount for which they would execute the plans (Taylor v. Hall, 4 Ir. C. L. 476). See Hudson on Building Contracts.

Quantum damnificatus, Issue. This was directed by Chancery to be tried at law to fix the amount of compensation for damage, which prior to the Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (see that title), could not be awarded in Chancery.

Quantum meruit (so much as he has earned), an action on the case, express or implied, grounded on a promise to pay the plaintiff for doing a thing as much as he has earned or merited. The term is still in use to meet the cases where a plaintiff failing to
